In the case of Kirkpatrick v. Eagle Lodge No. 32, 26 Kan. 384, 40 Am. Rep. 316, a report was made to a grand lodge of Odd Fellows by a special committee to which was referred a petition respecting the expulsion of a member of the order, stating that the officers of a subordinate lodge to which the petition had been presented were of the opinion that the sworn statements of the petition were infamously untrue. This report was received, adopted, published in the grand lodge journal, and distributed among the members of the order for whom it was intended. The court held that the occasion for the publication prevented the inference of malice, and afforded a qualified defense depending upon the absence of actual malice. The opinion distinguishes between absolute and qualified privilege, and says: "Under this classification which is fully sustained by the authorities, the publication complained of is only conditionally privileged, and, as the averments in the petition are that the injurious publication is false and malicious, and that the defendants, well knowing its falsity, maliciously published it for the purpose of bringing the plaintiff into public scandal, infamy, and disgrace, the petition states a cause of action; but no recovery can be had thereon without proof of express malice on the part of the defendants, though the charge imputed in the publication be without foundation." In the case of Redgate v. Roush, 61 Kan. 480, 48 L.R.A. 236, 59 Pac. 1050, two paragraphs of the syllabus read as follows: "Where the officers of a church, upon inquiry, find that their pastor is unworthy and unfit for his office, and thereupon, in the performance of what they honestly believe to be their duty toward other members and churches of the same denomination, publish in good faith in the church papers the result of their inquiry, and there is a reasonable occasion for such publication, it will be deemed to be privileged, and protected under the law. . . . In such case, and where the plaintiff seeks damage, it devolves on him to establish actual malice; and, where his own testimony disproves malice, the court is justified in taking the case from the jury upon a demurrer to the evidence." In the course of the argument of the opinion it is said: "The publication is defamatory in character, and naturally would largely deprive the plaintiff of the confidence of the members of his church organization throughout the country. If it was false in fact and maliciously made, the plaintiff is entitled to recover to the extent of the injury suffered, unless the relations of the parties and the circumstances of the case justified the publication and brought the defendants within the privilege and protection of the law. The defamatory statement was not absolutely privileged, as words spoken or written by judges, jurors, or witnesses in the course of judicial proceedings, or as in legislative debates; but it was, at most, a case of qualified privilege. Whether it was so privileged must be determined by the position occupied by the defendants, their relations to the plaintiff and to other members of the same denomination, and the circumstances under which the publication was made. If the statements were published in good faith, and in the performance of what was honestly deemed to be an official or moral duty toward other church members, and for the benefit and protection of the church organization at large, and there was a reasonable occasion for the publication, it was privileged and protected. . . . If the plaintiff was unworthy or unfit to discharge the sacred functions of his high calling, the defendants, interested in the welfare of the denomination throughout the land, would appear to have been justified in warning other members and congregations of that organization to whom the plaintiff might offer his services as pastor. If the publication was prima facie privileged, it devolved on the plaintiff to allege and prove that it was both false in fact and malicious in purpose." The moral and social duty of members of a great fraternity or of a great church organization to inform their brothers of the scandalous conduct of a fellow member or one of their leaders is no higher or stronger than that of electors to keep the public administration pure by warnings respecting the character and conduct of a candidate for office; and, if false words are not actionable in one case unless published with actual malice, they are privileged to the same extent in the other. Such is the clear declaration of the court in the case of State v. Balch, 31 Kan. 465, 2 Pac. 609. True, that was a criminal case; but the rule of privilege is the same in both civil and criminal actions. It is the occasion which gives rise to privilege, and this is unaffected by the character of subsequent proceedings in which it may be pleaded. In Balch's Case a printed article making grave charges against the character of a candidate for county attorney was circulated among the voters of the county previous to the election. In the opinion holding the occasion to be privileged the court said: "If the supposed libelous article was circulated only among the voters of Chase county, and only for the purpose of giving what the defendants believed to be truthful information, and only for the purpose of enabling such voters to cast their ballots more intelligently: and the whole thing was done in good faith,—we think the article was privileged, and the defendants should have been acquitted, although the principal matters contained in the article were untrue in fact and derogatory to the character of the prosecuting witness. . . . Generally we think a person may in good faith publish whatever he may honestly believe to be true, and essential to the protection of his own interests or the interests of the person or persons to whom he makes the publication, without committing any public offense, although what he publishes may in fact not be true, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and may be injurious to the character of others. And we further think that every voter is interested in electing to office none but persons of good moral character, and such only as are reasonably qualified to perform the duties of the office. This applies with great force to the election of county attorneys." Substantially the same doctrine is the basis of the following decisions: Mott v. Dawson, 46 Iowa, 533; Bays v. Hunt, 60 Iowa, 251, 14 N. W. 785; Marks v. Baker, 28 Minn. 162, 9 N. W. 678; State v. Burnham, 9 N. H. 34, 31 Am. Dec. 217; Palmer v. Concord, 48 N. H. 211, 97 Am. Dec. 605; Carpenter v. Bailey, 53 N. H. 590; Briggs v. Garrett, 111 Pa. 404, 56 Am. Rep. 274, 2 Atl. 513; Press Co. v. Stewart, 119 Pa. 584, 14 Atl. 51; Jackson v. Pittsburgh Times, 152 Pa. 406, 34 Am. St. Rep. 659, 25 Atl. 613; Myers v. Longstaff, 14 S. D. 98, 84 N. W. 233; Express Printing Co. v. Copeland, 64 Tex. 354; Shurtleff v. Stevens, 51 Vt. 501, 31 Am. Rep. 698; Posnett v. Marble, 62 Vt. 481, 11 L.R.A. 162, 22 Am. St. Rep. 126, 20 Atl. 813; O'Rourke v. Lewiston Daily Sun Pub. Co. 89 Me. 310, 36 Atl. 398; Crane v. Waters (C. C.) 10 Fed. 619. The plaintiff asks that the decisions of this court quoted above be overruled, and that they be supplanted by one which shall express the narrow conception of the law of privilege held by the majority of the courts. Kirkpatrick's Case was decided in 1881 and Balch's Case in 1884. The Redgate decision is almost ten years old. A quarter of a century has elapsed since the doctrine of those cases was promulgated, and the legislature, coming directly from the people year after year, has not seen fit to make any modification of it. Surely in that length of time, and in view of the repetition of the error, if any were committed, some legislative action would have been taken to safeguard the reputations of our citizens if they were unduly imperiled by those decisions. The fact that so many courts of this country, all of high character, of great learning and ability, and all equally interested in correctly solving the problems of free government, differ from us, makes us pause; but a reversal of policy and the overturning of what has been so long accepted as settled law would be tantamount under the circumstances to legislation. Such a step ought not to be urged upon the court except for conclusive reasons. What are the reasons supporting the majority rule?

The decision most freely quoted since it was rendered in 1893 and chiefly relied upon by the plaintiff here is that of the United States circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit in the case of Post Pub. Co. v. Hallam, 8 C. A. 201, 16 U. S. App. 613, 59 Fed. 530. Counsel in the case had argued from the duty of newspapers to keep the public informed concerning those who are seeking their suffrages and confidence, and had asked, if it were possible, that the privilege allowed in discussing the character of public servants should be less than that which protects defamatory statements made concerning a private servant. The opinion states this argument, and then proceeds as follows: "The existence and extent of privilege in communications are determined by balancing the needs and good of society against the right of an individual to enjoy a good reputation when he has done nothing which ought to injure it. The privilege should always cease where the sacrifice of the individual right becomes so great that the public good to be derived from it is outweighed. Where conditional privilege is extended to cover a statement of disgraceful fact to a master concerning a servant or one applying for service, the privilege covers a bona fide statement on reasonable ground to the master only, and the injury done to the servant's reputation is with the master only. This is the extent of the sacrifice which the rule compels the servant to suffer in what was thought to be, when the rule became law, a most important interest of society. But, if the privilege is to extend to cases like that at bar, then a man who offers himself as a candidate must submit uncomplainingly to the loss of his reputation, not with a single person or a small class of persons, but with every member of the public, whenever an untrue charge of disgraceful conduct is made against him, if only his accuser honestly believes the charge upon reasonable ground. We think that not only is such a sacrifice not required of every one who consents to become a candidate for office, but that to sanction such a doctrine would do the public more harm than good. We are aware that public officers and candidates for public office are often corrupt when it is impossible to make legal proof thereof, and, of course, it would be well if the public could be given to know, in such a case, what lies hidden by concealment and perjury from judicial investigation. But the danger that honorable and worthy men may be driven from politics and public service by allowing too great latitude in attacks upon their characters outweighs any benefit that might occasionally accrue to the public from charges of corruption that are true in fact, but are incapable of legal proof. The freedom of the press is not in danger from the enforcement of the rule we uphold. No one reading the newspaper of the present day can be impressed with the idea that statements of fact concerning public men and charges against them are unduly guarded or restricted; and yet the rule complained of is the law in many of the states of the Union and in England." Here the rule by which privilege is to be measured is correctly stated, as in Wason v. Walter, the balance of public good against private hurt. The argument of counsel is, then answered, and the statement is made that a candidate ought not to suffer a loss in reputation with the whole public for the public good. That is the question to be decided, and not a reason why it should be so decided. Then the sole reason for the decision is stated,—that honorable and worthy men will be driven from politics. Then the consequences of the decision are commented upon: Freedom of the press will not be endangered,—an assertion, as shown by the manner in which public men are handled by the press at the present time, an appeal to experience for proof.

The single reason upon which the Hallam decision is based is also in the nature of a prediction, and is not new. It was advanced in this country in 1808 by Chief Justice Parsons (Com. v. Clap, 4 Mass. 163, 3 Am. Dec. 212) and by Lord Chancellor Walworth in 1829 in the case of King v. Root, 4 Wend. 114, 21 Am. Dec. 102. Speaking in opposition to the liberal doctrine, the chancellor said: "It is, however, insisted that this libel was a privileged communication. If so, the defendants were under no obligation to prove the truth of the charge; and the party libeled had no right to recover unless he established malice in fact, or showed that the editors knew the charge to be false. The effect of such doctrine would be deplorable. Instead of protecting, it would destroy, the freedom of the press, if it were understood that an editor could publish what he pleased against candidates for office, without being answerable for the truth of such publications. No honest man could afford to be an editor, and no man who had any character to lose would be a candidate for office under such a construction of the law of libel. The only safe rule to adopt in such cases is to permit editors to publish what they please in relation to the character and qualifications of candidates for office, but holding them responsible for the truth of what they publish." These predictions call to mind that of Lord Thurlow, who, when protesting against the passage of the Fox libel act, said it would result in "the confusion and destruction of the law of England." 2 May, Constitutional History of England, p. 122. The actual results of the struggle ending in the enactment of that law are stated by the author cited as follows: ". . . The press was brought into closer relations with the state. Its functions were elevated, and its responsibilities increased. Statesmen now had audience of the people. They could justify their own acts to the world. The falsehoods and misrepresentations of the press were exposed. Rulers and their critics were brought face to face, before the tribunal of public opinion. The sphere of the press was widely extended. Not writers only, but the first minds of the age, men ablest in council and debate, were daily contributing to the instruction of their countrymen. Newspapers promptly met the new requirements of their position. Several were established during this period whose high reputation and influence have survived to our own time, and, by fullness and rapidity of intelligence, frequency of publication, and literary ability, proved themselves worthy of their honorable mission to instruct the people." In opposition to the high authority of King v. Root and the Hallam Case may be placed Thomas M. Cooley, who, must be reckoned with in the discussion of any question upon which he has deliberately expressed himself. Commenting on the foregoing quotation from King v. Root, he says: "Notwithstanding the deplorable consequences here predicted from too great license to the press, it is matter of daily observation that the press in its comments upon public events and public men proceeds in all respects as though it were privileged. Public opinion would not sanction prosecutions by candidates for office for publications amounting to technical libels, but which were nevertheless published without malice in fact; and the man who has a 'character to lose' presents himself for the suffrages of his fellow citizens in the full reliance that detraction by the public press will be corrected through the same instrumentality, and that unmerited abuse will react on the public opinion in his favor. Meantime the press is gradually becoming more just, liberal, and dignified in its dealings with political opponents, and vituperation is much less common, reckless, and bitter now than it was at the beginning of the century, when repression was more often resorted to as a remedy." Const. Lim. 7th ed. 644n. This statement of the results of Judge Cooley's observation is in full accord with our own local experience. Without speaking for other states in which the liberal rule applied in Balch's Case prevails, it may be said that here at least men of unimpeachable character from all political parties continually present themselves as candidates in sufficient numbers to fill the public offices and manage the public institutions, and the conduct of the press is as honest, clean, and free from abuse as it is in states where the narrow view of privilege obtains. The fact that the public welfare has been promoted in England by liberalizing the law of libel is freely acknowledged in Wason v. Walter. "Our law of libel has in many respects only gradually developed itself into anything like a satisfactory and settled form. The full liberty of public writers to comment on the conduct and motives of public men has only in very recent times been recognized. Comments on government, on ministers and officers of state, on members of both houses of Parliament, on judges and other public functionaries are now made every day which half a century ago would have been the subject of actions or ex officio informations, and would have brought down fine and imprisonment on publishers and authors. Yet who can doubt that the public are gainers by the change, and that, though injustice may often be done, and though public men may often have to smart under the keen sense of wrong inflicted by hostile criticism, the nation profits by public opinion being thus freely brought to bear on the discharge of public duties?"

Since the only reason given for the rejection of the liberal rule fails, it is pertinent to inquire if the consequences of the narrow rule are so innocuous as the Hallam Case asserts; and in doing so it must be borne in mind that the correct rule, whatever it is, must govern in cases other than those involving candidates for office. It must apply to all officers and agents of government, municipal, state, and national; to the management of all public institutions, educational, charitable, and penal; to the conduct of all corporate enterprises affected with a public interest, transportation, banking, insurance; and to innumerable other subjects involving the public welfare. Will the liberty of the press be endangered if the discussion of such matters must be confined to statements of demonstrable truth, and to what a jury may ex post facto say is "fair" criticism and comment? Will free discussion of the subjects indicated be smothered if the newspapers understand that they must respond in damages for deducing and stating a wrong conclusion of fact from strong circumstantial evidence indicating fraud, corruption, or other conduct injurious to the public welfare? The case of Atkinson v. Detroit Free Press Co. 46 Mich. 341, 9 N. W. 501, was decided upon a question of pleading and a question of evidence. The opinion of the court did not treat the subject of privilege. Judge Cooley, however, took occasion to express himself upon the point now under consideration as follows: "The beneficial ends to be subserved by public discussion would in large measure be defeated if dishonesty must be handled with delicacy and fraud spoken of with such circumspection and careful and deferential choice of words as to make it appear in the discussion a matter of indifference. . . . If such a discussion of a matter of public interest were prima facie an unlawful act, and the author were obliged to justify every statement by evidence of its literal truth, the liberty of public discussion would be unworthy of being named as a privilege of value. It would be better to restore the censorship of a despotism than to assume to give a liberty which can only be accepted under a responsibility that is always threatening, and may at any time be ruinous. A caution in advance after despotic methods would be less objectionable than a caution in damages after in good faith the privilege had been exercised. No public discussion of important matters involving the conduct and motives of individuals could possibly be at the same time valuable and safe under the rules for which the plaintiff contends. It is a plausible suggestion that strict rules of responsibility are essential to the protection of reputation; but it is most deceptive, for every man of common discernment who observes what is taking place around him, and what influences control public opinion, cannot fail to know that reputation is best protected when the press is free. Impose shackles upon it, and the protection fails when the need is greatest. Who would venture to expose a swindler or a blackmailer, or to give in detail the facts of a bank failure or other corporate defalcation, if every word and sentence must be uttered with judicial calmness and impartiality as between the swindler and his victims, and every fact and every inference be justified by unquestionable legal evidence? The undoubted truth is that honesty reaps the chief advantages of free discussion; and fortunately it is honesty, also, that is least liable to suffer serious injury when the discussion incidentally affects it unjustly. . . . In what I say in this case I advance no new doctrines, but justify every statement of principle on approved authorities. It will be freely admitted that there are decided cases from which a different argument may be constructed; but it is affirmed that they are no longer deserving of credit if they ever were. The gradual and beneficial modification of the law of libel is shown in Wason v. Walker, L. R. 4 Q. B. 73, and, in so far as it has been modified, it has been made more consistent with just reason. While it is admitted that the public press is often corrupt and often reckless in dealing with private reputations, it is at the same time affirmed that the duty of its conductors to abstain from such misconduct is no plainer than is the obligation of the authorities to refuse to impose penalties when in the exercise of a just independence they make use of their columns for the exposure of public wrongdoers to public condemnation. The law, justly interpreted, is not chargeable with the inconsistency of tempting conductors of the press with a deceptive pretense of liberty, and then punishing them in damages

if they act upon the assumption that the liberty is genuine." If it be said that this argument contains an element of prophecy, it may be replied that it will support the liberal rule, as well as the same kind of prophecy in the Hallam Case supports the narrow rule. The Hallam Case quotes the following discrimination of the two rules made by Lord Chancellor Herschell in Davis v. Shephstone, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 187: "There is no doubt that the public acts of a public man may lawfully be made the subject of fair comment or criticism, not only by the press, but by all members of the public. But the distinction cannot be too clearly borne in mind between comment or criticism and allegations of fact such as that disgraceful acts have been committed or discreditable language used. It is one thing to comment upon or criticize, even with severity, the acknowledged or approved acts of a public man, and quite another that he has been guilty of particular acts of misconduct." This statement is one of elucidation merely, and furnishes no reason for a choice between the rules. It may be observed, however, that the decisions in England are in great conflict upon the question whether fair comment is a branch of the law of privilege. Only last year a writer in 23 Law Quarterly Review, p. 97, called attention to this fact, and expressed the hope that the case of Thomas v. Bradbury, A. & Co. [1906] 2 K. B. 627, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 135, might be taken to the House of Lords, so that the defense of fair comment might be reviewed, and placed upon some logical basis. It may be observed, further, that the distinction between comment and statements of fact cannot always be clear to the mind. Expression of opinion and judgment frequently have all the force of statements of fact and pass by insensible gradations into declarations of fact. In England fair comment includes the inference of motives if there be foundation for the inference. Hunter v. Sharpe, 4 Fost. & F. 983; Campbell v. Spottiswoode, 3 Best & S. 769. In the latter case Cockburn, Ch. J., said: "I think the fair position in which the law may be settled is this: That, where the public conduct of a public man is open to animadversion, and the writer who is commenting upon it makes imputations on his motives which arise fairly and legitimately out of his conduct, so that a jury shall say that the criticism was not only honest, but also well founded, an action is not maintainable." This doctrine is repudiated in Hamilton v. Eno, 81 N. Y. 116, and Negley v. Farrow, 60 Md. 158, 45 Am. Rep. 715, both cited in support of the Hallam decision. What is a charge of intoxication,—an inference from conduct and appearances and therefore fair comment or the statement of a fact? What is the difference between a charge of intoxication and the following: "Having appearances which were certainly consistent with the belief that they had imbibed rather freely of the cup that inebriates. Their condition in the chapel also led one to such a conclusion?" In England this statement is fair comment. Davis v. Duncan, L. R. 9 C. P. 396. In New York, no matter how strongly appearances and conduct may justify the inference, a charge of intoxication, made against a public officer, must be fully proved. King v. Root, 4 Wend. 114, 21 Am. Dec. 102. In keeping plain the distinction between comment and statements of fact, the courts of some of the states leave the law very much in the attitude of saying to the newspaper: "You have full liberty of free discussion, provided, however, you say nothing that counts." The Hallam Case quotes the Supreme Court of Ohio (Post Pub. Co. v. Moloney, 50 Ohio St. 71, 33 N. E. 921) in opposition to the liberal doctrine, as follows: "We do not think the doctrine either sound or wholesome. In our opinion a person who enters upon a public office, or becomes a candidate for one, no more surrenders to the public his private character than he does his private property. Remedy by due course of law for injury to each is secured by the same constitutional guaranty, and the one is no less inviolable than the other. To hold otherwise would, in our judgment, drive reputable men from public positions, and fill their places with others having no regard for their reputation, and thus defeat the purpose of the rule contended for, and overturn the reason upon which it is sought to sustain it." Manifestly a candidate must surrender to public scrutiny and discussion so much of his private character as affects his fitness for office, and the liberal rule requires no more. But, in measuring the extent of a candidate's profert of character, it should always be remembered that the people have good authority for believing that grapes do not grow on thorns, nor figs on thistles. The other arguments furnished by the Ohio quotation have already been considered. The Hallam Case contains nothing further worthy of note.

Another decision much approved, frequently quoted, and confidently proposed for consideration by the plaintiff here is that in the case of Upton v. Hume, 24 Or. 420, 21 L.R.A. 493, 41 Am. St. Rep. 863, 33 Pac. 810. The narrow rule is stated clearly and authorities for it are cited. The only reasons urged against the rival rule are the old ones—sensitive and honorable men would eschew politics, yellow journalism would run riot, candidates would be exposed to the malignity of party strife—and this new one:

"The only safe evidence of a man's intentions are his facts, and, if he accuses another of a crime, he must conclusively be presumed to have intended to injure him." The doctrines of the common law relating to malice seem to the Delaware court, also, to be of the utmost importance in finding out what the true rule of privilege ought to be. Star Pub. Co. v. Donahoe (Del.) 65 L.R.A. 980, 58 Atl. 513. With all due deference to Upton v. Hume, the remarks quoted read as if they had been written in the midst of the fog of fictions, inferences, and presumptions which enshroud the law of libel. Facts and the truth never have been much in favor in that branch of the law. Its early use as a weapon and shield of caste and arbitrary power would have been impaired. Suppose a serious charge to be made. By a fiction it is presumed to be false. By a fiction malice is inferred from the fiction of falsity. By a fiction damages are assumed as the consequence of the fictions of malice and falsity. Publication only is not presumed, and until recent times the offer to show the truth of the charge as having some bearing upon liability was a sacrilegious insult to this beautiful and symmetrical fabric of fiction. Then a defendant was made to suffer additional smart for venturing to obtrude the truth as a defense, if, although his proof were abundant, he barely failed in the opinion of the jury to make out a preponderance. It is however, in the field of malice, where the rule stated in the quotation lies, that truth and fact are most superfluous. In the first place, it is said that malice is the gist of the action for libel. This is pure fiction. It is not true. The plaintiff makes a complete case when he shows the publication of matter from which damage may be inferred. The actual fact may be that no malice exists or could be proved. Frequently libels are published with the best of motives, or perhaps mistakenly or inadvertently, but with an utter absence of malice. The plaintiff recovers just the same. Therefore "the gist of the action" must be taken out of the case. This is done by another fiction. It is said that, of course, malice does not mean the one thing known to fact or experience to which the term may apply, but it is just a legal expression to denote want of legal excuse. In this state a statutory definition of libel making malice an essential ingredient as at the common law compels this court to say that the intentional publication of libelous matter implies "malice" whatever the motive in fact may be. State v. Clyne, 53 Kan. 8, 35 Pac. 789. So a fiction was invented to meet an unnecessary fiction which became troublesome; and the courts go on gravely ascending the hill for the purpose of descending, meanwhile filling the books with scholastic disquisitions, verbal subtleties, and refined distinctions about malice in law, malice in fact, express malice, implied malice, etc. Now what is the fact? Instead of malice being the gist of the action, it may come into a libel case and be of importance in two events only,—to affect damages and to overcome a defense of privilege. If the occasion be absolutely privileged, there can be no recovery. If it be conditionally privileged, the plaintiff must prove malice, actual evil-mindedness, or fail. When it comes to this proof, there is no presumption, absolute or otherwise, attaching to a charge of crime. The proof is made from an interpretation of the writing, its malignity, or intemperance by showing recklessness in making the charge, pernicious activity in circulating or repeating it, its falsity, the situation and relations of the parties, the facts and circumstances surrounding the publication, and by other evidence appropriate to a charge of bad motives as in other cases. Nothing else in Upton v. Hume requires comment, and no decisions more persuasive than those discussed have been cited or have fallen under the observation of the court.

Speaking generally, it may be said that the narrow rule leaves no greater freedom for the discussion of matters of the gravest public concern than it does for the discussion of the character of a private individual. It is a matter of common experience that, whatever the instructions to juries may be, they do not, and the people do not, hold a newspaper publisher guilty and brand him a calumniator if in an effort in good faith to discharge his moral duty to the public he oversteps that rule. In a political libel suit, if a nonpolitical jury be secured, the newspaper usually gets a verdict if, in the language of Balch's Case, "the whole thing was done in good faith." Otherwise damages are assessed. Although he adhered to the narrow rule, Sir Frederick Pollock, when Chief Baron of the Exchequer, came near stating its rival when he said: "I think it quite right that all matters that are entirely of a public nature—conduct of ministers, conduct of judges, the proceedings of all persons who are responsible to the public at large—are deemed to be public property; and that all bona fide and honest remarks upon such persons and their conduct may be made with perfect freedom, and without being questioned too nicely for either truth or justice." Gathercole v. Miall, 15 Mees. & W. 318. The liberal rule offers no protection to the unscrupulous defamer and traducer of private character. The fulminations in many of the decisions about a Telemanian shield of privilege from beneath 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) which scurrilous newspapers may hurl the javelins of false and malicious slander against private character with impunity are beside the question. Good faith and bad faith are as easily proved in a libel case as in other branches of the law, and it is an every day issue in all of them. The history of all liberty, religious, political, and economic, teaches that undue restrictions merely excite and inflame, and that social progress is best facilitated, the social welfare is best preserved, and social justice is best promoted in presence of the least necessary restraint. Aside from other reasons for adhering to it, the court is of the opinion that the rule in Balch's Case accords with the best practical results obtainable through the law of libel under existing conditions, that it holds the balance fair between public need and private right, and that it is well adapted to subserve all the high interests at stake,—those of the individual, the press, and the public.

The plaintiff argues that the defense, of privilege was destroyed by the fact that copies of the defendant's newspaper circulated in other states, complains of the instructions given upon the subject, and insists that the instruction offered by him should have been given. The instruction given was correct and follows the rule announced by this court in Redgate v. Roush, 61 Kan. 480, 48 L.R.A. 236, 59 Pac. 1050. There a matter of interest to communicants of a church was published in the church papers in Indiana, Ohio, Texas, and Nebraska. It was inevitable that they should be read by people of other denominations. The syllabus reads: "Where the publication appears to have been made in good faith and for the members of the denomination alone, the fact that it incidentally may have been brought to the attention of others than members of the church will not take away its privileged character." This accords with the general rule stated in 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 387. See also Hatch v. Lane, 105 Mass. 394; Menters v. Bee Pub. Co. 5 Neb. (Unof.) 592, 99 N. W. 847. In the cases of State v. Haskins, 109 Iowa. 656, 47 L.R.A. 223, 77 Am. St. Rep. 560, 80 N. W. 1063, Buckstaff v. Hicks, 94 Wis. 34, 59 Am. St. Rep. 853, 68 N. W. 403, and Sheftall v. Central R. Co. 123 Ga. 589, 51 S. E. 646, language is used from which it might be inferred that privilege will be destroyed if the communication should reach the eyes of others than persons interested. This would be the end of privilege for all newspapers having circulation and influence. Generally the publication must be no wider than will meet the requirements of the moral or social duty to publish. If it be designedly or unnecessarily or negligently excessive, privilege is lost. But, if a state newspaper published primarily for a state constituency have a small circulation elsewhere, it is not deprived of its privilege in the discussion of matters of state-wide concern because of that fact.

The second subject propounded for consideration at the beginning of this opinion is one of practice which goes to the efficiency of the administration of the law as a means of justice. Did the special finding of the jury that the evidence does not show that the plaintiff suffered any damage from the article in the defendant's newspaper render errors regarding instructions upon other matters immaterial? Under the Constitution, the appellate jurisdiction of this court is limited to the review of errors committed by the trial court from which the record comes. It cannot consider cases de novo and decide them according to its own notions of the law and evidence. It cannot take new evidence or pronounce any judgment, except that the trial court did right or wrong in whole or in part. It cannot direct what judgment the trial court shall enter unless the facts be found or agreed to. It does not have the constitutional power to do generally what ought to have been done by judge and jury at the trial, and so end the litigation; and the legislature cannot, under the Constitution, confer such power upon it. Re Burnette, 73 Kan. 609, 85 Pac. 575. However, before the territory of Kansas became a state, the territorial legislature enacted the following statute: "The court, in every stage of an action, must disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party, and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect." Code Civ. Proc. § 148 (Laws 1859, chap. 25, p. 102). Before the territory became a state the territorial supreme court adopted the rule that error will not be presumed, but must be affirmatively shown. Otis v. Jenkins, 1 Kan. Dasser's ed. 87 Appx. That statute and that rule have been in force ever since. They are still in force, and have been applied in multitudes of decisions. It would be too much to say that the spirit of the statute and of the rule has always been observed. It has been lost sight of often enough. Sometimes technicality may have been utilized in an effort to right palpable wrong. Very often it is most perplexing to determine what is substantial. But it is the constant purpose and endeavor of the court to obey the statute and to observe the rule. It must do so in this case precisely the same as if it were one small enough to have originated before a justice of the peace. "If it be conceded that the rules of procedure have been violated in this case, the judgment cannot for that reason alone be overturned. The legislature has enjoined upon this court the duty of looking beyond defects and errors in pleadings and proceedings to ascertain if they did, in fact, affect the substantial rights of the party complaining of them. Fixed rules are to be observed and enforced, but not merely for the purpose of vindicating them. Harm must result from a wrong decision or it cannot be reversed." Hopkinson v. Conley, 75 Kan. 65, 88 Pac. 549.

For obvious reasons, the instruction relating to privilege required consideration on its merits. It would be pure speculation to say that other instructions given, which do not relate to damages, led the jury to make the special finding. Damages was treated independently of all other issues, and stood out as a separate and distinct branch of the case; and the court would be obliged to enter upon a "quest for error,"—indeed, to be able to discover that the jury did not understand the question, and by its answer merely meant to say that, under the instructions, the plaintiff had no cause of action for damages. Error must be made to appear in some affirmative way. It cannot be presumed. If the plaintiff suffered no damage, manifestly it is of no consequence whatever what valuation should be used in the purchase of bonds for the school fund, what treasury transactions are illegal, or what the law of conspiracy may be. The substantial rights of the plaintiff could not be affected by erroneous statements of the law upon those questions.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES E. GIBSON, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JOHN R. FIELDS.

(— Kan. —, 98 Pac. 1112.)

Wild lands — reduction to cultivation — "permanent improvement."

1. While it is recognized as the general rule that the plowing and cultivation of land theretofore under cultivation does not constitute a "permanent improvement," the Headnotes by SMITH, J.

Case Note. — Plowing and cultivating land as an "improvement."

The conclusion arrived at in the above case upon this question seems to be well sustained by the authorities. Thus, in Simpson v. Robinson, 37 Ark. 132, it was said that all works which were substantial steps towards bringing land into cultiva-breaking and reducing of wild lands to cultivation does constitute such improvement.

Same — ejectment — improvements — set-off for rent.

2. Upon the adjudication of the counter-claims, where one in possession of lands under a tax deed has been defeated of the possession by the holder of the legal title, and claims compensation for permanent improvements and taxes paid, reasonable rent of the premises without the improvements should be offset, but not rent as increased by the improvements.

Same — rent — determination.

3. In such case the rent is to be determined from the cash price usually paid for the use of like premises during the same time and in the same locality.

(December 12, 1908.)

ERROR to the District Court for Rawlins County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to re-tion had in their result the special character of "improvements."

And in Johnson v. Gresham, 5 Dana, 542, it was said that "improvement" was a comprehensive term, and meant any melioration whereby land was converted from its natural state to a state and condition for the use and enjoyment of man, and might consist in clearing and other ways of converting the soil to the use of man by bettering its condition.

So, in Barton v. National Land Co. 27 Kan. 635, cited in GIBSON v. FIELDS, it was held that the breaking of land was such a lasting and valuable improvement as to entitle one to the benefit of the occupying claimants' acts.

And in Devine v. Charles, 71 Mo. App. 210, the clearing of brush from land so as to fit it for cultivation, the cutting of a ditch so as to prevent the land from overflowing, and the removing of dead trees and old stumps, with other work, were held to be permanent improvements.

And in Muskogee Development Co. v. Green (Okla.) 97 Pac. 619, the breaking of unproductive prairie land, and its metamorphosis into a crop-yielding farm, were held to be an improvement.

And in Pearce v. Prantum, 16 La. 414, and in Beard v. Morancy, 2 La. Ann. 347, it was held to be an improvement to clear land and fit it for the purposes of agriculture; while in Wilson v. Benjamin, 26 La. Ann. 587, clearing of land and putting of the same in a state for cultivation was held to be an improvement.

So, in Jones v. Jones, 4 Gill, 87, the ditching and grubbing of meadow land was held to be such a valuable and lasting improvement as to entitle the party who did them to a fair and equivalent allowance.

And in Croskery v. Busch, 116 Mich. 288, 74 N. W. 464, it was held that the clearing cover possession of certain real estate and for the rents and profits thereof; the plaintiff complaining of so much of the judgment as allowed defendant for taxes, interest, and improvements. Affirmed.

Statement by Smith, J.:

This is an action in ejectment brought in the district court of Rawlins county to recover the possession of 160 acres of land in that county and for the rents and profits of the land. The plaintiff proved a chain of title from the government. The defendant claimed under a tax deed which was intended to convey this and several other tracts of land. It was held void as to this land for defective description. Of this no complaint is made. The court allowed the defendant for taxes and interest and for improvements, and offset what it found to be the value of the rent of the land. The plaintiff below appealed.

of an unimproved parcel of land, and surrounding it with a brush fence, and the raising of one or more crops on it, were such improvements as to entitle one dispossessed by the true owner to compensation therefor.

And in Sires v. Clark, 132 Mo. App. 537, 112 S. W. 526, the clearing of land of trees and brush, and the grubbing thereof, whereby the land was brought into a productive state, were held to be improvements.

Upon the same principle, in Donehoo v. Johnson, 113 Ala. 126, 21 So. 70, the planting of an apple orchard was held to constitute "permanent improvements" upon land, within the meaning of the statute in relation to allowance in ejectment for permanent improvements.

So, in Thompson v. Buckner, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 431, 40 S. W. 915, in which it appeared that, upon exceptions to the confirmation of a judicial sale of land, the purchaser, who had already been put in possession and had pitched his crops, was permitted to retain possession as tenant for a year, he was held to be entitled to credit upon the rental value of the land for the amount expended by him in sowing clover and orchard grass seed, upon the ground that he was entitled to be reimbursed for the value of any improvements placed by him upon the land.

But the ordinary cultivation or reduction of soil by use is not an "improvement." Hawkins v. King, 1 T. B. Mon. 161. And therefore the mere sowing of grass and clearing of land for cultivation cannot be classed as improvements (Cullop v. Leonard, 97 Va. 256, 33 S. E. 611); nor will the mere fertilizing of land be regarded as a permanent improvement (Crummey v. Bentley, 114 Ga. 746, 40 S. E. 765; Effinger v. Kenney, 92 Va. 245, 23 S. E. 742; Wright v. Johnson, 108 Vt. 855, 62 S. E. 948).

Mr. S. N. Hawkes for plaintiff in error.
Mr. Dempster Scott for defendant in error.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only questions presented here arise out of the adjustment of the rights of the plaintiff for rent and the claims of the defendant for taxes and improvements.

The deed in question was evidently intended to convey a large number of tracts of land, which were properly described in the recitals relating to the sale of the lands; but in the granting clause the only description of the property conveyed was "the real property last hereinbefore described." The court properly held that this description was too indefinite to constitute a good conveyance of the land in question, as it was not the last tract before described in the deed. The plaintiff in error, however, contends that, because the deed was not a sufficient deed, it was no deed at all of the land in question; that consequently defendant's lien for taxes expired in four years after the date of the sale, under the provisions of § 7714, Gen. Stat. 1901; and, further, as this real estate was not deeded for delinquent taxes, the provisions of § 7717, Gen. Stat. 1901, do not apply. This is untenable. The argument is that, if a tax deed is not a good and sufficient deed, it is no deed at all. On the other hand, if it were a good and sufficient deed, the plaintiff's title would be completely defeated. Section 7717 is a saving clause for just this kind of a case.

Again, the plaintiff contends that the plowing and cultivation of land for crops is not an improvement within the meaning of the statute. This is undoubtedly true as to land already under cultivation; but it is evidently not true, and is expressly decided not to be true, as to the breaking of uncultivated prairie, in Barton v. National Land Co. 27 Kan. 635.

Further, the plaintiff contends that, if he has to pay for the breaking of the land, he should receive rent thereon from the time it was broken, at the rate for which cultivated land was renting in the locality; and that the holding of the court that he was only entitled to rent the land in an entirely uncultivated condition was erroneous. The breaking was done several years before the bringing of the action, and was done at the expense or by the labor of the defendant, and the defendant was not, and could not be, allowed any interest on his investment therein, and it is inequitable that he should pay additional rent for improvements so made by himself. Deitzler v. Wilhite, 55 Kan. 200, 40 Pac. 272; Hentig v. Redden, 1 Kan. App. 163, 41 Pac. 1054; Hentig v. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Collins, 1 Kan. App. 173, 41 Pac. 1057. The plaintiff offered evidence tending to show that it was the custom in the locality where the land in question is situated for landowners to contract with tenants to break up the prairie, and to receive in compensation therefore the use of the land broken for two years thereafter; and that, as the defendant had the use of the land broken much longer than two years, he was more than compensated for the breaking in the use of the land broken. There was no relation of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant in regard to the breaking of the land. Neither can evidence of a local custom, contrary to the established principles of law, be received. Clark v. Allaman, 71 Kan. 206, 70 L.R.A. 971, 80 Pac. 571.

The judgment of the court was sustained by the evidence, and is in accord with the well-established principles of law and equity.

The judgment is affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

F. P. JAMES, Admr., etc., of John E. Trower, Deceased.

(— Ky. —, 115 S. W. 719.)

Railroad — collision — proximate cause.

The act of one desiring to meet an approaching train at a station, in attempting to cross the track in front of it, which resulted in his being hit by the train, and not the negligence of the railroad company in running a special at great speed past the station on the time of the regular train, which was to stop, was the cause of the accident, where the train is visible and its speed obvious, although he may have been misled as to the character of the train, and relied on the supposed fact that it was going to stop according to schedule.

(January 26, 1909.)

Case Note. — Right of one crossing railway tracks to assume that approaching train will stop at intervening station.

Cases where a passenger, or one approaching a station to become a passenger, is struck by an approaching train he assumes will stop at such station, are excluded herefrom.

One is not relieved of the duty of looking and listening at a highway crossing by a belief that all trains stop at a near-by station, where such inference is not warranted by its importance or the population of the town, it not being a matter of common APEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Boyle County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Benjamin D. Warfield and Charles H. Rodes, with Mr. Charles R. McDowell, for appellant:

No duty required the defendant's employees to slacken the speed of the train at the place where Trower was killed.

Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wink (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 326; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Taaffe, 106 Ky. 535, 50 S. W. 850; Hummer v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1317, 108 S. W. 885; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cummins, 111 Ky. 339, 63 S. W. 594; knowledge that all trains stop at passenger depots in city or town; and, even though such belief is reasonable, it would not justify one in relying thereon and recklessly omitting to use his senses of sight and hearing. Smith v. Wabash R. Co. 141 Ind. 92, 40 N. E. 270.

And this doctrine was applied in Rich v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 31 Ind. App. 10, 66 N. E. 1028, where one attempted to cross a railway track near a station, relying upon a custom of an approaching train to take a siding in order to permit the passing of another train, which, however, on this occasion, it did not do, but ran past the station at 60 miles an hour without giving any crossing signals.

One believing an approaching train to be one that regularly stopped at an adjacent station, which was then due, and on which he expected a friend to arrive, who climbed over freight cars standing on an intersecting track and was struck and killed by the approaching train, which was running at a high rate of speed upon the time of the train that regularly stopped at the station, was guilty of contributory negligence, notwithstanding the speed thereof was in excess of that permitted by ordinance. Gris-kell v. Southern R. Co. 81 S. C. 193, 62 S. E. 205.

Where a postoffice was located on the opposite side of a railway track from the station; and it was the postmaster's habit to wait until the last moment before the arrival of a mail train before starting with the mail for the station,—for which he had been rebuked by the railway officials,—he was guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, where, in crossing the intervening track, he was struck by a freight train running at a high rate of speed upon the time of the regular mail train, for which he mistook it. Moody v. Pacific R. Co. 68 Mo. 470.

And, upon almost identical facts, the doctrine of the last case was applied in Boyd v. Wabash Western R. Co. 105 Mo. 371, 16 S. W. 909.

And the deceased is not relieved of his 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Parkerson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2261, 80 S. W. 468.

Deceased's own negligence was the proximate cause of his death.

Gresham v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 15 Ky. L. Rep. 599, 24 S. W. 869; Ilelm v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1004, 33 S. W. 396; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Willis, 123 Ky. 636, 97 S. W. 23; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Molloy, 122 Ky. 219, 91 S. W. 688; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gilmore, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 76, 109 S. W. 321; Royster v. Southern R. Co. 147 N. C. 347, 61 S. E. 179; Storrs v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. 142 Mich. 375, 105 N. W. 764; 7 Thomp. Neg. p. 27, § 186; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 256, 105 S. W. 473; 2 Thomp. Neg. § 1786; Moody v. Pacific R. Co. 68 Mo. 470; negligence by reason of the fact that the approaching train was being run at a careless and unusual rate of speed, and the bell was not rung or the whistle sounded. Moody v. Pacific R. Co. supra.

And, where the engineer saw the deceased when he started for the station, he might assume he would not place himself in a perilous position; and therefore he was not bound to slacken the speed of his train until the deceased was upon the track, when it was too late to avoid striking him. Boyd v. Wabash Western R. Co. supra. To the same effect, see Craddock v. Louisville & N. R. Co. infra.

Freedom from contributory negligence is not shown by a mail carrier, who, upon a stormy day, upon the whistle of an approaching train being heard, was told by the station agent, "Here comes your train," and, while going to meet it with the mail, was struck by a projecting snowplow, running at a high rate of speed, and which he could have recognized as such had he looked. White v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 68 App. Div. 561, 73 N. Y. Supp. 827, affirmed without opinion in 174 N. Y. 543, 67 N. E. 1091. The court observed that while, perhaps, the chances were that the approaching train would be the mail for which he was waiting, yet it did not think that he had a right absolutely to assume or rely upon this assumption.

It is contributory negligence for one to cross a railway track at a point other than a public crossing, in the face of an approaching train, in reliance upon a supposition that it will stop at a near-by station, where it does not appear that trains such as that which strikes him always stop at such station. Craddock v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 18, 16 S. W. 905.

It was contributory negligence, which will prevent a recovery, for one who saw an electric car approaching a public crossing, although his view was obstructed by freight cars, to drive thereon, without stopping to look and listen, relying upon a supposition that it was a local which would stop at an adjacent station, when in fact it was a

Holland v. Missouri P. R. Co. 210 Mo. 338, 109 S. W. 20.

Messrs. E. M. Hardin, Robert Harding, E. V. Puryear, and John A. Rawlings for appellee.

O'Rear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The intestate, John E. Trower, was struck and killed by a train on appellant's road at Mitchellsburg under these circumstances: He, as a volunteer, was carrying the mail bag for the postmaster to put it on the local mail train, known as No. 23, which was due to pass that station about 11:30 A. M. on a day in August. The postoffice was about 60 yards from the station. Mitchellsburg is an unincorporated hamlet, and the station is a flag station only, without telegraph facilities. The station and the postoffice were on the same side of the railroad track. Between the station and the main track was a siding. Passengers and others having business with the train crossed from the depot of the opposite side of the main track, where a walk of screenings or broken rock was provided. On the morning in question there was another train, called "first No. 23," which was running on the time of the regular 23; the first being a special train which had no occasion to stop at Mitchellsburg. There were passengers for the local, and a flag had been put out to signal it to stop. It was running as second No. 23, and was some distance behind the first. When decedent heard a train whistle for the station, the signal being given some 500 or 600 yards before the station was reached, he started in a run, or trot, for the station so as to get there before the train did, and to be in position, presumably, to deliver the mail bag. He did not know, we may assume, that No. 23 was being run in two sections. Instead of passing to the west of the depot, which was the public highway crossing, and which would have kept the approaching train in his view (it was going east), he passed on the east side of the station, which was not a public crossing, but which was used sometimes for passage by persons having occasion to cross the track. As he got to the edge of the side track, or upon it, according to some of the evidence, which in either event gave him a clear, unobstructed view of the tracks looking west for perhaps half a mile, he paused, looked toward the approaching train, fast limited train which he supposed had passed some time before. Cable v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. 50 Wash. 619, 97 Pac. 744.

But, as the question of one's contributory negligence is for the jury, it was held in Cobleigh v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 75 Fed. 247, that a verdict for the plaintiff would not be disturbed where it appeared that he heard a train approaching beyond a station, but, by reason of a snowstorm, could not see it, and, after stopping and listening, concluded it had stopped at the station, and that he had time to cross, and, relying upon the usual crossing signals being given, drove upon the track and was struck by a rapidly moving train, which did not stop at the station, or give the required crossing signals.

The question of contributory negligence is for the jury where one accustomed to draw milk to a station was struck and killed by a freight train he saw approaching about the time the milk train was due, and which, although running 50 miles an hour in violation of a rule of the carrier, did not give the customary signal indicating it would not stop at the station; there being evidence from which it might be assumed that the deceased thought it was the milk train, which would stop at the station, and there being no evidence tending to show that an ordinary man would not have acted as he did. Stearns v. Boston & M. R. Co. 75 N. H. 40, 71 Atl. 21.

And the doctrine of the last case was applied in McNeal v. Pittsburg & W. R. Co. 131 Pa. 184, 18 Atl. 1026, where it was held that the deceased, upon hearing the whistle of a train, might have assumed it would stop at an intervening station, when, his view of the track being obscured, he drove close to the track, and, apparently just before reaching it stopped, or attempted to stop, and, one of his horses being young and excitable, he either drove or was carried by it onto the track, where he was struck and killed by the train, which did not stop at the station, nor give any crossing signal.

Where a carrier of mail and express, who was familiar with a railway custom for trains upon a parallel track to stop before reaching a station where another train was receiving and discharging passengers, was struck and injured by a train running in violation of such custom, it is for the jury to determine whether he was guilty of contributory negligence in going on the track without looking for approaching trains, in order to deliver mail to a train standing on another track; and this is true notwithstanding the latter train had not come to a full stop when he went upon the track. Tubbs v. Michigan C. R. Co. 107 Mich. 108, 61 Am. St. Rep. 320, 64 N. W. 1061.

So, it was held in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, 182 Ill. 267, 54 N. E. 979, affirming 80 Ill. App. 675, s. c. 75 Ill. App. 490, that the exercise of due care would be inferred from a mail transfer clerk who, while delivering mail to a train, was killed by a train on a parallel track, which violated a rule of the company, with which he was familiar, requiring trains upon parallel tracks to stop before reaching trains discharging and receiving passengers at a station, as he had the right to rely upon the observance of such rule.

which was running very fast, and making considerable noise, the exhaust of the applied steam, and other noises such as a heavy rapidly moving train gives forth, he paused an instant, gathered himself together, as some of the witnesses put it, sprang or hastened his speed so as to get across before the train should arrive. At that moment the train was about 200 to 225 feet from him. The width of the side track was about 5 feet, and the distance between the two tracks about 9 feet. Just as he got to the edge of the main track, the end of the pilot of the engine struck him, and he was killed. The speed of the train was from 20 to 40 miles an hour; the evidence varying between those figures.

Appellee based this suit to recover for the death of his intestate upon the negligence of the railroad company in running the special train upon the time of a regular train at a dangerously high rate of speed by the station; and upon that theory he recovered a verdict and judgment. Appellant's main defense was, as it is the principal ground urged for a reversal of the judgment, that the intestate was himself guilty of such negligence as that his estate ought not to recover damages for his death; and that is the only question which we find it necessary to examine. For the purpose of this case, it may be conceded that first No. 23 was running by Mitchellsburg station at a speed, considered with reference to the rights of passengers and licensees at the station, that was negligent. It may also be conceded that the intestate was a licensee at the station on that occasion, and even in the use of the way of crossing which he used. It is also conceded that nothing could have been done by those in charge of the train to stop it after the intestate was discovered to be in peril. There is no conflict in the evidence, except as to the speed of the train, and that in testing whether the peremptory instruction should have been given we assume to be as stated by appellee's witnesses. There were at least four eyewitnesses to the accident. They all agree in their statements in all material points. They were people who were sitting or standing about in the vicinity of the station. They heard the train give the customary signals. They heard it coming, and those who noticed the fact (and at least two or three did) say it was making the noise of a train running very fast. They saw the intestate start with the mail pouch, were aware by his movements of his intention to cross the track ahead of the train, and were interested in watching to see whether he made it. They all saw him pause and look as he emerged from behind the depot, and then gather himself as for a spring or sudden movement, and some of them saw him accelerate his speed till he was struck by the train, while others, when they saw his movement indicating he was going to try to cross the track; glanced back towards the approaching train to see what his chances were. It was from the testimony of these latter that we are enabled to locate the distance of the train from the point of contact at the moment the intestate saw it and determined to make the dash to beat it. He had about 20 to 25 feet to go, while the train had about 225 feet.

It is argued for appellee that the intestate mistook the train he saw for the regular mail train No. 23, and, thinking it was that train, and knowing that it customarily stopped at the station, thought that it would slow up enough before getting to the station to allow him to pass in safety. The argument is not an unreasonable conjecture; but it is only a conjecture. This train was carrying green signals on the engine pilot, indicating that it was a special. Whether the intestate knew what those flags signified is not shown. The train was running so fast that everybody who saw it and testified, some with the same, and none with better, facilities than the intestate for judging of that fact, said that it was evident that it was not going to stop. No trains stopped at that station except such as were flagged,—that is, signaled by the station flag,—and only certain ones were allowed to be flagged. While it may be that the intestate was mistaken as to the character of the train, and was misled into believing it would stop, it may be, on the contrary, that he discovered its true character, and that it would not stop, but thought that he could get across the track before it came by. The latter inference is logically deducible from these circumstances: Everyone who saw it saw that it was not going to stop. All who heard it formed the same conclusion, and they were all correct. If it had been regular 23, and had been going to stop, it would not at 225 feet distance been coming at such high speed, nor emitting steam from the exhaust, as it was slightly downgrade from the west; nor, if it had been apparently going to stop at 225 feet distance, would it have been necessary for intestate to have sprung forward on a run to cross ahead of it, as its speed in that event would not have been more than twice or three times his speed in a rapid walk, and he would have had ample time to have cleared the track without a sudden and unusual spurt of speed. It may be doubted whether there was evidence that the intestate thought the train was regular 23; but, whether regular 23 or not, it was evident to all observers that it was not going to stop at that station.

Appellee relies on two opinions of this court as supporting the verdict. One is Illinois C. R. Co. v. Murphy, 123 Ky. 787, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 352, 97 S. W. 729. Murphy's Case is unlike this. Murphy was unaware of the approaching train that struck him, while those on the train for quite a distance saw him, but did not slacken speed. We held that running the train at high rate of speed through a populous community—a city of more than 2,000 people, the railroad track being along or upon a street—was negligence as to licensees or even trespassers whose presence was known, or should, from the circumstances of constant use, have been anticipated. If Murphy had seen the approaching train, and continued upon the track, his case would have been more like this one than it is. The other case cited is Nichols v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 8 Ky. L. Rep. 519, 2 S. W. 181. It is very near like the case at bar. The similar features are these: Nichols was crossing the main track at a station in a hamlet, when a regular passenger train was due there, and had been flagged to stop for passengers. The location of the depot buildings and tracks were substantially the same as in this case. A special came along on the time of the regular train, but without stopping. It was running very fast. As Nichols attempted to cross the track ahead of it it struck and killed him. Nichols was entitled to the care due a passenger. The points of dissimilarity are these: In Nichols Case the approaching train did not whistle, or give other warning of its coming. Nichols did not see it, or know of its coming. At least, there was some evidence that he did not, while other evidence was that he did. The question was therefore one for the jury. There may be other differences between the facts of that case and this one; but we think the real question presented by and decided in the Nichols Case is necessarily dependent upon the fact that he was ignorant of the approach of the special train and of its character. In Nichols Case the court used this language: "In this instance those in charge of the front engine knew, or the law required them to know, that they were running on the time of the passenger train, or nearly so; that passengers were likely to be at this station and crossing the track; and that the train was likely to stop for them. Under these circumstances, the law declared that a known duty existed which required of those in charge of the engine which killed the deceased to so run it as to avoid danger to human life." It was held to be wilful negligence under such circumstances to run the special train at a high rate of speed by the station without warning or signal of its coming. As to whether Nichols saw the engine approaching, the court observed: "The testimony is conflicting as to whether the deceased saw the engine coming or not. If he did, it is probable that he did not notice but what it was the passenger train, which was just behind it, and mistook the one for the other." As we have said, those facts made Nichols Case one for the jury, and, if those were the facts here, we would say the same of this case. The misunderstanding due to the opinion in Nichols Case grows out of the remark of the court last quoted. It was assumed as the law in this case that, if one saw a train coming, which was on the time of a regular train, and due to stop at that station, that he might as a matter of law rely upon its stopping and govern his movements by that assumption, although it was erroneous in fact. Whether he did or did not see the train is a question of fact, which, upon the conflicting evidence, it was the sole province of the jury to decide. What its appearance was and what impression on his mind it was calculated to make would in that event have been also for the jury under the court's instructions as to what constituted contributory negligence. Under our practice, the court instructs the jury in general terms, leaving them to apply the facts. Our practice gives the jury great latitude in applying the facts to the law as contained in the instructions,—so much so that it is not infrequent that the jury's finding is wholly at variance with the court's instructions, if they find that the facts exist upon which the instruction covering contributory negligence was based. But we have no way of certainly knowing whether the jury found the facts to be so, as their verdict is general. If they find for the plaintiff, no one can say whether they did not find as a fact that the injured person did not see the approaching train at all, whereas, in truth, they may have believed that he did see it, but that, under the circumstances, it was not negligence on his part; that is, not such absence of the care "an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised for his own safety under similar circumstances." The courts have no way, under the present practice of giving instructions in the most general terms, carefully avoiding details, of regulating the application of the law of contributory negligence. It may be, and there is a noticeable tendency in that direction, that more stress should be laid in the instructions upon the particular facts constituting such negligence.

But, where there is no dispute as to the facts upon which contributory negligence is based, there is nothing to be submitted to the jury. If the facts relied on as being contributory negligence are not such, under the most favorable aspect for the defendant, to constitute such negligence in law, then the trial court decides that they do not, and refuses to instruct upon that point, which eliminates it from the case as a defense. But, where the facts are not disputed, and where they do not constitute contributory negligence, the court must also decide that matter, and instruct accordingly. It is always for the court to say what is the law, and the jury to find the fact if the fact is disputed. But, the fact being undisputed, the question is wholly one of law, in which case it was not a question of law as to what he might have thought from the appearances surrounding him. What he had the right to think might have been a question of law; but what he actually thought, never. The remark quoted from Nichols Case was in the nature of argument to show the probable nonexistence of the fact relied on in defense as contributory negligence. It was not intended to state it as a proposition of law. If it should be the law that, when one sees a train coming on the time of the regular train, he may, without further investigations, and can in spite of contrary appearances, rely upon the assumption that it is the regular train, and that it will stop where the regular train usually stops, and, under those assumptions, put himself ahead of it upon its track, in spite of the intelligence necessarily conveyed by his senses, then the verdict in this case must stand; otherwise not.

Let us review the decisions declaring the law upon that point and points so analogous in principle as to justify the application of the same rules.

In Gresham v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 15 Ky. L. Rep. 599, 24 S. W. 869, a boy was run over and killed at Junction City, where two railroads cross. The boy saw the train approaching. It was 70 yards away. It was a regulation by statute that all trains should stop before crossing another railroad. But this train did not stop. The boy, in attempting to cross the track in front of it, just beyond the intersection, tripped and fell. Before he could get up, the train had run over him. Had it stopped, as the law required it should, he would not have been hurt by it. The court seems to have laid some stress on the fact that the boy was a trespasser, and that the statutory duty of stopping the train at the crossing was not owing him. But the court used this language as to the right of the boy to rely upon appearances: "Gresham evidently saw the train coming at a rapid rate of speed and close at hand, and, believing that he could make the crossing in safety, made the venture, and he would doubtless have succeeded but for the fact that he fell, which caused him to be overtaken and killed."

In Helm v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1004, 33 S. W. 396, the injured person was a volunteer assisting the station agent. The station was a flag station. There were passengers to take the train at that station. The train failed to sound the whistle announcing its approach in time for the agent, or the one acting for him, to get across the track in time to display the signal for it to stop for the passengers. Nevertheless he attempted it, and was struck and injured. The court said: "The appellant discovered the train was coming, and he negligently attempted to cross the track in front of it." No doubt he believed he could succeed. He misjudged the train's distance or speed. The verdict was for the defendant. It was affirmed. But there was an error which would have reversed the judgment but for the fact that this court found from the facts, admitting all that appellant claimed as true, that he could not recover on account of his own negligence.

In Illinois C. R. Co. v. Willis, 123 Ky. 636, 97 S. W. 23, Willis, a licensee, was upon a siding on the appellant's road. He saw or heard a train approaching, and, fearing it would frighten his horses, which he had left on the opposite side of the main track in charge of his little son, he hastened to cross in front of the rapidly moving train. It struck and killed him. This court said of his conduct: "Deceased evidently saw the train approaching. He thought he could cross over the track before it reached him. He made the venture, miscalculated the speed at which the train was approaching, and was killed." A peremptory instruction was ordered on the ground that his death was due to his own negligence.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Taaffe, 106 Ky. 535, 50 S. W. 850, it was said: "It was also the duty of the decedent, if he had notice of the approach of the train to the station, to exercise reasonable care to ascertain the proximity of the train to the station, and to be careful not to expose himself to any danger by walking upon or near the track upon which the train was approaching; and it was his duty, if he heard the train whistle, indicating its approach to the station, to be on the lookout for the same, and to keep himself out of danger."

The case of Craddock v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 18, 16 S. W. 125, is very much like this case. Craddock was on the platform of the passenger depot. He heard a train whistle for the station, and saw it coming. He started to cross the track in front of it, but at a point where he, a licensee, had the right to cross, or at least where the railroad company was bound to anticipate his presence. That train did not stop at that station. Some trains stopped there and some did not. Craddock testified that he thought it was going to stop. It was running at a negligent rate of speed,—negligent as to Craddock, so held by this court; and it was added: "Yet this did not authorize the appellant to negligently throw himself in the way of it when he had ample warning of its approach, and then claim damages for any resulting injury." As to what would constitute "negligently throwing himself in the way" of the train, the court cited: "He knew the train was approaching, and very near at hand. He had been warned of its approach by repeated blasts of the whistle, and it was in plain sight. He saw it coming, and yet, when within from 16 to 60 feet of him, he attempted to cross the track."

In Royster v. Southern R. Co. 147 N. C. 347, 61 S. E. 179, one who knew a train was coming and only a short distance away stepped onto the track in front of it after he had passed around a car without looking to see where it was. In the opinion it was said: "If, with an approaching train in view, a person undertakes to cross the track in advance of the train, he cannot recover for injury sustained [citing authorities]. Nor does the fact that the train is running unusually fast make any difference, if the injured party knew it was approaching."

In Thompson on Negligence, vol. 7, p. 27, § 186, it is stated: "One who recklessly encounters a known danger, and thereby directly contributes to his injury, cannot escape the effect of his negligence because the unknown negligence of the defendant, which concurred to produce the injury, made the danger greater than he supposed it to be. So one who recklessly encounters a known danger cannot escape the effect of this rule on the ground that his action was the result of an error of judgment."

So long as we have the rule of law which makes contributory negligence a defense, instead of measuring the results of the negligence of the defendant and that of the injured party, and fixing liability in proportion of one to the other, the rule must be applied that he whose negligence is the proximate cause of the injury is the one at fault in law, and is the loser. Appellant's negligence in running its train too fast by the station was not the proximate cause of the intestate's death. His own negligence in going upon the track with knowledge of the defendant's negligence, or rashly or recklessly ignoring its negligence and "taking chances," was the proximate cause of his injury; for, but for it, appellant's negligence would have been harmless, as to him. In 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

all the cases cited where the fact was undisputed that the injured party knew of the train's approach, and heedless of it, or miscalculating the results, went upon the tracks just in front of the train, a recovery was denied. From these authorities we gather the principle of law to be that it is such negligence for one to go upon the railroad track just in front of a rapidly approaching train, which he sees or knows to be then coming in, that for his injuries inflicted by it, he cannot recover from the railroad company, not because it was free from negligence, but because his own negligence was the immediate and nearest cause of his injury. We think the undisputed facts of this case bring it within that principle, and the peremptory instruction should have been granted.

The other questions discussed are not decided.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial under proceedings consistent with this opinion.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

HORATIO S. BRIGHT et al., Appts.,

v.

J. BACON & SONS et al.

(— Ky. —, 116 S. W. 268.)

Party wall — creation — contract.

1. The right to maintain a wall resting on each side of a boundary line as a party wall can never rest upon prescription, but must always be founded in contract, express or implied.

Same — use — additions.

2. Every joint owner of a party wall standing across a boundary line, and which has stood so long that the original agreement under which it was erected cannot be established, has a right to add to its height to its whole width for the benefit of additions to the building on his property, so long as it does not unnecessarily interfere with the other's use as it was begun or has developed.

Same — prescription.

3. A wall is not made a party wall by a trespasser obtaining in it an easement by long-continued use, except to the extent that the use of the encroacher has become a right.

(February 9, 1909.)

Case Note. — Right of one party to raise height of party wall.

There seems to be no doubt of the proposition—at least in American law—that, in the absence of any agreement, express or implied, regulating the respective rights of the owners of a party wall, either one may increase its height if the wall is of sufficient APPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the Chancery Branch, First Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County dismissing the petition in an action brought to restrain defendants from building a certain party wall above the original height. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Albert S. Brandeis, with Mr. Helm Bruce, for appellants:

Where a right is created in a party wall by prescription, the character of the use which has existed measures the extent of the right which is thereby acquired.

Welford v. Gerard, 108 Ky. 322, 56 S. W. 416; Mann v. Reigler, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 774, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 131, 111 S. W. 300; 3 Kent, Com. 13th ed. 437; Putzel v. Drov-

ers & M. Nat. Bank, 78 Md. 349, 22 L.R.A. 632, 44 Am. St. Rep. 298, 28 Atl. 276; Barry v. Edlavitch, 84 Md. 95, 33 L.R.A. 294, 35 Atl. 170; McLaughlin v. Cecconi, 141 Mass. 252, 5 N. E. 261; Calmelet v. Sichel, 48 Neb. 505, 58 Am. St. Rep. 700, 67 N. W. 467; Lewis v. New York & H. R. Co. 162 N. Y. 225, 56 N. E. 540; Boynton v. Longley, 19 Nev. 69, 3 Am. St. Rep. 781, 6 Pac. 437; Mississippi Mills Co. v. Smith, 69 Miss. 299, 30 Am. St. Rep. 546, 11 So. 26.

strength and can be raised without injury to the adjoining building, and without impairing the cross easement to which the other owner is entitled. No American authority can be found which disputes this proposition, while all of the following decisions support it; Graves v. Smith, 87 Ala. 450, 5 L.R.A. 298, 13 Am. St. Rep. 60, 6 So. 308; Tate v. Fratt, 112 Cal. 613, 44 Pac. 1061; Frowenfeld v. Casey, 139 Cal. 421, 73 Pac. 152; Field v. Leiter, 118 Ill. 17, 6 N. E. 877, reversing 18 Ill. App. 155; Fidelity Lodge No. 59, 1 O. O. F. v. Bond, 147 Ind. 437, 45 N. E. 338, 46 N. E. 825; Howell v. Goss, 128 Iowa, 569, 105 N. W. 61; Pierce v. Musson, 17 La. 389; Heine v. Merrick, 41 La. Ann. 194, 5 So. 700, 6 So. 637; Dorsey v. Habersack, 84 Md. 117, 35 Atl. 96; Matthews v. Dixey, 149 Mass. 595, 5 L.R.A. 102, 22 N. E. 61; Carlton v. Blake, 152 Mass. 176, 23 Am. St. Rep. 818, 25 N. E. 83; Walker v. Stetson, 162 Mass. 86, 44 Am. St. Rep. 350, 38 N. E. 18; Fleming v. Cohen, 186 Mass. 323, 104 Am. St. Rep. 572, 71 N. E. 563; Brooks v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639, 10 Am. St. Rep. 545, affirming 4 Lans. 283; Musgrave v. Sherwood, 23 Hun, 609, 60 How. Pr. 339; Mittnacht v. Slevin, 67 Hun, 315, 22 N. Y. Supp. 131, affirmed without opinion in 142 N. Y. 683, 37 N. E. 825; Berry v. Todd, 14 Daly, 450; Dauenhauer v. Devine, 51 Tex. 480, 32 Am. St. Rep. 627; Belletot v. Laube, 40 Va. 842, 52 S. E. 698; Demers v. Lemieux, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 21 C. S. 26.

And the mere fact that in carrying up a party wall a building act is violated will not render the owner doing it liable to his co-owner, where the latter has suffered no injury. Everett v. Edwards, 149 Mass. 588, 5 L.R.A. 110, 14 Am. St. Rep. 462, 22 N. E. 52.

A fortiori, then, the owner on one side of a party wall would have the right, within the limits of his own lot, to increase the height of the party wall if it could be done without injury to building on the adjoining lot. Eno v. Del Vecchio, 4 Duer, 53; Andrae v. Hazeltime, 58 Wis. 395, 46 Am. St. Rep. 635, 17 N. W. 18.

Upon the same principle, where one has acquired the use of his neighbor's wall as

26.
Where a party wall stands partly upon the land of one and partly upon the land of another, each man owns his land in fee simple and in severalty up to the dividing line between the two lots, and owns in fee simple and in severalty so much of the a support for his building by adverse use, the owner of the wall may add to its height without the consent of the other party, if it does no injury to the other party's right in the wall. Barry v. Edlavitch, 84 Md. 95, 33 L.R.A. 294, 35 Atl. 170.

But, where a lot owner erects a building and, to support it, uses a wall which is entirely upon the property of an adjoining lot owner, and the former in time acquires by adverse use an easement in the wall for the support of such building, he will have no right to place a further burden on the wall by increasing its height. McLaughlin v. Cecconi, 141 Mass. 252, 5 N. E. 261; Bright v. Morgan, 218 Pa. 178, 67 Atl. 58, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 626.

Of course, an agreement between the owners that the party wall shall be a certain height does not give the right by implication to either one of the co-owners to build it higher. Frowenfeld v. Casey, 139 Cal. 421, 73 Pac. 152; Henne v. Lankershim, 146 Cal. 70, 79 Pac. 591; Calmelet v. Sichel, 48 Neb. 505, 58 Am. St. Rep. 700, 67 N. W. 407.

So, in Miller v. Stuart, 107 Md. 23, 68 Atl. 273, it was held that the grant of the right to use a wall standing entirely upon the grantor's lot, which grant specifically permitted the grantee to insert girders into the wall and to use it as the westernmost inclosure of a building to be erected on the grantee's lot, did not, by implication, confer the right to increase the height of such wall.

The rule that one owner of a party wall may increase its height, if it can be done without injury to the rights of the other owner does not seem to prevail in England. Thus, in the earliest case which the writer has been able to find involving this question, Matts v. Hawkins, 5 Taunt. 20, it was held that, if one proprietor of a party wall increased its height, and the other pulled down the addition, the first might maintain trespass for pulling down only so much of it as stood on the half of the wall which was erected on the plaintiff's soil, upon the ground that they were not tenants in common of the wall or of the land on which it stood, though the wall was erected at their wall as stands upon his land, having an easement of support in so much of the wall as stands upon his neighbor's land, and in the land upon which that part of the wall stands.

1 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. 385; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 620; Brooks v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639, 10 Am. Rep. 545; Gibson v. Holden, 115 Ill. 199, 56 Am. Rep. 146, 3 N. E. 282; Bloch v. Isham, 28 Ind. 37, 92 Am. Dec. 287; Dauenhauer v. Devine, 51 Tex. 480, 32 Am. Rep. 627; Hoffman v. Kuhn, 57 Miss. 750, 34 Am. Rep. 491; Burton v. Moffitt, 3 Or. 29; Barr v. Lamaster, 48 Neb. 114, 32 L.R.A. 451, 66 N. W. 1110; Dunscomb v. Randolph, 107 Tenn. 89, 89 Am. St. Rep. 915, 64 S. W. 21; Bishop, Non-Contract Law, § 914; Henry v. Koch, 80 Ky. 391, 44 Am. Rep. 484.

Mr. Robert C. Kinkead, for appellees:

A party wall used as such, in the absence of proof to the contrary, will be presumed to have been erected under an agreement between the adjoining owners for their common use, or under an express grant.

Lloyd, Building & Buildings, § 182; Schile v. Brokhahus, 80 N. Y. 614; Brown v. Werner, 40 Md. 15; Fleming v. Cohen, 186 Mass. 323, 104 Am. St. Rep. 572, 71 N. E. 563; Bellenot v. Laube, 104 Va. 842, 52 S. E. 698.

One of the incidents of a party wall is the right of either party to heighten or lengthen it to meet the requirements of his building operations, if he can do so without injury to the other owner.

Putzel v. Drovers & M. Nat. Bank, 78 Md. 349, 22 L.R.A. 632, 44 Am. St. Rep.

joint expense. And the judges were also of the opinion that no trespass would lie if the parties were tenants in common of the wall, which would seem to leave the cotenant of a wall, who raised its height, remediless if his fellow tenant tore down the addition.

But in the next case in point of time, Curbitt v. Porter, 8 Barn. & C. 257, in which it appeared that one of two tenants in common of an old wall pulled it down with the intention of rebuilding it, and erected a new wall of a greater height than the old wall, it was held that this was not such a total destruction of the wall as would make him liable in trespass to his cotenant.

On the other hand, in the next case, Stedman v. Smith, 8 El. & Bl. 1, in which it appeared that one of the tenants in common of a wall took the coping stones off its top, heightened the wall, and replaced the coping stones on the addition, it was held that there was such an actual ouster of the other tenant from the possession of the wall as would sustain an action of trespass by the latter. Judge Crompton, in the course of the argument, said that the plaintiff had no longer the use of the same wall; that he "could not put flower pots on it, for in-

298, 28 Atl. 276; Everett v. Edwards, 149 Mass. 588, 5 L.R.A. 110, 14 Am. St. Rep. 462, 22 N. E. 52; Matthews v. Dixey, 149 Mass. 595, 5 L.R.A. 102, 22 N. E. 61; Negus v. Becker, 143 N. Y. 307, 25 L.R.A. 607, 42 Am. St. Rep. 724, 38 N. E. 290; Tate v. Fratt, 112 Cal. 613, 44 Pac. 1061; Fidelity Lodge No. 59, I. O. O. F. v. Bond, 147 Ind. 437, 45 N. E. 338, 46 N. E. 825; Brooks v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639, 10 Am. Rep. 545; Carlton v. Blake, 152 Mass. 176, 23 Am. St. Rep. 818, 25 N. E. 83; Jones, Easements, §§ 696, 697; Lloyd, Building & Buildings, §§ 185, 186; Washburn, Easements, p. 568.

Before the rights of one owner of a party wall can be curtailed as to his use of the wall, the objecting party must allege and prove that the agreement or grant creates a limitation in the right to its use.

Everett v. Edwards; Matthews v. Dixey; Bellenot v. Laube; Fleming v. Cohen; Brown v. Werner; and Schile v. Brokhahus,—supra.

O'Rear, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question for decision in this case is the right of one of the owners of a party wall to build upon it, so as to raise his house above the original height, without the consent of the other party. On the two lots owned, respectively, by Mrs. Bright and Miss Judge on Fourth street, in Louisville, were two houses, fronting upon the street. There was a wall between the houses, which stood equally upon the two lots 6½ inches upon each. This wall supported each of the houses on that side, and was a party wall. The buildings were each three stories high.

stance." And, in delivering judgment for the plaintiff, he stated that the plaintiff was excluded from the top of the wall, adding that "he might have wished to train fruit trees there, or to amuse himself by running along the top of the wall."

The foregoing language of Judge Crompton was quoted with approval in Watson v. Gray, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 192, in which it was held that, where one tenant in common of a wall increased its height for the purpose of supporting a building he was about to erect, and his co-owner knocked down the new piece, the former was not entitled to any damages for the throwing down of the wall, or to an injunction to restrain the latter from interfering with the rebuilding of it.

Various building acts have wholly superseded, as to London, the common law with reference to building on party walls, the present provisions on the subject being contained in part VIII. of the London building act of 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. chap. 213. See 10 Enc. Laws of England, 561. By these statutory provisions either owner of a party wall may heighten it upon complying with certain conditions.

Miss Judge desired to build an additional story to her house, and to remodel it by building a practically new house. Negotiations for an agreement between the owners of the lots having failed, Miss Judge and her tenants tore down her old house, except they left the party wall intact, and built an additional 9-inch wall on her side against and tied it to the party wall till the top of the latter was reached, making a 22½-inch wall, and then extended the party wall the full thickness up another story. In doing the work no damage was done to Mrs. Bright's building. Nor was her use of it disturbed. Mrs. Bright sought an injunction restraining Miss Judge and Bacon & Sons, her tenants, from building the additional story so that any part of it would rest on her side of the party wall. The injunction was denied, and she has appealed.

The two houses were old buildings. There is no record of an agreement between the owners of the lots respecting the party wall. Nor is there anyone who knows when the houses were built, or knows of any express agreement between the owners when they were built. All that is known is that the party wall stands equally upon the two lots, and that it has been so used by the respective owners and their grantors for time out of mind. Nor was it shown whether the two houses were built by the same person owning both lots. There is thus presented the naked question as to the legal rights of such owners in the common or party wall between their houses. There is no statute in this state regulating the rights of owners of adjoining urban lots who build adjoining houses upon them. Whatever rights the parties have in such walls depend upon the common law. Of course if there had been an express agreement embodied in a grant, the matter would be one of construction only; for the parties could limit or extend their rights in whatsoever way they could agree upon. In this state, under the common law, the right to use and the manner of use of a party wall depends upon one of two propositions: Either an agreement between adjoining owners, or by prescription. The adjudged cases throughout the country, which are very numerous, are not uniform in their declaration of the common law upon this subject. It would be useless, if not an endless task, to attempt to analyze and harmonize them. We apprehend that not a little of the confusion arises out of the constricted announcement of the controlling principle in the earlier cases, and the efforts of the later courts to keep within the strict rule stated as a principle, while working out differentiations in its application upon the varying facts of the cases, or resting the judgments 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

upon certain fictions, in the absence of anything better for support. We think the cases are really divisible into two great bodies: One where the right is purely prescriptive; the other where it is clearly the subject of agreement, express or implied. If two owners build a party wall for their common use, it is not accurate to say ever that their rights in the wall depend in any sense upon prescription. It is then a matter of agreement solely,—agreement expressed or implied. We can lay to one side the subject of express agreement, as that is not here. It is not to be presumed that men build party walls, or that either one of them would build one half, or any part, upon the adjoining lots, the walls designed to be used, and actually used, by each adjoining owner, without some kind of an understanding between them as to their respective rights in the wall. Without some understanding, if one alone so built the wall, he would be a trespasser to the extent that he encroached upon his neighbor's lot. If he was suffered to maintain his wall there for the period which sets up the statutes of limitation, his use and occupancy being hostile and exclusive, he would acquire title to the part of the other lot occupied by his wall, and the owner of such part would be barred of all his former title and the rights he had under it. But that would not be a party wall. It would be an individual wall. However, if the adjoining owner immediately or directly attached his house to the dividing wall, making it a part of his house, then the statutes of limitation would stop running, if they had begun, and the wall would become a party wall. The last owner, by his act in adopting it as a party wall, waived his right to sue in ejectment, and elected to treat the use and occupancy of his neighbor as amicable. In the latter event he would be, because he ought to be, estopped to deny that the wall thereafter stood as a party wall erected by agreement, just as if the agreement had been entered into before a brick was laid in it. One may adopt a situation so as to make himself a party to it as efficaciously as if he had entered at the beginning. There is no state of case that we can imagine where one owner builds a wall astraddle of the dividing line between his and his neighbor's lot, designed to be a party wall for the buildings upon each lot, and which is accepted and adopted by the other party thereafter, where the doctrine of prescription can logically enter into the case. The matter then becomes always a question of agreement, express or implied. If express, its terms control. If not express, then it must be implied, like all other implied agreements, that the parties mutually understood and as sented that a fair equivalent was to be rendered by the one for the benefit conferred upon him by the other. What, then, is the implied agreement? It is, we think, that the wall shall be and remain a party wall for each of the lots; that its use shall be as a wall to each of the buildings, constituting a part of each building (Baughner v. Wilkins, 16 Md. 35, 77 Am. Dec. 279), and to act as a support to each building (Fleming v. Cohen, 186 Mass. 323, 104 Am. St. Rep. 572, 71 N. E. 563) and, in the event either building falls into disrepair, or it is deemed expedient by its owners to remodel it (Heine v. Merrick, 41 La. Ann. 194, 5 So. 760, 6 So. 637), or reconstruct it (Beidler v. King, 209 Ill. 302, 101 Am. St. Rep. 246, 70 N. E. 763), he may do so, being careful not to injure the other building (Fleming v. Cohen, supra; Brooks v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639, 10 Am. Rep. 545), nor unnecessarily to interfere with its use (Clemens v. Speed, 93 Ky. 284, 19 L.R.A. 240, 19 S. W. 660; Negus v. Becker, 143 N. Y. 303, 25 L.R.A. 667, 42 Am. St. Rep. 724, 38 N. E. 290). That much seems to be well settled.

The question of compensation to the one building the wall need not be noticed here, except incidentally. The apparent divergence in the authorities is as to the right of either, without the consent of the other, to add to the original use of the party wall. It must be remembered that we are dealing alone with what was the implied agreement originally. Now, as neither party to such an arrangement, after it was executed, could withdraw from it without the consent of the other (Henry v. Koch, 80 Ky. 391, 44 Am. Rep. 484), as to do so would be to annul an executed contract, he would be bound to let the other use the exact wall, if it was sufficient and safe for the purpose, to support the latter's building and constitute a wall to it. But it could not be presumed that the parties to the original convention ever contemplated yielding complete or qualified dominion over any part of their lots except as to the strip on which the party wall stood. It is not the manner of men to do so. The law will not presume a thing contrary to the custom of men. Then each party reserved, it must be presumed, the right to do with his lot, and the building on it, anything that would not impair the other's free use of the party wall as a party wall. Included in such reservation, or, rather, excluded from the implied agreement of the parties, was the right of each to alter or reconstruct his building in any way he chose, so long as the other's use of the party wall was not impaired. If he had only a one-story house on his lot to begin with, he could later build on it a two-story house, or a ten-story house for that matter. He still owned his own lot, with all the rights of proprietorship. And he owned it up to his line, which is the middle of the dividing wall in this case. Ingals v. Plamondon, 75 Ill. 118. His neighbor, however, had an easement in so much of the former lots as was occupied by the party wall. What is that easement? It is to have the party wall maintained, with all its uses as a party wall, and no more. And the easement of each in the wall on the other lot is precisely the same. When the owner of one determined to build a new house, or alter the old by adding a story or more to it, he did not abandon his easement in the other man's share in the wall, nor the title to his own. It cannot be assumed that such was the original conception of the parties. On the contrary, it must have been foreseen that in time not only repairs must be made in each building, and alterations, too, perhaps, but that it would be desirable for the owner to enlarge his building by running it higher, or digging his cellar deeper. Putzel v. Drovers & M. Nat. Bank, 78 Md. 349, 22 L.R.A. 632, 44 Am. St. Rep. 298, 28 Atl. 276. As nothing was said between the parties, so far as known, restricting either owner as to such use of his property, it must be assumed that no such restriction was contemplated or included in their agreement. When one owner comes to enlarge his building, what, then, are his rights? As to all his property not covered by the party wall, it must be conceded it is unaffected by the agreement. And, as he evidently did not intend to have a less title in that part of his lot occupied by the party wall, save only as the easement was granted to his neighbor, he could use it precisely as he might the remainder of the lot, provided that in doing so his neighbor's easement was not disturbed. So far there would probably be no dispute as to the effect of their agreement. But, when it comes to using the party wall for its whole width and depth for the purpose of the additional story, there is the rub. The other man objects to using any part of his side of the wall for the extension. We must again have recourse to what was probably in the minds of the contracting parties in the original agreement. If, as suggested, each reserved the right to build his house higher, and neither contemplated yielding dominion over any part of his lot except an easement in the party wall, then it must have been in their thought, and within the terms of their grant, that each should have the right to use the common wall for all the purposes to which it could be put as a party wall to divide and support the two adjoining buildings; and, when either chose to add to his building, he could carry up the party wall in its entire width, so as to make it a party wall for any building either might maintain on his lot. There is this limitation: Neither shall use any more of the other lot than is already set apart for the party wall,—for that is the limitation set upon the use by the act of the parties at the time,—and neither shall so use even that part as to unnecessarily interfere with the other's use, as it was begun, or as the former uses it.

In the case at bar appellees have built the additional story on their house, and have used the party wall in doing so. This we think was within the intendment of the parties who originally established the party wall, and dedicated each a part of his lot to its use. But, argue appellants, suppose we should want presently to build a ten-story house on our lot, then what is our situation as to the party wall? It must follow that appellants have that right, including the right to use the party wall for the purpose, if it is strong enough to support the additional weight. Or they can add to it on their side, as appellees did in this case, till the top of appellees' building was reached, then go on, using the entire width of the wall, so long as they do not impair its stability as a wall for the other house. They would, when they came to use the wall of the additional story put on by appellees, be compelled to compensate appellees for one half of its then value (Spaulding v. Grundy, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 951, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 149, 104 S. W. 293), and, if appellees or their vendees ever use the wall so built by appellants, then they would have to pay as outlined in the above-cited case. But, appellees urge, they may desire, and likely will, to build a steel structure, as is becoming the modern way of building very tall houses, and in that event the brick wall now there, as added to by appellees, would be entirely useless for their purpose, indeed, would be in the way. We have no doubt appellants have the right to build a steel structure on their lot, and many stories higher than appellees' building. But suppose appellees had done nothing toward adding their additional story. The old party wall would have been in the way just the same, and have been as useless for appellants' purposes. Appellees would have been entitled to have it maintained for the use of their building.

But, while the law does not make contracts for parties, even when they are in a bad pickle, it attempts to put a reasonable and workable construction on such contracts as they may have made, because the law presumes that it is what they intended. The argument advanced by appellants, and the conjectural responses made by the court, as to the situation if changed, go to illustrate the impracticability of the rule of construction contended for by appellants. For if they could not agree further, both would be bound down to the maintenance of the old-fashioned houses, not rentable in competition with more modern buildings, leaving them helpless, or one of them in a situation which well could have been foreseen. That construction does injustice to their foresight and good sense, as well as sense of right, not to say enterprise. The other rule, the one which supposes that the parties intended their agreement to be not only continuing (as its nature clearly indicates), but a practical one, seems to us to be the better. It is that, in the absence of the proof of an express agreement, the implication is that the parties have set aside for their common use as a party wall between the houses built on their adjoining lots, including repairs, remodeling, and renewals and extensions thereof, so much of their lots as is occupied by the existing party wall; that if, in order to execute the plan of the remodeled building, it is necessary for the party so intending to remove the party wall and put in one commensurate to the additional weight of the two buildings, he may do so at his own expense, doing no injury to the other building, and not unnecessarily interfering with its use by its occupant or owner. Putzel v. Drovers & M. Nat. Bank, supra.

The other line of cases, that where the right is one created by prescription, need not be noticed here further than to indicate the difference between it and this case. Where one has built a wall on his own lot, but adjoining or near another lot, and the owner of the latter, without express agreement, joins his building to the wall, and maintains it for a period sufficient to constitute a bar under the statutes of limitation, then the latter has a right, established by prescription, to maintain the exact house he has built, and, in the manner and to the extent of his use, he cannot be interfered with by the former. It is sometimes said this is because the law presumes the execution of a grant and its loss from the lapse of time. But this ancient fiction is not now needed to support the prescription under the modern statute of limitation, which are not only statutes of repose, but operate so as to create right where none existed before. It is now the continued adverse use that creates the right of easement, not the fictitious lost grant. As it is the use that creates the right, the right must necessarily be measured by that use. It would be illogical to reason that one could obtain a right from a long-continued use different from that very use. Hence it is, in those cases where the right is one created by prescription, it is limited, from its very nature and origin, to the particular use which gave it being. So, when an easement in another man's wall has been obtained by long use, which is to say by prescription, it does not make the wall a party wall, except to the extent that the use of the encroacher has become a right; and, as nothing ought to be presumed in favor of a wrongdoer, it will not be presumed that, because the owner suffered a trespasser to use the former's wall for say fifteen years for a particular purpose, he thereby assented to its further use for all purposes. To this class of cases belong Welford v. Gerard, 108 Ky. 322, 56 S. W. 416, and Mann v. Reigler, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 774, 111 S. W. 300, cited and relied upon by appellant.

In the case at bar, and others of its class, the right does not rest at all on prescription; for in this class so soon as the agreement is executed, either by writing or performance, it establishes the right of the parties to the dividing wall as a party wall, with all the incidental rights that pertain to it. Time has no part in the shaping of the rights of these parties. Their rights were as ample the first day the wall was built as forty years later. In the other class there is no right at all in one of the parties until the lapse of the period of the statutory bar. One grows out of contract; the other out of a long-continued trespass. To measure one, the terms of the contract must be sought for; to measure the other, the exact use which created it may alone be looked to, as there is nothing else to which resort can be made to find the rights of the parties. In the first the contract may be implied. Under the situation we have in hand here, from the very necessity of the situation, there must have been some agreement. Houses do not grow by chance. The partition wall between them being partly on each lot, and each using the wall in common as a party wall, the inference of a pre-existing agreement is irresistible. The arrangement could not have been accidental. Nor could it well have been trespass, as each, by using the common wall with knowledge of the other's use, assents to the situation,—and there cannot be a permitted trespass. While it might be better if such agreements were in writing, and recorded as deeds are, still the agreement is not strictly in derogation of title, but on the whole is beneficial to the title (Harber v. Evans, 101 Mo. 661, 10 L.R.A. 41, 20 Am. St. Rep. 646, 14 S. W. 750); and, when executed, it is not within the inhibition of the statutes of frauds and perjuries (Walker v. Shackelford, 49 Ark. 503, 4 Am. St. Rep. 61, 5 S. W. 887; Rindge v. Baker, 57 N. Y. 209, 15 Am. Rep. 475; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) Pireaux v. Simon, 79 Wis. 392, 48 N. W. 674). Whatever may have been the thought of the early English judges as to the scope of this doctrine, it is much obscured by the paucity of precedents. The growth of large cities in modern times, and cities and towns in great number, where party walls are not only highly desirable as an economical matter to the parties, but well-nigh necessary, has shown the wisdom and necessity of the rule which we have stated, and which we believe is the trend of the authorities, and is, to say the least of it, the American common law on the subject.

The decree of the chancellor is therefore affirmed.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF LOUISIANA

v.

ARMAS WOOD, Appt.

(122 La. 1014, 48 So. 438.)

Criminal law — confession — indictment.

Where a sheriff having the custody of accused obtained a confession from him by promises of assistance, and statements that he would do all he could to save accused from being hung, other confessions, subsequently made to different persons, but in the presence of such sheriff, would be regarded as tainted with the same improper influence; and were inadmissible against accused, though he was warned before making them.

(February 1. 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for the Parish of Acadia convicting him of murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Howard E. Bruner and James A. Gremillion, for appellant:

When once a confession under improper influence is obtained, the presumption arises that a subsequent confession flows from the like influence, and this though the subsequent confession was made to a different person from the one holding out the inducement.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 542; Greenl. Ev. 1st ed. p. 221; Marr's Crim. Jur. p. 655; State v. Berry, 50 La. Ann. 1310, 24 So. 329.

Messrs. John J. Robjra and R. G. Pleasant, with Messrs. Walter Gulon, Headnote by PROVOST, J.

Note. — As to when confession is deemed voluntary, see subject note to Ammons v. State, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 768. Google

Attorney General, and William Campbell, for the State:

Although an original confession may have been obtained by improper means, yet subsequent confessions of the same or like facts may be admitted if the court believes from the length of time intervening, of proper warning of the consequences of confession, or from other circumstances, that the delusive hopes or fears under the influence of which the original confession was obtained were entirely dispelled.

Marr's Crim. Jur. § 395, p. 654.

Provosty, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant, a negro, was convicted of murder, and sentenced to be hanged. Defendant was arrested on suspicion. While he was in jail, the sheriff told him that "the court would be lenient on him if he made a confession. I told him if he would make a man out of himself, and make a confession, that I thought I would be able to help him out; that the probabilities were his neck might be saved if he made a confession; that I would do all I could to save his neck."

Q. Did you not tell him not to mention anything about your having made that promise to him?

A. Probably I might have told him that.

Q. Did you not tell him, if asked if any promise was made or any inducement held out to him, to answer "No,"—that no promise had been made to him for the purpose of obtaining this confession? Try to refresh your memory.

A. I may have told him so. I would not say for sure whether I did or not. The probabilities are I did.

These promises failed to elicit a confession. But a week later, on October 15, 1908, the defendant having in the meantime been transferred from the jail of the parish of Acadia, where the crime was committed and where he was arrested, to the jail of the parish of Calcasieu for safekeeping, and there lodged in the "death chamber" or cell for prisoners condemned to die, he asked to see the sheriff, and made a confession to him in the presence of several persons, including the sheriff of Acadia, who had made him the promises and warned him against letting the fact be known. This officer, about twenty minutes before the confession was made, visited defendant in his cell and told him to remember the promises which he had made him. Not knowing of these promises, the sheriff of Calcasieu, Mr. Reid, warned the defendant that any confession he might make would be used against him on the trial, and to take notice that he made no promises in that connection. Afterwards, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) on November 8, 1908, in the parish jail of Acadia, the defendant repeated to the sheriff of Acadia the confession he had made in the jail of Calcasieu, and on November 11th, a few days before the trial, he repeated this confession to the district attorney without that officer having made him any promises, in the presence, however, of the sheriff of Acadia who had made him the promises. It nowhere appears that the latter officer at any time revoked the promises he had thus made. The first confession—that made to sheriff Reid and others in the jail of Calcasieu—was excluded as having been induced by promises, but the other two were admitted. We think the latter two were just as objectionable as the first.

"When once a confession under improper influence is obtained, the presumption arises that a subsequent confession of the same nature flows from the like influence; and this though the subsequent confession was made to a different person from the one holding out the inducement." 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 542.

Judgment set aside, and case remanded for further trial.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

STANDARD SAVINGS & LOAN ASSOCIATION, Appt.,

v.

RALPH L. ALDRICH, Receiver of Michigan Savings & Loan Association.

(89 C. C. A. 646, 163 Fed. 216.)

Interlocutory decree — setting aside — close of term.

1. A decree fixing the amount of indebtedness of a loan association in the hands of a receiver to a claimant is merely interlocutory, and, upon good cause shown, may be set aside at any time before the close

Case Note.—Power of building and loan association to borrow money to pay withdrawing members.

So few cases have considered this question, and there is such a decided conflict of opinion among the few that have, that it would not be practicable to formulate any general principles from them.

The doctrine of STANDARD SAV. & L. ASSO. v. ALDRICH, finds support in Blackburn Bldg. Soc. v. Cunliffe, B. & Co. L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 61 (affirmed on other grounds as Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn & Dist. Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 9 App. Cas. 857), which held that a loan by a building and loan association from a bank for the purpose of paying withdrawing members was ultra vires and void in the absence of an express borrowing power in the association. An inquiry was, of the trial at which the final decree in the cause is enrolled, although it is subsequent to the term at which the interlocutory decree is passed.

Building and loan association — borrowing money.

2. A building and loan association has no implied power to borrow money to pay a withdrawing stockholder.

Same — ultra vires — estoppel.

3. One lending money to a building association with knowledge that it was borrowed for the purpose of paying withdrawing members cannot compel a repayment on the ground of estoppel to deny the power to borrow.

Same — insolvency — withdrawal.

4. The insolvency of a building and loan association suspends the power of the directors to apply funds to the payment of withdrawing shareholders.

Corporation — knowledge of agent — director of other corporation.

5. A corporation which places one of its directors upon the board of directors of another corporation for the purpose of ascertaining its financial condition is chargeable with knowledge which he could not escape without wilfully shutting his eyes.

Same — notice.

6. One loaning money to a building association with knowledge that it was borrowing money and assigning securities for an illegal purpose cannot claim the standing of an innocent party.

Same — equitable rights.

7. One loaning money for an illegal purpose, to an insolvent building association, may recover what remains in its hands, and what it has expended for legitimate purposes, on the theory that ex æquo et bono it ought not to retain it.

Same — holding securities.

8. One loaning money to a building association to satisfy the claims of withdrawing members, taking an assignment of mortgages of borrowing members as security, cannot hold the mortgages against the claims of a receiver of the association, since he is charged with knowledge of the want of power of the association to make the assignment.

however, ordered to ascertain the amount, if any, of the claim in question that was used for the legitimate benefit of the association; the court holding that moneys so used would be a valid claim. In reaching the conclusion that obligations given for money borrowed to pay withdrawing members were ultra vires and void, the court reasoned that, where there was an express prohibition against borrowing, it must be obeyed, that, in the absence of such an express prohibition in case of a company or society constituted for especial purposes, no borrowing could be permitted without express authority, unless properly incident to the course and conduct of the business and for proper purposes. Hence, where there was no express borrowing power, and no necessity, for the general purposes of the business of the society, that a loan should be had, nothing could be allowed upon the theory of an incidental or implied power.

This doctrine was also applied in Re National Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 5 Ch. 309, as to loans contracted by a society for the purpose of advancing the proceeds to its members on the security of their shares. In holding such loans to be ultra vires and void, the court said that the society was without any power to borrow; that the rules and very nature of the society show that it would be contrary to its constitution to borrow money so as to bind the company, or to make the individual members of the company liable; that the whole constitution of the society was that the members would make certain monthly payments, and, in consideration of such payments, and the fines provided by the rules, they were to receive certain loans.

This doctrine also finds support in Re Powell, 93 Mo. App. 296, which held that a building and loan association had no power to borrow money other than for temporary purposes, and that the giving of notes to stockholders for the retirement of their stock was not a temporary purpose; and, hence, such notes were ultra vires and void. A statute which contained a provision authorizing building and loan associations to retire stock out of a portion of their current receipts was held not to confer any power upon the association to retire stock by giving the notes of the association.

But North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. First Nat. Bank, 79 Wis. 31, 11 L.R.A. 845, 47 N. W. 300, holds that, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, a building association has the power to borrow money to pay its stockholders when their stock reaches its par value. So much of this opinion is not necessarily in conflict with the foregoing cases. But it was also held that, as against a bank, bona fide loaning money to the association to pay its stockholders, evidence was inadmissible (to show) that the stock of such stockholders had not become of its par value at the time of the loan; the court saying that, if the board had the power to borrow the money for a legitimate purpose, the corporation could not defeat recovery on the ground that the board applied the money borrowed for an unauthorized purpose, unless it was also shown that the lender knew the purpose for which the money was borrowed was unauthorized. Even to this extent, as to the facts, the case is not necessarily in conflict with STANDARD SAV. & L. ASSO. v. ALDRICH, as in that case the lender knew that the loan was to be used for an illegal purpose. The two cases were, however, decided on opposing theories. The theory of the Hudson case, to a certain extent at least, supports the doctrine of cases hereinafter considered that, where such an association has either an ex-

Same — benefit.

9. One lending money to a building association with knowledge of its intention to use it for an illegal purpose can recover the money only to the extent that he shows that the association has been benefited by it.

(July 23, 1908.)

A PPEAL by intervener from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan dismissing its petition to establish a right to securities in a creditor's bill against an insolvent savings and loan association. Affirmed.

Statement by Lurton, Circuit Judge:

This is an appeal from a decree dismissing a petition filed by an intervener in a creditor's suit pending in the circuit court. The Standard Savings & Loan Association and the Michigan Savings & Loan Association are two corporations organized under the general law of Michigan providing for the creation of building and loan companies. The Michigan association became insolvent. Under a general creditors' bill filed in the circuit court, diversity of citizenship existing, a receiver was appointed, its assets impounded, and the creditors who desired to share in the distribution of assets required to file their claims. Among the creditors who came in by intervention to assert a claim was the Standard Savings & Loan Association. The claim, as stated in the petition, was for money loaned, originally aggregating $65,000, which, by credits, had been reduced on April 1, 1901, to $46,103. 67. To secure this indebtedness it was averred that the Michigan association had assigned certain real-estate mortgages made to it by borrowing members. These securities, the petitioner consenting, were turned over to the receiver; the order providing that such lien as the Standard association had against them should be transferred to the fund which should be realized from their collection by the receiver. A decree, by consent of the receiver, was entered July, 1901, press or implied power to borrow money for any purpose, and the money is borrowed by the proper officers, the association is estopped from questioning its authority, although a portion of the money borrowed may not have been used for the benefit of the stockholders and of the association; while the reasoning in STANDARD SAV. & L. ASSO. v. ALDRICH, also the Powell Case, would seem to support the doctrine that an estoppel cannot be predicated on a contract by such an association, which is beyond the scope of its power. The same may also be said of the Cunliffe Case and Re National Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. In all of these cases, however, and especially in the Powell Case, it appeared that the holder of the obligations against the association knew of the illegality of the consideration, although in the Cunliffe Case and in Re National Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. this knowledge was chargeable to the lender or holder of the obligation, on the theory that the obligation, or the agreement out of which it grew, contemplated a course of dealing not authorized by the rules or constitution of the society, thus apparently charging him with knowledge as to limitations on the authority of the society to borrow; and it is not entirely clear that these cases did not also charge the lender with knowledge as to the purpose of the loan,—at least no point was made as to the good faith or bad faith of the lender.

The doctrine of the Hudson Case finds support in Bohn v. Boone Bldg. & L. Asso. 135 Iowa, 140, 124 Am. St. Rep. 263, 112 N. W. 199, which goes to the extent of sustaining a claim in the hands of an original stockholder for the par value of his stock, surrendered by him, although at the time of the transaction the association was insolvent. On this point the court said: "When, therefore, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) plaintiff's shares matured, and his right to withdraw the value thereof became fixed, it was perfectly competent for him to leave the money as a loan in the hands of the company, unless such transaction was so clearly in excess of the corporate power of the association as to be ultra vires and void. There is no statute of this state denying to building and loan associations the power to borrow money; and, in the absence of such restrictions, we think the power is implied from the general nature of the business they are organized to carry on." The court added that the fact that the association had become insolvent since executing a note to the stockholder in question to secure the withdrawal of his stock, or the fact that the association was insolvent at the time the note in question was given, was immaterial; that the association could not be heard to plead, in avoidance of the action, that it was in fact insolvent at a time long prior to the date when it actually ceased to do business.

Marion Trust Co. v. Crescent Loan & Invest. Co. 27 Ind. App. 451, 87 Am. St. Rep. 257, 61 N. E. 688, also held that a note given by an association for money borrowed to pay withdrawing stockholders was valid and enforceable, although the association was insolvent at the time, and such stockholders were not entitled to receive the full amounts paid them, of which facts the lender had notice. This conclusion was based on the theory that the lender of money to a corporation is not affected by the wrongful application of the moneys loaned, and that his right to recover will not be defeated by his knowledge that it was devoted to an illegal use, unless such use was made a condition of the lending, or the lender actually participated therein. On this point the court said that the lender knew that the money was fixing the amount of the indebtedness of the Michigan association to the Standard association on account of the transaction referred to at $44,240.33, but reserving any question of the "status" of the claim or interest. In July, 1904, this order was vacated so far as it determined any indebtedness, and the receiver allowed to withdraw his answer and to file defenses to the claim. Upon a final hearing, the judge denied all relief and dismissed the intervening petition.

Argued before Lurton, Severens, and Richards, Circuit Judges.

Mr. Dwight C. Rexford, for appellant:

The ultra vires contracts being void, the lender is entitled to recover the money independently of contract.

Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 59, 35 L. ed. 68, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Miller v. American Mut. Acci. Ins. Co. 92 Tenn. 167, 20 L.R.A. 765, 21 S. W. 39; Buckeye Marble & F. Co. v. Harvey, 92 Tenn. 115, 18 L.R.A. 252, 36 Am. St. Rep. 71, 20 S. W. 427; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. 131 U. S. 389, 33 L. ed. 163, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770; Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Williamson, 189 U. S. 129, 47 L. ed. 740, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527; McCracken v. Halsey Fire Engine Co. 57 Mich. 361, 24 N. W. 104; Thomp. Bldg. & L. Asso. 2d ed. pp. 354, 370, 557-583; Kadish v. Garden City Equitable Loan & Bldg. Asso. 151 Ill. 531, 42 Am. St. Rep. 256, 38 N. E. 236; Vought v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 172 N. Y. 508, 92 Am. St. Rep. 761, 65 N. E. 496; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 494; Milbank v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 64 How. Pr. 20; Holmes & G. Mfg. Co. v. Holmes & W. Metal Co. 127 N. Y. 252, 21 Am. St. Rep. 448, 27 N. E. 831; Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Corp. 66 N. H. 100, 9 L.R.A. 689, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 319, 49 Am. St. Rep. 582, 20 Atl. 383; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 721; Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 17 L. ed. 732; Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 629, 25 L. ed. 190; Bowditch v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 141 Mass. 292, 55 Am. Rep. 474, 4 N. E. 798; White v. Franklin Bank, 22 Pick. 181; Poock v. Lafayette Bldg. Asso. 71 Ind. 357.

It is immaterial whether the lender, at the time the loans were made, had notice, or knew, of the purpose to which the borrower intended to apply the money.

Engelhardt v. Fifth Ward Permanent Dime Sav. & L. Asso. 148 N. Y. 281, 35 L.R.A. 289, 42 N. E. 710; Aldrich v. Gray, 77 C. C. A. 597, 147 Fed. 453, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 832; Cook, Corp. § 727; Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 413, 8 Am. Rep. 656; Darst v. Gale, 83 Ill. 137; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 389; Thompson v. Lambert, 44 Iowa, 239; 2 Cook, Corp. 4th ed. p. 1702, § 766; Wright v. Hughes, 119 Ind. 324, 12 Am. St. Rep. 412, 21 N. E. 907; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. R. Co. 78 Hun, 213, 28 N. Y. Supp. 933; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342, 20 L. ed. 439; Green v. Collins, 3 Cliff. 494, Fed. Cas. No. 5,755; Tracy v. Talmage, 14 N. Y. 162, 67 Am. Dec. 132.

The lender should not be deprived of the benefit of the securities held by it.

Burton v. Schilbach, 45 Mich. 504, 8 N. W. 497; American U. Tele. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 1 McCrary, 188, 1 Fed. 745.

Mr. De Forest Paine, for appellee:

Money cannot lawfully be borrowed to pay withdrawing stockholders.

Goss v. Peters, 98 Mich. 112, 57 N. W. 28; Thomas v. Richmond, 12 Wall. 349, 20 L. ed. 453; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 145 U. S. 393, 36 L. ed. 748, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 953; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342, 20 L. ed. 439; Cannan v. Bryce, 3 Barn. & Ald. 179; M'Kinnell v. Robinson, 3 Mees. & W. 434; Brown v. Tarkington, 3 Wall. 377, 18 L. ed. 255; Higgins v. McCrea, 116 U. S. 684, 29 L. ed. 769, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557.

One may disaffirm a contract forbidden by law, and recover the money paid on it, only while the contract remains executory; but after it is executed he cannot recover the money in any form of action.

Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 49, 26 L. ed. 347; Thomas v. Richmond, supra; Morgan v. Groff, 4 Barb. 524; Merritt v. Millard, 4 Keyes, 209; White v. Franklin Bank, 22 Pick. 181; Todd v. Caplinger, 4 Bush, 139; Ashbrook v. Dale, 27 Mo. App. 649; American Strawboard Co. v. Peoria Strawboard Co. 65 Ill. App. 502; Gleason v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa) 43 N. W. 517; Bowman v. Phillips, 41 Kan. 364, 3 L.R.A. 631, 13 Am. St. Rep. 292, 21 Pac. 230; Lowry v. Bourdieu, 2 Dougl. K. B. 408; Tappenden v. Randall, borrowed for a purpose not in itself immoral or wrong, but illegal because not within the corporate power of the borrower, and added: "The validity of a contract depends upon its terms and the consideration upon which it is executed. The contract of appellee was to loan the money, and of the appellant to pay it back. Such contract is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a legal one. The mere knowledge of appellee of the illegal use to which it was intended to apply the money, or the purposes of the appellant, do not form a part of the consideration. The consideration is the cause of the contract, and is distinct from the motive to it."

2 Bos. & P. 467; Hastelow v. Jackson, 8 Barn. & C. 221; Bone v. Eckless, 5 Hurlst. & N. 925.

Lurton, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

1. There was no error in vacating the order determining the indebtedness of the Michigan association to the Standard association. Although the order was made at a subsequent term, yet the order set aside was not final, but interlocutory, and, upon good cause shown, might be set aside at any time before the close of the term at which the final decree was enrolled. Loeser v. Savings Deposit Bank & T. Co. 163 Fed. 212. The facts upon which the court acted in setting aside that order and allowing defense to be made to the claim amply justified the action of the court.

2. The origin of the debt in question was this: In November, 1897, the Michigan association, though still a going concern, was in fact insolvent, and much in need of money to satisfy demands of withdrawing shareholders. In this emergency it applied to the Standard association for assistance. The negotiations were carried on by their respective secretaries, Galvin for the Standard association and Wemple for the Michigan association. These secretaries were the real managers of these associations and, to quote counsel, "were the whole thing." The evidence makes it plain that the purpose of the Michigan association in borrowing was to pay off importunate withdrawing shareholders, and this purpose was as well known to the lender as the borrower. Indeed, Mr. Galvin, the man of all work for the Standard association, and the negotiator of the loans, admits that the original plan was that the money loaned should be paid direct to such withdrawing shareholders, and that he therefore paid to himself, in his character of withdrawing shareholder, $3,500, but did not carry out the scheme of direct payments further because of book-keeping complications. To carry out the arrangement the Michigan association subscribed to the requisite number of shares in the Standard association, and, upon the footing of a shareholder, applied for and obtained the loans in question, using same as stated above. That the Michigan association had no power to become a shareholder in the Standard association is not disputed. The enabling act under which both associations were organized provides that such companies may be created "for the purpose of building and improving homesteads and lending money to the members only." Michigan Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 7554, 7581. The investment of funds in the shares of a company organized for a like purpose is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

beyond the scope of the most liberal view of the incidental or implied powers of such companies. The objects of such associations being only to lend the funds contributed by members for the purpose of building and improving homesteads, one such association could not become a member of another, nor could it lend its own funds except to its own members for the purpose indicated. The concession, therefore, that the Michigan association could not legally become a member of the Standard association, and that the latter could not legally lend its money to an association which was not and could not lawfully become a member, has not been inadvertently made. Thomps. Bldg. & L. Asso. 2d ed. p. 215, § 114; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1028; Kadish v. Garden City Equitable Loan & Bldg. Asso. 151 Ill. 531, 42 Am. St. Rep. 256, 38 N. E. 236; North America Bldg. Asso. v. Sutton, 35 Pa. 463, 78 Am. Dec. 349; Mechanics' & W. Mut. Sav. Bank & Bldg. Asso. v. Meriden Agency Co. 24 Conn. 159.

The question as to whether, in the absence of statutory authority, such an association has the power to borrow money for the legitimate purposes of the association, such as to pay maturing shares and thereby avoid recalling or assigning profitable investments, has not often arisen and need not be here decided. The English authorities need to be distinguished, for they turn, in the main, upon whether the loans were made in accordance with rules adopted by the association made by authority of the general enabling acts. In Murray v. Scott, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 519, 538, it was held that the incorporating act having given power to the members to make rules and regulations for the conduct of the business, not in conflict with the objects and purposes of the society or the terms of the act, was broad enough to sustain a rule allowing the managers to borrow for the legitimate purposes of the business; but such a power, resting upon implication, is not an unlimited power to borrow. In the case just cited, the Earl of Selborne very well said: "The only real and true limit of the rule-making power, as to a matter not governed by the general law of the realm or by any express prohibition in the statute, must be that pointed out by Giffard, L. J. The power cannot be so exercised as to make the society a thing different from a benefit-building society formed for the purpose and in the manner defined by the act."

In Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn & Dist. Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 9 App. Cas. 857, it was held, upon full consideration, that, when no rule allowing borrowing had been adopted, overdrafts were borrowings and ultra vires. The matter is generally regulated by statute in the United States, and in Wilson v. Parvin, 56 C. C. A. 268, 119 Fed. 652, we held that, under the Tennessee incorporating act, such associations had power to borrow for the legitimate purpose of their business. The Michigan statute providing for such associations confers no power to borrow, but does not in terms prohibit such transactions. If the Michigan association had any such power, it arises by necessary implication, and must therefore be limited to the necessary and legitimate purpose of the organization, as defined in the enabling act. Goss v. Peters, 98 Mich. 112, 57 N. W. 28, construing an act defining the powers of mutual fire insurance companies, points clearly to a very narrow power of borrowing by such associations as those here involved, if any such power exists under any circumstances. 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1023; North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. First Nat. Bank, 79 Wis. 31, 11 L.R.A. 845, 47 N. W. 300; Blackburn Bldg. Soc. v. Cunliffe, B. & Co. L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 61, 70. The members of the Michigan association had adopted no rules authorizing the managers to borrow money for any purpose; but, assuming that the corporation had an implied power through its directors and managers to borrow money, it was a power limited to the necessary and legal purposes and objects of the business. The known and assumed purpose for which this money was borrowed was to pay off withdrawing members. Of this purpose the lending association had full notice through its secretary, by whom the whole matter was arranged and negotiated. The evidence makes this clear, and we so find the fact to be. The power to borrow money to pay off withdrawing stockholders cannot be legitimately inferred or implied. The scheme of the enabling act, as indicated by the general purpose of such associations as well as by the terms and conditions under which shareholders are allowed to withdraw dues paid in and a proportionate share of the profits earned, is that only current income shall be so applied. The withdrawal of a shareholder is the withdrawal of capital pledged primarily to creditors and to carry on the business for which the association was organized. The funds applicable, therefore, to the payment of withdrawing shareholders, is the fund arising from the current contributions of a solvent and going association; and no other funds can be legitimately so applied. This we think plain from the relation of shareholders to such associations and is plainly indicated by the proviso of the 6th section of the enabling statute: "That not more than one half of the funds received by the association in any one month shall be applicable to the payment of withdrawing shareholders unless otherwise ordered by the directors; and, when the demands of withdrawing shareholders exceed the funds applicable to their payment, they shall be paid in the order in which their notice of withdrawal has been given."

We conclude, therefore, that no authority existed, express or implied, to borrow money to meet the claims of withdrawing shareholders. Such a borrowing would not be for the purpose of paying debts and liabilities in due course of business. Blackburn Bldg. Soc. v. Cunliffe, B. Co. L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 61, affirmed in L. R. 9 App. Cas. 857. Appellants, as we have before stated, had notice that the borrowing was for the payment of withdrawing shareholders, and are constructively charged with knowledge that the managers were acting without power in so doing and in assigning the mortgages of borrowing shareholders to secure the loan. A contract beyond the scope of the power of the Michigan association, express or implied, cannot be enforced by an appeal to the rules of estoppel. Any such application of the doctrine would be, in effect, to enlarge the power of the corporation in accordance with the discretion of its managers, violating thereby the rights of innocent shareholders and a sound public policy. Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 60, 35 L. ed. 68, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. 131 U. S. 371, 389, 33 L. ed. 157, 163, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770; Miller v. American Mut. Acci. Ins. Co. 92 Tenn. 167, 176, 20 L.R.A. 765, 21 S. W. 39; McCormick v. Market Nat. Bank, 165 U. S. 538, 549, 41 L. ed. 817, 821, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433; Re National Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 5 Ch. 309; California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 363, 368, 42 L. ed. 198, 200, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831.

In McCormick v. Market Nat. Bank, cited above, the court said: "The doctrine of ultra vires, by which a contract made by a corporation beyond the scope of its corporate powers is unlawful and void, and will not support an action, rests, as this court has often recognized and affirmed, upon three distinct grounds: The obligation of anyone contracting with a corporation to take notice of the legal limits of its powers; the interest of the stockholders not to be subject to risks which they have never undertaken; and, above all, the interest of the public that the corporation shall not transcend the powers conferred upon it by law. Pearce v. Madison & I. R. Co. 21 How. 441, 16 L. ed. 184; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. 131 U. S. 371, 384, 33 L. ed. 157, 161, 9 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 770; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 48, 35 L. ed. 55, 64, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478."

More than this, the Michigan association was insolvent at the time. This fact, without more, suspended the power and right of the directors to apply any funds to the payment of withdrawing shareholders. This we held in regard to this very association in Aldrich v. Gray, 77 C. C. A. 597, 147 Fed. 453, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 832, where we held that the receiver might recover the funds so illegally paid out to such shareholders. That it is not shown that the appellant company knew that insolvency existed when the first loan was made in November, 1897, may, for the purpose of this case, be conceded; but, when the last $40,000 was paid over, it had constructive knowledge, for it had caused its own treasurer, Mr. Wilson, to be placed in the board of directors of the borrowing company for the purpose of discovering whether the condition of the Michigan association was such as to justify further effort to save it. Going into the board as the representative of the Standard association, it was charged with the knowledge which he could not escape without wilfully shutting his eyes; but, irrespective of notice of insolvency, the Standard association knew that the managers were borrowing money and assigning securities for an illegal purpose. They are therefore in no sense entitled to the footing of an innocent party.

Conceding the utter illegality of the contract, the appellants in the court below and here say that they abandon and repudiate the contract and sue only to recover money which the appellee association received and which ex æquo et bono it ought not to retain. The principle to which the appellants appeal is perfectly plain and well settled. Although the managers of the Michigan association had no power to borrow money for such purposes, yet, to the extent that the money has not been expended or has been paid out in discharge of legitimate obligations of the association, it would be unjust and inequitable that it should not be held accountable. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 171 U. S. 138, 43 L. ed. 108, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808; Aldrich v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 176 U. S. 618, 628-636, 44 L. ed. 611, 615-618, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 27 L. ed. 238, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 442; Logan County Nat. Bank v. Townsend, 139 U. S. 67, 35 L. ed. 107, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496; Re Cork & Y. R. Co. L. R. 4 Ch. 748, 760; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Johnson City, 49 L.R.A. 123, 40 C. C. A. 58, 99 Fed. 663, 666; Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91, 97; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ditty v. Dominion Nat. Bank, 22 C. C. A. 376, 43 U. S. App. 613, 75 Fed. 769; Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 153; Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. S. 182, 186, 37 L. ed. 1044, 1046, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71; Re National Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 5 Ch. 309, 313; Cunliffe Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn & Dist. Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 9 App. Cas. 857; Blackburn Bldg. Soc. v. Cunliffe, B. & Co. L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 61, 71. This right of recovery is based upon an implied promise to return the money or property so received or to make compensation to the extent that it has actually benefited by its application to the discharge of actual liabilities incurred in the legitimate course of business. In Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Johnson City, supra, this court had occasion to deal with the question as to whether there was any liability in consequence of an issue of railroad bonds by a municipal corporation in aid of a railroad company. The bonds having been held void (Johnson City v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. 100 Tenn. 138, 44 S. W. 670), an action was brought by a holder of bonds against the city for money had and received to its use. Speaking for this court, Taft, Circuit Judge, said: "Such an action is based, not on an express or implied contract, but upon an obligation which the law supplies from the circumstances, because, ex æquo et bono, the defendant should pay for the benefit which he has derived at the expense of the plaintiff. It is an obligation which the law supplies, because, otherwise, it would result in the unjust enrichment of the defendant at the cost of the plaintiff. It is an obligation which arises only when the defendant has received money or property from the plaintiff and appropriated the same to his own use, either when he might have elected not to take it, or, having the power to do so, might return the benefit thus conferred to the plaintiff, and fails to do so."

In that case the city had received the shares for which the bonds had been issued to the railway company, but, having no power to make the subscription, it had none to receive or hold the share. The construction of a railway station was held not to inure to the benefit of the city because it had been erected on the railway's property and was not the property of the city. No direct benefit having been received, relief was denied. In Parkersburg v. Brown the holders of the void obligations were permitted to follow the property acquired by their use. In Louisiana v. Wood cited above, a recovery was allowed for the money received upon the void obligations; the proceeds having been applied by the city for the very purpose, a lawful one, for which they were issued. In Hedges v. Dixon County, relief was denied. Referring to Read v. Plattsburgh, 107 U. S. 568, 27 L. ed. 414, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208, and Louisiana v. Wood, cited above, the court said: "In this case, as in Louisiana v. Wood, the city got the full pecuniary consideration for the bonds, and applied the money to the very purpose for which they were issued; and, upon well-settled principles, if the securities given for the money so obtained proved invalid or defective for any reason, there was a clear legal, as well as moral, obligation to refund the money which had been so advanced to and received by the city. The circumstances and conditions which gave the holders an equitable right in those cases to recover from the municipality the money which the bonds represented do not exist in the case under consideration, where the county received no part of the proceeds of the bonds, and no direct money benefit, but merely derived an incidental advantage arising from the construction of the railroad, upon which advantage it would be impossible for the court to place a pecuniary estimate, or say that it would be equal to such portion of the bonds in question as the county could lawfully have issued."

Re National Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. supra, was a case in which a building and loan society had borrowed money, having no power to borrow. It was held that the lender had no legal debt and no equitable claim for a recovery. In respect to the claim for equitable relief, Giffard, L. J., said: "A class of cases has been referred to on that subject, the principal of which are Re German Min. Co. 4 De G. M. & G. 19, and Re Cork & Y. R. Co. L. R. 4 Ch. 748, the latter of which was before the Lord Chancellor and myself a short time ago. I have no hesitation in saying that those cases have gone quite far enough, and that I am not disposed to extend them. They were decided upon a principle, recognized in old cases, beginning with Marlow v. Pitfield, 1 P. Wms. 558, where there was a loan to an infant, and the money was spent in paying for necessaries, and in another case of a more modern date, where there was money actually lent to a lunatic, and it went in paying expenses which were necessary for the lunatic. In such cases it has been held that, although the party lending the money could maintain no action, yet, inasmuch as his money had gone to pay debts which would be recoverable at law, he could come into a court of equity and stand in the place of those creditors whose debts had been so paid. That is the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) principle of those cases. It is a very clear and definite principle, and a principle which ought not to be departed from. Then it is said that the present case is brought within that principle. I do not think it necessary to go through the evidence. Suffice it to say that there is no proof whatever that one sixpence of this money went in payment of any debt which was recoverable against the company."

In Cunliffe Brooks Co. v. Blackburn & Dist. Ben. Bldg. Soc. cited above, it appeared that the association had no power to borrow, but that it had made large overdrafts at its bankers, and had assigned mortgages of borrowing members as security for any balance. It was held that such overdrafts were borrowings and ultra vires, and that the bankers were not creditors, and were only entitled to hold the securities as a security for repayment of so much money as should be shown to have been applied to the legitimate debts and liabilities of the association.

The facts that appellants hold certain mortgages made by borrowing shareholders of the Michigan association as security for the money loaned to the Michigan association does not materially improve its situation. The managers assigned these securities illegally, and appellants are constructively charged with knowledge of their want of power. Their utmost right to hold on to them is to retain them as security for so much of the loan as shall appear to have gone to the benefit of the Michigan association by discharging legal debts and liabilities which would otherwise be valid claims against that company. This was the rule applied in Blackburn Bldg. Soc. v. Cunliffe, B. & Co. supra, where it was said by Lord Selborne that "the burden of showing that they are entitled to anything lies upon them (the lender) and not upon the other side." To same effect is Re National Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. supra. If this money was applied to pay off withdrawing stockholders, the association has not been benefited. To quote from the opinion of Judge Swan upon this point: "The claim that petitioner can recover for money had and received on the ground that the Michigan association has had the benefit of the money and ex æquo et bono should repay it cannot be maintained upon these facts. The only persons who received benefits were the withdrawing members of the Michigan, who were not entitled to it. Such payments, instead of being beneficial to the association, hastened its failure and diminished its resources by reducing its membership and giving withdrawing members what they had no right to receive when there were no funds in the treasury. This was the first necessary effect of such payments. Its second was the wrong done to the remaining members whose share in its assets is by so much the less because of what was paid to withdrawing members. The third and necessary effect, and that scarcely the less injurious than the first, is that, if the claim of petitioner is sustained, and it is given the status of a creditor, the members' rights in the assets of the Michigan association are subordinated to petitioner, and they can share only in the assets, if any there be remaining after petitioner's claim is paid."

The burden of showing that the association has been benefited by the use of this money, and to what extent, is upon the lending association. The appellants have not met this burden. It is a possible thing that some part of the money loaned went to the payment of legitimate obligations; but, if so, this has not been pointed out in such a definite way as to justify any modification of the decree of the circuit court. The very purpose of the loan was to pay off withdrawing shareholders, and the original agreement that the funds should be paid by the Standard association direct upon such claims was only abandoned after some claims had been so paid, on account of bookkeeping difficulties. Wemple, the secretary of the Michigan association, says that the money was all so paid out. The inferences from the book entries found in the evidence of Aldrich that possibly some other obligations were also paid in part from that source are too vague to enable us to say that a single dollar is shown to have been paid upon legitimate debts.

The suggestion that, because moneys paid to withdrawing shareholders may be recovered by the receiver, we should treat the money so supplied as though it had not been dissipated at all, would be to throw the whole chance of loss upon shareholders who did not withdraw and are not responsible for the precarious condition of the association or of the claim which the appellants assert. The burden was upon complainant to show to what extent the money borrowed had benefited the lending association. It has not shown that any part of the money paid out to withdrawing shareholders has or can be collected.

This is fatal to any relief, and the decree of the court below must be affirmed, with costs.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

FRANCIS E. JENKINS, Appt.,

v.

ST. PAUL CITY RAILWAY COMPANY,
Resp't.

(105 Minn. 504, 117 N. W. 928.)

Servant — injury — res ipsa loquitur.

1. The application of the maxim Res ipsa loquitur does not ordinarily depend upon the relation between the parties, except indirectly, so far as that relation defines the measure of duty imposed on the defendant. Under certain circumstances, it may apply in an action brought by a servant against a master for injury caused by an agency of the master.

Same — when applicable.

2. Quare,—whether it would so apply where the dangerous agency was in the actual physical control of the experienced servant, and in operation by him.

Same — negligence — presumption.

3. The maxim, at most, raises a prima facie case of negligence, which is rebuttable. No presumption of negligence necessarily follows the plaintiff through the case, so as to compel the submission of the question of fact to the jury.

Master — injury to servant — electric car — inspection — duty.

4. An electric passenger carrier fulfils its duty, so far as the controller of an electric car is concerned, if the controller is shown to have been of standard character, made by a reputable manufacturer, in good condition, and to have been subjected to such inspection as is reasonable and practicable. The carrier is required to inspect with adequate care, but not to dismantle complicated machinery for purposes of inspection.

Same — evidence — sufficiency.

5. Here plaintiff, a man of at least ordinary intelligence, an instructed and experienced motorman, was injured while operating an electric car for the defendant at a terminal where the cars turned round a loop. The car ran upon the curve of the loop at full speed, and was derailed and capsized. Thereby plaintiff received the injuries here complained of. The issue was whether a shock of electricity, passing through him from his left hand, on the handle of the controller, and through his foot, resting upon a metallic part of the car, produced temporary paralysis, by reason of which he was deprived of control of his car. It is held: That the presumption

Headnotes by JAGGARD, J.

Note.—As to whether the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable between master and servant, see case notes to Fitzgerald v. Southern R. Co. 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 337, and Byers v. Carnegie Steel Co. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 214; and see, also, the case of La Bee v. Sultan Logging Co. post, 405.

of negligence conceded was rebutted by affirmative testimony, inter alia, as to the safe use of the car for twenty days before and months after the occurrence of the accident, during which the car was shown to have been in the same condition as at the time of the accident, and by the facts shown as to its purchase and inspection.

(October 9, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County directing a verdict for defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. P. D. Scannell and Morton Barrows for appellant.

Messrs. N. M. Thygeson and W. H. Bennett for respondent.

Jaggard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff and appellant, a motorman, was operating for the defendant and respondent an electric car at a terminal where the car was turned around by means of a loop. A man of at least ordinary intelligence, he received the instruction usually given by defendant to its trainmen, and had been in its service for more than a year. The car ran upon the curve of the loop at full speed, and was derailed and capsized. Thereby plaintiff received the injuries here complained of. Plaintiff's contention was as follows: He was seated upon his stool, and was grasping with his left hand the handle of the controller; his hand being in contact partially with the brass and partially with the wood. His right hand was grasping the metal handle of the brake. His right foot was resting upon the dog of the hand brake, which may or may not have been in contact with the ratchet. He had upon his hands a pair of cotton gloves, being very much soiled, and the palms being impregnated with dirt, oil, and sweat. He wore cotton stockings and leather shoes. His current was nearly at the maximum, if not quite. He received a shock of electricity which froze his hands to the handles. By reason of the temporary paralysis of his arms he was deprived of control of his car and prevented from shutting off the current and applying the brakes so as to reduce the speed. Defendant was charged with negligence in failing to properly furnish and maintain reasonably safe appliances and instrumentalities with which to perform his work, and in failing to caution and warn the plaintiff of the hazards to which the performance of his duties exposed him and which were unknown to him. The defendant 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

contends that it was not negligent in these respects, and that plaintiff did not in fact receive the shock of electricity at or immediately prior to the accident, but was asleep at his post, and negligently ran his car at full speed upon the curve.

The controller was the apparatus which governed the current from the trolley wire overhead used in operating the car. It consisted of a central, movable part, known as a "barrel," upon which were little copper blades, called "conductors," which, as the barrel revolved, made contact with stationary "fingers" and sent the current through the parts in various combinations. It was surrounded by a casing or frame made of sheet iron. This was lined with a nonconducting material—asbestos— $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch thick. For purposes of this appeal, it will be assumed that this metal controller casing or frame was liable to become charged with electricity; that such charge of the controller casing endangered the motorman, unless it was kept sufficiently grounded; that, if the grounding of the controller casing was sufficiently interrupted, the motorman could receive a shock in the manner testified to by plaintiff at the trial. The function of the ground wire was (1) to act as a means of escape—as a waste pipe, as it were—for discharging into the earth the surplus or waste current from the interior of the controller, and also (2) to discharge into the earth any current which might have leaked into the frame of the controller. A further device for grounding, put in by the defendant company, was a metallic brace attached to the back of the controller and passed to the metallic air-brake controller frame, to which it was attached. It was fastened by a steel screw to the casing. If for any reason the contact with the frame by the strap became inadequate to ground the surplus electric current, danger would not be avoided by the fact that it was subsequently attached to the brake. The case was twice tried in the district court. At the first trial the jury disagreed. On the second trial, at the close of all the testimony, the court directed a verdict for the defendant. The propriety of that order is the question on this appeal.

1. The plaintiff himself testified to the fact that his hands were frozen to the handles, and as to the places on his hands and feet where he had been burned by the current. The gloves he wore were produced in court. His testimony and that of other witnesses further tended to show that he had obeyed signals to stop for passengers at points so near the place of injury as to tend to negative the defendant's contention that he was asleep. It is true that plaintiff's testimony as to the stopping was controverted by witnesses for the defendant. If this were all there were to the case, the issue should clearly have been submitted to the jury.

2. Plaintiff also introduced expert evidence which, he argues, showed the insufficiency of the grounding of the casing. Two experiments were made on the car, which had been brought in front of the trial courthouse for the purpose. Of these, the first was the "bell test." The expert placed one wire from a dry battery with a voltage of 1 or 1½ on the controller; placed another wire at different times on the brass part of the air brake, not the handle, on the handle of the air brake, on the hand-brake staff, on its support, and on the dog used to set the hand brake. The current was communicated, but the bell connected by a wire to the frame did not ring. The second experiment was a "magneto" test. It was made by means of a small dynamo discharging a current of "anywheres between 300 and 500" volts. When the connection was made between the points stated, and the current turned on, "the bell barely tinkled." These experiments were adduced to show that there was not sufficient "contact" between the casing and the brake frame through the metallic strap or brace previously described. Plaintiff's own experts so testified. They testified, also, that it was thus proved that the ground wire designed to ground the controller casing was "either absent or a very poor one." For many reasons, some of which only will be presently set forth, we are at a loss to comprehend what strength this testimony adds to plaintiff's case. It is true the controller was in the same condition at the time of the beginning of plaintiff's experiments as it was at the first trial and as at the time of the accident. Upon critical examination of the record, it appears that the admission of counsel for plaintiff that this was the case was not clear, although the trial court evidently regarded it as sufficient. If it be disregarded, we are of the opinion that unimpeached testimony affirmatively showed such to be the fact. None the less the experiments were not performed upon the car in the condition it was at the time of the accident; for plaintiff's expert, finding the strap screwed up "fairly tight," or so that he "could loosen it with a small wrench," testified that before the first electrical test was made "I loosened the bolt probably a turn and a half or two turns, and as the strap didn't come off the casing, and the washer stuck out, I left it that way, and screwed the bolt back, and then subjected that first test. . . ."

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. You made no test of this car 980 as it came there to Wabasha street until you had unbolted—

A. Until I had loosened the bolt.

Therefore the experiments were inconclusive as to the strap or brace.

Moreover, the general conclusions of the experts were weak and uncertain. One of them was asked: "Now, will you state once more, in your own way, what the result of your experiments or tests showed with reference to the grounding of that casing at that time. A. Well, as far as I could see, the only indication was that the strap partially grounded the casing."

One expert testified the bell test "did show a slight connection."

Q. Enough to be of a practical use or benefit in the protection of the motorman?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. You could not tell about that?

A. Not at that time; no.

So, afterwards, when asked if the condition he found by his test was of such a character or condition as to render the happening of an injury as plaintiff described "reasonably possible," an expert answered: "I should say the possibility existed." Finally, it is to be noted that at the time of the experiments the car, which, we repeat, had been brought down by its own power to the tracks in front of the courthouse for these experiments, was in the condition of ordinary operation. The fundamental weakness in plaintiff's test is that the ground wire screwed into the casing had not been disconnected. One part of its admitted function was to ground the electricity which might have leaked into the casing. That it was insufficient to accomplish this was the basis of the negligence charged. If it availed to ground the current in the casing, the motorman in plaintiff's position was admittedly safe. The natural inference from plaintiff's experiments is that, when the current from either the dry battery or the magneto apparatus was connected with the casing, the current tended to pass instantly to the earth through the ground wire. If the metallic strap was loosened, the fact that the bell did not ring tended to show that this wire had performed its function and grounded the current. When the strap was tightened, apparently, the current divided, and a small part passed through the brace to the earth, and the balance through the ground wire. We are unable to avoid the conclusion that plaintiff's own experiment tended to show that the means for grounding in fact provided were not negligent.

The analogy to the Morse telegraph system suggested by plaintiff fails to diminish the force of this reasoning. If the sending instrument start a message over a wire supported by insulated poles, it would operate the receiving instrument and pass thence through the ground, wire to the earth. If the poles should not be insulated, and be good conductors, the current would tend to pass through them to the ground, and either no, or a diminished, current would go to the receiver. If it should receive no message, the indication would be that the current had been grounded. Here the controller, itself exclusive of grounding devices, corresponds to one telegraph pole not insulated, the brake frame (speaking generally), itself exclusive of grounding devices, to the other, also not insulated, the battery or magnet apparatus to the sending instrument, the brace or strap to part of the wire, the wire from the frame to the bell to the rest of the wire, and the bell to the receiving instrument. The current sent into the controller would tend to go into the earth through its ground wire. If the brace should be disconnected from the casing, it would be like a parted wire, and, in the absence of an arc through the air (not here involved), naturally would not cause the bell to ring. If connected from the casing, and the current communicated, it did not ring the bell, the inference would be that the ground wire had fully functionated. If the bell should ring but faintly, it would indicate a divided current, part passing through the ground wire and part through the brace.

On the other hand, defendant's experts performed four different experiments, which were in their nature calculated to elicit the truth, and are subject to no reasonable criticism, except that they were performed on the day after the plaintiff's, and after the plaintiff's expert had altered the connection between the brace and the casing. Defendant's tests were made between the top of the casing and the track and wheels of the car. It is to be noted that, unlike defendant's experiments, the plaintiff's tests were not between the controller itself and the ground. Moreover, defendant used a current from the trolley wire with a current of about 600 volts, while the plaintiff's current was of less voltage. Defendant's expert testimony was positively to the effect that the occurrence of a shock to the plaintiff in the way in which he contended to have received it was impossible, and that his position was "absolutely safe." The two classes of experiments, however, appear to have been largely consistent with each other, and to have indicated a proper grounding of the casing by means of a ground wire. The alteration by plaintiff in the strap in connection with the casing tends to deprive both of significance as to the ability of the strap and brace to ground the current. Taking all the experiments together, they incline to weaken, and not to strengthen, plaintiff's case.

3. Plaintiff's case may properly have been regarded by the trial court as resting substantially on plaintiff's own testimony and on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Defendant insists, however, that this maxim does not apply as between master and servant. As a universal principle, this is not the law in this and a number of other states. Ordinarily the application of the principle does not depend upon the relation between the parties, except indirectly, so far as that relation defines the measure of duty imposed on the defendant. Griffen v. Manice, 160 N. Y. 188, 52 L.R.A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630, 59 N. E. 925. There have been cases in which the servant has successfully invoked it against his master. There is more force to defendant's further contention that the doctrine should not be applied where, as here, the dangerous agency is under the immediate physical control of, and in actual use by, an experienced servant, who complains of the injury. In the case at bar, however, it is not necessary to determine this controversy, nor to inquire into the exact nature of the so-called presumption, for the prima facie case of negligence arising from the application of the maxim is rebuttable. From its application the court or jury may infer negligence, but neither is bound to do so. Carmody v. Boston Gaslight Co. 182 Mass. 539, at page 542, 39 N. E. 184. The presumption of negligence in current phrase, whose precision is not here material, is purely one of fact, and may not survive sufficient proof of due care by the person sought to be charged. It does not necessarily follow the plaintiff through the case, so as to compel the submission of the question of fact to the jury, as, for example, does the presumption of innocence accused in a criminal trial.

4. The trial court, giving to the plaintiff the benefit of the presumption, held that it was rebutted by the testimony as a whole, and that, taking the testimony as a whole, plaintiff had not borne the burden of proof resting upon him of showing negligence on the part of the defendant. In this view, we think, he must be affirmed. In addition to the inference of the proper condition of the controller, and especially of its grounding, from the experiments which have been described, and from the absence of perforation of the asbestos lining, and from other significant circumstances not necessary to be detailed here, the case is controlled primarily by two facts,—the use of the car, and the facts attending its purchase and inspection. The car had been operated daily from November 8th to the time of the accident by various motormen, including the plaintiff, and reported "O. K." each time returned to the station. On the day of the accident three motormen operated it without trouble before it was turned over to plaintiff at 5:35 P. M. He then made several uneventful trips between that time and the time of the accident, about midnight. It has been operated since the accident without trouble of any kind. It was brought to the scene of the experiments by the safe operation of this identical controller. The continual use of the car in the condition it was from the time of the accident to the time of the trial without accident is a demonstration of the practical sufficiency of the grounding of the controller.

No testimony was adduced to show that the car was old or outworn. It appears, however, to have been used for some time. Its controller and the grounding of the controller were naturally subject to deterioration. The controller was of standard type and made by a reputable manufacturer. It was shown to have been inspected frequently, searchingly, and in a reasonable, practicable, and usual manner. To have visually examined the ground wire inclosed in insulating material would have involved the dismantling of the machine. The case is within the principle that "the law does not contemplate that railroad companies will in general make their own cars or engines, and they purchase them in the market of persons supposed to be competent dealers, just as they buy their other articles. All that they can reasonably be expected to do is to purchase such cars and other necessities as they have reason to believe will be safe and proper, giving them such inspection as is usual and practicable as they buy them. When they make such an examination and discover no defects, they do all that is practicable, and it is no neglect to omit attempting what is impracticable. They have a right to assume that a dealer of good repute has also used such care as was incumbent on him, and that the articles purchased of him, which seem right, are right in fact. Any other rule would make them liable for what is not negligence, and put them practically on the footing of insurers." Campbell, Ch. J., in Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537, 547, 31 Am. Rep. 321. And see Carlson v. Phoenix Bridge Co. 132 N. Y. 273, 30 N. E. 750; Flood v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 131 N. Y. 603, 30 N. E. 196; Reynolds v. Merchants' Woolen Co. 168 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mass. 501, 47 N. E. 406; Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Heimlich, 62 C. C. A. 92, 127 Fed. 92. That a company is not responsible when an accident occurs, because of a defect which might have been discovered by minute examination, but which was not discovered in fact by such an examination as was customary and reasonably practicable, see Richardson v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 342 (court of appeals). The company was required to inspect with adequate care, but not to dismantle complicated machinery for purposes of inspection. Clyde v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (C. C.) 65 Fed. 482. In the language of the trial court, the conclusion is inevitable that, if this accident to the plaintiff was really by a shock of electricity from this controller, it came suddenly and from a hidden cause, which no care or foresight could guard against, and for which the defendant is not liable.

This reasoning determines other questions raised on appeal. If the condition of the controller was consistent with the exercise of due care, it is immaterial that to have used solder, instead of screws, might have secured a more permanent and a safer grounding, or that paint, a nonconductor, was used on the inside of the brace where it was attached to the casing of the controller, or that the court excluded testimony as to the liability of the brass screw connecting the controller with the ground wire to become corroded, or that here the motor-man would be subject to additional danger if described insulating devices were omitted, or if other motormen using similar controllers received shocks, or the like.

Affirmed.

Elliott, J., took no part.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

W. C. LA BEE, Respt.,
v.

SULTAN LOGGING COMPANY, Appt.

(47 Wash. 57, 91 Pac. 560.)

Evidence — negligence.

1. Evidence that an appliance furnished by a master for a particular purpose breaks while being used in a proper manner for that purpose is sufficient to establish a prima facie case of negligence against the master.

Pleading — negligence — scope.

2. An allegation in a complaint by a

Note. — For application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as between master and servant, see reference note to preceding case.

servant against his master for personal injuries, of failure to provide a safe place in which to work, which is a mere deduction from specific acts of negligence alleged, does not widen the scope of the inquiry so as to admit evidence of negligence not covered in the specific allegations.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Negligence — res ipsa loquitur.

3. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies in case of injury to a servant through the alleged negligence of the master, where the facts eliminate blame on the part of the servant or his fellow servants, but show prima facie negligence on the part of someone.

(Root, J., dissents from propositions 1 and 2.)

(September 5, 1907.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Superior Court for Snohomish County granting a new trial after the allowance of a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. H. Winders, with Messrs. Graves, Palmer, & Murphy, for appellant:

In order that a servant may recover for his injury, it is necessary for him to show not only that the master has been guilty of negligence, but that such negligence was the cause of the injury.

Hansen v. Seattle Lumber Co. 31 Wash. 604, 72 Pac. 457; Armstrong v. Cosmopolis, 32 Wash. 110, 72 Pac. 1038; Reidhead v. Skagit County, 33 Wash. 174, 73 Pac. 1118; Stratton v. C. H. Nichols Lumber Co. 39 Wash. 323, 109 Am. St. Rep. 881, 81 Pac. 831.

That an accident or injury complained of may have been occasioned by reason of the master's negligence in particulars different from those alleged in the complaint, or from other characters of negligence, is inadmissible.

6 Thomp. Neg. §§ 7452, 7527; DeLaVergne Refrigerating Machinery Co. v. Stahl (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S. W. 40; Palmer Brick Co. v. Chenall, 119 Ga. 837, 47 S. E. 329; Shanke v. United States Heater Co. 125 Mich. 346, 84 N. W. 283; Redford v. Spokane Street R. Co. 9 Wash. 55, 36 Pac. 1085; Imhoof v. Northwestern Lumber Co. 43 Wash. 387, 86 Pac. 650; Henne v. J. T. Steeb Shipping Co. 37 Wash. 331, 79 Pac. 938; Arcade File Works v. Juteau, 15 Ind. App. 460, 40 N. E. 818, 44 N. E. 326; Cherokee & P. Coal & Min. Co. v. Wilson, 47 Kan. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

460, 28 Pac. 178; Santa Fe, P. & P. R. Co. v. Hurley, 4 Ariz. 258, 36 Pac. 216; Pennington v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 90 Mich. 505, 51 N. W. 634; Clark v. Missouri P. R. Co. 48 Kan. 654, 29 Pac. 1138; Greer v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 94 Ky. 169, 42 Am. St. Rep. 345, 21 S. W. 649; Robinson v. Taku Fishing Co. 42 Or. 537, 71 Pac. 790; Ohlenkamp v. Union P. R. Co. 24 Utah, 232, 67 Pac. 411; Pacheco v. Judson Mfg. Co. 113 Cal. 541, 45 Pac. 833; Carey v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 228, 33 N. E. 512; Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 49 Mich. 184, 13 N. W. 508; Conrad v. Gray, 109 Ala. 130, 19 So. 398; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. DeHam, 93 Tex. 74, 53 S. W. 375; Harty v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 95 Mo. 368, 8 S. W. 562.

The mere breaking of a cable or rope and the consequent injury of an employee, without further evidence, are not sufficient upon which to base a verdict.

Breckenridge v. American Eagle Consol. Min. Co. 42 Wash. 279, 84 Pac. 858; Northern P. R. Co. v. Dixon, 71 C. C. A. 555, 139 Fed. 737; Looney v. Metropolitan R. Co. 200 U. S. 480, 50 L. ed. 564, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 380, 15 Am. St. Rep. 613, 21 N. E. 864; Pierce v. Kile, 26 C. C. A. 201, 53 U. S. App. 291, 80 Fed. 865; Brownfield v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 107 Iowa, 254, 77 N. W. 1038; Hofnauer v. R. H. White Co. 186 Mass. 47, 70 N. E. 1038; Drum v. New England Cotton Yarn Co. 180 Mass. 113, 61 N. E. 812; Duntley v. Inman, P. & Co. 42 Or. 334, 59 L.R.A. 785, 70 Pac. 529; Hansen v. Seattle Lumber Co. supra.

Messrs. Roney & Loveless and Hathaway & Alston, for respondent:

A presumption of negligence on the part of a master is raised where an appliance furnished by him breaks while being used by a servant in the usual and ordinary manner.

Madden v. Occidental & O. S. S. Co. 86 Cal. 445, 25 Pac. 5; Griffin v. Boston & A. R. Co. 148 Mass. 143, 1 L.R.A. 698, 12 Am. St. Rep. 526, 19 N. E. 166; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Roesch, 126 Ind. 445, 26 N. E. 171; Rushville v. Adams, 107 Ind. 475, 57 Am. Rep. 124, 8 N. E. 292.

Fullerton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for personal injuries. At the time he received the injury for which he sues, the respondent was in the employ of the appellant, working with a gang of men engaged in loading saw logs onto railroad cars. In loading the logs the men had the assistance of mechanical appliances.

These consisted of a large heavy pole, some 40 feet in length, known in the vernacular as a "gin pole," set with the heavy end in the ground by the side of the railroad track, and slanted over the track, so that the upper end reached a point immediately above its center. The pole was stayed with three steel cables; one end of each of them being fastened to the top of the pole and the other carried back and made fast to a tree or stump or some other fixed object sufficiently secured in the ground to withstand a strain. Fastened to the top of the gin pole, so as to swing immediately under it was a heavy pulley. Some distance back from the track a donkey engine was stationed, from which another wire cable was run through the pulley fastened to the gin pole. It was by means of this cable that the logs were rolled and lifted onto the cars. The cable was also used for another purpose. Cars were brought to the loading station a number at a time. As they could be loaded only from a place on the track immediately under the gin pole, it was necessary, after loading a car, to move it forward on the track so that another might be brought in its place; and the practice was to leave the cars coupled together and move the entire train. This moving was done by hitching the cable used to load the logs onto the farther end of the car desired to be brought into position, and bringing it into place by a pull on the cable from the donkey engine. At the time of the accident the men had for loading a group of five cars. Four of these had been loaded, and preparations were made for bringing the fifth one into place. The track at this point was somewhat steep, and the cars were held in place by their brakes, which had to be loosened before the cars could be moved. Preparatory to loosening the brakes, the cable was hitched to the lower end of the empty car and made tight by a pull from the donkey engine. The respondent then mounted the cars, and proceeded to loosen the brakes with a short piece of gas pipe which he used as a lever. He was just loosening the last one when a pull was made in an attempt to move the cars. This pull caused one of the stay cables fastened to the gin pole to give way, letting the pole fall. In falling the pole struck the respondent on the back, bearing him down upon the piece of gas pipe which he happened to be holding in an upright position, forcing the pipe entirely through his body, and causing the injury for which he sues. It appears from the record, also, that the appliances described were furnished by the appellant; that they were being used at the time of the accident for the purposes for which they were intended, and were so used under the direction of the appellant's foreman.

In his complaint the respondent charged that the accident was caused by the defective and dangerous condition of the stay cable, which gave way and let the gin pole fall, alleging that it was carelessly and negligently fastened to the gin pole, and had become old, worn, weakened, and rusted, and in need of repair, all of which was known to the appellant, or by reasonable diligence ought to have been known by it, but which was unknown to the respondent; further alleging that, "by reason of the negligence of the defendant in failing to provide the plaintiff with a safe place in which to work, and by reason of the negligence of the defendant in failing to provide a sufficient and suitable guy rope or cable to sustain the gin pole and perform the service required of the same, and by reason of the negligence of the defendant in failing to properly secure the said guy rope or cable," the gin pole fell, etc. The only evidence offered at the trial in support of these allegations was that above outlined, and the further fact that the cable gave way at the point where it was spliced to the gin pole, three of the strands of the splice breaking, and three pulling out. On the trial at the conclusion of the respondent's case, the court granted a nonsuit and discharged the jury, and later, on respondent's motion for a new trial, set the nonsuit aside and granted a new trial. This appeal is from the last-mentioned order. The trial judge based its ruling on two grounds: First, that he had erred in holding that the respondent had failed to show any negligence on the part of the appellant; and, second, that he had erred in excluding certain evidence offered by the respondent; and, as these propositions involve matters of law in which the question of discretion does not enter, they are reviewable on appeal to this court.

On the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, the appellant contends that the respondent has shown nothing more than that the cable broke and that he was injured thereby, and argues that this is not sufficient to charge the respondent with negligence; that, in order to make a prima facie case, he was required to go further, and show that the breaking was caused by some defect of construction or material; and that the respondent knew, or by reasonable diligence could have known, of such defect. But it seems to us that the appellant has placed a too narrow construction upon the respondent's evidence. The evidence, in addition to showing that the cable broke and caused an injury to the respondent, showed that it was furnished to the respondent by the appellant for a particular purpose, and that it broke while being used in a proper manner for the purpose for which it was intended. This is some evidence of negligence on the part of the appellant. Instrumentalities intended for a particular purpose, and suitable and proper for that purpose, do not break when put to the use for which they are designed, when used in a proper manner. So, the converse of this proposition must be true. If the instrumentality does break when put to the use for which it is designed and used in a proper manner, it is evident that it was either defective in material or construction in the first instance, or has become so since it was put to use. Therefore, when the servant shows that the master furnished him an instrumentality to be used for a particular purpose, that he used it for the purpose intended in the manner intended, and that it broke when being so used, and injured him, he makes out a prima facie case of negligence against the master. Coleman v. Mechanics Iron Foundry Co. 168 Mass. 254, 46 N. E. 1065; Moynihan v. Hills Co. 146 Mass. 586, 4 Am. St. Rep. 348, 16 N. E. 574; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Hayes, 97 Ala. 201, 12 So. 98; Armour v. Golkowska, 95 Ill. App. 492; Soiarz v. Manhattan R. Co. 31 Abb. N. C. 426, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1123; Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. v. Pouch, 61 C. C. A. 40, 124 Fed. 148; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Roesch, 126 Ind. 445, 26 N. E. 171.

With reference to the second question, we think the evidence offered was properly excluded under the issues as made. The allegation to the effect that the appellant failed to provide the respondent with a safe place in which to work was rather a deduction from the specific acts of negligence theretofore alleged than a general allegation of negligence. As such it did not widen the scope of the inquiry so as to admit evidence of negligence not covered by the specific allegations. Henne v. J. T. Steeb Shipping Co. 37 Wash. 331, 79 Pac. 938; Redford v. Spokane Street R. Co. 9 Wash. 55, 36 Pac. 1085.

In so far, therefore, as the order for a new trial was based on the latter ground, it was erroneous, but, since it is sustained by the first ground stated, it must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Hadley, Ch. J., and Crow and Rudkin, JJ., concur.

Root, J., dissents.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Fullerton, J., on November 14, 1908, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

handed down the following additional opinion:

This case is before us on rehearing. For the former opinion, see La Bee v. Sultan Logging Co. 47 Wash. 57, 91 Pac. 560, where will be found a statement of the issues involved. In the petition for rehearing, as well as in the oral argument made at bar, it is insisted that the court erred in applying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to a case between master and servant. It is contended that this doctrine is applicable only "to cases between carrier and passenger, and other cases wherein the person sought to be held occupies the relation of insurer," but is never applied to a case where the servant sues the master for negligence causing personal injuries. The weight of authority seems to support counsel's contention in so far as they contend that the doctrine is not applicable to cases between master and servant. The Federal cases uniformly so hold, and in the majority of the states the same rule obtains. See Northern P. R. Co. v. Dixon, 71 C. C. A. 555, 139 Fed. 737, and the cases there collected. But, the question being a new one in this state, we have felt ourselves at liberty to inquire into the reason for the rule, and to discard it if we found the reasons given to maintain it unsatisfactory. These reasons are perhaps as well stated in the case cited as in any other. It is there said that the doctrine is inapplicable to cases between master and servant, brought to recover damages for negligence, "because there are many possible causes of accidents during service, the risk of some of which, such as the negligence . . . and the other ordinary dangers of the work, the servant assumes, while for the risk of others, such as the lack of ordinary care to construct or keep in repair the machinery or place or work, the master is responsible. The mere happening of an accident which injures a servant fails to indicate whether it resulted from one of the causes the risk of which is the servant's, or from one of those the risk of which is the master's; and for this reason it raises no presumption that it was caused by the negligence of the latter." In other words, the reason is that, because in some instances it is difficult to determine from the facts shown whether the blame is the master's or the servant's, the master shall have the benefit of the presumption in all cases and the servant in none. It has seemed to us that this reasoning is not only unsound, but is grossly unfair to the servant. Where the facts of the case are such as to eliminate blame on the part of the servant or his fellow servants, but show prima facie neglect on the part of someone, we think the master should.

be put to his proofs to show that the blame is not his, just the same as he would be were the injury to a stranger. Such a rule casts the burden upon the person who is in a position to know the facts, and who can make the proofs by direct and positive evidence, while the rule contended for by the appellant compels the resort to indirect and circumstantial evidence. In this case the servant made proofs to the effect that the master furnished him with an instrument with which to do his work and directed him to do it in a particular manner, that he took the instrument and proceeded to perform the work in the manner directed, when the instrument gave way and injured him; and we think it no hardship to cast on the master the burden of showing that the instrument was suitable for the purposes for which it was intended, and that any defect therein was unknown to the master, and, by reasonable diligence, could not have been discovered by him.

This is not holding, as the appellant seems to argue, that a presumption of negligence arises from the mere fact of injury. The injury itself proves nothing. It may have been the fault of the servant. But, in a case where the servant eliminates any fault on his part by showing that the injury was caused by the giving way of an instrumentality furnished him with which to work while he was using it for the purposes intended and in the manner directed, he shows that the fault is in the instrumentality itself for which the master is prima facie responsible. The case differs from an ordinary case of injury only in the manner of proof. In each case, of course, a prima facie case of negligence against the master must be made out, but in the one it is made out by showing the injury, and eliminating negligence on the part of the servant and his fellow servants, while in the other it is made out by direct evidence of negligence on the part of the master.

Counsel make another contention it may be well to notice. The paragraph we have quoted in our statement of the contentions made by counsel is from their petition for rehearing. In it, it will be observed, counsel assume that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applied only in those cases where the person sought to be held occupies the relation of insurer to the person injured. The illustration given is that of carrier and passenger. But counsel must know that the assumption that a carrier is an insurer of the safety of its passengers is against the great weight of authority, even if it is now the rule in any jurisdiction. Certainly this court has never so held. On the contrary, in our own reports, and the reports generally, can be found cases where the carrier has successfully defended against its liability for injuries suffered by its passengers. If it was an insurer, its defense would have been confined to the amount of damages to be awarded. It would not have extended to the liability itself. Nor is the doctrine confined in other instances to the case where the person sought to be held is an insurer of the safety of the person injured. This court, in the case of Anderson v. McCarthy Dry Goods Co. 49 Wash. 398, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 931, 95 Pac. 325, applied the doctrine to a case where a person was injured while in a dry goods store by the fall of a basket from an overhead carrier system; citing authority to show that the holding was sustained by the great weight of authority. Surely it will not be contended that the proprietor of a merchandise store is an insurer of the safety of every person who enters it. But these latter inquiries are not material to the question in hand. They are cited to show that the holding that denies to a servant, simply because he is a servant, the benefit of the rule of res ipsa loquitur in a proper case, is unreasonable and unjust, and is required by no rule of public policy.

We see no reason to change our former holding, and the judgment appealed from will be affirmed.

Hadley, Ch. J., and Dunbar, Rudkin, Mount, and Crow, JJ., concur.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

BUD BAILEY, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

(— Miss. —, 48 So. 227.)

New trial — newly discovered evidence — impeaching witness.

1. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence in a criminal case, the only effect of which is to impeach the credibility of a witness for the state.

Evidence — criminal — failure to escape.

2. Evidence that one on trial for crime refused to embrace an opportunity to escape

Case Note. — Admissibility of evidence of defendant's voluntary surrender or refusal to embrace an opportunity to escape.

The authorities are almost unanimous in supporting the proposition that the defendant in a criminal case cannot, for the purpose of showing a consciousness of innocence, be allowed to prove that he voluntarily surrendered himself when informed of the charge against him, or refused to take to flight before arrest, or to escape from jail from prison is not admissible in his favor, although the state has proved his flight immediately after the crime was committed, where the two occurrences are entirely distinct and independent.

(Whitfield, Ch. J., dissents from proposition 2.)

(February 1, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Monroe County convicting him of manslaughter. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Leftwich & Tubbs, for appellant:

Any exculpatory facts are admissible to show consciousness of innocence.

1 Wigmore, Ev. §§ 276, 293; 3 Wigmore, Ev. § 1747.

after arrest though offered an opportunity so to do.

Thus, in People v. Montgomery, 53 Cal. 576, it was held that there was no error in excluding evidence offered by the defendant that, while confined in jail, he had an opportunity to escape, but declined to avail himself of it. The court said that the flight of a person suspected of having committed a crime, was a circumstance which, if unexplained, tended more or less strongly to establish his guilt, but that it by no means followed that his failure to flee, having an opportunity to do so, tended to prove his innocence, since he might naturally have been deterred in making an effort to escape from the fear that he would be recaptured, and his fruitless attempt be used as evidence of guilt; or that he might have been so confident of his acquittal for want of proof of his guilt, that he deemed it unnecessary to flee.

And in Thomas v. State, 47 Fla. 99, 36 So. 161, it was said that the fact that the accused made no attempt to escape, and that he readily and willingly surrendered himself, did not, in law, constitute a circumstance in his favor, which the jury should consider in arriving at a verdict, since it might be concluded that the conduct of defendant in this respect was not actuated by a consciousness of innocence, but proceeded from the purpose of a consciously guilty man to make it appear that he was innocent.

And in Kennedy v. State, 101 Ga. 559, 28 S. E. 979, it was held that evidence that the accused had not availed himself of an opportunity to escape from jail was not admissible under the rule which admitted evidence of the state to prove defendant's flight following immediately upon the commission of a crime. The court said that not availing himself of an opportunity to escape from lawful custody was in the nature of a declaration of innocence, and that the rule was well-settled that, in criminal trials, declarations of the accused in his own favor were not admissible.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The evidence tending to impeach the state witness was admissible.

Bates v. State (Miss.) 32 So. 915.

Mr. George Butler, for the State:

The court properly excluded the proffered testimony of defendant's opportunity and failure to escape jail after it had been shown that he evaded arrest and finally surrendered to the officers.

Lohrey v. State, 91 Miss. 853, 45 So. 145; Dickey v. State, 86 Miss. 525, 38 So. 776; King v. State, 65 Miss. 576, 7 Am. St. Rep. 681, 5 So. 97.

Fletcher, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We cannot reverse this case on account of the court's action in refusing to set aside the verdict on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Such evidence tended

And in People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 509, evidence was held to be inadmissible that an accused person refused to escape and go beyond reach of process after being apprised of the charge against him, although he was advised so to do, and it was entirely practicable for him to have made his escape. The court said that the difference between an attempt to escape and refusal to escape was quite obvious when they were offered as legal evidence; that an attempt to escape implied guilt, and operated against the party like a confession, while a refusal to escape was an act and confession in the party's own favor; and that false declarations of innocence, or subsequent acts appearing to indicate it, were too common to be regarded as admissible.

And in People v. Curtiss, 118 App. Div. 259, 103 N. Y. Supp. 395, it was held that a defendant, "except under peculiar circumstances," could not be permitted to show that he did not become a fugitive from justice when accused or suspected of having committed a crime, as such evidence was a self-serving declaration not connected with the res gestæ. The court added that there was a clear distinction between evidence of flight which tended to show consciousness of guilt, and contrary evidence which might show a clever attempt to evade the consequences of the crime by assuming the appearance of innocence. As to the peculiar circumstances under which such evidence might be admissible, the opinion is silent.

And this proposition that an accused person will not, for the purpose of showing a consciousness of innocence, be permitted to prove that he voluntarily surrendered himself or refused to escape when given an opportunity, finds support, also, in the following cases: Chamblee v. State, 78 Ala. 466; Jordan v. State, 81 Ala. 20, 1 So. 577; Johnson v. State, 94 Ala. 35, 10 So. 667; Dorsey v. State, 110 Ala. 38, 20 So. 450; Walker v. State, 139 Ala. 56, 35 So. 1011; Pate v. State, 150 Ala. 10, 43 So. 343; Crawford v. United States, 30 App. D. C. 1; Lingerfelt only to impeach the evidence of the witness McLendon, by no means the only, or indeed the strongest, witness for the state. The rule is well established that a new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the only effect of which is to impeach the credibility of a witness. Moore v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 59 Miss. 243.

The only other question seriously pressed is that the court erred in refusing to admit evidence to show that the defendant had an opportunity to escape from prison, and not only declined to do so, but actually warned the sheriff of the escape of a fellow prisoner. This testimony was offered after the state had proven the flight of the prisoner immediately following the homicide. It should be stated that the defendant was permitted to explain this flight fully, and that the evidence excluded related to a matter which transpired some time after the defendant had surrendered, and was entirely distinct and independent of the first occurrence. It is argued, and the argument is sustained by the great authority of Professor Wigmore, that, since the state is permitted to prove flight as showing a "consciousness of guilt," the defendant should be permitted to prove a refusal to escape when opportunity offers as showing a "consciousness of innocence." 1 Wigmore, Ev. 293. The learned text writer, however, concedes that this view is opposed to the great weight of authority, and, with that candor which is one of the chief qualities of his great intellect, appends in the note a list of cases which utterly repudiate and reject his conclusion.

In this instance the majority of the court prefers the reasoning and conclusions of

v. State, 125 Ga. 4, 53 S. E. 803, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 310; State v. Musick, 101 Mo. 260, 14 S. W. 212; State v. Smith, 114 Mo. 406, 21 S. W. 827; State v. Jackson, 126 Mo. 521, 29 S. W. 601; State v. McLaughlin, 149 Mo. 19, 50 S. W. 315; Gardner v. People, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 155; State v. Taylor, 61 N. C. 508; Walker v. State, 13 Tex. App. 618; State v. Bickle, 53 W. Va. 597, 45 S. E. 917.

Upon the same principle, it was held in Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587, that one charged with murder could not show that he went to a certain place with a view of surrendering himself, and that he communicated this intention to others, who advised him not to do so until he had procured bail.

It would seem, however, that evidence that the defendant voluntarily surrendered himself will be admitted to rebut evidence by the state that the defendant fled after the commission of the crime. Thus, in Cole v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 225, 75 S. W. 527, it was held that, on a trial for murder, where the state relied upon certain testimony to show flight and evasion of arrest by defendant, he should be permitted to prove in rebuttal that he was endeavoring to go to the county seat to surrender himself, and was arrested at a point on the road where he had stopped on account of high water not permitting him to go further.

Such would also seem to be the ground of the conclusion reached in White v. State, 111 Ala. 92, 21 So. 330, in which it was held that, where the evidence showed that the defendant, after committing a homicide, had fled from the place, but went directly to police headquarters about 2 miles distant, and surrendered himself, the jury should have been instructed to look to the fact of his voluntary surrender.

Such, too, would seem to be the implication in the following cases, in all of which it was held that, where the state introduced no evidence of flight on the part of the defendant after the alleged commission of the offense, it was incompetent for the defendant 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to prove either that he refused to flee, or that he surrendered himself: Pate v. State, 94 Ala. 14, 10 So. 665; Vaughn v. State, 130 Ala. 18, 30 So. 669; Delaney v. State, 148 Ala. 586, 42 So. 815; Brown v. State, 150 Ala. 25, 43 So. 194; People v. Shaw, 111 Cal. 171, 43 Pac. 593; Thomas v. State, supra; McDuffie v. State, 121 Ga. 580, 49 S. E. 708; Sneed v. Territory, 16 Okla. 641, 86 Pac. 70, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 354.

On the other hand, in People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367, 65 N. W. 216, evidence that the defendant, after having escaped from jail, voluntarily surrendered himself, was held to be inadmissible to remove the inference of guilt arising from his escape.

And in State v. Moncla, 39 La. Ann. 868, 2 So. 814, it was held that the accused's voluntary return and submission to arrest after he had once escaped from the custody of the sheriff were not circumstances tending to show the motives which prompted his flight, and, even if not absolutely irrelevant, were of too little weight to justify disturbance of the verdict of guilty. It appeared also, however, that the accused was allowed to prove all the circumstances attending and surrounding his flight.

There are some cases, however, that would seem to be opposed to the rule of law here discussed. Thus, in United States v. Crow, 1 Bond, 51, Fed. Cas. No. 14,895, it was held that, where it was made known to the defendant while in Missouri that he was suspected of having stolen from the mail in Ohio, the fact that he immediately returned to Ohio and courted a full investigation of the charge was, with proof of his good character, entitled to the consideration of the jury, unless the evidence was so clear as to leave no reasonable doubt of guilt in their minds.

So, in Boston v. State, 94 Ga. 500, 20 S. E. 98, 21 S. E. 603 (a memorandum decision), it was held to be competent for the defendant, who claimed to have shot his wife by accident, to prove that he acted consistently with this theory by going in search these cases, rather than the conclusion reached by the author. This is not wholly because of the number and distinction of the courts so holding, but because we think the rule rejecting such testimony is correct on principle. If a declaration against interest is admitted, while a self-serving declaration is rejected, why should it not be true that conduct showing guilt is admissible, while conduct alleged to show the opposite is rejected? Nothing can be better settled than that a litigant cannot manufacture testimony in his own behalf. This is but a form of this familiar principle. If the rule announced by Wigmore is correct, a prisoner who deliberately refuses to escape is but availing himself of the opportunity to manufacture testimony for himself—a thing which can never be permitted. Testimony as to a damaging admission made by a prisoner on trial is admitted manifestly because it shows a consciousness of guilt; but it will never be contended that the same prisoner can proclaim his innocence and have the benefit of such declaration on the trial as showing a "consciousness of innocence." And yet in the opinion of the majority of the court there can be no logical distinction between acts and words in this connection.

Chief Justice Whitfield, while differing from the majority on this point, and agreeing with Wigmore's announcement of the rule, does not regard such evidence as of high value one way or the other, and therefore concurs in the result, since, as he thinks, the guilt of the defendant is manifest, and the result could not possibly have been affected by this error of the court.

Affirmed.

of an officer, overtaking him, and surrendering himself.

And in People v. Childs, 90 App. Div. 58, 85 N. Y. Supp. 627, it was held to be a significant fact, to which he was entitled to have the attention of the jury drawn by the court, that the defendant remained at the scene of the homicide with which he was charged and did not run away; upon the ground that it tended to show that the shooting was done in self-defense and without criminal intent.

And in Harvey v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 545, 34 S. W. 623, a murder trial, in which it was held that, where there was no evidence that the defendant fled, and his testimony showed a voluntary surrender on his part, it was error to refuse to permit him to prove that, at the time of his arrest, he made no effort to run away.—The court used the following language: "The appellant himself showed a voluntary surrender. This was affirmative, and which he was entitled to show."

And in State v. Wilcox, 132 N. C. 1120, 44 S. E. 625, though the court adhered to the rule that evidence that a prisoner did not escape from jail, he having had an opportunity to do so, was not competent, Judge Connor said that, speaking for himself, he was impressed with the argument in favor of admitting such evidence "subject to well-defined limitations, as, for instance, that the defendant was, without any agency on his part, given an opportunity to escape and refused to accept," adding that he was inclined to the opinion that the defendant's conduct was competent to go to the jury to be given such weight as, under the circumstances, it was entitled to.

And in State v. Wilkins, 66 Vt. 1, 28 Atl. 323, in which it was held that the facts that the defendant had been arrested and was out on bail, and did not run away were inadmissible in his favor as tending to show innocence, since he was in the custody of the law, the court went on to say that it had sometimes been held that, when a person accused of a crime had an opportunity to escape, and declined to avail himself of it, the fact might be admitted in evidence in his favor; but no authority is cited. Further reasons for not admitting the evidence in this particular case were that the defendant, when admitted to bail, had not been accused of the crime for which he was finally tried, and it was not offered in evidence that his bailor gave him an opportunity to escape.

Attention should here be called to Green's Trial, reported in 7 How. St. Tr. 159, which seems to be relied upon by Professor Wigmore as authority for the position he has taken upon this question as shown in BAILEY v. STATE. In that case the only reference to this question was made by a witness, who used the following language (page 207): "It was a good evidence of his innocency that when he had notice of it he did not fly. . . . If flight be a sign of guilt, as no doubt it is, Adam, ubi es? and courageness is a sign of innocency, then this man is innocent." No objection seems to have been made to the statement of the witness, though at the end of his testimony the attorney general asked: "What is all this to the purpose?" and the Lord Chief Justice said: "All this is nothing."

In Com. v. Hersey, 2 Allen, 173, in which a verdict of guilty was sustained, there is a headnote to the effect that evidence that a defendant under indictment refused to fly after suspicions against him were excited, was inadmissible; but there is nothing in the opinion upon the question, though in the statement of the facts it appears that the evidence was excluded in the trial court.

In Lewis v. State, 4 Kan. 309, the testimony of a witness for the defendant that the latter had refused to flee from jail at the time other prisoners escaped was admitted in the trial court; but no objection seems to have been made in that regard, the question before the supreme court being whether it was competent for the sheriff to testify that such witness stated to him that the defendant was sick and could not get out with the other prisoners.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA EX REL.
THOMAS H. POOLE

v.

S. L. NUCHOLS et al.

(— N. D. —, 119 N. W. 632.)

Supreme court — jurisdiction.

1. Sections 86 and 87 of the Constitution of North Dakota constitute a grant of power to the supreme court, and, the language thereof being restricted in its terms, this court has such jurisdiction, and only such, as is expressly, or by necessary implication, therein granted.

Same — writ of prohibition.

2. By § 86 the supreme court is granted appellate jurisdiction only, "except as other-

Headnotes by FISK, J.

Case Note. — Superintending control of civil courts over courts-martial.

The scope of this note is limited to the question whether the power of supervision, revision, and control exercised by courts succeeding to that power or function of the court of King's bench commonly termed the power of "general superintendency," or "supervising control," may be exercised over courts-martial; and does not extend to the power of the civil courts to relieve against the consequences of a usurped jurisdiction, by writ of habeas corpus where a person has been deprived of his liberty, or by action at law where property rights are involved.

The authorities seem to agree that courts-martial, while courts in one sense of the term, are, nevertheless, not parts of the judicial system; thus supporting the conclusion reached in STATE EX REL. POOLE v. NUCHOLS that, not being "inferior courts" within the meaning of the constitutional grant of the power of general superintending control over inferior courts, such power could not be exercised over them. But in jurisdictions where the power is not thus circumscribed it seems that it may be exercised to keep courts-martial from proceeding beyond the bounds of their jurisdiction, although the decisions unfortunately are of such a character as to leave the question considerably involved in doubt.

The decisions which hold that courts-martial are no part of the judicial system will be first considered.

In United States ex rel. Smith v. Whitney, 4 Mackey, 535, in denying an application for a writ of prohibition to arrest the proceedings of a naval court-martial on the ground of want of jurisdiction in that tribunal, it was said: "We have no jurisdiction over these naval tribunals, although we have jurisdiction over the consequences that they entail. They do not sit for this jurisdiction; they are not in the roll of judicial bodies for this jurisdiction." 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

wise provided in this Constitution," together with "a general superintending control over all inferior courts. . . ." Section 87 is the only place in the Constitution where it is otherwise provided. This section grants power to the supreme court "to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warrant, certiorari, injunction, and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction." Held, that, the writ of prohibition not being one of the enumerated writs, this court is without jurisdiction to issue the same, except where its issuance is necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction in a pending cause, or to effectuate this court's general superintending control over inferior courts.

Same — appellate jurisdiction — court-martial.

3. A court-martial is not an inferior court within the meaning of § 86 of the Constitution; they sit for the United States wherever the Secretary of the Navy ordains."

In State ex rel. Madigan v. Wagener, 74 Minn. 522, 42 L.R.A. 751, 73 Am. St. Rep. 369, 77 N. W. 424, it is said that courts-martial are an executive agency, and belong to the executive, and not the judicial, branch of the government,—citing Winthrop, Military Law, pp. 52, 53.

So, also, in People ex rel. Smith v. Doyle, 28 Misc. 416, 59 N. Y. Supp. 959, it is said that military courts are not embraced within the judicial system of the state, but rather appertain to the executive department, to which is confided the administration of the military law of the state.

However, in People ex rel. Garling v. Van Allen, 55 N. Y. 31, it was held that a court-martial is a court within the meaning of the constitutional provision that "in any trial in any court whatever the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel as in civil actions." This conclusion is based upon the fact that the language used is comprehensive enough to embrace such tribunals; that the context (which excepts from the provision against the detention of any person unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury cases of militia when in actual service, and land and naval forces in time of war), shows that the provision for benefit of counsel was intended to apply to courts-martial; and upon the further fact that such constitutional provision was offered, as an amendment, for the express purpose.

The cases generally cited by courts and text writers as authority for the proposition that courts-martial belong to the executive rather than the judicial branch of the government are those decided by the United States Supreme Court. The earliest of these is Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How. 65, 15 L. ed. 838, in which it is said: "Among the powers conferred upon Congress by the 8th section of the 1st article of the Constitution, are the following: 'To provide and main-

Constitution; it not belonging to the judicial, but to the executive, department of the government. The inferior courts referred to in § 86 are the courts enumerated in § 85, which belong to the judicial department.

(Ellsworth, J., dissents from proposition 3.)

(February 11, 1909.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of prohibition to restrain defendants, who are members of a court-martial, from proceeding with the trial of relator upon certain designated charges. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Engerud, Holt, & Frame for plaintiff.

Mr. M. A. Hildreth, for defendants:

A writ of prohibition will not lie to a general court-martial.

1 Winthrop, Military Law & Precedents, pp. 53, 61; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 168, tain a navy;' 'to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces.' And the 8th amendment, which requires a presentment of a grand jury in cases of capital or otherwise infamous crime, expressly excepts from its operation 'cases arising in the land or naval forces.' And, by the 2d section of the 2d article of the Constitution, it is declared that 'the President shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several states when called into the actual service of the United States.' These provisions show that Congress has the power to provide for the trial and punishment of military and naval offenses in the manner then and now practised by civilized nations; and that the power to do so is given without any connection between it and the 3d article of the Constitution, defining the judicial power of the United States; indeed, that the two powers are entirely independent of each other."

In Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S. 487, 29 L. ed. 458, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148, it was again said: "Courts-martial form no part of the judicial system of the United States, and their proceedings, within the limits of their jurisdiction, cannot be controlled or revised by the civil courts."

The court, in STATE EX REL. POOLE v. NICHOLS, in saying: "Whether, in a proper case the writ of prohibition may be employed, by a court having power in the exercise of its original jurisdiction to issue the same, to enjoin and prohibit a court-martial from exceeding its jurisdiction or from acting in a case without jurisdiction, we are not here required to decide,"—seems to suggest that there is no inherent and fundamental difficulty in such an exercise of the power. At bottom the question seems to be as to the extent to which the court whose interposition is sought has fallen heir to 29 L. ed. 601, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; United States v. Maney, 61 Fed. 140; Re McVey, 23 Fed. 879; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 13, 25 L. ed. 538; Re Davison, 21 Fed. 620; Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How. 83, 15 L. ed. 845; People ex rel. Garling v. Van Allen, 55 N. Y. 36; State ex rel. Martindale v. Stevens, 2 M'Cord L. 38.

Mr. Andrew Miller, Attorney General, also for defendants.

Flask, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Relator makes application to this court for the issuance of a writ of prohibition to enjoin and prohibit defendants, who are members of a court-martial, from further proceeding with the trial of relator upon certain designated charges and specifications, a copy of which was made a part of the application. Elaborate arguments were presented on behalf of relator, and also against his contention, and numerous reasons were the extraordinary and sovereign power originally reposing in the court of the King's bench.

The following cases appear to recognize the existence of a power of superintending control over courts-martial:

In Loomis v. Simons, 2 Root, 454, an action of trespass and false imprisonment against the captain of a militia company, it is said: "As all maritime causes are determinable in the admiralty courts; all chancery matters in the courts of chancery; all spiritual causes in the court of ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and all military questions and matters by the officers and courts established from among the militia. And the courts of common law take cognizance of all civil causes, and crimes committed against the peace and laws of the state. And the jurisdiction of the superior court spreads over the state and over all other courts of peculiar jurisdiction, to superintend them, and to keep them within their proper limits and bounds, to prevent their interfering with one another or their encroaching upon the common-law courts. But hath no right to interfere in any causes or questions proper for the other courts to determine."

In Washburn v. Phillips, 2 Met. 296, the court entertained a petition for a writ of prohibition to a court-martial; but, considering that it did not appear that the court-martial was exceeding its jurisdiction, refused the writ.

And in Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338, it is said: "There is no class of cases in which the authority to issue writs of prohibition is better established than in those of courts-martial, ecclesiastical courts, or inferior courts of common-law, assuming to take cognizance, in excess of their jurisdiction, of criminal prosecutions."

In People ex rel. Smith v. Doyle, 28 Misc.

urged both in favor of and against the issuance of such writ, but they all relate to the merits, being based upon the apparent assumption, which we deem erroneous, that this court possesses jurisdiction to issue such writ. A majority of the court are agreed that no such jurisdiction has been conferred by the Constitution, and hence the relator's application must be denied. This is not a case, such as has frequently arisen in this state, where the exercise of original jurisdiction is discretionary, and dependent upon whether the subject-matter is publici juris and affects the "sovereignty of the state, its franchises and prerogatives, or the liberties of the people;" but it is one in which we are asked to exercise a jurisdiction not conferred at all by the Constitution. It is a case of a total want of jurisdiction. This is clearly apparent by the language employed in the Constitution with reference to the powers conferred upon the supreme court. Section 86 provides: "The supreme court, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be coextensive with the state, and shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law." It is entirely clear from the above language that the chief function of this tribunal is the exercise of appellate jurisdiction only, and incidentally it is given a general superintending control over all inferior courts under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. It is also equally plain that, aside from the jurisdiction thus conferred, this court has no jurisdiction except such as the next section grants to it. Section 87 is as follows: "It shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, injunction, and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction. . . ." These sections constitute a grant of 416, 59 N. Y. Supp. 959, upon application for a writ of prohibition to a military court, although it was held that no case was made for the issuance of such writ, the court, after reviewing a number of English and American cases, expressed the opinion that a writ of prohibition might be issued to a military court within the proper limits which the nature of its office imposes.

An intimation that the civil courts will interpose to prevent courts-martial from exceeding their jurisdiction is also contained in State ex rel. Martindale v. Stevens, 2 M'Cord. L. 32, where, in holding that cases of a military nature ought to be submitted to and determined by the military tribunals only, it was said that the court of common pleas ought not to sustain any cognizance of them unless in cases where the courts-martial step out of their jurisdiction, and take cognizance of cases which are not within the meaning or purview of the militia act.

In Durham v. United States, 4 Hayw. 54, in quashing upon certiorari, for want of jurisdiction, the proceedings of a court-martial held under the laws of the state, it was said that, if the court-martial had power to act, then it was subject to the superintendence of the tribunals of the state.

The leading English case upon the subject is Grant v. Gould, 2 H. Bl. 69, in which it is said of a court-martial established by virtue of the provisions of the mutiny act: "This court being established in this country by positive law, the proceedings of it, and the relation in which it will stand to the courts of Westminster Hall, must depend upon the same rules, with all other courts, which are instituted, and have particular powers given them, and whose acts, therefore, may become the subject of application to the courts of Westminster Hall, for a prohibition. Naval courts-martial, military courts-martial, courts of admiralty, courts of prize, are all liable to the controlling authority, which the courts of Westminster Hall have from time to time exercised for the purpose of preventing them from exceeding the jurisdiction given to them.—the general ground of prohibition being an access of jurisdiction, when they assume a power to act in matters not within their cognizance."

The force of this decision in the United States has however, sometimes been denied upon the ground of the inherent differences in our system of government.

The view that the power of superintending control cannot be exercised in advance to prevent a court-martial from exceeding its jurisdiction is supported chiefly by the following dicta of the United States Supreme Court:

In Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S. 564, 29 L. ed. 277, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1050, it is said: "Neither the supreme court of the District, nor this court, has any appellate jurisdiction over the naval court-martial, nor over offenses which such a court has power to try. Neither of these courts is authorized to interfere with it in the performance of its duty, by way of a writ of prohibition or any order of that nature." See also Kurtz v. Moffitt, supra.

In Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167, 29 L. ed. 601, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570, it is said: "Whether the supreme court of the District of Columbia has power in any case to issue a writ of prohibition to a court-martial is a question of great importance not heretofore adjudged by this court; and we are not inclined, in the present case, either to assert or to deny the existence of the power, because upon settled principles, assuming the power to exist, no case is shown for the exercise of it. . . . A writ of prohibition is never to be issued unless it clearly appears that the inferior court is about to exceed its jurisdiction. It cannot be made to serve the purpose of a writ of error or certiorari, to power and are restrictive in their terms. Hence this court possesses such jurisdiction and only such as is either expressly or by necessary implication granted to it by said sections. As stated: "The supreme court, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only." The only place where it is otherwise provided is in § 87, and it is a significant fact that the writ of prohibition is not one of the writs therein enumerated, which this court has power to issue. It therefore inevitably follows that, if this court has jurisdiction to issue such writ, it must be by virtue of its superintending control over inferior courts, as its issuance is not "necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction" within the meaning of such clause in § 87. The writ is not asked for the latter purpose, and the court is not exercising or attempting to exercise any jurisdiction, for the proper exercise of which such writ is necessary.

If authorities are required in support of the foregoing views, we call attention to the following cases in addition to our own decisions: People ex rel. Earle v. Circuit Ct. 169 Ill. 201, 48 N. E. 717; Wheeler v. Northern Colorado Irrig. Co. 9 Colo. 249, 11 Pac. 103; People v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 Pac. 929. On account of the similarity of the Constitutions of Illinois and Colorado with that of this state relative to the grant of power to the supreme court, the foregoing authorities are peculiarly in point. The Illinois court, in the foregoing case in correct mistakes of that court in deciding any question of law or fact within its jurisdiction. These rules have been always adhered to by this court, in the exercise of the power expressly conferred upon it by Congress to issue writs of prohibition to the district courts sitting as courts of admiralty (United States v. Peters, 3 Dall. 121, 1 L. ed. 535; Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S. 68, 24 L. ed. 373; Ex parte Gordon, 104 U. S. 515, 26 L. ed. 814; Ex parte Detroit River Ferry Co. 104 U. S. 519, 26 L. ed. 815; Ex parte Pennsylvania, 109 U. S. 174, 27 L. ed. 894, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84), as well as by the courts of England and of the several states, in the exercise of their inherent jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition to courts-martial (Grant v. Gould, 2 H. Bl. 69; State v. Wakely, 2 Nott & M' Cord, 410; State ex rel. Martindale v. Stevens, 2 M' Cord, L. 32; Washburn v. Phillips, 2 Met. 296). And this court, although the question of issuing a writ of prohibition to a court-martial has not come before it for direct adjudication, has repeatedly recognized the general rule that the acts of a court-martial, within the scope of its jurisdiction and duty, cannot be controlled or reviewed in the civil courts, by writ of prohibition or otherwise."

In United States v. Maney, 61 Fed. 140, the power to issue a writ of prohibition to restrain a court-martial from proceeding with a trial was said to be a very doubtful question.

In United States ex rel. Smith v. Whitney, 4 Mackey, 535, the dictum of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Wales v. Whitney, supra, was regarded as warranting a decision that the correlation of the supreme court of the District of Columbia and courts-martial is such that the former has no power to arrest the proceedings of a court-martial on the ground of want of jurisdiction; although it can deal with the consequences of a usurped jurisdiction on the part of a military tribunal, and enlarge a prisoner suffering from its extra-judicial power.

Although not usually recognized as an exercise of the power of superintending control, the description in 3 Bl. Com. 42 of the jurisdiction of the court of King's bench seems to afford some ground for the supposition that, when used to examine into the detention of a person held for trial, it originally was such, afterward, like the writ of error (see Carnall v. Crawford County, 11 Ark. 604), coming to be regarded as distinctive in character. The use of the writ of habeas corpus to examine into the jurisdiction of, or legality of a sentence pronounced by, a court-martial will not here be discussed. Under this head, reference will simply be made to the case of Ex parte Henderson, Fed. Cas. No. 6,349, in which it was held that, where the charges brought before a court-martial were found wholly insufficient to show jurisdiction in the court-martial, a discharge would be granted upon habeas corpus pending trial.

As the writ of certiorari seems sometimes to have been employed in the exercise of a superintending control over courts-martial, it seems proper in this connection briefly to review cases on this phase of the question.

The New York courts appear to be the principal exponents of the power of the civil courts to review the decisions of military tribunals by means of the common-law writ of certiorari; and the question is discussed at some length, and the earlier cases reviewed, in the case of People ex rel. Smith v. Hoffman, 166 N. Y. 642, 54 L.R.A. 597, 60 N. E. 187, where it is said: "It is well established that the judicial determinations of inferior tribunals and of officers acting judicially under the authority of a statute may be reviewed under a common-law writ of certiorari, which is issued to correct errors of law affecting the property or rights of the parties, and to test the validity of official action judicial or quasi judicial in character. . . . Unless military tribunals are excepted from the general rule, their judicial determinations are subject to review by means of this ancient and important writ. They are not expressly excepted either by the military Code or the Code of Civil Procedure. . . . It may be claimed, however, that the determination of military tribunals, although not expressly excepted from the provisions of the an able opinion, construed the Constitution of that state, and reached the conclusion that it had no original jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition. We quote: "The Constitution is a limitation upon the powers of the legislature; but it is regarded as a grant of power to the executive and judicial departments of the government. Hence the executive and judiciary can only exercise such powers as are granted by the Constitution. Field v. People, 3 Ill. 79. The Constitution only specifies three cases in which this court can exercise original jurisdiction, and the issuance of writs of prohibition is not one of them. Original jurisdiction being thus conferred upon the supreme court in certain specified cases, it cannot exercise original jurisdiction in cases not specified.

In all other cases than those named its jurisdiction is appellate only. Campbell v. Campbell, 22 Ill. 664. A prohibition is an original remedial writ, as old as the common law itself. Thomas v. Mead, 36 Mo. 232; McConiha v. Guthrie, 21 W. Va. 134; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 762. It would seem, therefore, to be clear that this court has no original jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition. There are cases in many of the states where courts of last resort are held to have original jurisdiction to issue such writs; but it will be found upon examination that in states where such decisions have been made the Constitution of the state in express terms confers either the power to award writs of prohibition, as in Virginia and West Virginia (James v.

Code relating to the right of certiorari, are impliedly excepted, because, if civil courts were permitted to interfere with the judgments of military courts, the discipline of the National Guard might be injured. There is force in this argument, which is confirmed to a certain extent by the decisions of the Federal courts relating to the regular Army, and by some, but not by all, writers of military law. The subject, however, is treated with reference to a standing army, rather than the militia of the various states. Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How. 65, 81, 15 L. ed. 838, 844; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. ed. 281; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S. 109, 39 L. ed. 914, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 773; 1 Winthrop, Military Law, 55; De Hart, Militia Law, 226; Maltby, Courts-Martial, 151, 158; O'Brien, Military Law, 222; Davis, Military Laws, 6. There is a conflict of authority between the courts of the different states as to the right of the civil courts to review the judgments of military tribunals. Durham v. United States, 4 Hayw. 54; State v. Davis, 4 N. J. L. 311; Ex parte Dunbar, 14 Mass. 393; Re Contested Election, 1 Strobb. L. 190; 4 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 40. The courts of England review such judgments, but cautiously, as the subject requires. Grant v. Gould, supra; Re Mansergh, 1 Best & S. 400; 1 Winthrop, Military Law, 57; Re Poe, 5 Barn. & Ad. 681. Confining the discussion to times of peace, as in time of war military necessity may sanction the temporary exercise of almost any power to save the state, there is a wide distinction between the regular Army of the nation and the militia of a state when not in the service of the nation; for discipline which is ample for the latter will not answer for the former. A member of the state militia belongs to civil life, has a civil avocation, and only occasionally engages in the exercise of arms. A member of the United States Army, on the other hand, has no employment except that of a soldier, and arms constitute the business of his life. Hence, more rigid rules and a higher state of discipline are required in the one case than in the other. Moreover, the state militia is organized by statutes of the state, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) and the legislature, under the limitations of the Constitution, has power to regulate the entire subject, to invest boards of examination with such authority, and to give the civil courts such power to review as it sees fit. When, therefore, the legislature issued a general command upon the subject of reviewing the action of inferior judicial tribunals and officers acting judicially, and made certain exceptions thereto, the matter was exhausted, and the courts have no power to add an exception relating to any tribunal which the legislature is presumed to have had in mind. The part of the Code of Civil Procedure under consideration went into effect on the 1st of September, 1880, and nearly fifty years before the judgment of a court-martial was reviewed and affirmed under a writ of certiorari. Rathbun v. Sawyer, 15 Wend. 451. By one of the early decisions of the court of appeals after its reorganization in 1870 the same power was exercised without question. People ex rel. Underwood v. Daniell, 50 N. Y. 274. The strongest case upon the subject, however, occurred a year later, when this court not only reviewed, but reversed, the proceedings of a court-martial of the National Guard. People ex rel. Garling v. Van Allen, 55 N. Y. 31. In that case the relator, upon his trial before a court-martial, was virtually, though not absolutely, denied the right to defend by counsel; and its judgment was reversed by this court, upon certiorari, because the right to defend by counsel before a military court in this state is guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, as embodied in the Constitution of 1846, although not in that of 1821. Id. 37. These decisions had been made before either the Code of Procedure or the Military Code was passed, and others of like character were made after the former, but before the latter, was enacted. People ex rel. Spahn v. Townsend, 10 Abb. N. C. 169; Re Bracket, 27 Hun, 605; People ex rel. Skinnell v. Rand, 41 Hun, 529. Those statutes, therefore, must be read in the light of the common law as it existed at the date of their passage, which authorized a writ of certiorari to issue to military tribunals organ-

Stokes, 77 Va. 225; McConiha v. Guthrie, supra, or the power to award 'original remedial writs' as in Missouri (Thomas v. Mead, supra), or the power to issue any remedial writs necessary to give the court of last resort general supervision and control over the inferior courts as in North Carolina (Perry v. Shepherd, 78 N. C. 83)."

Is the court-martial such an inferior court as this court has superintending control over within the meaning of § 86, supra? We think not. While treated and often referred to by the authorities as an inferior court of peculiar and limited jurisdiction, it is nowhere held, so far as we have been able in our brief research to discover, that such court, when acting within the limits of its special jurisdiction, is not supreme. This it as it should be. Where it otherwise the military power of the state, which is a ized under the militia statutes of the state for the purpose of reviewing their decisions. The legislature is presumed to have known the common law, and to have made its enactments with reference to the decisions of the courts, yet, when providing general rules to govern the issuance of this great writ, although it excepted the action of certain tribunals from review, it did not except the action of military tribunals. Even when the Military Code was passed, no provision was made to exempt judgments of the tribunals created thereby from review by the civil courts according to the law and practice prevailing at the time. Under these circumstances, an exception should not be implied by the courts, but left to the legislature, in its wisdom, to express, if it sees fit."

And in State ex rel. Grove v. Mott, 46 N. J. L. 328, 50 Am. Rep. 424, it is said: "The line of demarkation between the jurisdiction of the civil and military tribunals is fixed, by determining whether the question involved relates to the organization and discipline of the corps composing the military forces of the state, or whether any civil disability, fine, or penalty attaches. In the latter case, the supreme court will entertain a writ of certiorari, but in the former only the military authorities can act; and, if the action of the inferior military tribunals be not satisfactory, recourse can be had only to the commander in chief."

The following cases are commonly regarded as lending more or less support to the contrary view:

In Ex parte Dunbar, 14 Mass. 393, an application for a certiorari to bring up the proceedings of a general court-martial, it was contended that authority had been expressly given to the justices of the supreme court, by certiorari, to cause to be brought before them "as well indictments, other criminal prosecutions pending in, as the records of sentences, orders, decrees, and judgments of, any court of inferior criminal jurisdiction, and to proceed, order, and award, thereon," and that courts-martial are created by statute, and are courts of inferior judiciary powers. The application was denied in a brief per curiam opinion in which it is said: "The inconveniences which may be foreseen from sustaining motions of this kind furnish, besides the total want of precedent, a strong argument against it. Parties who have legal ground to complain of the doings of these military courts have their remedy by action at law; and to that 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) remedy they must be left." It is to be observed that the denial of the application seems to have been on the ground of expediency rather than on that of want of jurisdiction.

In Re Contested Election, 1 Strobb. L. 190, in which the court, after remarking that, while a declaration by the legislature that the decision of a military board, and the approval of the major general should be conclusive, would not of itself have the effect of preventing the great prerogative writ of certiorari from being granted to correct errors of law in the proceeding, said: "But that a certiorari to a military tribunal does not lie is, I think, apparent from what is said in Jacob's Law Dictionary, title 'certiorari' (1 Jacob's Law Dict. 412), where it is laid down to be law, that a 'certiorari does not lie to remove any other than judicial acts.' The proceedings and sentence of courts military can hardly be considered judicial acts. The absence of all precedent of a writ of certiorari directed to a military court is certainly a strong argument against its allowance now. But the very fact that the sentence of the court is not known until approved, then that the court is dissolved, and that the whole proceedings are in the possession of the officer ordering the court, show that the writ of certiorari cannot be awarded. For there is no one to whom it can go, and who can, as of and for the court, certify the proceedings. But that the court of sessions has no right to pronounce a military judgment upon the proceedings being certified up is itself conclusive against the writ."

In Ex parte Vallandigham, 1 Wall. 243, 17 L. ed. 589, it was held that there is no jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court to issue the writ of certiorari to revise the proceedings of a military commission. This decision, however, seems to be based upon the constitutional limitation of the original jurisdiction of such court.

The English rule with respect to the grant of writs of certiorari to review the proceedings of a military commission appears to be that, where the civil rights of a person in military service are affected by the judgment of a military tribunal, in pronouncing which the tribunal has either acted without jurisdiction or has exceeded its jurisdiction, the civil courts should intervene; but that they should not do so where only the military status of such person is involved. See Re Mansergh, 1 Best. & S. 400.

branch of the executive department, might be seriously embarrassed, if not completely paralyzed, by the interference of the civil courts in the necessary discipline of its organized forces. To attribute to the framers of the Constitution an intent to give to the civil courts a superintending control over the military courts-martial would be to attribute to them an intent to depart from the well-known, and we believe almost universally recognized, rule to the contrary in this country. See Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167, 29 L. ed. 601, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670; and cases cited, where it was said: "And this court, although the question of issuing a writ of prohibition to a court-martial has not come before it for direct adjudication, has repeatedly recognized the general rule that the acts of a court-martial within the scope of its jurisdiction and duty cannot be controlled or reviewed in the civil courts by writ of prohibition or otherwise,"—citing numerous cases. The Constitution should be construed in the light of well-settled principles recognized in this country prior to its adoption, and also in the light of contemporaneous history; and, when thus construed, no such intent will or can be inferred from the language employed in § 86. Furthermore, it is very apparent that the courts over which this court is given a superintending control are the inferior courts belonging to the judicial department, and which are expressly enumerated in the preceding section of the Constitution. A court-martial can in no sense be said to belong to the judicial department of the state, although its functions are judicial in character. As before stated, such court-martial belongs to the executive department, and is organized and its judgments approved by the governor as commander in chief. Of course, if it exceeds its jurisdiction or acts without jurisdiction, its judgments are a nullity, and any person aggrieved thereby may seek proper redress in the civil courts having jurisdiction, and such courts will furnish appropriate relief. Whether, in a proper case, the writ of prohibition may be employed, by a court having power in the exercise of its original jurisdiction to issue the same, to enjoin and prohibit a court-martial from exceeding its jurisdiction or from acting in a case without jurisdiction, we are not here required to decide. Such question is not before us, and we therefore refrain from intimating an opinion thereon further than to say that the authorities appear to leave the matter in doubt. See Smith v. Whitney, supra, and the few early American and English cases therein cited; 16 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 1108. See also the valuable note in 111 Am. St. Rep. p. 936; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

State ex rel. Grove v. Mott, 46 N. J. L. 328, 50 Am. Rep. 424, and cases cited; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S. 109, 39 L. ed. 914, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 773; and also 1 Andrews, Am. Law, 2d ed. pp. 207, 351, 352, citing numerous cases. The author of this valuable treatise, among other things says: "The writ of prohibition is not a proper writ in such cases for the reason that the courts-martial are not inferior to, and in fact are not within the same department with, the judicial establishment of the state,"—citing High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d ed. 720-732. It is entirely clear, however, for the reasons heretofore stated, that this court has been given no jurisdiction to issue such a writ for the purpose aforesaid, or for any purpose other than in aid of its appellate or original jurisdiction, or where the same is necessary to effectuate its superintending control over inferior courts.

Entertaining these views, it is unnecessary, as well as improper, to notice the various contentions of counsel upon the merits. Writ denied.

Morgan, Carmody, and Spalding, JJ., concur.

Ellsworth, J., dissenting in part and concurring specially:

I am unable to concur in that part of the opinion of the majority of the court which holds that this court is wholly without jurisdiction in any case to issue the writ of prohibition to a court-martial.

I fully agree that this court is without jurisdiction to issue this writ originally, or at all, except in furtherance of its power of superintending control over inferior courts. Whether or not a court-martial comes within the meaning of the words "inferior courts," as contained in § 86 of the state Constitution, is the test of the power of this court to exercise any control over its proceedings even when it is acting without or in excess of its jurisdiction. It is a question in the determination of which we have little light or assistance from the decisions of other courts. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167, 29 L. ed. 601, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570, characterizes the question as one of great importance, but in its deliberate consideration of an appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia is disinclined either to assert or deny the power of that court to issue the writ of prohibition to a court-martial. A question so grave and unprecedented that our highest court, after mature investigation, hesitates to bind itself by an express finding should not, in my opinion, be finally disposed of by this court in the haste that necessarily accompanies the decision of a summary special proceeding.

The courts of several states, notably of New York and New Jersey, have at times asserted the power of a certain supervisory control over courts-martial upon the theory that courts-martial fall within the accepted definition of inferior courts; and the proposition that this court, in the case of a court-martial acting without or clearly in excess of its jurisdiction, has the power, under its grant of supervisory control over inferior courts, to issue to it the writ of prohibition, impresses me with great force. In the case here presented, however, I prefer to rest my concurrence in the result reached by the majority of the court on the ground that, whether or not a power of this court exists to issue the writ in a proper case, no case is here shown for the exercise of it.

The office of the writ applied for in this proceeding is not to review the procedure or correct the mistakes of the inferior court to which it issues, but only to prevent that court from assuming jurisdiction of a matter beyond its legal cognizance. The writ of prohibition never issues unless it appears that an inferior court is about to exceed its jurisdiction. The inquiry of the superior court is then directed wholly to two points only: (1) What are the limits of the jurisdiction of the inferior court; and (2) does it appear upon the face of its procedure that it is acting within these limits? The investigation permissible, even to a court having full jurisdiction to issue the writ, is therefore very narrow, and cannot, in any case, extend to the detail of the pleading, practice, or general procedure of the inferior court. If, from such inquiry, it appears in this case that the court-martial in question was acting within the limits of its special jurisdiction, I fully concur with the majority of this court in holding that it is supreme and cannot be interfered with by the civil courts, even though when acting without or in excess of its jurisdiction it is amenable to the superintending control of this court. A court-martial is a military tribunal, constituted and convened in the manner provided by law, to try and determine offenses against the military service. In this state a general court-martial can be ordered only by the governor as commander in chief of the militia and National Guard. Its jurisdiction is defined and its procedure regulated by the Articles of War of the United States. Rev. Codes 1905, § 1764. From the application of the relator, Thomas H. Poole, for the writ of prohibition, it appears that he is a member of the National Guard of the state, and that the court-martial in question is convened by order of the governor of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

state as commander in chief of the National Guard. It further appears from the application, or was admitted by counsel upon the hearing, that the officers composing the court-martial are those whom the governor is authorized by law to detail for that purpose, and that, when convened and sitting as a court, the relator came before it and in person or by counsel participated in its proceedings. It is thus clearly apparent that the court-martial is a lawfully organized tribunal, and that it has jurisdiction over the person of the relator. Whether or not it has jurisdiction over the subject-matter is to be determined by an examination of the charges preferred against relator and upon which the court-martial is proceeding to try him. A copy of the charges are attached to relator's application, and it appears therefrom that they are two in number, viz., "disobedience of orders in violation of the 21st Article of War," and "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman in violation of the 61st Article of War." Reference to the Articles of War of the United States (Rev. Stat. § 1342, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 944), which are expressly made a part of our own statute (Rev. Codes 1905, § 1764), discloses that by article 21 disobedience to any lawful command of his superior officer, and by article 61 conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, are specified as offenses against military law and regulation. When properly constituted and convened, a court-martial has jurisdiction to hear and determine the question whether the accused is guilty of any of the offenses specified in the Articles of War. Relator admits that he is charged almost in the language of the Articles of War with two offenses against military regulation. These offenses being thus charged in writing and in due and regular form before the court-martial, it has on the face of its proceedings jurisdiction over the subject-matter, or, in other words, the right to hear, try, and determine the charges preferred against relator. Certain specifications follow each of the two charges setting out the particulars of the offenses; but whether the specifications support the charges or the evidence adduced at the court-martial supports the specification it is not for this court, on such an application, to consider. The court-martial having jurisdiction of the person of relator and of the subject-matter may proceed in accordance with its own practices and usages to try and determine these matters without interference from this court. An abundance of the highest authority sustains the foregoing propositions. Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167, 29 L. ed. 601, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S. 365, 46 L. ed. 236, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 181;

Rose ex rel. Carter v. Roberts, 40 C. C. A. 199, 99 Fed. 948; United States v. Maney (C. C.) 61 Fed. 140.

While I dissent, therefore, from the holding that this court is without jurisdiction in a proper case to issue to a court-martial the writ of prohibition, I believe that, assuming the jurisdiction of this court to exist, there is no case here shown by relator for the exercise of it, and concur in holding that the writ should be denied.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES L. ECKER, Plff. in Err.,
v.
DELLA ECKER.

(— Okla. —, 98 Pac. 918.)

Error — review — absence of ruling and exception.

1. This court will not consider an alleged error of the trial court in refusing to sustain a motion to re-refer a case to the master for further findings when the record does not affirmatively show that the mo-

Headnotes by HAYES, J.

Case Note. — Right of wife against whom an absolute divorce is granted to permanent alimony.

This note includes only those cases in which it is sought to recover permanent alimony for a wife against whom her husband had secured an absolute divorce. It therefore does not include those cases passing on her right to temporary alimony, or the right of a wife against whom a divorce from bed and board was granted, to an allowance for alimony.

Whatever may have been the rule at common law, it is recognized, at least in those jurisdictions wherein there is a statute similar to the one in ECKER v. ECKER, that is, one which directs the court, upon a decree of divorce being granted, to make such order touching the alimony of the wife as, under the circumstances and nature of the case, shall be reasonable, that alimony may be decreed the wife although the divorce is granted against her. But, since it is also recognized in these cases that it is discretionary with the court whether or not alimony shall be granted, the question in each particular case becomes not so much whether, under any circumstances, alimony may be granted the wife when the divorce is granted in favor of the husband, as whether the circumstances in the particular case are such that she should be allowed alimony.

In the following cases the circumstances were such that the court, within its discretion, decreed the payment of alimony to the wife although the divorce was granted against her: Reavis v. Reavis, 2 Ill. 242 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tion was ever acted upon by the court, and exceptions taken thereto by the complaining party.

Alimony — divorce against wife.

2. Under § 2565, Mansfield's Dig. (Ark.) (Ind. Terr. Anno. Stat. 1899, § 1853), providing that, when a decree of divorce is granted, the court shall make such order touching the alimony of the wife as, under the circumstances and nature of the case, shall be reasonable, the court may decree alimony to a wife against whom a divorce is granted.

Same — award of specific property.

3. The court is without authority under said section to decree absolutely a certain and specific sum of money as alimony, or a division of the husband's property, and to vest in the wife the title to one half of his estate.

(December 21, 1908.)

ERROR to the United States Court for the Northern District of the Indian Territory to review that portion of a judgment in an action for divorce awarding to the defendant wife one half of the husband's property. Reversed.

Statement by Hayes, J.:

This is a bill by the husband against the (divorce granted husband for desertion by wife); Deenis v. Deenis, 79 Ill. 74 (divorce granted husband for desertion by wife, who had materially contributed to his acquiring of property, and who at least had some cause for desertion); Stacker v. Stacker, 117 Ill. App. 549 (facts similar to Deenis Case); Coon v. Coon, 26 Ind. 189 (divorce granted to the husband for wife's misconduct); Hedrick v. Hedrick, 28 Ind. 291 (divorce granted husband for abandonment by wife, who was charged with maintaining one of the children, and it appearing that husband was in good circumstances); Janvrin v. Janvrin, 59 N. H. 23 (divorce for alleged desertion); Richardson v. Wilson, 8 Yerg. 67 (husband securing legislative divorce for which there would have been no ground in a court of justice); Ashcroft v. Ashcroft [1902] P. 270.

So, alimony was allowed to the wife in Sheafe v. Sheafe, 24 N. H. 564, where, although a divorce was granted the husband for the alleged adultery on her part, there was some question whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain the charge; and it appeared that she was utterly destitute.

In Lovett v. Lovett, 11 Ala. 763, it was held that, under a statute requiring the court of chancery, upon dissolving the bonds of matrimony, to order a division of the estate of the parties in such a way as to them should deem just and right, a wife, although the divorce was granted against her because of abandonment, might be given a share of her husband's estate, the amount depending somewhat upon the nature of her offense.

wife for divorce and for custody of one child, brought originally in the United States court for the northern district of the Indian territory, at Vinita. Plaintiff alleges in his bill, as grounds for divorce, adultery of the wife, and divers acts of cruel treatment of him by her, consisting of threats to kill him, plots to poison him, and of abusive language. Defendant filed her answer and cross bill, denying all the allegations of plaintiff's petition relative to his grounds for divorce, and charging plaintiff with adultery and various acts of gross and abusive conduct toward her, beginning shortly after their marriage and continuing until the time of their separation. She charges that plaintiff had at different times struck and choked her, cursed and called her vile names. She alleges that plaintiff and defendant own different items of personal property and real estate, all of which has been acquired by their joint labor subsequent to their marriage. She prays for divorce and decree of the court dividing the property between them, and for custody of the child. The master, in separate findings, finds that each has offered such indignities toward the person of the other as to render his or her condition intolerable; and finds that they own and possess certain property which they acquired with their joint earnings. Upon the recommendation of the master, the court rendered judgment granting to plaintiff a divorce from defendant, and custody and care of the minor child, and decreed that the property should be divided equally between them, or that defendant have judgment for one half of its value as found by the master in his report. Plaintiff in error, who was plaintiff in the court below, appealed from that portion of the judgment

In Graves v. Graves, 108 Mass. 314, it was held that, under statutes not limiting the granting of alimony to those cases in which the decree of divorce was in the wife's favor, a wife may receive alimony where the husband secures the divorce; the court taking into consideration the amount of property and the circumstances of the separation of the parties.

In Lofvander v. Lofvander, 146 Mich. 370, 109 N. W. 662, it was held that, under a statute providing, in effect, that, upon every divorce for any cause, except adultery committed by the wife, the court might decree the payment of alimony to the wife in such a sum as it should deem just and reasonable, a wife may be allowed alimony though the divorce is granted to her husband. The ground of complaint in this case was extreme cruelty.

Under a similar statute, it was held in Dickerson v. Dickerson, 26 Neb. 318, 42 N. W. 9, that a wife may recover alimony although a divorce was granted against her for desertion.

This was also recognized in State ex rel. Child v. Smith, 19 Wis. 531.

In Pauly v. Pauly, 14 Okla. 1, 76 Pac. 148, it was held that, under a statute providing, in effect, that, if the divorce shall be granted by reason of the fault or aggression of the wife, the court may grant her such share of her husband's property as may appear just and reasonable, a wife may be granted alimony, although the husband secured a divorce on the ground of her adultery.

So, in Kentucky, notwithstanding a statute providing that, if the wife has not sufficient estate, she may, "on a divorce obtained by her," have an allowance out of the estate of her husband, it has been held that, where a divorce is improperly obtained by the husband, or even properly obtained, but it appears that the wife was not in fault or has an equal or greater right to one, she may be granted alimony. Davis v. Davis, 86 Ky. 32, 4 S. W. 822 (securing of divorce by husband because of abandonment where not en- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) titled to it, the abandonment being made necessary by his own criminal conduct); Lacey v. Lacey, 95 Ky. 110, 23 S. W. 673 (securing of divorce by husband because of having lived apart for five years, though properly granted because of a statute, yet made necessary because of his conduct); Newsome v. Newsome, 95 Ky. 383, 25 S. W. 878 (divorce granted husband because of having lived apart for five years, both being equally entitled to a divorce); Hoover v. Hoover, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 680, 21 S. W. 234 (divorce obtained by husband because of abandonment made necessary by his unseemly conduct); Masterson v. Masterson, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 631, 46 S. W. 20 (improper granting of divorce to husband because of abandonment); Pore v. Pore, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1980, 50 S. W. 681 (abandonment by wife not wholly without husband's fault); Turner v. Turner, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 370, 62 S. W. 1022 (husband securing divorce after they had agreed to a separation, and she had sacrificed a pension by her marriage).

So, alimony was given to the wife in Tilton v. Tilton, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 538, 29 S. W. 290, where a divorce was secured by the husband on the ground of adultery, there being, however, no ground of belief that this crime had been committed, and the husband himself being addicted to the use of morphine and liquor.

To the same effect is Alderson v. Alderson, 113 Ky. 830, 69 S. W. 700, where a divorce was improperly granted the husband because of abandonment, it appearing that he had married her to end a prosecution for her seduction, and she, under the exciting circumstances of the marriage, had refused to live with him, afterwards offering to do so.

This was also recognized in Irwin v. Irwin, 105 Ky. 632, 49 S. W. 432, where, however, the wife secured the absolute divorce because of having lived apart for the statutory period, and it clearly appeared that the husband was at fault.

In Pennsylvania, by statute, a court may of the court awarding to defendant one half of the property specifically mentioned in the judgment, or have one half of its value, to the United States court of appeals in the Indian territory, and the same is now before us under the provisions of the enabling act (June 16, 1906, chap. 3335, 34 Stat. at L. 267), for final disposition.

Messrs. James S. Davenport, William M. Hall, and John Goldsberry for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. H. Jennings, J. B. Rutherford, and J. H. Keith for defendant in error.

Hayes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The master, in his findings, did not specifically find upon the issue made by plaintiff in his petition charging defendant with adultery, which was denied in her answer. After the report of the master had been filed, plaintiff moved the court to re-refer the case, with directions to the master to find upon this issue; and the first alleged error complained of is that the court refused to sustain the motion and re-refer the case. After a careful examination of the record, however, we are unable to find that this motion was ever acted upon by the court, either favorably or adversely to plaintiff, or that he saved his exceptions to the action of the court thereon. If plaintiff permitted the court to proceed to judgment without acting upon his motion, he waived his right to have the same acted upon; and, in the absence of affirmative showing by the record that the same was acted upon adversely to plaintiff, and exceptions taken thereto at the time, this court cannot grant a wife alimony where a divorce is granted in favor of the husband because of his wife's cruel and barbarous treatment. Shoop's Appeal, 34 Pa. 233; Miles v. Miles, 76 Pa. 357.

In Cox v. Cox, 25 Ind. 303, the trial court granted alimony to a wife against whom a divorce had been granted, and, the evidence not being before the higher court, the propriety of the trial court's action was not determined.

In Pence v. Pence, 6 B. Mon. 496, a wife against whom a divorce was granted because of abandonment, for which, however, it appears that, because of the husband's conduct, there was ample reason, was given, in addition to her separate estate, also a sum of money for her support.

In Reynolds v. Reynolds, 92 Mich. 104, 52 N. W. 295, it was recognized that, although the divorce was obtained by the husband on the ground of desertion, yet, where he himself was also somewhat at fault, and was a man of means, alimony should be granted the wife.

In Edwards v. Edwards, 84 Ala. 361, 3 So. 896, where a divorce was granted to the husband for abandonment, after a divorce had been refused the wife in a former suit, permanent alimony was granted the wife, it appearing that the fault was not all hers.

To the same effect are Luthe v. Luthe, 12 Colo. 421, 21 Pac. 467 (children left with the wife leaving him unencumbered with a family, and she not being guilty of gross misconduct); and Butler v. Butler, 38 N. J. Eq. 626, where a divorce had been granted the husband on the unfounded ground of adultery, this decree, however, being afterwards opened on account of surprise and fraud, and the wife allowed to answer and defend.

In Fulk v. Fulk, 8 Blackf. 561, where a husband, in a suit for divorce, charged his wife with adultery and other misconduct, the latter denying the charge and alleging that the husband had received personal property from her to the value of $200, the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court in decreeing the divorce allowed the wife $100 in certain payments.

A class of cases in which it is recognized that a wife, though a divorce is granted against her, may recover alimony, is represented by Zuver v. Zuver, 36 Iowa, 190, where it was held that the fact that the husband obtained a divorce for the fault of the wife had a material bearing on the amount of alimony to be allowed the wife; and therefore in this case, where the wife had been granted practically all her husband's property, it was considered too great, and was consequently largely reduced.

So, in Conner v. Conner, 29 Ind. 48, it was held that the granting of alimony to a wife against whom a divorce had been granted for adultery, and to an amount equal to one third of the husband's estate, was unreasonable. In this case she was allowed a small sum because of public policy, together with the fact that her industry had contributed to create the husband's estate.

In Chandler v. Chandler, 13 Ind. 492, although the court recognized that alimony may be granted to the wife as incident to a judgment for a divorce in favor of the husband, yet it would not grant alimony when it was not asked.

In Becklenberg v. Becklenberg, 102 Ill. App. 504, reversed on other points in 232 Ill. 120, 83 N. E. 423, a wife against whom a divorce had been granted was given a certain sum as alimony in gross, the court saying, however: "It should be remembered that the bill was filed by the husband against the wife, and the decree, as shown on its face, was granted for reasons existing because of her own fault. The fact of habitual drunkenness by her having been found against her, the husband was not bound to pay her any alimony, nor was he bound to convey his right of dower to her in real estate she might own, unless because of the §§ 17 and 18, chapter 40, entitled 'Divorce,' although it cannot be doubted that the court, by virtue of the review the same. Saxon v. White (Okla.) 95 Pac. 783.

The second assignment of error urged is to that part of the master's report recommending that defendant be awarded, and to that part of the judgment awarding to defendant, one half of plaintiff's property or one half of its value. At common law a delinquent wife, on account of whose conduct the husband obtained a divorce, was not entitled to receive alimony, but in a number of the states, including the state of Arkansas, from which state the statutes in force in the Indian territory were adopted, the common law has been modified by statute. The statute governing in this case reads: "When a decree shall be entered, the court shall make such order touching the alimony of the wife and care of the children, if there be any, as, from the circumstances of the parties and the nature of the case, shall be reasonable." Mansfield's (Ark.) Dig. § 2565 (Ind. Ter. Anno. Stat. 1899, § 1853). Under the language of this statute, or similar language of the statutes of other states, the courts have held that the authority of the court to make orders touching the alimony of the wife is not limited to those cases in which she prevails, or that whether the guilty wife will be granted alimony and the amount thereof is within the discretionary power of the court, to be controlled by the circumstances of each case. Reavis v. Reavis, 2 Ill. 242; Deenis v. Deenis, 79 Ill. 74; Spitler v. Spitler, 108 Ill. 120; Edwards v. Edwards, 84 Ala. 361, 3 So. 896; McDonald v. McDonald, 117 Iowa, 307, 90 N. W. 603; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 92 Mich. 104, 52 N. W. 295; Lofvander v. Lofvander, 146 Mich. 370, 109 N. W. 662; Pauly v. Pauly, 14 Okla. 1, 76 Pac. 148; Bishop, Marr. Div. & Sep. p. 865; 2 Nelson, Div. & Sep. p. 907. It is, however, a discretion that a court should at all times exercise with great care, and it should not be exercised in favor of the guilty wife when there are no mitigating circumstances. In the case at bar the wife is guilty of gross misconduct, but the husband has not powers vested in it might decree both. The plaintiff in error was the beneficiary under the decree, in the respects complained of, and is not in a position, without a certificate of evidence, to complain of the relief given her. It is a familiar doctrine that a party cannot complain of any error that is beneficial to himself."

It will be noted that in some of the above cases the court granted the wife alimony although there seemed to be no statute as in the other cases, granting it such a discretionary power; the courts evidently depend upon the principles of equity to justify their decisions. In view of these cases, the presence or absence of such a statute would seem to be of very little importance.

From the above cases, it follows as a matter of course that, where the wife is wholly at fault, and, from the circumstances of the case, it would be inequitable to grant her permanent alimony, the payment of such alimony will be refused. Spitler v. Spitler, 108 Ill. 120 (divorce obtained by husband for wife's desertion and adultery); Hickling v. Hickling, 40 Ill. App. 73 (divorce granted husband for adultery); Spaulding v. Spaulding, 133 Ind. 122, 36 Am. St. Rep. 534, 32 N. E. 224 (divorce granted to husband because of wife's many adulterous acts with many men); Fivecoat v. Fivecoat, 32 Iowa, 198 (divorced wife guilty of adultery soon after marriage, she having brought no property to husband); Gaines v. Gaines, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 471, 19 S. W. 929 (abandonment by wife, she being wholly in fault herself); Dollins v. Dollins, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1036, 83 S. W. 95 (husband securing divorce showing wife to be guilty of adultery); Robards v. Robards, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 565, 110 S. W. 422 (divorce secured by husband because of wife's adultery); Tuggles v. Tug- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

gles, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 221, 30 S. W. 875 (divorce obtained by husband on ground of lewd and lascivious conduct of wife); Shafer v. Shafer, 10 Neb. 468, 6 N. W. 768 (divorce granted husband through fault of wife); Harris v. Harris, 31 Gratt. 13 (husband securing divorce on ground of desertion).

Where a divorce was granted the husband for abandonment by the wife; and it appeared that, on settlement of a prior action for divorce brought by her, she received property, which she still owned, and that the husband was in feeble health and nearing old age, and owned property of but little value,—refusal to grant the wife alimony was proper. Cottrell v. Cottrell, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2417, 74 S. W. 227.

A similar case, holding to the same effect, is Henry v. Henry, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 596, 76 S. W. 130.

So, where a wife, absolutely without cause, deliberately refuses to live with her husband, and has not helped to accumulate any of his estate, she is not entitled to alimony. Isaacs v. Isaacs, 71 Neb. 537, 99 N. W. 268.

In Mutter v. Mutter, 123 Ky. 754, 124 Am. St. Rep. 381, 97 S. W. 393, it was held that, where a divorce is granted against the wife because of malformation which was known to her at the time of her marriage, she is "in fault," and therefore cannot be granted alimony.

In Elliott v. Elliott (Mo.) 115 S. W. 486, it was held that, where divorce is granted the husband as the innocent party and for his wife's fault, the latter is not entitled to permanent alimony.

It will be noted that in the above cases, as was before stated, the equities were clearly with the husband, the wife being wholly at fault, and for that reason she was not permitted to recover alimony. In been free from fault. The finding of the master is that the conduct of each party toward the other has been such as to render their living together as husband and wife intolerable. There is nothing in the master's report as to whom he finds the more culpable, except that he recommends that the husband be granted a divorce. The evidence is convincing that each has been guilty of cruel treatment of the other and gross immoral conduct, consisting of adultery with different persons. The question whether, upon the evidence in the case and the findings of the master, either party should be granted a divorce, is not before us. The part of the judgment granting a divorce has not been appealed from. The sole question is whether, the divorce having been granted to plaintiff, the court should have granted alimony to defendant. At the time defendant married plaintiff he had but little property. During their fifteen or sixteen years of married life the husband, principally through the thrift, frugality, and industry of the wife, who labored on the farm, and conducted, at different times, a boarding house, restaurants, and kept books in a grocery store, had accumulated property of the value of about $5,000. It is not clear from the record that the beginning of defendant's wrong doing was not caused by plaintiff's cruel treatment. She is now past the meridian of her life, the greater portion of which she has spent in faithfully laboring in the discharge of her domestic duties and in contributing materially to plaintiff's accumulation of his property. Under these circumstances, it is within the discretionary power of the trial court, upon granting to plaintiff a divorce, to allow defendant such alimony as, under the circumstances, is reasonable, just, and right, taking into consideration the amount of plaintiff's property, the extent to which defendant contributed to the accumulation thereof, the ability of each to earn money in the future, and their conduct in the past. But the court ordered an equal division of the property, or that defendant the following cases, however, it would seem to be recognized that, if the husband secures a divorce for his wife's offense, no matter what excuses she may have to offer, she cannot recover permanent alimony.

Thus, in Everett v. Everett, 52 Cal. 383, where a husband secured a divorce from his wife on account of extreme cruelty, the court, after quoting a statute permitting the granting of alimony when the divorce is granted for the offense of the husband, simply dismissed the case by saying that there was no provision of law authorizing the court to require the husband to pay, subsequent to the divorce and out of his separate property, any sum toward the maintenance of the former wife, when the divorce was for her offense.

So, in McIntire v. McIntire, 80 Mo. 470, it was held that, in the face of a statute declaring that in case of divorce from the bond of matrimony the guilty party shall forfeit all rights and claim under and by virtue of the marriage, a woman can have permanent alimony only as incident to a decree of divorce in her favor.

To the same effect are DeHoog v. DeHoog, 65 Mo. App. 246 (husband obtaining divorce for wife's misconduct); Motley v. Motley, 93 Mo. App. 473, 67 S. W. 741 (divorce obtained by husband because of many indignities offered him by wife, including the latter's attempt to poison him); Slaughter v. Slaughter, 106 Mo. App. 104, 80 S. W. 3; Cole v. Cole, 115 Mo. App. 466, 91 S. W. 457.

In Allen v. Allen, 43 Conn. 419, it was held that, a statute empowering the court to grant a divorce to any man or woman for certain offenses committed by the other party, and to assign to any woman so divorced part of her husband's estate, did not empower the court to assign such property to a woman divorced for her own misconduct. The court said: "Although the expression 'any woman so divorced,' taken by itself, seems to be broad and all-inclusive, yet the act, read as a whole, furnishes good foundation for the belief that only those husbands who are divorced for their own violations of the marriage contract are to be punished by such diminution of their estates; for instance, the 6th section provides as follows: 'When any married woman shall have derived from her husband, in consideration of their marriage, or of love and affection, any estate; and her husband shall thereafter be divorced from her on the ground of her misconduct,—the court may decree that such personal estate remaining in her possession, and such real estate standing in her name, shall thereafter belong to him.' Hereby the legislature strips the guilty wife of all the estate which she may have received upon certain specified consideration from her husband, and returns the same to him. This can mean nothing in reality if she can immediately reclaim even a greater sum under another section of the same act. We can hardly attribute to the legislature the intention of providing simply for an exchange of estates."

And, where a statute provides for the granting of alimony to the wife only in case the divorce is granted the husband because of the former's cruel and barbarous treatment, she cannot recover permanent alimony where the husband procured a divorce on the ground of desertion as well as barbarous treatment. Parker v. Parker, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 341.

Effect of wife's subsequent adultery upon an allowance of alimony, see subject note to Cole v. Cole, 19 L.R.A. 811.

have judgment for one half the value of the same. This was error.

Section 2568, Mansfield's (Ark.) Dig. (Ind. Ter. Anno. Stat. 1899, § 1856), authorizes the court, upon rendering final judgment for divorce, to restore each party to all property, not disposed of at the commencement of the action, which either party obtained from or through the other or in consideration or by reason of their marriage. But none of plaintiff's property was obtained by him from or through his wife during their marriage or in consideration thereof. All the property he has is property which he had at the time of his marriage, consisting of one farm, on the purchase price of which he had paid the sum of $400, and on which there was a balance due of $800, and of a small amount of personal property, or that he acquired since their marriage with their joint earnings. Whether courts, under statutes the same or similar to the section quoted above, have authority to decree a gross sum for alimony and maintenance of the wife is a question upon which the courts have divided, but it will serve no useful purpose to review here the two lines of authorities. The supreme court of Arkansas, prior to the adoption of this statute in the Indian territory, had held in Brown v. Brown, 38 Ark. 324, that the court is without authority to decree absolutely a certain and specific sum of money, or a certain specific portion of the property, as alimony, but may decree alimony in a continuous allotment of sums payable at regular intervals. That case is controlling in the case at bar.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore reversed, and the case remanded, for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Williams, Ch. J., and Turner, Kane, and Dunn, JJ., concur.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

J. M. THOMPSON, Admr., etc., of Charles A. Thompson, Deceased, Resp't.,
v.

SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY, Appt.

(81 S. C. 333, 62 S. E. 396.)

Railroad — negligence — killing person on track.

1. The mere fact that those in charge of an engine on a misty night failed to observe one attempting to signal it to stop because of an obstruction on the track, in time to stop the train before striking him, is not sufficient to establish negligence on the part of the railroad company.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Proximate cause — injury on track.

2. The negligence of a railroad company in maintaining the approach to its tracks in an unsafe condition so that a wagon is caught, holding the team on the tracks, may be found to be the proximate cause of the death of the driver, who was struck by a train in attempting to signal it to stop before striking the team.

Railroad — signaling train — negligence.

3. It cannot be said to be negligence per se for the driver of a team caught on a

Note. — The subject of the defective condition of a railroad crossing as affecting a traveler's right to recover for injuries sustained in a collision with a train is treated in the case note to Gehring v. Atlantic City R. Co. 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 312. A few cases in point have been reported since that note.

Thus, the failure to comply with a statute requiring railroad crossings and approaches to be covered with macadam or gravel to a depth of 6 inches may properly be found to be the proximate cause of an injury to the driver of a team who was struck by a sack of bran hurled against him when the engine collided with his wagon, which had run off the end of a culvert into a mud hole and become stalled while he was attempting to cross the track in the nighttime, the beaten path for vehicles being sinuous at the crossing and its approaches. Day v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 132 Mo. App. 707, 112 S. W. 1019. It was also held in this case that the failure of the employees in charge of the train to give the signals upon approaching the crossing might be found to be a proximate cause of the injury, even though the wagon had already become stalled before the locomotive reached the signal point, the plaintiff having testified that, if a signal had been given, he would have abandoned his property at once and sought a place of safety for himself, whereas in fact he did not leave the team until he saw the headlight when the engine was not more than 400 feet away. It was further held that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, in remaining by the team and attempting to extricate it, relying on the signals being given of the approach of a train, although he knew that a train was due.

But in Flanery v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 652, 108 S. W. 575, where there was evidence tending to show that the driver was prevented from backing the horse off the crossing in time to avoid a collision by the fact that one of the planks of the crossing just inside the rail was missing, leaving a depression of about 4 inches, the court held that there was no evidence to support a recovery on the theory of the company's negligence in failing to maintain the crossing at the highway in a reasonably safe condition, there being no evidence that it had notice of the defect, or as to the length of time it had existed.

railroad track by the negligence of the railroad company, to go onto the track for the purpose of attempting to stop an approaching train.

Contributory negligence — standing on track.

4. The fact that one who rightfully goes upon a railroad track to attempt to stop an approaching train which is carrying a powerful headlight cannot be said to have been negligent per se merely because he did not get off in time to avoid being struck by the train.

Railroad — crossing signals — beneficiaries.

5. The question is for the jury to determine, whether or not the failure of a railroad company to give signals for a street crossing contributed to the death of the driver of a team struck while attempting to stop the train after his team had been caught on the tracks at the crossing, where the circumstances would warrant an inference that the team was caught only a very few moments before the train approached, although at the time of his injury he had gone along the track 100 feet or so from the crossing.

Damages — punitive — noncompliance with orders.

6. Punitive damages may be awarded against a railroad company for killing a person at a railroad crossing which was manifestly dangerous, if it had failed to comply with warnings by the public officials to make it safe.

Railroad — entry on tracks — permission.

7. One entering upon a railroad track to attempt to stop a train approaching a crossing on which a team is stalled is not a trespasser, since the consent of the railroad company to his act will be presumed.

(September 17, 1908.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Lexington County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Efrid & Dreher and Lyles & McMahan for appellant.

Messrs. George T. Graham and Nelson & Nelson for respondent.

Woods, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Charles A. Thompson early in the night of October 23, 1905, was driving a wagon and pair of mules along the Two Notch road in Richland county. The road turns at a sharp angle to cross the track of the defendant, Seaboard Air Line Railway, and at the crossing there is a shallow ditch and a bridge on each side of the track. One of the front wheels of the wagon missed the bridge, and went into the ditch, and the mules were thus held on the railroad track. The defendant's fast train, known as the "Florida Limited," was approaching. Thompson left his team, and ran probably about a 100 feet towards the train, waving his hat in the effort to stop it. The train did not stop in time, and struck and killed both Thompson and the mules. J. M. Thompson, the owner of the mules, recovered against the defendant damages for their loss, and the judgment of the court of common pleas was affirmed by this court in Thompson v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 78 S. C. 384, 58 S. E. 1094. As administrator of Charles A. Thompson's estate, J. M. Thompson brought this action, alleging the death of his brother to have been due to the negligent, reckless, wanton, and wilful conduct of the defendant, and recovered a judgment for $3,000. Defendant appeals, charging error in the refusal to grant a nonsuit, in instructions to the jury, and in refusing to grant a new trial.

The first question raised was whether there was any evidence of negligence by the defendant constituting a proximate cause of the death of Thompson. Some of the plaintiff's witnesses testified that, by actual measurement in approaching the crossing, the train was on a straight track for 583 yards. The engine was equipped with an electric headlight. There was some evidence from W. H. Tiller, an engineer sworn in behalf of plaintiff, that under favorable conditions such a headlight would enable the engineer to see an object on the track 250 to 300 yards, but this was a misty night, and the witness said on such a night "the sweat from the glass would stop your reflection and light to a certain extent." Although testifying that such a train as this could be stopped in about 100 to 125 yards, he said that the distance would be greater on a wet track or down grade. According to plaintiff's evidence, the fatality occurred on a down grade, and the misty night no doubt made a damp or wet track. The train was stopped just beyond the crossing. M. A. Drawdy testified he was standing on the side of the track, and saw the headlight of the approaching train and a man running along the track towards it, waving his hat as if to sign it down; that the train passed him, and he did not see it strike deceased; that the speed was not slackened until about the time it struck the mules. The impression of this witness as to the precise time the speed of the cars was slackened was necessarily vague, and hence his evidence is indefinite. Of course, the testimony of the engineer of the train that he was on the watch, saw the deceased signaling, and immediately used every effort to stop the train is to be left out of view in deciding whether the above facts prove negligence in failing to use proper efforts to stop the train. But negligence is to be proved, not assumed, and we do not think, if all the plaintiff's evidence on the point be taken as true, it would tend to establish in the mind of a reasonable juror the conclusion that the engineer was negligent in failing to see the deceased before he did, or in failing to stop the train in time. If this had been the only proof of negligence, the defendant would have been entitled to a nonsuit, but other charges of negligence are to be considered.

The bridge on which the wagon and mules were caught was built by the railroad company on its roadbed for its own purposes. Hence there can be no doubt of the duty of the railroad company to keep it in order for the safety of the traveling public. There was evidence that the bridge, though at a sharp turn in the road, was only 10 to 12 feet in width; whereas, safety to vehicles required it should be 20 feet, the same width as the highway. The wheel tracks of the wagon indicated that, if the bridge had been of the requisite width, the wheels would not have left the bridge, the wagon would not have been caught, and the deceased, of course, would have passed on in safety. From these facts it is very clear there was evidence of defendant's negligence resulting in the mules and the wagon being caught. But it is insisted the court should have held as a matter of law this negligence could not be the proximate cause of the death of Thompson. The mules and wagon were in a place of utmost peril. Not only so, but their position on the track was such as to imperil the safety of defendant's approaching train and the passengers thereon. All this was due to defendant's negligence in the construction of the bridge. Thompson lost his life in the effort to stop the train, and avert the threatened loss of other lives, and destruction of the property in his charge. That effort was immediate and direct, and was the only one he could have made. He was alone, the train was approaching, and his pressing obligation was to try to communicate to the engineer the danger. This right and duty to signal the train, according to the evidence, was forced on him by defendant's negligence. Therefore, if the jury believed this evidence, it was certainly sufficient to sustain the conclusion that defendant's negligence was a proximate cause of the peril assumed by Thompson, and of his death. This conclusion is fully sustained by the very analogous cases of Cooper v. Richland County, 76 S. C. 202, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 799, 121 Am. St. Rep. 946, 56 S. E. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

958, and Snipes v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 76 S. C. 207, 56 S. E. 959. The defendant maintains, however, that, even if the defendant's negligence was a proximate cause of Thompson's death, yet he knew of the approach of the train, and was guilty of contributory negligence in not getting off the track before the train reached him. Under these circumstances, the court could not have said it was negligence per se for Thompson to go on the track for the purpose of stopping the train. It is equally clear it would be very harsh judgment to say the fact that he stayed on the track too long conclusively shows he was negligent in not getting off in time to escape injury. If the evidence is credible, the emergency was brought upon him by the defendant. He was absorbed in the effort to stop the train, and no doubt excited to the degree of consternation by the emergency. He was facing a powerful electric headlight, which, it is reasonable to suppose, blinded him to the extent that he erred in his estimate of the distance of the train from him, until it was too late to escape. The rule was established in this state in 1840 by the case of Ivy v. Wilson, Cheves, L. 74, that it is not contributory negligence per se for one who owes the duty to protect property to take a manifest risk to save it, unless the risk was wanton or unreasonable; and that the exposure by a person so situated is not to be presumed to be wanton or unreasonable exposure to unnecessary danger. The test is whether a reasonably prudent man in the same exigency would have assumed the peril. Ivy v. Wilson, supra; Wasmer v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 212, 36 Am. Rep. 608; 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 524. The exceptions on this point are overruled.

There was direct evidence of the violation of the signal statute,—that is, of a failure to sound the whistle 500 yards before reaching the crossing,—but the defendant contends that Thompson was not within the protection of the statute, because he was about 100 feet from the crossing when struck by the train; and therefore the circuit judge should not have submitted to the jury the issue of negligence under the signal statute. Referring to the signal statute, Chief Justice Simpson, for the court, says in Neely v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 33 S. C. 130, 11 S. E. 636: "Now, there can be no doubt but that the object of these sections was to prevent collisions which might occur between persons attempting to cross the track of the railroad and the locomotive and cars approaching the crossing at the same moment, and the provisions of the act did not include, nor was the act intended to include, injuries inflicted upon bystanders not intending to cross, or upon cattle that happened to be killed or injured pasturing near by, but not upon the crossing or using it to pass from the one side to the other." This rule has been followed in this state, and is in accord with almost all precedents in other states. Hale v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 34 S. C. 292, 13 S. E. 537; Fletcher v. South Carolina & G. Extension R. Co. 57 S. C. 205, 35 S. E. 513; Sims v. Southern R. Co. 59 S. C. 246, 37 S. E. 836; Hutto v. South Bound R. Co. 61 S. C. 495, 39 S. E. 710; Ringstaff v. Lancaster & C. R. Co. 64 S. C. 546, 43 S. E. 22; Fowles v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 73 S. C. 306, 53 S. E. 534. But we can find no case where the application of the statute to a case like this has been considered. Here the circumstances would warrant the inferences that Thompson's team had been caught on the track a very few moments before the approach of the train, and that, if he had heard signals, he would not have attempted to cross before it passed. It was therefore for the jury to say whether a failure to give the signals was negligence contributing to bring the deceased into the predicament in which he found himself. The whole trouble arose at the crossing to a traveler exercising his right to cross. If he would not have gotten into the predicament but for defendant's failure to give the signal, then all reasonable efforts to extricate himself from it may well be said to have been made necessary by defendant's negligent failure to signal. If such efforts had been made by deceased while standing on the crossing, there can be no doubt that the case would have fallen under the signal statute. It would be a very technical distinction to hold that when his team was thus caught on the crossing, and Thompson extended his efforts to prevent a catastrophe 100 feet from it, he lost all benefit of the statutory protection, provided for persons passing over a crossing on the highway.

Without extended analysis of the cases on the subject, it is sufficient to say none of them in this state or elsewhere are like this case, and there is no principle laid down in them which requires such a technical distinction as is here contended for by the appellant. The request to charge on this subject was as follows: "Failure to ring the bell or blow the whistle of a locomotive approaching a crossing is not negligence as to a person on the track a little distance from the crossing." After reading it to the jury, the circuit judge said: "Generally speaking that may be, but the circumstances may be such (and you and I are to be judges of the circumstances in each particular case) where it might be negligence. I charge you that as a general proposition, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

but I say there may be circumstances in each case where the jury have the right to conclude it would be negligence under certain circumstances." For the reasons stated, we think this instruction was not error as applied to this case.

The issue as to punitive damages was properly submitted to the jury. There was evidence tending to show the crossing was obviously dangerous on account of the narrowness of the bridge, and that the county authorities had several times warned the agents of the railroad company of the danger, and requested that the bridge be made safe; and that the defendant nevertheless failed to take any steps to perform the duty required of it by law. The consent of the railroad company that one in the situation of Thompson should enter on its track to stop its train by signal, and thus avert the danger of loss of valuable property or of human life, will be presumed. The circuit court, therefore, did not err in refusing to charge the law applicable to trespassers on the railroad property.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

TEXAS MIDLAND RAILROAD, Plff. in Err.,
v.

J. W. BYRD.

(— Tex. —, 115 S. W. 1163.)

Trial — communication with jury — error.

1. It is reversible error for the judge to communicate with the jury otherwise than as provided by law, as by holding conferences with the foreman not in open court.

Railroad — licensee — negligence.

2. A licensee who unnecessarily selects a railroad bridge as a route to his destination is negligent so that he cannot hold the railroad company liable for an injury received, when compelled to jump therefrom, by an approaching train.

(January 27, 1909.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fifth Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Delta County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Note. — As to effect of judge communicating with jury not in open court, see case note to State v. Murphy, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 609.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. H. Dashiell and Ogden, Brooks, & Napier, for plaintiff in error:

It is error for the trial judge, without the consent of the parties to the suit, to communicate with the jury, or any member thereof, during their deliberations upon the case on trial.

Holliday v. Sampson, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 364, 95 S. W. 643; Lester v. Hays, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 643, 38 S. W. 52; Kilgore v. Moore, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 20, 36 S. W. 317; North Dallas Circuit R. Co. v. McCue (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 1080; Hurst v. Webster Mfg. Co. 128 Wis. 342, 107 N. W. 666; Danes v. Pearson, 6 Ind. App. 405, 33 N. E. 976; High v. Chick, 81 Hun, 100, 30 N. Y. Supp. 652.

A person walking along the track of a railroad company, whether as a licensee or a trespasser, assumes the risks incident to the business of the company whose way he uses, and cannot recover for injury resulting therefrom.

Davis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 646, 46 Am. Rep. 667, 17 N. W. 413; Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 472; Williams v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 18 N. Y. S. R. 857, 2 N. Y. Supp. 435; Tucker v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 8 C. C. A. 416, 8 U. S. App. 491, 59 Fed. 968; Kenna v. Central P. R. Co. 101 Cal. 26, 35 Pac. 332; McAllister v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 395, 20 N. W. 488.

The operatives of an approaching train have the right to assume that a person on the track for his own convenience will leave the same in time to avoid being injured, and, until it becomes apparent to them that such person does not intend leaving, they owe him no duty.

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 52 Tex. 185; Artusy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 73 Tex. 195, 11 S. W. 177; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kuehn, 70 Tex. 585, 8 S. W. 484; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Garcia, 75 Tex. 583, 13 S. W. 223; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hill (Tex. Civ. App.) 58 S. W. 257; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Christian, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 246, 27 S. W. 933; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Lowry, 61 Tex. 154; Galveston City R. Co. v. Hewitt, 67 Tex. 480, 60 Am. Rep. 32, 3 S. W. 705; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Herrin, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 724, 26 S. W. 425; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Roberts, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 532, 37 S. W. 870; Frazer v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 81 Ala. 185, 60 Am. Rep. 145, 1 So. 85; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Blanton, 84 Ala. 154, 4 So. 621.

A trestle of a railroad over which trains pass is a place of danger; and a person who attempts to cross it as a matter of convenience to himself, instead of using a safer way thereunder, is guilty of negligence, and cannot recover for injury resulting therefrom.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 100 Tex. 63, 93 S. W. 1068; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schwindt, 67 Kan. 8, 72 Pac. 573; Kenna v. Central P. R. Co. supra; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hall, 72 Ill. 222; Tucker v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. supra; 5 Thomp. Neg. § 6247; International & G. N. R. Co. v. DeOllos (Tex. Civ. App.) 76 S. W. 222.

Messrs. B. O. Evans, C. L. Elder, and Patterson & Sharpe for defendant in error.

Gaines, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the defendant in error against the plaintiff in error to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been received through the negligence of the servants of the railroad company. After the case was tried and verdict rendered, a motion for new trial was filed on behalf of the plaintiff in error, and, among other grounds for said motion, was the misconduct of the court and jury after the case had been submitted to the jury. This ground of the motion claimed that, after the evidence was introduced, the case argued, and the jury were charged and had retired to consider of their verdict, the court had more than one conference with the foreman of the jury, which was not in open court with all of the jury present. Upon a hearing of the motion evidence was introduced on both sides, and in some particulars the evidence in support of the motion was controverted by contradictory testimony. Counsel for the defendant in error invoked the rule that where the evidence showing misconduct of the jury is contradicted on the other side, and the court has passed upon it, and held it is not sufficient to show misconduct in the action of the court in overruling the motion, it will not be held to be error. But, in signing the bill of exceptions upon overruling the motion, the court pended to the bill a statement of the grounds upon which it acted, and this statement shows the fact that the court did so confer with the foreman of the jury was true. And this much we can therefore say was clearly established, and we think it was such improper conduct on the part of the court as requires the motion to have been granted. It is not a question simply of the misconduct of the jury, and of whether such misconduct would probably influence the verdict, but it was a question of the misconduct of the court, and the propriety of allowing a judgment to stand after such action on the court's part. It seems to us that in deciding this question we are not required to enter into a discussion of the question of how a conference between the judge and the foreman would have affected a verdict if at all.

The statutes (Rev. Stat. 1895) prescribe that:

"Art. 1305. The officer having the jury under his charge shall not suffer any communication to be made to them, or make any himself, except to ask them if they have agreed upon a verdict, unless by order of the court; and he shall not, before their verdict is rendered, communicate to any person the state of their deliberations or the verdict agreed upon.

"Art. 1306. If the jury are permitted to separate, either during the trial or after the case is submitted to them, they shall be admonished by the court that it is their duty not to converse with, or suffer themselves to be addressed by, any other person, on any subject connected with the trial.

"Art. 1307. When the jury wish to communicate with the court, they shall make their wish known to the officer having them in charge, who shall inform the court thereof; and they may be brought into open court, and, through their foreman, shall state to the court, either verbally or in writing, what they desire to communicate.

"Art. 1308. The jury may, after having retired, ask further instruction of the court touching any matter of law. For this purpose they shall appear before the judge in open court in a body, and, through their foreman, state to the court, either verbally or in writing, the particular question of law upon which they desire further instruction, and the court shall give such instruction in writing; but no instruction shall be given except upon the particular question on which it is asked."

It is thus seen that the statutes very carefully provide the manner in which the court shall confer with the jury, and that he shall give no instructions, or confer with them in any manner, except in open court. The obvious purpose of this is that counsel may be present and see that the conference is proper, and, if not, may take a bill of exception to the action of the court. It seems to us, therefore, that it is error for the judge to confer with the jury in any other manner than that prescribed by law, and that, if he does, his judgment on that account ought to be reversed.

In numerous cases from other jurisdictions it is held that the private conversation of the judge and the jury is not only improper, but that it is misconduct for which the judgment will be reversed, without reference to the question whether such misconduct affected the verdict. Sargent v. Roberts, 1 Pick. 337, 11 Am. Dec. 185; Read 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Cambridge, 124 Mass. 567, 26 Am. Rep. 690; Watertown Bank & Loan Co. v. Mix, 51 N. Y. 558; Fish v. Smith, 12 Ind. 563; Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 23 Ill. 349, 76 Am. Dec. 694; Moody v. Pomeroy, 4 Denio, 115; Kirk v. State, 14 Ohio, 511; Bunn v. Croul, 10 Johns. 239; State v. Smith, 6 R. I. 33. In speaking for the court in the case first cited above Chief Justice Parker says: "The communication in question in this case was made upon the ground of this practice, which had been so common here as to pass without notice. The object of the note of the foreman was probably to obtain leave for the jury to separate, and the answer of the judge was calculated to enable them to revise the case in a systematic manner, in the hope that such a revision would produce a union of opinion on one side or other of the cause. It probably had that effect. As it is impossible, we think, to complain of the substance of the communication, the only question is whether any communication at all is proper; and, if it was not, the party against whom the verdict was is entitled to a new trial. And we are all of opinion, after considering the question maturely, that no communication whatever ought to take place between the judge and the jury, after the cause has been committed to them by the charge of the judge, unless in open court, and, where practicable, in presence of the counsel in the cause. The oath administered to the officer seems to indicate this as the proper course: 'He is to suffer no person to speak to them, nor to speak to them himself unless to ask them whether they are agreed;' and he is not to suffer them to separate until they are agreed, unless by order of court. When the court is adjourned, the judge carries no power with him to his lodgings, and has no more authority over the jury than any other person; and any direction to them from him, either verbal or in writing, is improper. It is not sufficient to say that this power is in hands highly responsible for the proper exercise of it. The only sure way to prevent all jealousies and suspicions is to consider the judge as having no control whatever over the case, except in open court, in presence of the parties and their counsel. The public interest requires that litigating parties should have nothing to complain of or suspect in the administration of justice, and the convenience of jurors is of small consideration compared with this great object. If, by reason of the long intervals between the sessions of the court, jurors here are subjected to inconveniences, which do not exist elsewhere, this must be remedied by holding two sessions a day instead of one. It is better that everybody should suffer inconvenience than that a practice should be continued which is capable of abuse, or at least of being the ground of uneasiness and jealousy." It is but just to the learned judge before whom the case was tried to say that his conduct in the matter involved no moral delinquency on his part, nor, so far as we can see, did it in any way affect the verdict of the jury.

We approve the remarks just quoted, and we think they are supported by the overwhelming weight of authority. In the view we take of the case it is not necessary that we should pass upon the assignment; but we consider the question of such importance as to make a ruling upon it appropriate.

But there is another assignment, the determination of which is, in our judgment, fatal to the plaintiff's case, and that is the refusal of the court to grant a request for an instruction for the defendant. The facts of the case show that the plaintiff, while walking over the bridge of the defendant, which was 195 to 200 feet in length, discovered a train approaching, and, in order to escape being struck thereby, attempted to jump off the bridge, and in doing so was injured. There is evidence tending to show that the bridge in question was generally used by persons while walking along the track, so that it might be deemed that they had a license to use the track for the purpose of a foot passage; but, as was said by Associate Justice Williams, speaking for the court in the case of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 100 Tex. 63, 68, 93 S. W. 1068: "An implied permission, such as is claimed, to use a railroad track as a footpath, may relieve the person enjoying it of the imputation of being a trespasser, but it does not relieve the place of its inherent dangers, nor exempt the traveler from the duty to act with ordinary prudence. When he voluntarily chooses the dangerous pathway, instead of a safe one beside it, we can see no escape from the conclusion that he is guilty of negligence, if there be no justifying or excusing circumstances. This is in accordance with what is said in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hall, 72 Ill. 222: "It is negligence for a person to walk upon the track of a railroad, whether laid in the street or upon the open field; and he who deliberately does so will be presumed to assume the risk of the perils he may encounter. The crossing of a track of a railroad is a different thing. The one is unavoidable, but in the other case he voluntarily assumes to walk amid dangers constantly imminent. It is sought, in this case, to justify the conduct of appellee in traveling upon the track of the railroad by the fact there were no good walks elsewhere on that street for persons on foot, nor had the street, outside the roadbed, been graded to accommodate the travel. This was no fault of the [railroad] company. It was not its duty to grade the street. The street is 80 feet wide, and, if graded, might be used with safety, as ordinary streets, notwithstanding the railroad is laid in it. But there was a path between the tracks and one at the side, which appellee could have used without the least danger. The side path was not so easy to walk upon as that between the rails, but that fact did not justify appellee in taking the dangerous path. He was familiar with the dangers to which he was exposed, and we must conclude he voluntarily assumed the hazard. He could have avoided all danger by a little inconvenience, but he did not choose to do it. The injury received must therefore be attributed to his want of ordinary care." Irion v. Saginaw, 120 Mich. 295, 79 N. W. 572; Smith v. New Castle, 178 Pa. 298, 35 Atl. 973; Kenna v. Central P. R. Co. 101 Cal. 26, 35 Pac. 332; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schwindt, 67 Kan. 8, 72 Pac. 573. In the case of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gasscamp, 69 Tex. 545, 7 S. W. 227, it was held that a party who was crossing a defective bridge over the company's track in a public highway was injured, and was not guilty of negligence because there was a safer way which he might have taken. This was upon the ground that, under the circumstances of that case, a prudent man might have taken the way plaintiff had adopted without being guilty of contributory negligence; but in that case it is clear the bridge was upon the public road, and the plaintiff had the right to cross there. He had not simply a permission or license to cross, but an absolute right to use it; it being in the public highway. In Thompson on Negligence it is said: "If the traveler upon a highway has a choice of two ways, one of which is safe and the other unsafe; and if he knowingly chooses the one which is unsafe, without any necessity for so doing,—he is deemed to take upon himself the risks of his foolhardy act; and, if he is injured in consequence of it, he cannot recover damages from the municipality." Thomp. Neg. § 6247.

It is apparent from plaintiff's own testimony that there were other ways of going to his destination by which the crossing of the bridge might have been avoided; and, he having selected a way he knew to be dangerous, his conduct must be considered negligence on his part. Giving all the effect of implied license to use the bridge as is claimed for it in this case, it could hardly be said that it implied a license to use the structure to the obstruction of the defendant's business. Persons found on the track of the road would necessarily interfere with the free use of its track by the defendant company, for if his peril was discovered, the company would be compelled, in order to avoid injuring him, to stop its train in toto until he had placed himself in a place of safety. We think that the doctrine upon which the license of the railroad company is implied by the use which persons put to it by using it as a footpath has been pushed far enough in this state, and we are not inclined to let it go any further. We are clearly of the opinion that the defendant was guilty of contributory negligence in going upon the trestle where he was in danger of being struck by a train or being forced to jump and injure himself, and that, therefore, the judgment should be reversed, and judgment here rendered for the defendant company.

We deem it unnecessary to pass upon the other assignments in the case.

Petition for rehearing denied.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Appt.,
v.

CHARLES HERALD, Resp't.

(47 Wash. 538, 92 Pac. 376.)

Sunday amusements — forbidding — property rights.

A statute providing for the punishment of any person who shall keep open any playhouse or theater on Sunday does not apply to the opening of such place for religious and other quiet, legitimate, and orderly exercises, and, therefore, unconstitutionally interfere with property rights of the owner as forbidding legitimate use of his property on that day.

(November 13, 1907.)

APPEAL by the State from an order of the Superior Court for Pierce County sustaining a demurrer to an information charging the violation of the Sunday law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. G. Rowland and Robert M. Davis for appellant.

Messrs. McBride, Stratton, & Dalton and Ellis & Fletcher, for respondent.

Root, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Respondent was informed against by the prosecuting attorney of Pierce county by an information charging him with having violated § 7250, Ballinger's Anno. Codes &

Note. — Keeping theater open on Sunday as a violation of Sunday laws, see case note to Topeka v. Crawford, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1157.

20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Statutes (§ 1886, Pierce's Code), which reads as follows: "Any person who shall keep open any playhouse or theater, race ground, cock pit, or play at any game of chance for gain, or engage in any noisy amusements, or keep open any drinking or billiard saloon, or sell or dispose of any intoxicating liquors as a beverage, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not less than $30, nor more than $250. All fines collected for violation of this section shall be paid into the common school fund." A demurrer was interposed to the information, and sustained by the trial court, upon the ground that the statute was unconstitutional as being in conflict with § 12, art. 1, of the state Constitution, and § 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

It is urged by respondent that this statute prevents the opening of a theater building for any purpose whatever on Sunday; that the opening of such theater building for church, Sunday school, ordinary lecture, memorial service, or other legitimate, quiet, and proper service, would be invalid as much as if opened for the purposes of giving a theatrical play or dramatic performance; that the attempt to prevent such a building from being opened for such religious or other orderly and quiet exercises is an infringement of the rights of the individual and is consequently in contravention of the constitutional guaranties above referred to. The question depends upon the construction to be given the statute. If it be given a narrow, technical construction, respondent's position may be upheld. But, if it be given what we regard as a reasonable and a common-sense interpretation, to wit, that a theater building or playhouse should not be opened for theatrical plays or dramatic performances upon Sunday, then it is not open to the objections urged. We think it is perfectly apparent that the legislature intended by this statute to prevent the opening of theaters and playhouses on Sunday for the giving of such plays and performances, and that it had no intention of forbidding them to be opened for religious or other quiet, legitimate, and orderly exercises.

The judgment of the honorable Superior Court is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Fullerton, Rudkin, Mount, and Dunbar, JJ., concur. Hadley, Ch. J., and Crow, J., did not sit.

Petition for rehearing denied.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

ALBERT E. TILLS, Respt.,
v.
GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(50 Wash. 538, 97 Pac. 737.)

Master — vice principal — section foreman.

1. A section foreman on a railroad, having direction of the movement of a hand car used by the men, is a vice principal in having the car propelled at a reckless speed on down grade in the face of an approaching train of which he has knowledge, and suddenly applying the brake without warning when the train comes into view, so as to throw a section man from the car to his injury.

Case Note. — Section foreman as a fellow servant of the members of the crew with respect to operation of hand car.

This note is intended to be confined to cases which involve the question presented by the title; but a few cases, not involving the relationship of a section foreman to the members of the gang, have been included for the purpose of illustrating the general rule which has been followed by other cases in the same jurisdiction which are within the scope of the title. The subject will be treated from a practical standpoint rather than from a theoretical,—that is, cases in which a member of a section gang has been injured by the negligence of the foreman will be included although they merely pass upon the liability of the master for the negligence of the foreman, and there is no discussion of the theoretical question whether the foreman is a vice principal, or a fellow servant.

Cases arising under statutes which expressly provide that section bosses are not to be considered fellow servants of the members of the gang have been excluded from this note, as also have been cases which have arisen under the statutes permitting a recovery by an employee of a railroad, injured in the operation of cars by reason of the negligence of other employees, regardless of whether or not they are fellow servants.

Upon the general question of vice principalship as determined with reference to the character of the act which caused the injury, see note to Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L.R.A. 1.

Upon the general question of vice principalship considered with reference to the superior rank of a negligent servant, see note to Stevens v. Chamberlin, 51 L.R.A. 513.

As is stated in TILLS v. GREAT NORTHERN R. Co., a sharp conflict of authority exists upon this question. Not only do different courts adopt different tests to determine the relationship existing between the foreman and the members of his crew, but the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Damages — personal injuries — excessive amount.

2. The reviewing court will not interfere with a verdict of $20,000 damages for personal injuries to a man in good health, forty-three years old, earning $2.25 per day, which dislocated a vertebra, paralyzing him from his hips down, in which condition he may reasonably expect to live out his natural expectation of life, suffering intense pain, requiring the constant attendance of a nurse, and frequent services of a physician.

(October 14, 1908.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries al-courts frequently differ in their conclusions, even when applying the same test to similar states of facts.

The cases may be roughly classified into two groups accordingly as they have adopted or rejected certain well-defined and established doctrines: First, cases which hold that the question whether a delinquent servant was a vice principal or a fellow servant of the injured employee is determinable by the character of the act producing the injury; second, cases which adopt the "superior-servant doctrine," and hold that all superior servants are vice principals as to those who are subject to their orders. Frequently the result is the same, regardless of the theory adopted, and it is difficult definitely to determine to which class a case belongs, as the courts frequently fail to refer the decision to one doctrine rather than to the other, where both lead to the same ultimate result. While, under the last rule, the character of the employee is definitely fixed, it will be noted that, under the first rule, a foreman may at one moment be a fellow servant of his crew, while at the next he may be a vice principal.

Doctrine that vice principalship is determined by nature of act.

Although possibly it would not be quite correct to say that this doctrine is supported by the weight of authority, yet it is adhered to by many well-considered decisions rendered in courts of the highest character. The doctrine as applied to the question under discussion is based upon the theory that the acts performed by a foreman are of two kinds; acts which the master is required to perform for the servant, and acts which the servants owe to the master. Some of the phases of this doctrine are well illustrated in Daves v. Southern Pacific Co. 98 Cal. 19, 35 Am. St. Rep. 133, 32 Pac. 708, where it was held that a railroad company was not liable for the negligent act of a section foreman in leaving a switch open after a hand car had been run upon it, thus permitting a train to run upon the leged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. C. Saunders and James B. Howe, with Mr. L. C. Gilman, for appellant:

It was not a part of the master's duty to apply the brake, and the foreman in so doing was not acting as a vice principal, but as a fellow servant.

Gann v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 101 Tenn. 380, 70 Am. St. Rep. 687, 47 S. W. 493; Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 Ind. 321, 30 N. E. 303; Daves v. Southern Pacific Co. 98 Cal. 19, 35 Am. St. Rep. 133, 32 Pac. 708; Hammond v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 83 Mich. 334, 47 N. W. 965; Olson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 117, 35 N. W. 866; Brunell v. Southern switch, demolish the hand car, and kill the plaintiff's intestate, who was at work on the car. A section of the Code provided that an employer was not bound to indemnify his employees for losses in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business, nor in consequence of the negligence of a coemployee, unless the master had neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employee. The court held that the relationship of the foreman towards his employer and towards the other employees was to be determined in connection with the character of the particular act itself by which the accident was caused, and was not to be determined from the grade or rank of the section foreman. The court said: "If the act was one which it was the duty of the employer to perform towards its servants, and one of them negligently performed it to the injury of another servant in the same common employment, then the offending servant, in the performance of such duty, acted as the representative or agent of his employer, for which the employer is responsible; if it was not, then they were fellow servants, and the offending servant is alone responsible. . . . It is the duty of the master to provide a suitable switch and competent servants for its operation; when he has done this, his duty is at an end and his liability ceases. The keeping of it in position and its use and operation is a duty belonging to the servant, the negligent performance of which, to the injury of another servant employed in the same general business, is a risk which the injured servant assumed when he took the employment, and for which the master is not liable. It is not denied that Bresnahan was a competent and experienced foreman, so that there was no neglect of duty by the master with respect to his selection. But the negligent act complained of was performed by him in the course of the work upon which they were all engaged, and by one who, so far as the particular act was concerned, was clearly not the agent of the master, but the fellow servant of Daves."

Pacific Co. 34 Or. 256, 56 Pac. 129; 3 Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. § 1319; Sroufe v. Moran Bros. Co. 28 Wash. 381, 58 L.R.A. 313, 92 Am. St. Rep. 847, 68 Pac. 896; Spancake v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 148 Pa. 184, 33 Am. St. Rep. 821, 23 Atl. 1006; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Goltz, 71 Ill. App. 414; Sayward v. Carlson, 1 Wash. 29, 23 Pac. 830; Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521; Grimm v. Olympia Light & P. Co. 42 Wash. 119, 84 Pac. 635; Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 501, 501a; Donnelly v. Cudahy Packing Co. 68 Kan. 653, 75 Pac. 1017; Brown v. French, 104 Pa. 604.

The judgment recovered is so excessive that it ought not to be permitted to stand.

Walker v. McNeill, 17 Wash. 582, 50 Pac. 518; Williams v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. 42 Wash. 597, 84 Pac. 1129.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In a number of cases, in which the facts were similar to those in TILLS v. GREAT NORTHERN R. CO., the court adhered to this doctrine, but with conflicting results as to liability of the master.

Thus, in Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843, it was held that the boss of a small gang of men engaged in making repairs upon a railroad was a fellow servant of a member of the gang, and not a superintendent of a separate department or branch of the business, so as to render the master liable for his negligence in suddenly applying the brake to a hand car upon which the members of the gang were riding, in consequence of which negligent act the plaintiff was thrown off the car and was run over by a second car which was closely following; and the fact that the boss did not actually handle a pick or shovel did not change the rule. The court, in holding that mere superiority of position and the power to give orders to subordinates did not make an employee a vice principal, said: "When the business of the master or employer is of such great and diversified extent that it naturally and necessarily separates itself into departments of service, the individuals placed by the master in charge of these separate branches and departments of service, and given entire and absolute control therein, may properly be considered, with respect to employees under them, vice principals and representatives of the master as fully and as completely as if the entire business of the master were placed by him under one superintendent." The court, after stating that the master as such owed the servant the duty to furnish a reasonably safe place to work, reasonably safe tools with which to work, and proper diligence to employ reasonably competent servants, said: "If, instead of personally performing these obligations, the master engages another to do them for him, he is liable for the neglect of that other, which, in such case, is not the neglect of a fellow servant, no matter what his position as to other matters, but

Mr. Arthur C. Dresbach, for respondent:

The management, direction, and control being intrusted to the section foreman with power to employ men and direct their movements, he was, for that purpose, the superior and the vice principal of the defendant.

McDonough v. Great Northern R. Co. 15 Wash. 244, 46 Pac. 334; Howe v. Northern P. R. Co. 30 Wash. 569, 60 L.R.A. 949, 70 Pac. 1100; Tham v. J. T. Steeb Shipping Co. 39 Wash. 271, 81 Pac. 711; Woods v. Globe Nav. Co. 40 Wash. 376, 82 Pac. 401; Nelson v. S. Willey S. S. & Nav. Co. 26 Wash. 548, 67 Pac. 237; Bateman v. Peninsular R. Co. 20 Wash. 133, 54 Pac. 996; Allend v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. 21 Wash. 324, 58 Pac. 244; Jancko v. West Coast Mfg. & Invest. Co. 40 Wash. 230, 82 Pac. 281; Morrison v. Northern P. R. Co. 34 Wash. 70, 74 Pac. 1064; Comrade v. Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co. 44 Wash. 470, 87 Pac. 517; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Josey, 110 Ky. 342, 54 L.R.A. 78, 96 Am. St. Rep. 455, 61 S. W. 703; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Peters, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 78, 25 S. W. 1078; Warren v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 113 Mo. App. 498, 87 S. W. 585; Taylor v. Georgia Marble Co. 99 Ga. 512, 59 Am. St. Rep. 238, 27 S. E. 768; Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 124, 6 L.R.A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Driscoll, 12 Colo. 520, 13 Am. St. Rep. 243, 21 Pac. 708; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Euton, 194 Ill. 441, 88 Am. St. Rep. 161, 62 N. E. 784; Haworth v. Kansas City is the neglect of the master to do those things which it is the duty of the master to perform as such."

So, in Thacker v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 159 Ind. 82, 59 L.R.A. 792, 64 N. E. 605, it was held that a railroad section hand thrown from a hand car by the application of the brakes by a brakeman, without warning, on the signal of the foreman, cannot hold the railroad company liable for the resulting injuries, under a statute making an employer liable for injuries caused by negligence of a fellow servant who at the time is acting in the place and performing the duty of the employer in that behalf, the person injured conforming at the time of the injury to the order of some superior having authority to direct. The statute was declared to be merely declaratory of the common law.

And in Gann v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 101 Tenn. 380, 70 Am. St. Rep. 687, 47 S. W. 493, it was held that, if a foreman undertakes to do the work of a section hand, and put himself in the place to do the work of such a hand, as, for instance, to apply a brake while riding on a hand car, he becomes a fellow servant as to that particular work; and his negligence in such case is that of a fellow servant, and not that of a vice principal. The court said: "An individual may act in a dual capacity, not, it is true, at the same moment and in the same act, but he may, while generally acting as vice principal and standing in the place of a master, lay aside that character and authority, and occupy, for the time being, the place and do the work of a fellow servant; and while thus engaged in the particular act he is, in the eye of the law, a fellow servant, and the principal is not responsible for his negligence."

But in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Josey, 110 Ky. 342, 54 L.R.A. 78, 96 Am. St. Rep. 455, 61 S. W. 703, the Gann Case was criticized, and it was held that a section foreman in charge of a crew on a hand car, with power to determine where the car should be stopped, is not, in the act of applying the brakes, a fellow servant of one of the crew, so as to relieve the railroad company from liability for injuries to the latter by his negligent application of the brakes. The court said: "Counsel for appellant urge in argument that, when a superior is engaged with an inferior servant in performing services ordinarily performed by the latter, he becomes a fellow servant, and the master is not liable for his negligence; that the same person may, in some things, be a superior, and in others a fellow servant, and in the latter event the master is not liable for injuries caused by his negligence. If the principle contended for by counsel is conceded to be correct, still it has no application to this case. The section foreman, Gayle, directed the movements of his force. He determined when the car should be placed upon the track and the place where it should be stopped. His duty placed him on the car, where he was when this accident occurred; and, furthermore, it was his duty to manage and control the brakes. He was not performing the duty of one of the section men in manipulating the brakes on the car, thus controlling its movements, but was performing the duty imposed upon him by reason of the fact that he was foreman of the crew, directing and controlling their movements, as well as the car. He controlled the brakes on that car as an engineer upon a locomotive engine does the air brakes upon a train. While it is not done by steam, as in the former case, he supplied the force which applied the brakes to the wheels of the car."

And this doctrine is clearly expressed in a number of cases in which it is held that a section foreman while engaged in riding on a hand car is a fellow servant of the members of the crew.

Thus, in Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 Ind. 321, 30 N. E. 303, it was held that a section boss and the crew, while moving a hand car and their tools to and from the locality at which they worked, were in the discharge of a duty which they owed the master, and were therefore fellow servants. The court held that the inquiry whether two persons were or were not fellow servants at a certain period of time was not a question of rank, and said: "The question as to whether the relation of fellow servants exists in a given case is, in our opinion, determined by an inquiry into the nature of the service at the particular time in question. If, at the time the offending servant performed the act by which another servant was injured, he was in the performance of a duty which the master owed to his servants, he was not a fellow servant, for the rule is fundamental that the master cannot rid himself of the duty he owes to his servants by delegating his authority to another, and, if he attempts to do so, the person to whom he delegates the power to act is a vice principal, and not a fellow servant. . . . On the other hand, if at the time of the alleged negligence the servant was not engaged in the performance of a duty which the master owed to his servants, but was in the discharge of a duty which the servant acting owed to the master, he will be held to be a fellow servant with others engaged in the same common business, and the master will not be liable for any injury inflicted upon such fellow servant by reason of his negligence."

Southern R. Co. 94 Mo. App. 215, 68 S.-W. 111; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Ryland, 50 Fla. 190, 40 So. 24; Kenney v. Central R. Co. 61 Ga. 590; Western & A. R. Co. v. Bryant, 123 Ga. 77, 51 S. E. 20; Brabbitts v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 38 Wis. 289; Mast v. Kern, 34 Or. 247, 75 Am. St. Rep. 580, 54 Pac. 950; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Fine, 163 Ind. 617, 72 N. E. 589; Thacker v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 159 Ind. 82, 59 L.R.A. 792, 64 N. E. 605; Wallin v. Eastern R. Co. 83 Minn. 149, 54 L.R.A. 481, 86 N. W. 76; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Kimmel, 221 Ill. 547, 77 N. E. 936.

When a superintendent, without the knowledge of the workman, negligently sets in operation an agency fraught with danger,

And in Clarke v. Pennsylvania Co. 132 Ind. 199, 17 L.R.A. 811, 31 N. E. 808, it was held that the common master is not liable for injuries inflicted upon a member of a section gang in consequence of the negligent use of a hand car by the boss of another section gang, as the difference in rank or power does not destroy the relationship of those in the service of a common master as coemployees, and the character of the work engaged in did not make the negligent boss a vice principal.

And in Ohio River & C. R. Co. v. Edwards, 111 Tenn. 31, 76 S. W. 897, it was held that a subboss or subforeman who had been directed by the boss to take three men and proceed a short distance up the track and return with a lever car and some tools was not, while so engaged, a vice principal. The true test was declared to be that a servant, in order to be a vice principal, must so stand in the place of his master as to be charged in the particular matter with the performance of a duty towards the inferior servant, which, under the law, the master he thereby renders the company liable for the result of such negligence.

Creamer v. Moran Bros. Co. 41 Wash. 636, 84 Pac. 592; Nelson v. S. Willey S. S. & Nav. Co. supra; Dosssett v. St. Paul & T. Lumber Co. 40 Wash. 276, 82 Pac. 273; O'Brien v. Page Lumber Co. 39 Wash. 537, 82 Pac. 114; Misouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Smith, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 332, 72 S. W. 418; Consolidated Kansas City Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Peterson, 8 Kan. App. 316, 55 Pac. 673; Haworth v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. supra; Hollweg v. Bell Teleph. Co. 195 Mo. 149, 93 S. W. 262; Comrade v. Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co. and Illinois C. R. Co. v. Josey, supra.

The duty of the foreman while in charge owes to that servant, such as furnishing safe tools and appliances or giving orders to subordinates. In applying this test to the facts of the case, the court said: "It is not shown that the master had placed any of its servants under him, and conferred upon him authority to direct when, where, and how they were to work, or that there had been imposed upon him by the master the duty of furnishing tools or machinery, or the performance of any other duty towards such servants which, under the law, the master owed to such servants. It is not even shown in the testimony what were the duties of the main foreman, whose authority the subforeman was supposed to exercise in the absence of the former. The question is to be determined in every case, not by words and names, but by the nature and extent of the powers conferred by the master, and accepted and exercised by the superior servant."

And a section foreman while riding home from his work on a hand car was held, in Olson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 117, 35 N. W. 866, to be a fellow servant of the members of the gang, and, for his acts or omissions while in the discharge of his duties in the course of such employment, the defendant railroad company was not liable.

And, upon the principles enunciated in Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843, cited supra, it was held in Northern P. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 40 L. ed. 999, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 848, that the negligence of the section boss or foreman in running a hand car at too high a rate of speed while carrying his gang of men is not the neglect of any duty which the master is bound to perform, but is that of a fellow servant of the members of the gang.

So, in Sartin v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 27 Utah, 447, 76 Pac. 219, where a section hand was injured by the negligence of a foreman in running hand cars too close together, the Peterson Case was cited with approval, and followed.

So, in Martin v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 166 U. S. 399, 41 L. ed. 1051, 17 Sup.

of the hand car was to control the appliance provided him for operation of same.

Eidner v. Three Lakes Lumber Co. 45 Wash. 323, 88 Pac. 326; O'Brien v. Page Lumber Co. 39 Wash. 546, 82 Pac. 114; King v. Griffiths-Sprague Stevedoring Co. 45 Wash. 425, 88 Pac. 759; Mullin v. Northern P. R. Co. 38 Wash. 550, 80 Pac. 814; Jancko v. West Coast Mfg. & Invest. Co. 34 Wash. 556, 78 Pac. 78; Sandquist v. Independent Teleph. Co. 38 Wash. 313, 80 Pac. 539; McDonough v. Great Northern R. Co. supra; D'Agostino v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 72 N. J. L. 358, 60 Atl. 1113; Jemnienski v. Lobdell Car Wheel Co. 5 Penn. (Del.) 385, 63 Atl. 935; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Pope, 98 Tex. 535, 86 S. W. 5; Comrade v. Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co. supra.

Ct. Rep. 603, affirming 7 N. M. 158, 34 Pac. 536, it was held that the orders of a section foreman to a laborer who is with him on a hand car that he shall not look back to watch for a train, and assurance that the foreman himself will watch and give warning of any danger, does not make the master liable for an injury to the laborer resulting from negligence of the foreman in failing to watch for a train.

And to the same effect was Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Waters, 16 C. C. A. 609, 36 U. S. App. 31, 70 Fed. 28, which was decided upon the authority of the United States Supreme Court decisions.

And in Chandler v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 127 Mo. App. 34, 106 S. W. 553, it was held that the Federal rule was applicable to a case arising in Indian territory, although that rule was different from the one prevailing in Missouri.

And in Hastings v. Montana Union R. Co. 18 Mont. 493, 46 Pac. 264, it was held that a section hand who was injured while obeying the order of the section foreman in removing the hand car from the track by being struck by a switch engine, was a fellow servant of the foreman, although the latter had the power to employ and discharge the members of the gang and superintend their work. The court cited with approval the decisions in the United States Supreme Court cases which have been cited above.

The duty of properly placing signal flags to warn approaching trains of the locality of a hand car was held in Whittlesey v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 77 Conn. 100, 107 Am. St. Rep. 21, 58 Atl. 459, to be the duty of the servants of the company, and consequently it was not liable for injuries to a section hand caused by the negligence of the foreman in failing so to place the flags. The court said: "The defendant provided a suitable hand car, properly equipped with signal flags and a sufficient number of competent men for the proper performance of the work. Having done this, it was not required to see that the flag was used when necessary. That was the duty of the servants, the negligent failure of Dwyer 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the computation of damages plaintiff was entitled to include wages, suffering of pain in the past and future, expenditure because of such injuries during the past and the future, and deformity in consequence.

Cole v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 42 Wash. 462, 85 Pac. 3; McDonough v. Great Northern R. Co. supra; Morrison v. Northern P. R. Co. 34 Wash. 70, 74 Pac. 1064; Melse v. Alaska Commercial Co. 42 Wash. 356, 84 Pac. 1127; Walker v. McNeill, 17 Wash. 582, 50 Pac. 518.

Crow, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced by Albert E. Tills against the defendant, Great Northern Railway Company, to recover damages for

[the foreman] to perform which was the negligence of a fellow servant of Sullivan [the plaintiff's intestate], for the consequences of which the defendant is not liable."

In some cases it has been held that in giving orders to men, or in hiring or discharging them, a section foreman is acting for the master, and is not a fellow servant.

Thus, in Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. supra, it was held whether the relationship of fellow servant exists in a given case depends on the nature of the service being performed at the particular time. The court said: "That a section foreman may be a vice principal is not doubted. In this case he was a vice principal in the matter of hiring and discharging hands, for the master owes it as a duty to exercise reasonable care not to employ any but careful men, and to discharge those who prove to be negligent. In the hiring and discharging of the men he was in the performance, therefore, of a duty which the master owed to his servants, and was, while so engaged, a vice principal."

And in Logan v. North Carolina R. Co. 116 N. C. 940, 21 S. E. 959, it was held that a section boss, who had full power and authority to hire and discharge hands, and whose orders and commands the plaintiff, who was a section hand, was bound to obey, was not to be deemed a fellow servant of the plaintiff, when, by his failure to stop a hand car on time, and by his carelessness in directing the manner of its removal from the track in front of an approaching train, he caused the plaintiff to be injured. And this decision was followed in Johnson v. Southern R. Co. 122 N. C. 955, 29 S. E. 784, where it was said that, while in the broad and catholic meaning of the word a section boss and a section hand were fellow servants, still the boss was the vice principal of the plaintiff, and the defendant was liable for his negligence. And to the same general effect was the decision in Allison v. Southern R. Co. 129 N. C. 336, 40 S. E. 91.

So, in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Litz, 18 Ohio C. C. 646, it was held that the section foreman in charge of the men was the responsible representative of the railway company.

personal injuries. From a judgment in his favor, the defendant has appealed.

The cause was submitted upon evidence offered by the respondent, the arguments of his counsel, and the instructions of the court. The undisputed evidence shows that, a short time prior to the date on which the accident occurred, the respondent was employed by one Ward, a section foreman, to work for appellant as a section hand; that from Index, Washington, west to the place where the accident occurred, appellant's railway track, with a descending grade, followed the right bank of the Skykomish river, a mountain stream; that curves, bluffs, and timber concealed approaching trains; that respondent and other section hands under Ward's direction loaded a hand car with crowbars, jackscrews, shovels, and other tools, and, with Ward in charge, started westward thereon down grade; that respondent, standing between two section men, was riding backwards, while Ward, with two other section hands, stood facing him; that respondent stood with one foot on the car platform and the other upon a jackscrew; that all the men, including Ward, were propelling the car by using a handle bar provided for that purpose; that Ward, expecting to meet a freight train coming from the west, was anxious to reach his destination before its arrival; that he therefore caused the men to propel the car at a speed of 17 miles per hour, repeatedly giving the order, "Up and down," thereby directing its movements; that, on rounding a sharp

And in Couch v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 22 S. C. 557, it was held that a foreman in charge of a gang of men might be a vice principal while directing the movements of a push car; but, upon the facts of the case, it was held that the foreman did not fail in any duty which he owed to the plaintiff. The court said: "The true test is whether the person in question is employed to do any of the duties of the master: if so, then he cannot be regarded as a fellow servant or co-laborer with the operatives, but is the representative of the master; and any negligence on his part in the performance of the duty of the master, thus delegated to him, must be regarded as the negligence of the master."

So, in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Atwell, 198 Ill. 200, 64 N. E. 1095, it was held that, although a section foreman and one of the hands are fellow servants in many respects, yet, as to the exercise of authority one over the other, they are not fellow servants; and a railroad company is liable for injuries to a section hand while attempting to obey an improper command of the foreman to remove a car from the track in front of an approaching train.

Under this doctrine, also, the railroad has been held liable for the negligence of a foreman in failing to provide a safe car, as it was the master's duty to furnish the members of a crew a safe place to work.

Thus, in Ward v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1326, 65 S. W. 2, it was held to be the duty of a section foreman to inspect the hand car and see that it was safe; and, if he failed in this regard, and one of the crew was injured while riding on it because of its unsafe condition, the company would be liable for the injury. And to the same general effect was the decision in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Leisure, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 768, 90 S. W. 269.

And in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit, 6 Ind. Terr. 534, 98 S. W. 341, the court applied the following rule from Thompson, Neg. ¶ 4445, which exactly met the facts of the case: "Under the principles of this chapter, if a railway company fails to exercise reasonable care and skill in providing and maintaining hand cars which are reasonably safe and free from dangerous defects, in consequence of which failure of duty to their employees, required to use such cars, are injured, they will be liable to them in damages; nor will the fact that the section foreman in charge of the hand car, whose duty it was to keep it in repair, was a fellow servant of the servant sustaining the injury, avert the liability of the company, since the proper inspection and reparation of such cars is one of the absolute duties which the law puts upon the master in favor of his servants."

In a few cases the language would seem to indicate that the court considered that, under no circumstances, could a section foreman be held to be a vice principal; or at least the court does not discuss the question whether the liability of the railroad is determinable by the nature of the act of the negligent foreman.

Thus in Barringer v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 19 Hun, 216, the section boss, Brown, had charge of and was responsible for the tools and machinery used, hired the men, and, if machinery gave out or was defective, he was ordered to take it to the shop and have it repaired. He failed to give notice to the track master, as he was required to do, of a defect in the hand car through which the plaintiff, a section hand, was injured. The court, in holding that the railroad company was not liable, said: "Under such a state of facts, we think that the learned judge erred in holding that Brown represented the defendant and stood in its place. Brown was an employee just as plaintiff was. They were in the same circle of employment; they worked together for a common purpose. Each knew his relations to the other when the employment began, and each took the risks attending the same. The negligence of either was one of these risks. That Brown was foreman, and directed the action or hired the others, does not change the rule. Perhaps the track master did represent the defendant. We are not called upon to decide that. Possibly no one below the superintendent stood in the place of the defendant in respect to the mat-curve, Ward saw the approaching freight train, and placed his foot upon the brake so suddenly as to instantly check the car, without any warning to respondent or the other men; that at the same instant he called out, "The freight!" and that, by reason of the sudden stop, the respondent, taken unawares, was thrown to the ground in front of the car, which ran over and severely injured him.

The appellant has based numerous assignments of error upon instructions given and refused. It is unnecessary to state these instructions, as appellant's controlling contention is that the act of Ward which resulted in the injury to respondent was not the act of a vice principal, but the act of respondent's fellow servant, for which appellant is in no manner liable. It insists that Ward's relation to appellant and the other men was only that of a "supervising employee;" that in a portion of his duties he represented the master; that in others he acted as a collaborer with the section men; that, while in the performance of the former he was a vice principal, he was in the performance of the latter a fellow servant; and that the relation of Ward to the other employees of appellant in this case must be determined by the nature of the acts he and they performed. In substance, the appellant contends that, while aiding the section men in propelling the car, and when he himself applied the brake, Ward was their fellow servant, and not a vice principal, representing the master. In sup-ter in dispute. It is enough that two officers of a superior grade stood between Brown and the defendant, either of whom presumptively could have hired or discharged Brown at will. So Brown's position was that of an employee, and not a representative of the company."

And in Clifford v. Old Colony R. Co. 141 Mass. 564, 6 N. E. 751, it was held that the foreman of a section gang on a railroad, by whose negligence in the management of a hand car one of the section hands upon it was injured in a collision, was a fellow workman with the injured person, for whose negligent act the company was not liable.

So, in Timm v. Michigan C. R. Co. 98 Mich. 226, 57 N. W. 116, where the plaintiff, a section hand, was injured while engaged with a section boss and others of the gang in loading ties onto a hand car, it was held that a section boss and the gang were fellow servants; but there is no discussion of the question whether they are such at all times.

In Hammond v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 83 Mich. 334, 47 N. W. 965, the court, without passing upon the question whether, under all circumstances, a section boss must be considered as the fellow servant of the men working under him, so as to relieve the common employer from liability for his negligence, held that, where the sole act of negligence relied on was participated in and voluntarily consented to by the person injured, with full knowledge of the peril, the question of the master's liability does not arise.

Doctrine that vice principalship is dependent on rank.

In a number of cases falling within the scope of this note the result has been determined by application of the doctrine that any employee holding a superior position is, as to those subordinate to him, a vice principal.

Thus, in Long v. Illinois C. R. Co. 113 Ky. 806, 58 L.R.A. 237, 101 Am. St. Rep. 374. 68 S. W. 1095, it was held that it was the duty of a member of a section gang 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to obey the orders of the section foreman, and the latter represented the master. The court said: "The section foreman under whose direction he worked represented the master, and it was Long's duty to obey his orders in the usual course of business. . . . In determining whether Long should have obeyed the orders of his superior, it must be borne in mind that the crew were out on the road, and that, if Long had not obeyed, he could not have remained with the crew. . . . It was the section boss's duty to control the movements of the crew, and to do this with proper regard to their safety." And this decision was cited with approval, and followed, in Illinois C. R. Co. v. McIntosh, 118 Ky. 145; 80 S. W. 496, rehearing denied in 118 Ky. 156, 81 S. W. 270, and Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bishop, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 321, 89 S. W. 221.

And in Criswell v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 30 W. Va. 798, 6 S. E. 31, it was held that, when a railroad company puts a foreman in charge of a gang of laborers with power to discharge them subject to the approval of the supervisor, and makes it his duty to see that these laborers faithfully perform their duty, such foreman must, in the performance of all his duties to those laborers under him, be regarded as the representative of the railroad company; and if, through his neglect or duty, one of these laborers, while riding on a hand car in the performance of his duty, is injured, he may recover of the railroad company the damages he has sustained, caused by the negligence of such foreman.

And the Criswell Case was cited with approval, and followed, in Gregory v. Ohio River R. Co. 37 W. Va. 806, 16 S. E. 819.

In Petty v. Atlantic & B. Air Line R. Co. (Ga.) 63 S. E. 817, it was assumed without question that the railroad company would be liable to the section hand for injuries received on a hand car through the negligence of the foreman.

In Missouri the courts have consistently adhered to the superior-servant doctrine.

Thus, in Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588, the general rule is declared port of this contention, the appellant has cited with others the following cases from courts of other states upon which it specially relies: Gann v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 101 Tenn. 380, 70 Am. St. Rep. 687, 47 S. W. 493; Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 Ind. 321, 30 N. E. 303; Daves v. Southern Pacific Co. 98 Cal. 19, 35 Am. St. Rep. 133, 32 Pac. 708; Hammond v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 83 Mich. 334, 47 N. W. 965; Olson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 117, 35 N. W. 866. A sharp conflict of authority exists on this question; a contrary position, having been taken by other courts. In Haworth v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 94 Mo. App. 215, 224, 68 S. W. 111, 114, on a state of facts strikingly similar to those before us, the court said: "A superior or vice principal in charge of workmen does not become a coworkman whenever he actively assists in the manual performance of a task, instead of superintending it. If he chooses to take on himself the role of laborer, he may do so, but he does not thereby divest himself of his responsibility as foreman or superintendent and his duty to see that work is done in a careful way. The judgment and care which he must use as superintendent to see that precautions are taken to avoid harm to his gang continue to be exacted of him by the law, although he may have stepped down from his pedestal for an interval. Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. 112 Mo. 45, 18 L.R.A. 823, 20 S. W. 472; Dayharsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 103 Mo. 570, 23 Am. St. Rep. 900, 15 S. W. 554; to be that all are fellow servants who are engaged in the prosecution of the same common work, leaving no dependence upon or relation to each other, except as collaborators without rank, under the direction and management of the master himself, or of some servant placed by the master over them. If a person employs another to perform a duty which he would have to discharge if another were not employed to do it for him, such employee, as to that service, stands in the master's stead, with relation to other persons.

And, following this rule, it was held in McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 87 Mo. 285, that a section foreman with authority to direct and control the men under him was not their fellow servant.

So, in Haworth v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 94 Mo. App. 215, 68 S. W. 111, the court, in speaking of a section foreman through whose negligence a section hand was injured, said: "A superior or vice principal in charge of workmen does not become a coworkman whenever he actively assists in the manual performance of a task, instead of superintending it. If he chooses to take on himself the role of laborer, he may do so; but he does not thereby divest himself of his responsibility as foreman or superintendent and his duty to see that work is done in a careful way. The judgment and care which he must use as superintendent to see that precautions are taken to avoid harm to his gang continue to be exacted of him by the law, although he may have stepped down from his pedestal for an interval. . . . He was selected by the defendant company to direct the operation and movement of the car, as well as to control the other work of the hands under him. He was in fact directing them, and the company is liable for his negligent act or omission while so doing."

In Mack v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 123 Mo. App. 531, 101 S. W. 142, where a section hand was injured while riding from his work, by the sudden application of the brakes by the foreman, upon his discovery of the approach of a train which he knew was overdue but against the dangers from which he had taken no precaution, it was held that, in sending the plaintiff and his fellows out to work under the direction of a foreman, the company committed to its vice principal the performance of its duty to exercise reasonable care for his protection.

And in Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 322, 18 L.R.A. 827, 18 S. W. 1094, it was held that a foreman is not a fellow servant of a man under his orders, in respect to his performance of the master's duty of directing the work in his charge.

So, in Warren v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 113 Mo. App. 498, 87 S. W. 585, it was held that a section hand temporarily placed in charge of a hand car for the purpose of carrying a number of the hands home from their work was a vice principal; and the company was liable for injuries resulting to one of the members of the gang from his negligent acts in the running of the car.

And in Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. 112 Mo. 45, 18 L.R.A. 823, 20 S. W. 472, it was held that the railroad company was liable for the acts of a section foreman in negligently loading a hand car, which negligence caused injury to the plaintiff; the foreman was charged with the master's duty of reasonable care for the safety of the workman. And to the same general effect were the decisions in Clowers v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 21 Mo. App. 213, Banks v. Wabash Western R. Co. 40 Mo. App. 458, and Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 116 S. W. 458.

In Texas the following test as to who are fellow servants was laid down in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Williams, 75 Tex. 4, 16 Am. St. Rep. 867, 12 S. W. 835 (which was a case of a car repairer injured by the negligence of his foreman): "The employee who has charge of a special department of a company's business with power to employ and discharge the servants in his department is not to be deemed the fellow servant of those under his control. . . . A servant who has the authority to employ other servants under his immediate supervision exercises an important function of his master, and has as full control over them as the master

Steube v. Christopher & S. Architectural Iron & Foundry Co. 85 Mo. App. 646. Dyson was Haworth's superior, and the superior of all the men in his crew. He was selected by the defendant company to direct the operation and movement of the car as well as to control the other work of the hands under him. He was in fact directing them, and the company is liable for his negligent act or omission while so doing." In Berea Stone Co. v. Kraft, 31 Ohio St. 287, 292, 27 Am. Rep. 510, the supreme court of Ohio said: "The claim that Stone was a fellow servant engaged in the same service with Kraft is not supported by the proof. It is true that he was in the service of the same master, and engaged in the same general employment, but he was intrusted with duties and responsibilities of entirely a different nature, and wholly independent of those of Kraft. Occupying to the latter the relation substantially of principal, he was in no just or proper sense a fellow servant, nor engaged in what may properly be denominated a common service. The relation existing between them was such as brings the case clearly within the rule established by repeated adjudications of this court, and now firmly settled in the jurisprudence of the state, that, where one servant is placed by his employer in a position of subordination to and subject to the orders and control of another, and such inferior servant, without fault, and while in the discharge of his duties, is injured by the negligence of the superior servant, the master is liable for such injury." In Bien v. St. Louis Transit Co. 108 Mo. App. 399, 412, 83 S. W. 986, 989, the court said: "The act of Dring which resulted in Bien's injury was not an act which it was Dring's duty manually to perform, but one which it was his duty to order; that is to say, it fell within the scope of his superintendence. The exact question then is: Did performance of it by his own hand make him a fellow servant? If it is to have a logical nature, the 'dual-capacity' doctrine would seem to require that an employee who is regarded as both a fellow servant and a vice principal should have duties assigned to him in each role. The doctrine ought not to take effect on the bare incident of a superintendent, sua sponte and momentarily, putting his hand to some chore. . . . If Dring, instead of running the car out of the way would have were he present acting in person."

And in Sweeney v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 84 Tex. 433, 31 Am. St. Rep. 71, 19 S. W. 555, the rule of the Williams Case was adhered to, and the foreman of a section gang was held to be a vice principal, and not a fellow servant, of one of the section hands; and the court further held that, the relationship of vice principal being established, no distinction should be drawn between the performance of those higher duties intrusted to him specially and those of an ordinary character, which both he and the subordinate servants and employees under him were in the habit of indiscriminately performing.

So, in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wells (Tex.) 16 S. W. 1025, reversed on other grounds on rehearing in 81 Tex. 685, 17 S. W. 511, where a section hand was injured by a hand car which the foreman knew to be defective, the court, in holding that the foreman was a vice principal, said: "When a master intrusts his business to another, with power of supervision and control in a particular line of service, with a power to employ and discharge hands whose services are needful in the exercise of the duties incident to the service, it can safely be said that such person is the representative of the master, and is not a fellow servant of those under him in the service."

And the same general rule has been followed in several other Texas cases. Cane Belt R. Co. v. Crosson, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 369, 87 S. W. 867; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Arias, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 190, 30 S. W. 446; Missouri P. R. Co. v. James (Tex.) 10 S. W. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

332; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Tisdale, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 372, 87 S. W. 1063; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Puente, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 246, 70 S. W. 362; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Pina, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 680, 77 S. W. 979; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Garcia (Tex. Civ. App.) 117 S. W. 206.

Statutory provisions.

Under Alabama statutes making the master liable for injuries to a servant, caused by the negligence of another servant to whom "any superintendence" has been intrusted, there are a number of decisions which hold directly or by implication that a railroad company is liable for injuries to a member of a section gang, caused by the negligence of a section boss while operating a hand car. Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. v. Dusenberry, 98 Ala. 239, 13 So. 308; Alabama Mineral R. Co. v. Jones, 114 Ala. 519, 62 Am. St. Rep. 121, 21 So. 507, second appeal in 121 Ala. 113, 25 So. 814, third appeal in 133 Ala. 664, 31 So. 1035; Alabama Mineral R. Co. v. Marcus, 115 Ala. 389, 22 So. 135, second appeal in 128 Ala. 355, 30 So. 679; Central R. Co. v. Lamb, 124 Ala. 172, 26 So. 969; Western R. Co. v. Arnett, 137 Ala. 414, 34 So. 997.

So, also, in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Rickman, 65 Ark. 138, 45 S. W. 56, it was held that, under the statutes of that state, a foreman of a section gang is not a fellow servant of the men belonging to the gang under him, for the reason that they are under his control and direction in the performance of their duties.

himself, contrary to his duty and habit, had ordered another man to do it, the company's liability would be certain. Is it any less certain because Dring ran it; it being, as stated, a duty which properly he should have ordered instead of performing? Unquestionably not according to decisions in Missouri on identical facts." See also Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. supra; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Kimmel, 221 Ill. 547, 77 N. E. 936. It cannot be contended that Ward was not in charge of the men; that he did not control the car, its movements, and speed; that he did not determine when it should be used, when it should start, what speed it should attain, or when and where it should stop. In the performance of these necessary duties he was a vice principal. It was under his direction that the car attained a reckless and dangerous rate of speed down grade and in the face of an approaching train, of which he had knowledge. Had he ordered one of the men to suddenly stop the car, without any warning to or knowledge of the others, his act would certainly have been that of a vice principal, and not that of a fellow servant. We fail to see that he changed his relation to the appellant or respondent by personally applying the brake, instead of directing one of the men to do so. If he was not a vice principal in charge of the men and car, then they were without any vice principal in control as the representative of the master, a condition which could not be assumed to have existed and certainly ought not to have been tolerated. The former holdings of this court, made in kindred cases, are directly contrary to the position of appellant and the cases which it has cited. See McDonough v. Great Northern R. Co. 15 Wash. 244, 46 Pac. 334; Nelson v. S. Willey S. S. & Nav. Co. 26 Wash. 548, 67 Pac. 237; O'Brien v. Page Lumber Co. 39 Wash. 537, 82 Pac. 114; Woods v. Globe Nav. Co. 40 Wash. 376, 82 Pac. 401; Dossett v. St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Co. 40 Wash. 276, 82 Pac. 273; Comrade v. Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co. 44 Wash. 470, 87 Pac. 517. In the case last mentioned an engineer, without giving the usual warning, started the machinery in a sawmill while the plaintiff, a saw filer who was performing his duties, was in a dangerous position. It was contended that the negligence of the engineer was that of a fellow servant, but this court said: "It was customary for the appellant, by its engineer, to give a signal by two blasts of a steam whistle shortly before starting the mill, and in fact it was its duty to give some such warning so that its employees might remove themselves from positions of danger in which they might happen to be placed. In giving this warning the engineer was performing a nondelegable duty of the master, thus discharging the duties of its vice principal. This being true, his negligence was that of the master." Appellant also cites Grimm v. Olympia Light & P. Co. 42 Wash. 119, 84 Pac. 635, in support of its contention that Ward and the respondent were fellow servants. The facts in that case are not at all similar to those now under consideration. There two motormen were co-employees without authority the one over the other, although they were expected to consult together, while here Ward had undoubted authority, superintendence, and control over the respondent, Tills. It could not be reasonably contended that Tills had any connective or controlling influence over Ward arising out of consociation of duties. He was completely under Ward's commands, and it is not at all doubtful that any attempt on his part to assume control over Ward or give him directions would have resulted in loss of employment, a result not possible in the Grimm Case. After a careful examination of all instructions, both those requested and those refused, upon which the appellant has predicated its assignments of error, we hold that those given correctly stated the law applicable to the pleadings and evidence, and that no error was committed in the refusal of those requested.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The jury returned a verdict for $26,985 damages. Upon the hearing of appellant's motion for a new trial, the trial court required the respondent to remit $6,985 thereof, or submit to a new trial. This remission being made, final judgment was entered for $20,000. The appellant now contends that the judgment is still excessive, that it should not be permitted to stand, and that this court should now grant a new trial by reason of excessive damages awarded under the influence of passion and prejudice. The undisputed evidence shows that the respondent was forty-three years of age, in good health, earning $2.25 per day; that he was most seriously injured; that the loaded car ran over him, dislocating a vertebra; that he is paralyzed from his hips downward; that he has completely lost control of his bowels, urinary and other organs; that he has been confined to his bed since the accident, and will be during the remainder of his life; that he has sustained other injuries; that he has suffered and will continue to suffer intensely; that his condition is such as to require the constant attendance of a nurse and the frequent services of a physician; and that, although he is in this unfortunate condition, he may live the expected period for a man of his age. He is absolutely helpless, and it is difficult to understand how he could be more seriously injured and continue to live. There is no dispute of the evidence of respondent and his physician as to the nature or extent of his injuries. Bearing in mind the fact that the trial court has already made a reduction of $6,985, we do not feel justified in disturbing the judgment or holding it excessive.

Digitized by Google

The appellant has also based an assignment of error upon the refusal of the trial court to grant it a continuance upon its motion made at the opening of the trial, and supported by affidavits. We have carefully examined the motion and affidavits, but fail to find that the court abused its discretion or committed any error in this regard.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hadley, Ch. J., and Dunbar, Rudkin, and Fullerton, JJ., concur. Mount and Root, JJ., took no part.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

JONATHAN S. ELLIS, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

(— Wis. —, 119 N. W. 1110.)

Banks — insolvency — deposit — check as money.

1. If a person deposits in a bank for his credit a check, and it is presently treated between such person and such bank as money, the former obtaining credit upon which he may, at his pleasure, draw for Headnotes by MARSHALL, J.

Case Note. — When is a bank insolvent within statute making it an offense to receive further deposits.

Aside from ELLIS v. STATE and the cases therein cited, very little authority has been found on the question here annotated. and those found contrary to the ELLIS CASE seem to have adopted what is called the bankruptcy rule.

Thus, in State v. Stevens, 16 S. D. 309, 92 N. W. 420, under a statute providing for the punishment of a bank officer upon his receipt of a deposit after the bank's insolvency, it was held that the term "insolvent" means a present inability to pay depositors as banks usually do, and meet all liabilities as they become due in the ordinary course of business.

This criterion would also seem to be recognized in State v. Sattley, 131 Mo. 464, 33 S. W. 41, where it was held that, on the trial of a bank officer for receiving deposits knowing that the bank was insolvent, evidence that depositors demanded their money, and of the refusal of the bank employees to pay them, is competent to show the failure of the bank to meet its obligations in the ordinary course of business; and this is true whether the defendant personally heard the demands or not.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

money, § 4541, Stat. 1898, is satisfied, as regards a deposit of money.

Same — officer — indictment — sufficiency.

2. A charge in an indictment or information under such section, that a particular person deposited in a specified bank, for his credit, a check on another bank, and that it was received for the bank by its president, naming him, and accepted on deposit, satisfies all the essentials of such section as to an officer of a bank, in his capacity as such officer, accepting or receiving money on deposit.

Same — insolvency — deposit — officer — status.

3. In case of an officer of a bank accepting for such bank money of another to be, and which is, deposited for his credit, to be, at his pleasure, drawn on, the status of such officer, as regards § 4541 of the Statutes of 1898, is thereby fixed regardless of whether the depositor owes the bank on paper, due to and which does mature shortly so as to absorb the deposit, in part, before the bank is forced to suspend.

Same — discharging overdraft.

4. In case of a person depositing money in a bank as against an existing overdraft, so far as it goes in discharge of such indebtedness, it is not a deposit within the meaning of § 4541, Stat. 1898.

Same — receiving deposits — what constitutes.

5. The call of the statute, as regards the act constituting a criminal fraud, is a deposit such as will create a credit; the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties, or that of bailor and bailee, or that of principal and agent.

The question also came up in State v. Darrah, 152 Mo. 522, 54 S. W. 226, the court in this case approving State v. Burlingame, 146 Mo. 227, 48 S. W. 72, which was quoted, as holding, in effect, that, within a statute making it a criminal offense for an officer of a bank to receive deposits after he has knowledge of the fact that it is insolvent or in failing circumstances, a bank is in failing circumstances when, from any cause, it is unable to pay its debts in the ordinary or usual course of business; and that the fact that this condition may have been produced by a "financial panic" affords no justification or excuse for the receipt by its president of deposits knowing the bank to be in failing circumstances.

The other cases in point on this question are sufficiently set forth in the opinion in ELLIS v. STATE.

Cases defining the term "insolvency" with respect to the administration of bankruptcy and insolvency laws, and as used in civil cases, are not intended to be included within this note.

On the general question of criminal liability for receiving deposit in bank knowing of its insolvency, see subject note to Com. v. Junkin, 31 L.R.A. 124.

Evidence — reputation — financial responsibility — relevancy.

6. Evidence of the reputation of a person as regards financial standing is relevant.

Same — commercial paper — value — relevancy.

7. Evidence of the value of commercial paper, based wholly on ignorance of the witness as to whether the maker possesses any property liable to execution, is not relevant on the subject of the solvency of the maker.

Same — presumptions — rebutting.

8. "When the existence of a person, a personal relation, or state of things, is once established by proof, the law presumes that the person, personal relation, or state of things continues to exist as before, until the contrary is shown, or until a different presumption is raised from the nature of the subject in question."

Same — retroactive presumptions.

9. No presumption is raised in the manner aforesaid which is materially retroactive.

Same — insolvency.

10. Proof of insolvency at a particular time does not create a presumption that the same condition existed at any considerable time anterior thereto; nor is it evidentiary of such condition at a time very remote to that to which the evidence is directed.

Circumstantial evidence — insolvency — relevancy.

11. Proof that a person was insolvent at a particular time, by means of judgments against him shown at such time to be uncollectible, is circumstantial evidence that he was insolvent six months or more prior thereto, especially in case of his having, shortly after the earlier date, transferred his property for the purpose of securing payment of his obligations, and is not irrelevant.

Same — retroactive effect.

12. Within reasonable limits under reasonable circumstances, proof of insolvency of a person at a particular date as circumstantially bearing on like insolvency at an earlier date is relevant.

Appeal — insolvency — circumstantial evidence — admission by trial court review.

13. Whether evidence of the nature mentioned in the last foregoing is relevant or not raises, primarily, a question of competency, in which field the decision of the trial court should not be disturbed on appeal unless clearly wrong.

Circumstantial evidence — insolvency — relevancy.

14. In the situation suggested in the last foregoing, if the prior date under all the circumstances is too remote to permit of the circumstance of insolvency at the later date have reasonably any evidentiary significance, it is irrelevant.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Banks — insolvency — officers — bank as creditor — transfer of property to bank — effect.

15. In case officers of a bank are largely indebted thereto, and possess property interests in a corporation to a very significant amount as compared to such indebtedness, and they convey such property to the bank on account of such indebtedness, pursuant to an understanding of long standing, the situation before the conveyance should be regarded substantially the same as that thereafter, as regards the mental state of such officers respecting the condition of the bank as to solvency.

Same — nondebtor officers — transfer to bank — effect.

16. In the situation in the last foregoing, the fact that some of the officers, equally interested in the bank and the outside property mentioned, are not debtors of the bank, but have, nevertheless, agreed with their associates to join in conveying such property to strengthen it as to paper on which they were not liable, creating a moral obligation only to so join, which obligation the other officers have good reason to suppose will be, and in fact is, redeemed, does not militate against the outside interest of such nondebtor officers being considered by the others, before the transfer, on the question of whether the bank is solvent.

Same — "unsafe or insolvent" — construction.

17. The words "unsafe or insolvent" in § 4541, Stat. 1898, are used therein as legal equivalents.

Same.

18. The term "unsafe or insolvent" as used in § 4541, Stat. 1898, does not mean insolvent in the limited sense of inability to pay indebtedness in the ordinary course of business.

Same — definition.

19. The term mentioned means insolvent in the broad general sense of a deficiency of one's assets in realizable cash available within a reasonable time, treated as an ordinarily prudent person would generally conduct his business under the same or similar circumstances, to pay his liabilities.

Same.

20. A bank is unsafe or insolvent, within the meaning of the statute, when the cash value of its assets, realizable in a reasonable time, in case of liquidation by its proprietors as ordinarily prudent persons would ordinarily close up their business, is not equal to its liabilities, exclusive of stock liabilities.

(March 9, 1909.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Eau Claire County to review a judgment convicting defendant of having received money into a bank for the credit of the depositor with knowledge or good reason to know that the bank was unsafe or insolvent, contrary to Statute. Reversed.

Wis. Stat. 1898, § 4541, provides that "any officer, director, stockholder, cashier, teller, manager, messenger, clerk, or agent of any bank, banking exchange, brokerage, or deposit company, corporation, or institution, or of any person, company, or corporation, engaged in whole or in part in banking, brokerage, exchange, or deposit business in any way, or any person engaged in such business in whole or in part, who shall accept or receive, on deposit, or for safe-keeping, or to loan, from any person, any money, or any bills, notes, or other paper circulating as money, or any notes, drafts, bills of exchange, bank checks, or other commercial paper for safe-keeping or for collection, when he knows, or has good reason to know, that such bank, company, or corporation, or that such person, is unsafe or insolvent, shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison not more than ten years nor less than one year, or by fine not exceeding $10,000."

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Writ of error to the circuit court for Eau Claire county to review a conviction for the offense of receiving money into a bank for the credit of a depositor with knowledge, or good reason to know, that the bank was unsafe or insolvent, contrary to § 4541, Stat. 1898.

The accused, during the time stated in the indictment, was president of the Security Savings Bank, a duly organized banking corporation under the laws of this state, located at Ashland, Wisconsin.

The indictment contained three counts, each for a violation of § 4541, aforesaid. The first was for receiving into the bank January 29, 1904, of A. L. Goodman, $125, in lawful money for his credit. The second was for so receiving February 2, 1904, a check for $1,000 of that value for credit of A. Donald. The third was for so receiving February 8, 1904, money and bank checks of the value of $59.65 from W. T. Briggs for his credit.

As to each alleged violation of law, it was charged the accused received the deposit as president of the bank, knowing, or having good reason to know, that the bank was unsafe and insolvent.

The case was duly tried on a plea of not guilty. Questions discussed in the opinion were in due form saved for review.

The bank was duly incorporated September 10, 1903, as successor to a banking business previously conducted by a partnership composed of the accused, his brother E. H. Ellis, and his sisters, Danielia Loranger and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Augusta Kennedy. Prior to such date the capital was $20,000 and business was dominated by the accused, he being supposed by the public to be substantially the sole owner. In the new organization the four persons named took the stock in equal proportions, except one share taken by Ellis Kennedy, son of Augusta Kennedy. The stock was fixed at $50,000. The corporation started business with a duly approved paid-up capital of that amount. All assets of the private bank were turned over to the new organization, and it assumed the liabilities. From the time of the new organization to the time it closed, February 13, 1904, by reason of general disturbed financial conditions, some special local disturbances and other causes, patrons of bank withdraw credits to the extent of about one third, the deposits being reduced from $162,560.97, to $107,000, or thereabouts. Prior to the day named the proprietors partially arranged to borrow on assets of the bank $35,000, thinking that amount would tide over the difficulties, but, before concluding to secure the money, a consultation was had with the bank examiner, who, after an examination of the affairs of the bank, approved of its continuing, if, in the judgment of the proprietors, the $35,000 would so strengthen the reserves as to provide against a continuation of the reduction of deposits. Not feeling certain in that respect, the proprietors concluded to go into liquidation, and the bank was closed accordingly, control of it being turned over to the bank examiner. At such time the amount of assets was $231,006.05, and liabilities other than to stockholders $108,270.46. The assets of the bank on February 3, 1904, and for a considerable period prior thereto, consisted of commercial paper around $75,000 in amount, which depended, for its value, in the main, upon responsibility of the accused, E. H. Ellis and Ellis S. Kennedy, real-estate mortgage security as to Kennedy's indebtedness and a moral obligation hereafter explained as to some indebtedness of George C. Loranger. Of this paper $6,300 was the obligation of George C. Loranger, on which the accused was liable as an indorser, $1,100 was paper of one Holbrook, son-in-law of the latter, and $12,500 of E. S. Kennedy, son of Augusta Kennedy. On such day the stockholders of the bank were proprietors of the stock of the Bay City Land Company in the same proportion as they were of the stock of the bank. Danielia Loranger, one of such stockholders, had verbally promised to convey her interest in the land company to the bank to care for the indebtedness of her husband to the bank and the indebtedness of Holbrook, and all the stockholders of such company understood from the organization of the bank:

that the company's property should be devoted to the interests of the bank. The value of the obligations of Mr. Loranger, the Ellises and E. S. Kennedy on such day depended, in the main, except as to the real-estate security mentioned upon the responsibility of the stockholders in the land company and the moral obligations of Mrs. Loranger and Mrs. Kennedy to devote their interests in such company to those of the bank. Pursuant to such obligation, the land company's assets, consisting of real estate of the assessed valuation of about $75,000, was conveyed to the bank. It had all such property at the later date when the bank was taken possession of by the bank examiner.

The evidence established all the matters aforesaid without dispute, and further so established that the business of the bank was conducted without any refusal to pay any legitimate demand upon it up to the time it closed as aforesaid without supposing liquidation would be necessary, up to the time of the conference with the bank examiner aforesaid. There was further undisputed evidence that the value of the assets of the bank on the day of the closing and on and after February 3, and 4, 1904, was somewhere around $160,000, as the same was reasonably viewed at the time, and that such value existed on the 29th day of January, 1904, and thereafter up to and inclusive of February 2, 1904, contingent upon the responsibility of the stockholders of the land company being such, by reason of their ownership of the stock of such company, as to render the obligation to the bank substantially as good before the assets of the land company were turned over to the bank as before. The evidence was further undisputed that, viewing the assets of the bank during the period from January 29, 1904, to and inclusive of February 13, 1904, exclusive of the land company's property and the obligation on account of which the same was turned over to the bank, were of the value of at least about $188,000, or enough to cover the liabilities into about $20,000, and that, taking the property of the land company at the value placed thereon by the witnesses, or taking the value of the paper, on account of which such property was turned over to the bank, at substantially equal to the value of such property as so placed, there was a surplus of assets over liabilities, at each of the times material under the information, of somewhere around $50,000.

There was no evidence indicating that, on either of such dates, the proprietors of the bank contemplated going into liquidation, or had any thought, other than that the bank would remain indefinitely in business. There 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was evidence that at the time the bank was examined by the bank examiner, just previous to his taking possession, he was of the opinion there were assets sufficient to pay the liabilities, especially except stock liabilities; and that he was of the opinion, when the bank closed, the proprietors did not believe but what there were assets sufficient to pay out in money all liabilities to depositors.

There was evidence to the effect that, when the deposit was made, mentioned in the first count of the indictment, the same was placed to the credit of the depositor, who at that time owed the bank a considerable amount, but that none of it was then due. The evidence as to the deposit mentioned in the second count was to the effect that the deposit was treated as cash, the amount the check called for being placed to the depositor's credit, and that the check was afterwards paid to the bank.

There was evidence to the effect that, for a considerable time before the occurrence mentioned in the indictment, and up to the time the bank closed, the law was not complied with as to reserve, also evidence that some overdrafts were allowed, there being such at the time of the suspension to the amount of about $4,000, about $900 of which was against responsible persons other than the proprietors of the bank, and $1,700 only good, so far as the responsibility of the proprietors of the bank would make it so, either as owners of the property of the land company, or as having turned such property over to the bank, leaving about $1,600 of overdrafts of no value.

There was other evidence as to want of good judgment in the conduct of the bank, and evidence that, after the proprietors had turned all their money over thereto, as they did, nothing could be collected of them.

The cause was submitted to the jury, resulting in a verdict of guilty on the first and second counts and not guilty on the third. The various exceptions saved upon the trial will be mentioned in their order of importance in the opinion.

Messrs. Sanborn, Lamoreux, & Pray, for plaintiff in error:

Under the statute, a bank check is not the subject of deposit.

Koetting v. State, 88 Wis. 506, 60 N. W. 822; United States v. County Court, 99 U. S. 592, 25 L. ed. 331; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 2d ed. pp. 837, 838; Waterman v. Waterman, 34 Mich. 491; Com. v. Howe, 132 Mass. 258; Thalheim v. State, 38 Fla. 169, 20 So. 938; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 6; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1042, 1043.

At the time the deposit was made the depositor was indebted to the bank in an amount greater than the deposit, and receipt of a deposit under such circumstances is lawful.

Nichols v. State, 46 Neb. 715, 65 N. W. 774; Com. v. Junkin, 170 Pa. 194, 31 L.R.A. 124, 32 Atl. 617; State v. Strait, 99 Minn. 327, 109 N. W. 598; Slack v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 103 Wis. 57, 74 Am. St. Rep. 841, 79 N. W. 51.

Establishing the insolvency of bank officials after the bank closed its doors and after the alleged unlawful deposits were received did not raise any presumption that they were insolvent at the time the deposits were received.

Hopkins v. State, 53 Md. 502; Body v. Jewsen, 33 Wis. 402; Redding v. Godwin, 44 Minn. 355, 46 N. W. 563; Windhaus v. Bootz, 92 Cal. 617, 28 Pac. 557; Blank v. Livonia Twp. 79 Mich. 1, 44 N. W. 157; Hingham v. South Scituate, 7 Gray, 232; Chandler v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. 122 Mass. 305; State v. Hubbard, 60 Iowa, 466, 15 N. W. 287; Martyn v. Curtis, 67 Vt. 263, 31 Atl. 296; Coffman v. Christenson, 102 Minn. 400, 113 N. W. 1064; State ex rel. Phelan v. Walsh, 62 Conn. 287, 17 L.R.A. 364, 25 Atl. 1; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Thompson, 107 Ind. 442, 57 Am. Rep. 120, 8 N. E. 18, 9 N. E. 357; Dumangue v. Daniels, 154 Mass. 483, 28 N. E. 900; Martin v. Fox, 40 Mo. App. 664.

Messrs. F. L. Gilbert, Attorney General, V. T. Pierrelee, and M. Barry, for defendant in error:

A bank check is the subject of deposit.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 838; Taylor v. Robinson, 34 Fed. 678; Hendry v. Benlisa, 37 Fla. 609, 34 L.R.A. 283, 20 So. 800; State v. Downs, 148 Ind. 327, 47 N. E. 670; State v. Boomer, 103 Iowa, 112, 72 N. W. 424; State v. Hill, 47 Neb. 456, 66 N. W. 541; Morris v. Edwards, 1 Ohio, 204; Allibone v. Ames, 9 S. D. 74, 33 L.R.A. 585, 68 N. W. 165; State v. McFetridge, 84 Wis. 514, 20 L.R.A. 223, 51 N. W. 1, 998; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1029; Aebi v. Bank of Evansville, 124 Wis. 73, 68 L.R.A. 964, 109 Am. St. Rep. 925, 102 N. W. 329.

A bank receiving a deposit while insolvent has no right to apply it upon an unmatured note of the depositor so as to avoid criminal liability for receiving the deposit during insolvency.

State v. Beach, 147 Ind. 74, 36 L.R.A. 184, 43 N. E. 949.

Insolvency may be shown by general reputation.

Lee v. Kilburn, 3 Gray. 594; Bartlett v. Decreet, 4 Gray. 113; Heywood v. Reed, 4 Gray, 574; 1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 101; Nininger v. Knox, 8 Minn. 147, Gil. 110; 2 Wigmore, Ev. § 1623, p. 1971; McNeill v. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Arnold, 22 Ark. 482; Hayes v. Wells, 34 Md. 518; Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 252; West v. St. Paul Nat. Bank, 54 Minn. 406, 56 N. W. 54; Garrett v. Weinberg, 59 S. C. 162, 37 S. E. 51, 225; Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 97; Noyes v. Brown, 33 Vt. 431; Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 430; Hudson v. Bauer Grocery Co. 105 Ala. 200, 16 So. 693; 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 775; Webb v. Atkinson, 124 N. C. 447, 32 S. E. 737; Sweetser v. Bates, 117 Mass. 466; Cook v. Mason, 5 Allen, 212; Lane v. Kingsbery, 11 Mo. 402; Bank of United States v. Macalister, 9 Pa. 475.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the foregoing statement we have avoided going into details or dealing much with figures, except in the way of generalizations. There is such a mass of things in the record that any attempt to state it in detail would fail of accomplishing any valuable purpose, and probably would leave the situation more or less involved in confusion.

The legal questions are few in number and will be presented in their logical order. The fact that the deposit relied upon in the second count in the indictment was a check does not militate against its satisfying the call of § 4541, Stat. 1898, for a deposit of money. True, the check, as it went over the counter, was not money, but it was treated as such between the bank and its customer. It was taken as the equivalent of money at the face value. The money equivalent was placed to the credit of the depositor the same in all respects, as if legal-tender money had been passed over the counter. The relation of debtor and creditor, as between the bank and the depositor, with the characterization of liability on the one side and expectancy on the other as to payment on demand at any time within the banking hours, was created. In short, the transaction, in practical effect, was the same as if the bank had passed to its customer $1,000 for the check, and he had immediately passed the same back for deposit and received credit therefor.

The foregoing, in the opinion of the court, is in harmony with—and really required by the rule of stare decisis on account of—State v. Shove, 96 Wis. 1, 37 L.R.A. 142, 65 Am. St. Rep. 17, 70 N. W. 312. We cannot appreciate that there is any difference between passing a certificate of deposit on a bank over its counter for credit or a renewal, the presumption being that money equivalent for such certificate is on hand to be passed out in exchange for the paper if desired, and passing over the counter a certificate of deposit or check or bill of exchange on another bank, which is taken as so much money in the ordinary course of business, the money itself being presumably present to be transmitted, if desired, in exchange for the paper. To say there is a difference in the two situations would, in our opinion, be trifling with the statute.

It is confessed that the indictment, in substance and practical effect, is the same as in State v. Shove, supra, but insisted that, as no point was made on the sufficiency of the charge in such case, the way is clear for a challenge in that regard now. Granted, for the purpose of the discussion. The following defects are now suggested: (a) It does not appear from the charge that the bank became the debtor of the depositor named in the first count; (b) It does not appear that the deposit consisted of money; (c) It does not appear that Ellis received the deposit for the bank.

The requisites of the statute as to (a) and (b), so far as is necessary to this case, is acceptance or reception on deposit of money tendered for that purpose by a customer. That is plainly charged in the first count, in the language of the statute, and is likewise so charged in the second, in the light of what we have said as to the reception of the check as money, being the same as if the thing passed over the counter had been money in fact.

(c) The claim that the indictment does not show that the accused acted, in receiving the deposits, for the bank, seems to be without merit. After charging receipt of money on deposit in the one case and the check in the other, the language of the indictment, as to each is, substantially, that the accused was, at the time of receiving the deposit, the president of the bank, and the money was accepted and received into the bank on deposit. What more is needed? We cannot discover anything wanting.

The fact that the customer mentioned in the first count was indebted to the bank at the time he made his deposit, especially since the indebtedness was not presently due, does not militate against the receipt of the money satisfying the statute as to that element. The credit created by the deposit was at the customer's disposal immediately upon its creation. The status of the accused was fixed, as regards guilt under the statute, the instant the deposit was accepted as creating a credit, liable to be called for at once, and was not subject to change by maturity of the depositor's indebtedness thereafter, before the bank closed, so as to absorb a part or the whole of it. Had the deposit been made on account of the indebtedness about to mature, and to be applied thereon, or made on account of an overdraft so as to operate to discharge the depositor's indebtedness to the bank, the case would be far different. True, it would be absurd to hold that a deposit in form, which, in practical effect, is only payment of an indebtedness on an overdrawn account, would satisfy the statutory call for a deposit of money or other thing used as money and subject to be recalled in money. Such call contemplates a deposit such as will create the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties, or bailor and bailee, or the relation of principal and agent, the former only being material to this case.

A witness who, upon the voir dire, was supposed to have shown special knowledge of the character of commercial paper made by parties in the city of Ashland and its vicinity, was permitted to give his opinion, generally, of the value of specific pieces of paper mentioned to him, about the time of the occurrences, material to the case. He was not asked as to whether he knew the reputation of the maker or indorser of the paper as to solvency, but as to the value of the paper as a commodity in the community, from the standpoint of whether the parties named, to the knowledge of the witness, had any property out of which the same could be collected. He stated, definitely, that his testimony was based, not on knowledge of whether the parties possessed property or not, but on ignorance of whether they had any. The motion made to strike out such testimony should have been granted. True, if the witness had shown, with any degree of fairness, on the voir dire, that he knew the reputation of the makers of the paper for solvency, he might have been permitted to testify to such reputation. True, evidence of the general reputation of a person for financial responsibility is relevant on the question of his solvency. That does not seem to have been directly passed upon by this court, but it has by many, and may be said to be entirely settled, though not by universal authority. We will not go into the subject at length, but state with approval that the rule is as indicated. The following are a sample of a multitude of judicial authorities on the subject. Hahn v. Penney, 60 Minn. 487-490, 62 N. W. 1129; West v. St. Paul Nat. Bank, 54 Minn. 466, 56 N. W. 54; Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241; Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 414.

The evidence discussed was not of the character of opinion evidence as to reputation for solvency. True, on cross-examination there was some evidence from the witness that he testified, from reputation, as to the financial standing of one maker of a note brought to his attention, but in general his evidence was confined to opinions on the basis before indicated. He gave no evidence that he in fact knew whether the debtor had property or not. On the whole, it seems that the evidence was not relevant. It did not approach near enough to the real point at issue to have sufficient probative force to be within the realms of competency. Therefore, in the opinion of the court, it should have been stricken out as indicated.

Complaint is made because the court permitted much evidence as regards financial condition of debtors of the bank, particularly the proprietors, long after the suspension, without direct proof that the same condition existed at the time of the occurrences charged in the indictment. A judgment against the accused for $32,526.33, in favor of the receiver of the bank, rendered some six months after the suspension, covering substantially all the liabilities of the accused to the bank, was received. Similar proof was made as to other debts to the bank in connection with evidence of unsuccessful efforts to collect on the judgments. Much of this evidence, so far as direct effect was concerned, related to the condition of things from six months to some over a year after the deposits were alleged to have been wrongfully received.

It is an elementary principle of evidence that, as a general rule presumptions do not run backward; that while, "when the existence of a person, a personal relation, or a state of things, is once established by proof, the law presumes that the person [personal] relation, or state of things continues to exist as before, until the contrary is shown, or until a different presumption is raised from the nature of the subject in question." State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 127 Wis. 468, 107 N. W. 500; Greenl. Ev. § 41. There is no retroactive evidentiary inference, especially reaching backward materially. So, proof of insanity or solvency at a particular time is not competent to prove, on the principle of natural and probable relation, the same condition a considerable period prior thereto. But the question of whether a circumstance is of sufficient probative force to have the dignity of a legal presumption of fact, establishing the matter in controversy, prima facie, as in case of the rule stated, is one thing, and that of whether it is so utterly void of probative power as to be outside the realms of competency and so irrelevant, is quite another.

It must be conceded that, while evidence of the character of that in question might not establish a condition which would raise a legal presumption running backward, if the condition were not too remote it would not be entirely without evidentiary consequences. Such consequence might be considerable under some circumstances. For instance, in case of proof of entire want of assets to meet liabilities a few days after the particular time vital to a controversy. It would necessarily diminish in weight according to remoteness, and eventually become so shadowy as to pass into the realms of conjecture, and so outside the field of competency, thereby becoming wholly irrelevant. Within a considerable field, the primary question as to admissibility would be one of competency, in which field, as in all others where the trial court is required to determine matters of fact, there is a broad range for the exercise of judgment, in which the trial court is quite supreme, so much so that its rulings should not be disturbed unless clearly wrong. Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627-648, 78 N. W. 145; Johnson v. State, 129 Wis. 140-152, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 809, 108 N. W. 55, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 923.

It is the opinion of the court that considerable of the evidence objected to was improperly received under the principles suggested; particularly, judgments against persons who, before the suspension, divested themselves of all of their property by turning it over to the bank on account of the very indebtedness represented by the judgments subsequently rendered; and, further, in view of the failure of counsel to make good the pledge given to the court at the time the evidence was received, that evidence would be offered that there had not been any substantial change in the financial condition of the persons, to whose status the remote evidence related, from the time of the occurrences charged in the indictment down to the time of the remote condition proved, or attempted to be proved. These general observations are all that seem necessary on this branch of the case.

The trial court gave instructions excepted to, and refused to give instructions requested, upon the theory that the value of the property of the land company turned over to the bank on account of liabilities of the stockholders, in the main, February 3, 1904, could not be considered on the question of whether the bank was unsafe or insolvent to the knowledge, or with good reason for knowledge, on the part of the accused, at any time prior to such date, but could be from and thereafter. That, it seems, was manifestly wrong and a wrong which, quite likely, was fatal to the accused, as to the first and second counts, inasmuch as, while the accused was acquitted as to the circumstance that happened a few days after the land company's property was turned over to the bank, he was convicted as to that which happened the day before and the one which happened five days before.

It seems that, aside from the interest which Mrs. Loranger and Mrs. Kennedy had in the land company, such company's property, from a legal standpoint, was behind the liability of the debtor, stockholders of the bank, substantially the same on the 29th day of January, 1904, as on the subsequent dates material to the case. Since there was an understanding prior to the 29th, to which Mrs. Loranger and Mrs. Kennedy were parties, that all the land company's property should be turned over to the bank on account of the liabilities of the stockholders thereto to strengthen its resources; and particularly as the accused had, as it seems, sufficient influence with his associates to secure their co-operation as to anything he desired done to strengthen the bank,—he had substantially the same reason on January 29, to consider the value of the land-company property with reference to the solvency of the bank as at any later time. In the light of the result of the trial as to the third count in the indictment, it seems reasonably certain that, had the case been presented to the jury in this way, there would have been a verdict of not guilty on all the charges. There can hardly be any mistake about that in view of the undisputed evidence that, considering the land-company property, the cash value of the bank assets at the times in question, as the accused had a right to view them, exceeded the liabilities to depositors by about 40 per cent.

On the question of whether there was the excess stated, we have little or no doubt. We have checked over carefully the claim in that regard by counsel for the accused, and find it substantially correct. There is no substantial claim to the contrary in the brief of counsel for defendant in error. On the oral argument counsel were pointedly challenged in respect thereto several times from the bench, and, while they did not concede there was such excess, their attitude was such as to suggest very strongly that they were not prepared to more than deny that there was assets of a convertible character sufficient to enable the bank to meet its liabilities in the ordinary course of business, or enough to pay anywhere near all the debts, as it turned out.

The latter condition mentioned is not very persuasive as to the condition of mind of the accused, or the knowledge he should have had on the 29th day of January, 1904. It is a matter of common knowledge that assets in the hands of a going banking concern are regarded very differently from the same assets upon the bank going into forced liquidation. The change of circumstances is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

quite likely to depreciate the value of the securities to a very marked degree.

The learned trial court charged the jury over and over again, that whether the bank was insolvent on the particular days material to the case turned on whether it had sufficient assets to meet its liabilities in the ordinary course of business, and whether the accused at such time had good reason to know the bank was unsafe or insolvent, was whether he had such reason to know it did not possess sufficient assets to pay all its liabilities as they matured and became payable in the ordinary course of business. On the other hand, the learned court refused to instruct the jury that the statutory test was whether the fair value of the assets on the particular days named was sufficient to cover the liabilities, exclusive of liabilities to stockholders.

In view of the situation, that, according to the undisputed proof, there was an excess of assets over liabilities, within the rule requested to be given to the jury, the error in refusing such request, if there were error in that regard, was prejudicial in the highest degree, since such request, in view of the evidence, was, in effect, one to render a verdict in favor of the accused.

There is no question but what insolvency, as the subject is dealt with under the insolvent and bankrupt laws, regarding a condition where, by the theory of such laws, the person or concern should suspend and take such measures, or submit to such, for the protection of creditors, as to insure equality of treatment, is as the court instructed the jury. That is the limited, not the common, popular, or general meaning of the term. The latter suggests merely a substantial deficiency of assets to cover liabilities. In a multitude of authorities involving administration of bankrupt and insolvent laws and situations properly classifiable therewith, the authorities mainly relied upon by the prosecution, insolvency is viewed in the limited sense, while the general sense is universally conceded to be as indicated. So it will be seen that a bank may be insolvent in the limited sense, and clearly not in the broad general sense.

Must the limited meaning be given to the term "unsafe or insolvent" as used in the statute? Is it true that, under all circumstances, the proprietors of a bank, though believing they have an abundance of assets to pay out within a reasonable time all liabilities to depositors, must close the doors and go into liquidation whenever they have good reason to know they will, or probably may, not be able to pay all demands upon the bank in the usual course of business, and that every moment of time they keep open for business thereafter they are criminals before the law and liable to be prosecuted and punished by long terms of confinement in the state prison? If such is the law, the banking business is exceedingly unattractive, and the more conscientious the banker is, the less attractive it is.

It must be seen, at once, that the statute is open to construction. The words used have the two well-known and widely different meanings. By the familiar rule that, in general, the common ordinary meaning of words in a law is to be taken as the one intended by the legislature, we must discover some efficient reason for holding that, it did not have in mind in enacting the law in question the one which the learned trial court rejected.

While it is reasoned by some courts that the mischiefs to be guarded against by such legislation suggest the limited meaning as intended, such reasoning is not satisfactory, and is not in accord with the reasoning of other just as respectable courts holding to the contrary view.

There is no more legitimate business than that of banking. There are laws for the promotion of it, beneficial to those engaged therein and their patrons, in every civilized nation on earth. Our laws contemplate that all but a small portion of the deposits in a state bank and all of its capital stock may be loaned for considerable periods of time and with quite a proportion on real-estate security. It is permitted to put 25 per cent of its capital and surplus into banking house and fixtures. It is permitted to loan 50 per cent of capital, surplus, and deposits upon real-estate security, and without limit in this and adjoining states when authorized by a resolution of two thirds of the board of directors. There is a legal limit upon the amount that may be loaned directly to one person, but there is no limit whatever as to indirect loans, and no limit as to loaning on approved security of a single borrower, short of the whole capital stock and surplus, in case of two thirds of the directors consenting thereto by a duly recorded vote. There is no limit as to time upon which loans may be made. Notwithstanding this broad discretion, the law only requires a reserve on hand in cash, either in bank or available in correspondent reserve banks, of 15 per cent of the deposits.

In the situation indicated, would it be reasonable to suppose that a bank must at all events be prepared to pay everyone who calls his credit in the usual course of business, under peril of the severe punishment provided in § 4541 of the Statutes of 1898? Must persons engaged in such business, while not going outside the permitted methods with bad intent, upon every occasion of their competency to pay in the usual course of business being challenged, regardless of competency to pay ultimately, be conscious of drifting within the shades of prison walls, into realms of everlasting disgrace for themselves and their families? The very picture, not at all overdrawn it is thought, suggests, most forcibly, that such a meaning as the learned trial court attributed to the statute would lead to the most absurd results. That of itself would require rejection of such meaning, there being another perfectly reasonable, and fairly, at least, appropriate one.

The reasons suggested for not adopting the drastic meaning attributed to the statute by the trial judge, suggested from the viewpoint of the banker, is reinforced by one quite as persuasive from the point of view of patrons of a bank. It is a matter of common knowledge that liquidation of a bank in insolvency proceedings is inevitably attended with great losses which commonly fall on the depositors. So, when a banker stands face to face with a condition of probable inability merely to pay all liabilities "in the ordinary course of business," he knows that to go into liquidation, unless that is absolutely necessary, is inviting disaster for the depositor often in far greater measure than to persist in going on. Premature suspension or unnecessary suspension often is the very worst thing that could happen to the persons the statute is designed to protect. In that situation, if the statute were construed as the counsel for defendant in error contend it should be, the fabled position of most unfortunate danger would be quite real, the banker, while bending all his energies to perform his duty of avoiding danger on the one side, would be quite likely to fall into a still greater danger on the other. Avoiding Scylla, he would fall into Charybdis.

Looking to our own decisions, we find that the precise question under discussion has not been heretofore treated. Our attention is called to Baker v. State, 54 Wis. 368, 12 N. W. 12; Re Koetting, 90 Wis. 166, 62 N. W. 622; State v. Shove, 96 Wis. 1, 37 L.R.A. 142, 65 Am. St. Rep. 17, 70 N. W. 312, but in neither is the question discussed or helpfully alluded to, much less decided. The same condition exists in most all the adjudications elsewhere under similar statutes. The secret of that doubtless is that only in rare instances has there been a prosecution of this sort unless the bank was so hopelessly insolvent that its condition in that regard satisfied every meaning of the term "insolvency," beyond question.

In State v. Cadwell, 79 Iowa, 432, 44 N. W. 700, the bankruptcy rule was adopted, citing in support thereof wholly civil cases where such rule is appropriate. The reasoning in the opinion does not appeal favorably to our understanding. It is wholly from a one-sided point of view. The bank there was insolvent under any rule, and unquestionably so. Reference is made to a Federal case, without stating where it may be found, but it is sufficiently identified to point unmistakably to Dodge v. Mastin (C. C.) 17 Fed. 660. Turning thereto, we find that it held that a bank may be insolvent in the limited sense the term is used in bankruptcy matters; it may even be forced to close its doors for want of money to pay all calls upon it in the ordinary course of business, and yet not be insolvent within the meaning of the criminal law. It was said: "A bank is solvent, within the meaning of the Constitution and the statutes we are considering, when it possesses sufficient of assets to pay within a reasonable time all its liabilities through its own agencies." The Iowa case has been cited with a measure of approval in some instances, but not in any one of consequence of this sort, so far as we are able to discover. It must be conceded it has some support in State v. Beach, 147 Ind. 74, 36 L.R.A. 179, 43 N. E. 949; Queenan v. Palmer, 117 Ill. 619, 7 N. E. 613; Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 35 L.R.A. 176, 54 Am. St. Rep. 447, 45 N. E. 303; State v. Myers, 54 Kan. 206, 38 Pac. 296. In a pretty full review of authorities in an article in 37 Cent. L. J. 147, it is condemned, authorities being cited and logic used to the conclusion that a bank is not unsafe or insolvent, in the language of the criminal law, if its property is worth more than all its liabilities, even though it be in a condition, at the time of receiving a deposit, that it has to default soon on maturing liabilities. We should remark, in passing, that the author took note of the fact that in the Iowa case the bank was hopelessly insolvent within any meaning of the term; so the court did not need to go to the extent it did. For that reason, we may well apprehend, the question did not receive the attention, at the hands of the court, it otherwise would.

We will close this opinion without any extensive review of authorities. We venture to say that, in all situations, except in respect to the administration of bankruptcy and insolvency laws, the term under consideration is regarded as contemplating insufficiency of assets, in money value, to balance liabilities, such money value to be realized, not by a forced and involuntary sale, but by handling in the ordinary way an ordinarily prudent man would generally conduct his business under the same or similar circumstances.

The following are examples of the application of the rule we have stated: Hamilton v. Menominee Falls Quarry Co. 106 Wis. 352, 81 N. W. 876; Marvin v. Anderson, 111 Wis. 387, 87 N. W. 226; Shaw v. Gilbert, 111 Wis. 165, 86 N. W. 188; Livingston v. Bank of New York, 26 Barb. 304-308; Walkenshaw v. Perzel, 32 How. Pr. 233. The position of this court on the general question is well summarized in the syllabus to Hamilton v. Menominee Falls Quarry Co. supra, thus: "Insolvency, in such connection, does not mean an insufficiency of quick assets to pay all debts at once, nor the inability to meet commercial obligations as they fall due in the course of business, but that the property of the corporation, real and personal, estimated at a fair and reasonable valuation, is substantially less than its debts."

There is a peculiarity in our statutes, perhaps distinguishing it from the Iowa statute and certainly from those of Indiana, Kansas, Illinois, and many other states. The word "insolvent" only is used in most statutes, while that, in connection with the word "unsafe," is used in ours. Not in the disjunctive, as said in Re Koetting, supra, to suggest separate conditions forming bases for the criminal liability, but as "legal equivalents," the latter word to explain and emphasize the first. That fairly indicates that the legislative idea was something more than insolvency in the limited sense.

An examination of the statutes of other states fails to disclose any similar use of words in a similar statute, except in Minnesota. Laws 1895, chap. 219, p. 504. The supreme court of that state in State v. Clements, 82 Minn. 434, 85 N. W. 229, in defining the term rejected the idea of competency to pay liabilities "in the ordinary course of business," adopting this, by way of approval of the trial court's instruction on the subject: "If the assets of a banking firm and of the individual members thereof are insufficient in value to pay the debts of such firm, then such firm is insolvent. A bank or banking firm is solvent, within the meaning of the statute, when it and its several members possess assets of sufficient value to pay within a reasonable time all its liabilities through its own agencies, and is insolvent when it and its individual members do not possess assets of such value."

We approve of that, substantially, preferring, however, to express it in this way: The term "unsafe or insolvent" in § 4541, Stat. 1898; has regard to deficiency of assets, realizable in cash value within a reasonable time, treating them as an ordinarily prudent person would ordinarily conduct his business, to cover liabilities exclusive of stock liabilities. A bank is insolvent when the fair cash value of its assets, realizable within a reasonable time, in case of liquidation by the proprietors, as ordinarily prudent persons would ordinarily close up their business, is equivalent to its liabilities exclusive of stock liability.

That gives a sensible construction to the statute, treating the banking business with the consideration it deserves both from the standpoint of patrons and patronized, instead of treating those engaged therein, and responsible for the safety of the cash and idle capital of the country, and responsible for the correctness of the innumerable exchange transactions of business in everyday life, as if they were a dangerous class to be fenced about as classes generally are of criminal tendencies. It provides punishment for the really bad and without crushing the merely unfortunate, and subjecting all, or a large proportion, in perilous financial periods, to worriment of unreasonable menace.

A point made that the law under which the grand jury was drawn which found the indictment is unconstitutional, because it denies to an accused person the equal protection of the laws and due process of law, is ruled in favor of the defendant in error by State ex rel. Gubbins v. Anson, 132 Wis. 461, 112 N. W. 475; Vought v. State, 135 Wis. 6, 114 N. W. 518, 646.

There is no other question which needs discussion, or even mention. The judgment must be reversed. Whether the cause should be remanded with directions to discharge the accused upon the ground that he should have been discharged on the case and motion made therefor below, is not free from difficulty. That such course would be the right administration, in a clear case of uselessness of a new trial, within the contemplation of the Code which, on reversal, requires the cause to be remanded for a new trial only when necessary; that is, only when justice, in the judgment of this court does, or seemingly may, demand it. Section 3071, Stat. 1898, has been vindicated many times in recent years. Muench v. Heinemann, 119 Wis. 441, 96 N. W. 800; Hay v. Baraboo, 127 Wis. 1, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 84, 115 Am. St. Rep. 977, 105 N. W. 654; Miller v. State (Wis.) 119 N. W. 850.

When it is clear that a full trial has been had and that a new trial would not be liable to change the situation, assuming that the witnesses who testified cannot honestly do more than repeat their testimony, public and private interests as well demand that, upon a reversal here, such disposition should be made of the matter as to terminate the litigation.

Because of the probability, amounting to almost reasonable certainty, in view of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

verdict on the third charge, that, under proper instructions, there would have been a full acquittal, and other circumstances in the case, a demand for a new trial, from the standpoint of public justice, is not very clear. However, since the case was tried on quite an untenable theory, it is the opinion of the court that it should be remanded for a new trial, which will not preclude the prosecuting attorney, if he shall deem best, from dismissing the cause with consent of the trial court.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Winslow, Ch. J., and Barnes, J., took no part.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE M. JACKSON et al., Appts.,

v.

BECKTOLD PRINTING & BOOK MANUFACTURING COMPANY et al.

(86 Ark. 591, 112 S. W. 161.)

Judgment — vacation — proof.

1. That a decree was rendered in vacation may be shown by deposition.

Same — validity — laches.

2. Unexplained delay for five years to apply for the setting aside of a decree foreclosing a mortgage, void because rendered in vacation, during which time purchasers at the sale and their grantees had sold timber, changed fences, and in all respects used the property as their own, is such laches as will defeat relief.

Curtesy — equity of redemption.

3. Curtesy exists in the equity of redemption of the wife's lands.

(June 15, 1908.)

Case Note. — Curtesy in equity of redemption.

It is a well-settled rule of law that a husband has curtesy in the equity of redemption in mortgaged lands of his wife. An extensive search has failed to disclose any case which questions such right of the husband, while all the following authorities support it: 4 Kent, Com. 30; 1 Greenleaf's Cruise, title 5, chap. 2, § 15, title 15, chap. 3, §§ 11, 12; 1 Washb. Real Prop. § 320; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 521; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 210; Davis v. Mason, 1 Pet. 503, 7 L. ed. 239; McDaniel v. Grace, 15 Ark. 465; Hart v. Chase, 46 Conn. 207; Robinson v. Lakenan, 28 Mo. App. 135; DeCamp v. Crane, 19 N. J. Eq. 166; Wade v. Miller, 32 N. J. L. 296; Gatewood v. Gatewood, 75 Va. 407; Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 603.

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Clay County in favor of defendants in a suit to set aside a decree foreclosing a mortgage. Affirmed.

Statement by Hart, J.:

The present suit filed on the 11th day of August, 1902, by appellants, the husband and children of the late Fannie C. Jackson, against appellees, was brought to set aside a decree of the circuit court sitting in chancery purporting to have been rendered at the January term, 1897, of the court, but alleged to have been rendered and entered of record in vacation in July, 1897, and to redeem certain lands ordered sold by said decree, and for an accounting of the mortgage debt, rents, profits, and waste. Fannie C. Jackson, in her lifetime, was the owner of the premises referred to, and in March, 1892, she executed a mortgage thereon to W. G. Bryan, which he, in October, 1895, assigned to W. B. Bechtold & Company, a partnership. On the 29th day of April, 1896, Bechtold & Company brought suit to foreclose said mortgage, and made said Fannie C. Jackson and W. G. Bryan parties defendant thereto. In May, 1896, Fannie C. Jackson departed this life, intestate, leaving her surviving George M. Jackson, Sr., her husband, and the remaining plaintiffs and appellants in the present suit as their children and her sole heirs at law. On the 16th day of July, 1896, Bechtold & Company commenced a new suit to foreclose the mortgage above mentioned, in which all the appellants except George M. Jackson, Sr., were made defendants. In January, 1897, the appellee, Bechtold Printing & Book Manufacturing Company, hereafter called "Bechtold company" a corporation, was, by order of the court, on its own application and on the application of Bechtold & Company, substituted as plaintiff in that foreclosure proceeding by reason of the fact that Bechtold & Company had, pending the action, assigned the mortgage to the corporation. There was entered upon the records of said court a judgment and decree finding that there was due upon the mortgage the sum of $5,525, and directing a sale of the premises for the payment thereof. The records of the court show that this decree was rendered and entered of record during the January term, 1897. Pursuant to the directions of the decree, the lands were advertised for sale by the commissioner of the court, and on the day of sale were struck off to the appellee, Bechtold company. The sale was reported to the court, and duly confirmed at the next term thereof. A deed was executed by the commissioner to said Bechtold company, which was approved by 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the court. Thereupon the said Bechtold company entered into possession of said lands. The complaint alleges that it went into possession of all said lands about the 1st day of January, 1898. On the 7th day of February, 1898, the Bechtold company, by its deed duly recorded, conveyed a part of these lands to B. B. Biffle. Thereafter and before the institution of this suit, Biffle conveyed a part of the lands so purchased by him to other appellees herein. The Bechtold company, also, by direct conveyances, duly recorded, conveyed a part of the lands to other appellees herein. The record does not disclose whether any of the lands are now owned by the Bechtold company, nor does it contain a complete description of the lands sold to Biffle. It only shows the date of the sale to Biffle, and contains a description of the lands sold by Biffle to other purchasers.

The testimony in this case shows that the foreclosure suit was not heard and determined at the January term, 1897, of the court, but that the case was taken under advisement until after the adjournment of the court; and it was agreed by the parties to the suit that the findings of the judge should be made in vacation, and the result embodied in a decree to be entered of record as if in term time. Pursuant to this understanding, the judge of the court decided the case, in July, 1907, in vacation, and caused a decree to be prepared in accordance with his findings, and had the same entered of record as if the proceedings were had during the January term, 1897, of the court. George M. Jackson, Sr., was present at the January term, 1897, when the agreement for rendering and entering of record the decree in vacation was made. He represented the defendants to that suit. They were non-residents and not present. Maude S. Jackson was alleged in the complaint in the foreclosure proceedings to be a minor, and a guardian ad litem was appointed to make her defense. His answer denies that she was at that time a minor. The present record does not disclose whether or not she was at that time a minor, nor at what time she reached her majority, but she sues as an adult in the present case. George M. Jackson, Sr., testified that he objected to the decree rendered in vacation after it was made, and told the Bechtold company that the defendants, all of whom he represented, would not be bound by the decree. No objections were made to the confirmation of the sale, or to any of the subsequent proceedings in the case. As above stated, the present suit was instituted to set aside the decree rendered in the foreclosure proceedings. The defendants, appellees in this court, filed separate answers containing a general denial of the allegations of the complaint and pleading laches and estoppel on the part of the plaintiffs, to maintain their action. The chancellor found as a fact that the foreclosure decree was in vacation of the court, but held that such facts could only be shown by the record in the cause, and therefore dismissed the complaint, except as to George M. Jackson, Sr., for want of equity, because the record in the cause did not show that the foreclosure decree was pronounced in vacation. The court also found that George M. Jackson, Sr., as the husband of said Fannie C. Jackson, had an interest in the lands, and was not bound by the decree rendered in the foreclosure proceedings because he was not a party thereto, and appointed a commissioner to state an account between him and the Beckett company. This decree was rendered at the March term, 1907, of the court, and the Beckett company excepted to that part of the decree which held that G. M. Jackson, Sr., had an interest in the land, and prayed an appeal to the supreme court, which was granted. In October, 1907, the plaintiffs in the court below were granted an appeal by the clerk of this court.

Messrs. Block & Sullivan for appellants.

Messrs. L. Hunter, Moore & Spence, and J. L. Hornsby, for appellees:

A judgment record cannot be contradicted by parol evidence.

24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 193; Cutter v. Kline, 35 N. J. Eq. 534; Bank of Tennessee v. Patterson, 8 Humph. 363, 47 Am. Dec. 618; Williams v. Tenpenny, 11 Humph. 176; Pettus v. McClannahan, 52 Ala. 55; Bennett v. Tiernay, 78 Ky. 580; Roche v. Beldam, 119 Ill. 320, 10 N. E. 191; Stony Island Hotel Co. v. Johnson, 57 Ill. App. 608; Hansen v. Schlesinger, 125 Ill. 230, 17 N. E. 718; Sweet v. Gibson, 123 Mich. 699, 83 N. W. 407; Pittman v. Lowe, 24 Ga. 429; Walker v. Smith, 50 Ga. 487; Williams v. Henderson, 90 Ind. 577; Riggs v. Collins, 2 Biss. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 11,824; Portis v. Talbot, 33 Ark. 218.

A judgment will never be vacated unless there is a valid defense to the action; and in the present instance the plaintiffs present only the same defense which has already been passed on in the original trial of the foreclosure suit.

Rotan v. Springer, 52 Ark. 80, 12 S. W. 156; State v. Hill, 50 Ark. 458, 8 S. W. 401; Chambliss v. Reppy, 54 Ark. 539, 16 S. W. 571; Tompkins v. Drennen, 6 C. C. A. 83, 13 U. S. App. 308, 56 Fed. 694; 11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 1192 et seq.

The confirmation of the sale under the foreclosure decree validates all prior action, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) and estops plaintiffs herein from complaining.

State Nat. Bank v. Neel, 53 Ark. 110, 22 Am. St. Rep. 185, 13 S. W. 700; Updegraff v. Marked Tree Lumber Co. 83 Ark. 154, 103 S. W. 606; Cowling v. Nelson, 76 Ark. 146, 88 S. W. 913; Collins v. Paepcke-Leicht Lumber Co. 74 Ark. 81, 84 S. W. 1044.

Plaintiffs, by delay for more than five years, have been guilty of such laches as to bar them from relief in equity.

Kirby's Dig. of Ark. Stat. § 5074; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 97 et seq.; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 841; Wilson v. Anthony, 19 Ark. 16; Martin v. Campbell, 35 Ark. 141; Brewer v. Keeler, 42 Ark. 289; Gibson v. Herriott, 55 Ark. 93, 29 Am. St. Rep. 17, 17 S. W. 589; Ayers v. McRae, 71 Ark. 209, 72 S. W. 52; 12 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 99; Dixon v. Graham, 16 Iowa, 310; Foster v. Hall, 44 Wis. 568; Société Foncière v. Milliken, 135 U. S. 304, 34 L. ed. 208, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 823; Johnston v. Sharpe (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 1006; Williamson v. Hartman, 92 N. C. 236; Nicholson v. Nicholson, 113 Ind. 131, 15 N. E. 223; Johnson v. Johnson, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 309; Montgomery v. Merrill, 36 Mich. 97; Lyon v. Brunson, 48 Mich. 194, 12 N. W. 32.

Hart, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The evidence in this case shows that the decree was rendered in vacation. The chancellor so found, but was of the opinion that such fact could only be shown by the record in the cause, and therefore excluded from his consideration all the evidence contained in the deposition of witnesses showing or tending to show that the decree was actually rendered in vacation. In this there was error. The precise question was otherwise determined in the case of Biffle v. Jackson, 71 Ark. 226, 72 S. W. 566. The court said: "That the original decree was rendered in vacation is abundantly established by the testimony both of witnesses and the record, since it is shown that the depositions upon which the decree was based were taken after the adjournment of the court at which the decree purports to have been rendered." It was held in the same case and in the later case of Boynton v. Ashabranner, 75 Ark. 415, 88 S. W. 566, 1011, 91 S. W. 20, that a decree in chancery rendered in vacation, though entered on the judgment record in a blank space left for the purpose, is a nullity. This is the general rule in the absence of statutory provisions providing for the rendition of decrees in vacation. If the fact of its rendition in vacation could not be shown by testimony, and could only be shown by record, we would have the anomalous conditions in cases like the present one of a decree being a nullity and of the parties affected by it being denied the right to establish that fact.

In the case of Bobo v. State, 40 Ark. 224, Chief Justice English said: "Courts have a continuing power over their records not affected by the lapse of time. Should the record in any case be lost or destroyed, the court whose record it was possesses the undoubted power, at any time afterwards, to make a new record. In doing this it must seek information by the aid of such evidence as may be within its reach tending to show the nature and existence of that which it is asked to re-establish. There is no reason why the same rule should not apply when, instead of being lost, the record was never made up, or was so made up as to express a different judgment than the one pronounced by the court. Hence the general rule that a record may be amended not only by the judge's notes, but also by other satisfactory evidence." This rule has been followed ever since by this court, and was reiterated in the case of Ward v. Magness, 75 Ark. 12, 86 S. W. 822.

While the consideration of public policy which requires that a record shall be taken as importing verity yields to equities which require it to speak the truth, it does so only when the party seeking the relief is not guilty of laches. State v. Hill, 50 Ark. 461, 8 S. W. 401. Mr. Freeman, in his work on Judgments, § 102, says that the rule will be strictly applied, and that any laches shown against the moving party will prove fatal to his relief. This court has held that the writ of certiorari will be refused when the party seeking it fails to show that he has proceeded with due expedition after discovering that it was necessary to resort to it. Black v. Brinkley, 54 Ark. 372, 15 S. W. 1030; Lyons v. Green, 68 Ark. 205, 56 S. W. 1075. The reason of the rule is based upon grounds of public policy, and the doctrine of laches is grounded upon the same principle. Its aim is the discouragement, for the peace and repose of society, of stale and antiquated demands. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 98. The general rule of the doctrine of laches as stated by Mr. Justice Harlan has been quoted with approval by this court in the case of Sturdivant v. Cook, 81 Ark. 284, 98 S. W. 966. He said: "But it is now well settled that, independently of any limitation prescribed for the guidance of courts of law, equity may, in the exercise of its own inherent powers, refuse relief where it is sought after undue and unexplained delay, and where injustice would be done in the particular case, by granting the relief asked."

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Appellants contend the cases of Earle Improv. Co. v. Chatfield, 81 Ark. 296, 99 S. W. 84, and of Updegraff v. Marked Tree Lumber Co. 83 Ark. 160, 103 S. W. 606, are decisive of the present case. In the former case, the following language is used: "In the absence of some intervening equity calling for application of the doctrine of laches, equity by analogy follows the law and will not divest the owner of title by lapse of time shorter than the statutory period of limitations." In the Updegraff Case the court said: "The supervening equities referred to in that case [meaning the Earle Case] mean some element of estoppel aside from the mere lapse of time, payment of taxes and enhancement in value." It will be observed that both these cases were suits to quiet title; that the lands were unimproved and uninclosed, and therefore under the statute deemed to be in the possession of the parties who paid the taxes and against whom the doctrine of laches was sought to be invoked. There was no element of estoppel aside from the mere lapse of time, payment of taxes, and enhancement in value of the land.

The rule as applied to facts similar to those in the present case is aptly stated in the case of Gallihier v. Cadwell, 145 U. S. 368, 36 L. ed. 738, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 873, and approved by this court in the case of Rhodes v. Cissel, 82 Ark. 371, 101 S. W. 760. It is as follows: "The cases are many in which this defense [laches] has been invoked and considered. It is true that, by reason of their differences of fact, no one case becomes an exact precedent for another, yet a uniform principle pervades them all. They proceed on the assumption that the party to whom laches is imputed has knowledge of his rights and an ample opportunity to establish them in the proper forum; that, by reason of his delay, the adverse party has good reason to believe that the alleged rights are worthless or have been abandoned, and that, because of the change in condition or relations during this period of delay, it would be an injustice to the latter to permit him to now assert them." "Now, the doctrine of laches in courts of equity . . . is not an arbitrary or technical doctrine. When it would be practically unjust to give a remedy, either because the party has, by his conduct, done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or when, by his conduct and neglect, he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted, in either of these cases lapse of time and delay are most material. But in every case, if an argument against relief, which otherwise would be just, is founded upon mere delay, . . . the validity of that defense must be tried upon principles substantially equitable. Two circumstances, always important in such cases, are the length of the delay and the nature of the acts done during the interval which might affect either party and cause a balance, of justice or injustice, in taking the one course or the other, so far as relates to the remedy." Hall v. Otterson, 52 N. J. Eq. 535, 28 Atl. 912.

In the present case, the parties invoking the doctrine of laches, under and by virtue of the decree of foreclosure, now sought to be annulled, became the purchasers of the lands, and were placed in possession of them. They have sold large quantities of timber from them, changed the fences on the cleared lands, and in all respects used them as owners by purchase under a valid foreclosure decree. All these facts were known to appellants. George Jackson, Sr., employed for appellants counsel to represent them in the foreclosure proceeding. He knew that their counsel agreed to a vacation decree. He was advised that this decree could be annulled, but would be valid unless appellants moved in apt time to set it aside. No effort was made to oppose the confirmation under the sale or the entry into possession by the purchasers by virtue of the deeds executed to them pursuant to the decree. They knew the lands were being sold off from time to time; for the knowledge of George Jackson, Sr., must be imputed to them, he being their agent in all respects concerning the lands. They made no effort to settle off the mortgage debt, or in any way to assert any rights to the lands. They did not move to set aside the decree until nearly five years after it was rendered. They do not claim to have been misled by any act of the parties to the suit, no excuse is given for the delay, which may be attributable to their own culpable negligence. These facts render appellants guilty of laches in not sooner moving to annul the foreclosure decree, and make it inequitable to divest the numerous purchasers of rights which they acquired under what purported on its face to be a valid decree, and which they were led to believe appellants had acquiesced in by their delay and negligence in moving to have it annulled and set aside.

Appellees insist that a husband does not have curtesy in the equity of redemption of the lands of his wife. In this they are in error. It is now fully settled in equity that the husband shall have curtesy of trust as well as of legal estates and of an equity of redemption. Davis v. Mason, 1 Pet. 503, 7 L. ed. 239; Hart v. Chase, 46 Conn. 212; Robinson v. Lakenan, 28 Mo. App. 135; De-20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Camp v. Crane, 19 N. J. Eq. 166; 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1067. "Where a woman, having issue, dies possessed of an equitable estate in land, of which her husband holds the legal title, the husband is entitled to curtesy therein." Ogden v. Ogden, 60 Ark. 70, 46 Am. St. Rep. 151, 28 S. W. 796.

The decree is affirmed for the reasons given in this opinion.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN, & SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

BEATRICE BUCKNER.

(— Ark. —, 115 S. W. 923.)

Damages — mental anguish — fear — failure to heat station.

Mental anguish for fear of going into consumption is not an element of damage to be allowed against a railroad company because of whose neglect to heat its passenger station a passenger is made ill with cold and fever.

(January 18, 1909.)

Case Note. — Apprehension of injury to health as basis of recovery for mental anguish.

Whether or not apprehension of future injury to health is a proper element of damage in an action based on mental anguish, or in which mental anguish is in general allowed as an element of damage, is apparently determined by the majority of the decisions, according as the apprehension is real and reasonable, or only vague and fanciful. This distinction is clearly pointed out in Watson v. Augusta Brewing Co. 124 Ga. 121, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1178, 110 Am. St. Rep. 157, 52 S. E. 152, where it was held that one who, in drinking soda water, swallows several small pieces of glass negligently allowed to be in the beverage by the defendant, and which are subsequently removed from his stomach, leaving apparently no injury, may recover on account of mental suffering caused by the fear of death while the glass was in his stomach; but a vague fear after the removal of the glass and he has been restored to health, that some time in the future he may again suffer as the result of his injury, cannot be made an element of damage in a suit against the manufacturer of the beverage.

In a few cases apprehension of the future effects of the bite of a dog has been held to be a proper element of damage in an action for personal injuries.

Thus, in Godeau v. Blood, 52 Vt. 251, 36 Am. Rep. 751, the court said: "The apprehension of poison from the bite of the dog PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Chicag County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. M. Mehaffy and E. B. Kinsworthy, for appellant:

Such mental anguish, and such only, as is so intimately connected with the physical injury as to render a separation impracticable, is the subject of damages.

Hot Springs R. Co. v. Deloney, 65 Ark. 177, 67 Am. St. Rep. 913, 45 S. W. 351; 6 Thomp. Neg. 7320; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1816; 13 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 137 (2), p. 138, note 99, pp. 39, 41, note 12; Chicago City R. Co. v. Anderson, 80 Ill. App. 71; Chicago City R. Co. v. Taylor, 170 Ill. 49, 48 N. E. 831; Morse v. Duncan, 14 Fed. 398; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Caulfield, 11 C. C. A. 552, 27 U. S. App. 358, 63 Fed. 396; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Chance, 57 Kan. 40, 45 Pac. 60; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wilson, 70 Ark. 143, 91 Am. St. Rep. 74, 66 S. W. 661.

Messrs. R. A. Buckner and Garland Street for appellee.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee was a passenger on appellant's train from Lake village to Dermott. She had to change cars at Halley's station. She arrived there at 1 o'clock P. M. and waited until 3.25 P. M. for the train to Dermott. She alleged that the negligence of appellant in failing to keep its waiting room at Halley's station comfortably heated caused her and the fear and solicitude as to evil results therefrom—all pain, anguish, solicitude occasioned by the bite—were proper matters for consideration by the jury in estimating the damages."

And fear of hydrophobia from the bite of a dog was held in Warner v. Chamberlain, 7 Houst. (Del.) 18, 30 Atl. 638, to be a proper element of damage in an action against the owner of the dog for personal injuries from its bite.

The admission, in an action for personal injuries caused by the bite of a dog, of evidence that plaintiff was informed by a physician that she was in danger of hydrophobia, lockjaw, and blood poison, which admission was for the purpose of showing the effect of the injuries upon the plaintiff's mind, was held error in Trinity & S. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 690, 46 S. W. 389; but the court said: "Mental suffering resulting proximately from the bite of the dog formed an element of damage; . . . but the inquiry should have been confined to the proof of such suffering, without bringing in the statements of others of facts which were calculated to mislead the jury." While the question under discussion was not squarely passed upon by the court, the implication is that apprehension of future disease may be a basis of recovery; and the case cites Godeau v. Blood, supra, with approval.

There are a few other cases which involve this question.

Thus, where there was evidence that the plaintiff was suffering from partial mental disability because of injuries received through the negligence of the defendant, it was held, in Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 71 N. H. 271, 51 Atl. 918, that if, as the result of mental disability induced by the defendant's fault, the plaintiff suffered from the apprehension of insanity, such suffering was an element of her damage.

So, also, in Butts v. National Exch. Bank. 99 Mo. App. 168, 72 S. W. 1083, the court said: "Plaintiff should have been permitted 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to show, as an element of damage, that he was in reasonable apprehension of blood poisoning as the possible, if not probable, consequence of his injury. Mental suffering, when a condition of mind produced by physical injury and attending it, is as proper an element of the damage sustained as the actual physical injury accompanying and causing it."

And in Southern Kansas R. Co. v. McSwain (Tex. Civ. App.) 118 S. W. 874, it was held that it was not error to permit the plaintiff to testify that he suffered mental anguish by reason, among other things, of "the fear that blood poison might set in and prove fatal."

In Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cole, 165 Ill. 334, 46 N. E. 275, it was said that certain remarks of counsel were improper to the extent that they sought "to have the jury infer that their verdict might include damages for future mental anguish which might be suffered by the plaintiff from a contemplation of what might occur." It will be noted that the court speaks of "future mental anguish," but the objectionable remarks set out in the opinion indicate present rather than future mental anguish, and the meaning of the court is not quite plain. However, the remarks of the court are really dicta, as the counsel for defendant did not object at the proper time, and the court declined to consider the objection.

In Cincinnati Traction Co. v. McKee, 27 Ohio C. C. 630, the court sustained the charge of the trial court that the plaintiff was entitled to recover compensation for resulting worry, anxiety, and care about the consequences of the injury, upon the authority of Smith v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 23 Ohio St. 10; but in the latter case the court went no farther than to hold that mental anguish was a proper element of damage in an action for the public expulsion from a train, and there was no apprehension of future injury to health in the case.

great bodily pain and mental anguish; that, upon her arrival at home, she was prostrated with cold and fever, caused by the negligence of appellant as above alleged; and that since that time she has been an invalid. She sued appellant, laying her damages at the sum of $5,000. The appellant denied all the material allegations of the complaint.

The evidence on behalf of appellee tended to show: That she was a passenger of appellant from Lake village to Dermott. That, on arriving at Halley's station she went into the depot. There was no fire there. She was suffering very much with the cold. It was a drizzling, windy, cold day. She had a chill while in the depot. The telegraph office adjoined the waiting room. There was a fire in it, but the agent would not permit passengers to avail themselves of it. The agent knew there was no fire in the waiting room. Appellee testified that after she got home she ached all over; that she had not recovered at the time of the trial from the effects of the cold and fever. She had fever and a cough the first month, and after that stomach trouble developed. After she had the cold and fever two months, gastritis set in, and her illness continued for months, necessitating her being carried to a sanitarium at Little Rock. Appellee goes into detail in explaining her long illness, the expenses thereof, and the suffering she endured by reason thereof. It is unnecessary to set out the testimony on this issue. It suffices to say the evidence is sufficient here to support the verdict.

During the examination of appellee the following questions were asked and answers given:

Q. You said that while you were suffering from the bronchitis, or whatever it was, your physical condition became so weakened, and you was worried. What occasioned that worry?

A. It was fear of death. I was very fearful that I would die. I was badly frightened.

Q. Did you have any particular reason for being frightened?

A. Yes, sir; I haven't any desire to die. I have a desire to live. I knew I was in a dying condition. I had a sister to die in my house with consumption. I wouldn't have undergone the mental suffering for a million dollars.

Q. Mrs. Buckner, you said yesterday that you suffered mentally from fear, and thought you were going to die. What produced that fear, aside from the disease you were suffering from?

A. I had a sister die from consumption. I knew all the symptoms. I nursed her. When my fever continued for weeks. I was afraid I was going into consumption. My 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

mental worry I wouldn't have endured for a million dollars.

Appellant properly saved its exceptions to the introduction of this evidence.

"It is a fundamental rule of law," says this court, through Judge Riddick, in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bragg, 69 Ark. 402, 86 Am. St. Rep. 206, 64 S. W. 226, "that to recover damages on account of the unintentional negligence of another it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence thereof and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances." It should have been foreseen by appellant that its failure to keep its waiting room for passengers properly heated on a cold, damp day would naturally cause a delicate female passenger like appellee to have a cold, chill, fever, and even bronchitis, and to suffer the mental anguish that usually and naturally accompanies such ailments. But no one could contemplate, or would be expected to anticipate, that, if appellee became ill with cold, fever, bronchitis (or even gastritis) through the negligence of appellant in failing to heat its waiting room, she would, as a natural consequence of such illness, also be tortured with the "fear and dread of death." Much less could anyone reasonably be expected to foresee, if appellee, through the negligence as alleged, became ill as alleged, that, as the natural consequence of such illness, she would be "afraid of going into consumption." It was not shown that consumption was a natural and proximate consequence of physical injuries of the kind complained of here. The mental agony which appellee "wouldn't have endured for a million dollars" was caused by the fear that she was going into consumption. In law the proximate and natural, and not the remote and unnatural, cause and results are considered. Now, mental anguish of the character shown by this evidence is, at most, but a remote consequence of the physical injury which appellant is alleged to have caused. The jury in such cases should be allowed to consider only that mental anguish which accompanies the injury itself, which is fairly and reasonably the natural consequence that flows from it. 13 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 137 (2); Id. p. 138, note 99; Id. pp. 39, 41, note 12.

"The correct doctrine," says Mr. Sutherland, "as we conceive, is that, if the act or neglect complained of was wrongful, and the injury sustained resulted in the natural order of cause and effect, the person injured thereby is entitled to recover. There need not be in the mind of the individual whose act or omission has wrought the injury the least contemplation of the probable consequences of his conduct. He is responsible therefor because the result proximately follows his wrongful act or nonaction. All persons are imperatively required to foresee what will be the natural consequences of their acts and omissions according to the usual course of nature and the general experience. The lawfulness of their acts and the degree of care required of them depend upon this foresight." Sutherland, Damages, pp. 42, 43, and cases cited; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1816, and numerous cases cited in note; Watson, Damages, for Personal Injuries, § 36. Some cases go even further, holding that the mental anguish must arise necessarily and spontaneously from the physical injury. Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561; Chicago City R. Co. v. Anderson, 80 Ill. App. 71. "The mental suffering is an element of damages recoverable in an action at law, because . . . [mental sufferings] are so intimately connected [with physical injuries] as to make separation impracticable." Peay v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 64 Ark. 538, 39 L.R.A. 463, 43 S. W. 965. See also Hot Springs R. Co. v. Deloney, 65 Ark. 177, 67 Am. St. Rep. 913, 45 S. W. 351; 6 Thomp. Neg. 7320.

The court erred, therefore, in admitting the above testimony, and, having admitted it, also erred in giving the following instruction: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the exposure of plaintiff in the waiting room at Halley station was the proximate cause of her illness, and that said exposure was occasioned by and due to the negligence of the defendant company, they will find for the plaintiff, and assess her damages in such amount, not exceeding $5,000, the amount sued for, as they may believe from the evidence will be a just and fair compensation to her for all of the expense and pain and suffering, both mental and physical, which they find from the evidence was the result of such negligence." Under this instruction the jury may have considered that mental anguish shown by the incompetent testimony above discussed was the result of appellant's negligence, and therefore a proper element of damage; for they were authorized to assess damages for all suffering, both mental and physical. The instruction, however, would not have been misleading but for the incompetent testimony; for there are other instructions limiting the damages to be assessed to such as were the direct and proximate result of the negligence of appellant.

It follows, from what we have said, that the argument of counsel, based upon the above incompetent evidence, was erroneous and prejudicial.

The other objectionable argument it is not necessary to set out and discuss. It was 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

highly improper, and we assume that it will not be repeated. The cross-examination of appellee, which her counsel claims provoked the argument, was strictly within the bounds of legitimate cross-examination, and furnished no excuse for the reference by appellee's counsel to matters not in evidence and beyond the scope of legal argument. As the cause must be reversed for the error considered above, we will not determine whether this error of allowing the improper argument was cured by the admonition and rebuke which the court gave the counsel for making it.

The other assignments of error are not well taken.

For the error indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for new trial.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, &
ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY,
Appt.,

v.
HARTFORD CITY.

(170 Ind. 674, 82 N. E. 787.)

Municipal corporation — ordinance — railroad crossings — light.

1. An ordinance requiring railroad companies to light street crossings is so far a reasonable exercise of the police power that the court will not declare it an unconstitutional interference with property rights of the railroad company.

Interstate commerce — lights at crossings.

2. Requiring an interstate railroad company to light its crossings in a city does not interfere with its rights as an interstate road, although the effect will be to compel those in charge of the engine to run slowly and cautiously in approaching the light to prevent its interfering with their duty to keep a lookout along the track by obscuring vision past it.

Municipal ordinance — passage — hearing.

3. A railroad company is not entitled to a hearing upon the question of the passage of an ordinance requiring it to light its street crossings.

Legislature — delegation of power.

4. The legislature may delegate to a municipality the selection of the character of light which it will require a railroad company to maintain at its street crossings.

Railroad — crossing lights — duration.

5. A municipal corporation may require a light maintained by a railroad company at a street crossing to be burning for five minutes before the passage of a train.

Note. — As to power to compel railroad company to light its tracks in cities, see case note to Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Salem, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 658.

Constitutional law — statute — discrimination.

6. Permitting only cities, not operating under special charters, to require railroad companies to light the street crossings within their limits does not render the statute invalid.

Municipal ordinance — definiteness.

7. An ordinance requiring railroad companies to light street crossings with lights of sufficient power to light the entire crossing is not invalid because of a provision that the power shall not exceed that of the lights used by the city, on the ground that the requirement is indefinite.

Same — construction.

8. An ordinance requiring a railroad company to maintain at street crossings lights of sufficient power to light the entire crossing, not exceeding in power the light used by the city, requires a light sufficient to enable a traveler with good sight in the nighttime to perceive, before going onto the crossing, the tracks at the point of intersection and the character of the way across the same.

Municipal power — implication.

9. Statutory authority to a municipality to prescribe the kind of lights a railroad company shall maintain at street crossings empowers it to direct a light to be located there.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Municipal ordinance — right to question.

10. A railroad company directed by municipal ordinance to light its street crossings has no right to question in the courts the necessity of the ordinance, or the fairness, honesty, or propriety of the exercise of the power.

(November 26, 1907.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Grant County convicting it of violating a municipal ordinance requiring the lighting of street crossings. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George E. Ross for appellant.

Mr. L. F. Sprague for appellee.

Gillett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action by appellee against appellant for the violation of a city ordinance. The charge is that the defendant violated said ordinance "by then and there unlawfully failing, neglecting, and refusing, while operating said railway as aforesaid, to keep and maintain an electric light at a point where said tracks across Walnut street, in said city, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of sufficient power to light the entire of said Walnut street crossing, but not to exceed the power of the electric lights in use in said city." The ordinance requires that the company shall keep and maintain electric lights at certain points, where its tracks intersect streets in said city, of sufficient power to light "the entire of said crossings," but not to exceed the power of the electric lights used in said city, and also to keep said lights supplied with a sufficient amount of electric current, and burning for five minutes before the arrival of each and every engine and train of cars at said crossing, and until after such engine and train of cars has departed, at all times in the nighttime when there is no moon, or the moon is obscured. Appellant answered in seven paragraphs. Demurrers were sustained to the last four of said paragraphs. The fourth paragraph challenged, in general terms, the reasonableness of said ordinance. The fifth paragraph alleged that defendant was a large taxpayer in said city, and that said lights would be of no benefit to it, but for the exclusive use and benefit of those using said streets. The paragraph concluded with a charge that the requirement of the ordinance amounted to a taking of defendant's property without just compensation and without due process of law, contrary to the Constitution of the United States. The sixth paragraph set up the fact that defendant is a railroad company, organized and existing under the laws of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, and as such is a common carrier of freight and passengers between the states, and is also engaged in transporting United States mails; that it is necessary that all of defendant's locomotives used in carrying on said business should be equipped with a headlight to enable the engineer and fireman properly to perform their duties, and that the existence of an electric light at said street crossing would impair the efficiency of said headlights, and obscure and diminish, and in effect destroy, the light therefrom, and prevent the engineer and fireman from performing their duties, thus endangering defendant's trains and the passengers and freight carried thereon. That an electric light would prevent persons using said crossing from seeing the headlight upon an approaching locomotive, and would hinder and prevent defendant's servants operating said trains from seeing persons and objects along its tracks, thus increasing the danger to those using said street and incapacitating defendant from the performance of its duties as a carrier of interstate commerce and United States mails. The seventh paragraph challenges the constitutional validity of said ordinance as a taking of property without just compensation and without due process of law; and it contains the averment that said ordinance was passed without affording appellant an opportunity to be heard relative thereto. The court found the facts specially, and filed conclusions of law thereon, which were adverse to appellant. A judgment against it followed, and from said judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The constitutional objections which appellant's counsel urge to the ordinance are, for the most part, indicated by the last four paragraphs of answer. It appears to us that these questions are pretty well solved by the consideration of whether the ordinance is so far reasonable, as an attempted exercise of the police power, that the court should, under the grant of authority found in the statute then in force (§ 5173, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1901), defer to the determination of the local legislative authority as to the expediency to its requirement. It is true that the courts will arrest an arbitrary or plainly unreasonable exercise of the police power, where there has been an attempt thereby to lay a burden upon a subject in the use or enjoyment of his property; yet, notwithstanding this, the courts recognize that, as respects the police power, there is a broad authority within the field of legislative discretion, wherein, as respects what is good and expedient, the lawmaking power is absolutely the master of its own discretion. The ordinance in question does not fix the height of the electric light, and appellant would be within the requirements of the ordinance if the light were located at such a height that the engineer would not be required to look directly toward it. This being so, we are of opinion, notwithstanding the broad allegations of the sixth paragraph of the answer, that the court knows enough of electric lighting to affirm that, at the most, there would be presented only a question of expediency, relative to what it would be wise to do in the premises, and the mere fact that we might be of opinion that the ordinance was in some measure unsuited to the attainment of its ostensible end would not justify us in striking it down. It must be presumed that the purpose of the requirement in question is to add to the security of life and limb, and the possibility that a traveler might unwittingly pass into danger at the crossing, particularly if in a conveyance, without real opportunity to safeguard himself by looking and listening, is too great to warrant us in holding that the light may not be required, even if its effect be to compel the engineer to run slowly or cautiously in approaching it.

Granting that the ordinance in question 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

may in some degree affect interstate commerce, we are nevertheless of opinion that, as a local regulation designed to protect travelers upon the street, it was competent to establish the same. The railroad was built by the authority of the state, and, whether an interstate carrier or otherwise, the company must, so long as Congress does not interfere, submit to reasonable local regulations in the use of its property. Any other holding would substitute government by a board of directors for government by the representatives of the people. It was said in Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851, that it is "within the undoubted province of the state legislature to make regulations with regard to the speed of railroad trains in the neighborhood of cities and towns, with regard to the precautions to be taken in the approach of such trains to bridges, tunnels, deep cuts, and sharp curves; and generally with regard to all operations in which the lives and health of people may be endangered, even though such regulations affect to some extent the operations of interstate commerce. Such regulations are eminently local in their character, and, in the absence of congressional regulations over the same subject, are free from all constitutional objections and unquestionably valid." In Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 41 L. ed. 166, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086, the Federal Supreme Court upheld, against an interstate railroad, a statute of the state of Georgia forbidding the running of freight trains on Sunday. In Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 288, 43 L. ed. 703, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465, that court upheld the right of the state to promote the convenience of local passengers by requiring all railroads to stop three trains a day (should so many be run) at all cities or towns in the state of more than 3,000 inhabitants. In that case the court said: "The plaintiff in error accepted its charter subject, necessarily, to the condition that it would conform to such reasonable regulations as the state might from time to time establish that were not in violation of the supreme law of the land. In the absence of legislation by Congress, it would be going very far to hold that such an enactment as the one before us was in itself a regulation of interstate commerce. It was for the state to take into consideration all the circumstances affecting passenger travel within its limits, and, as far as practicable, make such regulations as were just to all who might pass over the road in question. . . . Any other view of the relations between the state and the corporation created by it would mean that the directors of the corporation could manage its affairs solely with reference to the interests of stockholders, and without taking into consideration the interests of the general public." It was further held in that case that the statute authorizing railroad companies to carry the mails did not prohibit the enactment of reasonable police regulations by the state. See also St. Bernard v. C. C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 7 Ohio N. P. 183, 4 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 371; note to People v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. as reported in 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1. Of course, the courts are open to appellant to challenge the validity of the ordinance as an attempted exercise of the police power, but, as the act was one of a legislative character, and was not judicial, appellant was not entitled to a hearing on the question whether the ordinance should be passed. The ordinance does not amount to a taking of property without just compensation. The regulation being a just exercise of the police power, appellant must submit to the requirement, even though it lays some expense or inconvenience upon it. There is too large a body of legislative regulations of this character which have received judicial sanction by the highest courts to make the proposition a debatable one. The mere fact that the general assembly has seen fit to give the common council the power to prescribe the character of the light,—with respect to its being electrical or otherwise,—and that the latter body has required that the lighting shall be done by electricity, affords no sufficient ground for an overthrow of the ordinance. As was said in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U. S. 267, 48 L. ed. 971, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638: "Great constitutional provisions must be administered with caution. Some play must be allowed for the joints of the machine, and it must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts." Nor does it appear to us that the common council exceeded its authority in requiring the light to be burning for five minutes before the arrival of a train. Such a provision as to the time that the light shall be burning is a very moderate one, and can well be defended on the ground that it is calculated to make it more certain that the duty will be performed.

The validity of the statute is questioned, in that it purports to be a grant of power to all cities not operating under a special charter. We may grant that this makes the statute special in its character, but from this it does not follow that it is invalid. As long as the legislation is not of a character sufficiently radical to amount to the creation of a municipal corporation, within the prohibition of § 13 of article 11 of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) state Constitution, we know of no constitutional provision, Federal or state, which is offended by a mere difference in the extent of lawmaking power which is granted to different cities or towns. As applied to the statute in question, it may be said that each street and railroad intersection presents its own considerations for the determination of the municipal legislature, and it is no discrimination that such power is not given to every city, or that every such intersection in the state is not ordered lighted.

It is contended by appellant's counsel that the ordinance is within the condemnation of Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Salem, 166 Ind. 71, 76 N. E. 631, because of the provision that the power shall not exceed that of the lights used by the city. In that case there was no standard fixed, except the shifting standard of the lights which the city might from time to time use, and it was held unreasonable to enforce by penalty a requirement that would compel the company to take notice of changes dehors the ordinance. Here the requirement is that the light shall be "of sufficient power to light the entire of said Walnut street crossing." And the limitation thereon is designed merely to keep the ordinance from calling on the company to do more than the statute authorizes. In other words, if such limitation were not found in the words of the ordinance, it would still be subject to the statute. We are of opinion that in this respect the case is ruled by Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Crawfordsville, 164 Ind. 70, 72 N. E. 1025. The ordinance is not so indefinite in its requirement as to be invalid. Upon the hearing of such a case, it would be the duty of the court to construe the ordinance, and we are of opinion that its legal effect is to require a light of sufficient power (not exceeding that used by the city) to enable a traveler, of good eyesight, in the nighttime, before going upon the crossing, to see the tracks at the point of intersection and the character of the way across the same. While it may be that a light of greater power than this might be required by the city, yet, as a matter of legal construction, any uncertainty must cut down the operation of the ordinance until it be brought within the limits of the clear requirements of the provision, and, when so construed, it must be said that the standard of duty is definite. See Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Crawfordsville, supra.

We regard the complaint as sufficient. The statute specifically authorizes the city by ordinance or resolution to "provide what kind of lights the railroad company shall maintain," and, as a proper means to an authorized end, we are of opinion that it was proper for the common council to direct that a light be located at the street intersection. There is no available error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following Per Curiam response was handed down July 2, 1908:

The only question which we deem it important further to discuss relates to the insistence of appellant's counsel that there was a right to form issues of fact regarding the necessity of the ordinance, and as to whether the exercise of the power was fair, honest, and proper. It is scarcely necessary to state, we take it, that, as an exercise of a legislative power, pursuant to a proper delegation of authority, an ordinance of a city stands on the same general footing as an act of the legislature. See Schmidt v. Indianapolis, 168 Ind. 631, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 787, 120 Am. St. Rep. 386, 80 N. E. 632. It was stated in Citizens' Gas & Min. Co. v. Elwood, 114 Ind. 332, 336, 16 N. E. 624, 626, that an ordinance "means a local law, prescribing a general and permanent rule." "The city is a miniature state, the council 'is its legislature, the charter is its Constitution; and it is enough if, in that, the power is granted in general terms, for, when granted, it must necessarily be exercised subject to all limitations imposed by constitutional provisions." Paulsen v. Portland, 149 U. S. 30, 38, 37 L. ed. 637, 640, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 750, 753. Cases might be conceived of wherein a question of fact might be raised as a means of arresting a legislative act, as, for instance, an inquiry might be made whether a law regulating the charges of a public service corporation amounted to a taking of property in the particular instance; but we regard it as a general rule that the determination, by a legislative tribunal, of open or debatable questions concerning what is expedient, is not subject to review on questions of fact, provided that the question is one within the competency of the legislative tribunal to determine. See Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921; Paulsen v. Portland, supra; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 174, 41 L. ed. 369, 394, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Edwards v. Cooper, 168 Ind. 54, 79 N. E. 1047.

The view that legislative action can, in general, be made to depend upon the varying opinions of juries concerning its necessity or propriety is wholly out of accord with the nature of a written law. This is illustrated by Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 41, 12 L. ed. 581, 598, wherein the Supreme Court of the 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

United States used the following language: "The question as to the majority is a question of fact. It depends upon the testimony of witnesses, and, if the testimony offered by the plaintiff had been received, the defendants had the right to offer evidence to rebut it; and there might, probably would, have been conflicting testimony as to the number of voters in the state; and as to the legal qualifications of many of the individuals who had voted. The decision would therefore have depended upon the relative credibility of witnesses, and the weight of testimony; and, as the case before the circuit court was an action at common law, the question of fact, according to the 7th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, must have been tried by the jury. In one case a jury might find that the Constitution which the plaintiff supported was adopted by a majority of the citizens of the state, or of the voters entitled to vote by the existing law. Another jury, in another case, might find otherwise. And, as a verdict is not evidence in a suit between different parties, if the courts of the United States have the jurisdiction contended for by the plaintiff, the question whether the acts done under the charter of the government during the period in contest are valid or not must always remain unsettled and open to dispute. The authority and security of the state governments do not rest on such unstable foundations." As was said in Lusher v. Scites, 4 W. Va. 11, 14: "To exercise the power, the legislature must inform itself of the existence of the facts prerequisite to enable it to act on the subject. How it shall do so, and on what evidence, the legislature alone must determine; and, when so determined, it must conclude further inquiry by all other departments of the government; and the final action, terminating in an act of legislation in due form, must, of necessity, presuppose and determine all the facts prerequisite to the enactment, and that, too, as fully and as effectually as a final judgment of a competent judicial tribunal of general jurisdiction would do in like case."

In De Camp v. Eveland, 19 Barb. 81, 89, the court well observed: "The Constitution declares that the legislative power of the state is vested in the senate and assembly. This legislative power is the very highest attribute of sovereignty, and its depositary the embodiment and concentration of the whole political force of the body politic, with such restraints only as the charter of government has imposed. . . . The legislatures are nowhere restrained, directed, or limited in regard to the nature, grade, or character of evidence which they must have

as the basis of their action, or to guide them in their decisions. In some specified cases their power is limited, and in others conditional, depending upon the existence of certain facts. But they must necessarily decide whether such facts exist. Their general power to prescribe and regulate evidence for every other tribunal in the state has never been questioned, and it would present a singular anomaly if they were wanting in power to do the same for themselves, or to alter and change the same at pleasure; and it would be equally strange if any judicial tribunal in the state were permitted to review their decision upon the question of fact, on the existence of which their power to legislate in a particular case is made to depend. If such a thing were to be tolerated, it is not perceived why the existence of the fact in question may not, and in many cases must not, be proper to be submitted to a jury. It is believed that but a few would be bold enough to contend for a principle pregnant with such absurd results." In reviewing the act of a legislative body, involving an exercise of the police power, all reasonable assumptions must be indulged in its favor, and in determining upon its validity the court will treat the question as one of law, resort being had to extrinsic considerations only to the extent that the facts are, or may become, a matter of judicial knowledge.

We perceive no ground for the granting of a rehearing, and the petition is therefore overruled.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM MCGILL

v.

PINTSCH COMPRESSING COMPANY,
Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 118 N. W. 786.)

Nuisance — smoke.

1. To constitute the imparting of smoke to the atmosphere a nuisance to neighboring property, it must have been emitted in unreasonable amounts or in an unreasonable manner in view of the locality and surroundings, and must be such as to render the occupancy of such property physically uncomfortable to a person of ordinary sensibilities for the purpose to which it is devoted.

Same — noise.

2. To render noise a nuisance, it must be of such a character as to be of actual physical discomfort to persons of ordinary sensibilities.

Same — manufacturing plant.

3. The operation of a manufacturing plant 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

in such a manner that the noise from the engine exhaust shakes neighboring houses and the smoke from the chimneys requires the keeping of windows and doors closed in warm weather and blackens everything exposed constitutes a nuisance.

Same — undesirable business.

4. The owner of property cannot recover damages because of a diminution of its rental value because of the erection of a manufacturing plant near it.

Damages — nuisance — rented property.

5. The owner of property which is to be let as a dwelling cannot recover damages for the temporary operation near it of a manufacturing in such a manner as to constitute a nuisance, unless he shows a diminution in the rental value of the property because of the manner in which the manufacturing is conducted.

(December 15, 1908.)

Case Note. — Gas plant as a nuisance.

This note is confined to the question whether it is a nuisance to permit noxious and noisome vapors or substances to escape from a gas manufacturing to the annoyance and injury of others, and does not include nuisances arising from the escape of gas from pipes in streets or highways, the latter question being covered by the note appended to the case of Hagerstown v. Witmer, 39 L.R.A. 680.

As to the liability for negligence in the escape or explosion of gas from pipes in streets, see the note to Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews, 29 L.R.A. 339.

As to municipal control of all smoke as a public nuisance, see the note to St. Louis v. Edward Heitzberg Packing & Provision Co. 39 L.R.A. 551, and Atlantic City v. France, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 156: as to the use of soft coal as a nuisance see the note to McCarty v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465.

In general.

It was held in Donahue v. Stockton Gas & Electric Co. 6 Cal. App. 276, 92 Pac. 196, that a public nuisance was stated by a complaint alleging, in substance, that a gas manufacturing plant was operated and maintained in such a manner as to cast into the air poisonous vapors and large quantities of smoke, together with other disagreeable and offensive substances, which corrupted, polluted, and poisoned the air in a designated section of the city, and especially that portion "belonging" to the complainant. and thereby rendered the residences unfit for occupancy, unhealthy, uncomfortable, and useless as homes.

The emission of noxious and noisome vapors and smoke from a gas manufacturing, which endangers the health or comfort of the inhabitants of neighboring dwellings or renders the property less valuable, constitute a private nuisance which will be enjoined. Brown v. Illius, 25 Conn. 583, s. c. second APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the District Court for Pottawattamie County restraining the operation of a manufacturing plant alleged to be a nuisance to neighboring property and awarding damages therefor. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wright & Baldwin, for appellant:

A depreciation of rental value cannot be recovered because of a prejudice which rests against this property in consequence of the location and operation of the plant.

Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. p. 3058; Robb v. Carnegie Bros. 145 Pa. 324, 14 L.R.A. 329, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694, 22 Atl. 649; San Antonio v. Mackey, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 145, 54 S. W. 33; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 696.

appeal 27 Conn. 84, 71 Am. Dec. 49; Farley v. Gate City Gaslight Co. 105 Ga. 323, 31 S. E. 193, s. c. 95 Ga. 796, 23 S. E. 119; Ottawa Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Thompson, 39 Ill. 598; Belvidere Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ill. App. 424; Terre Haute Gas Co. v. Teel, 20 Ind. 131; Baldwin v. Oskaloosa Gaslight Co. 57 Iowa, 51, 10 N. W. 317; Matthews v. Stillwater Gas & Electric Light Co. 63 Minn. 493, 65 N. W. 947; Cleveland v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 201; Crammer v. Atlantic City Gas & Water Co. 39 N. J. Eq. 76; Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 122 N. Y. 18, 9 L.R.A. 711, 25 N. E. 246; affirming 45 Hun, 257; Rosenheimer v. Standard Gaslight Co. 36 App. Div. 1, 55 N. Y. Supp. 192; Rosenheimer v. Standard Gaslight Co. 39 App. Div. 482, 57 N. Y. Supp. 330; Francklyn v. People's Heat & Light Co. 32 N. S. 44; Watson v. Gas Co. 5 U. C. Q. B. 262.

And in Rosenheimer v. Standard Gaslight Co. 36 App. Div. 1, 55 N. Y. Supp. 192, in which the operation of a gas plant was enjoined, the additional element of the deposit of a sticky black substance upon the adjoining premises, as well as upon the contents of the dwelling house thereon, was presented; and, in addition, the blowing up of the fires in the gas works caused loud penetrating and disagreeable noises and vapors, especially in the nighttime.

And, in a companion case arising out of the same facts as the last case the court enjoined the nuisance where it also appeared that loud explosions and noises known as the "blow off, or pop off," and the flash of lights from the burning gases at the stack valves when the furnaces were replenished, added to the general discomfort. Rosenheimer v. Standard Gaslight Co. 39 App. Div. 482, 57 N. Y. Supp. 330.

And in Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. supra, and Rosenheimer v. Standard Gaslight Co. 36 App. Div. 1, 55 N. Y. Supp. 192, where the operation of a gas plant was enjoined, in addition to odors arising from the manufacture of gas, disagreeable and noisome odors and vapors also arose from naph-

The noise, to warrant recovery, must be unusual, ill-timed, or deafening.

Butterfield v. Klaber, 52 How. Pr. 255; McKeon v. See, 4 Robt. 449; Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co. 72 Iowa, 182, 33 N. W. 456; Biedeman v. Atlantic City R. Co. (N. J. Ch.) 19 Atl. 731; Carroll v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 40 Minn. 168, 41 N. W. 661; Romer v. St. Paul City R. Co. 75 Minn. 211, 74 Am. St. Rep. 455, 77 N. W. 825; Doellner v. Tynan, 38 How. Pr. 176; Culver v. Ragan, 15 Ohio C. C. 228; Hafer v. Guyman, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 21; Hughes v. General Electric Light & P. Co. 107 Ky. 485, 54 S. W. 723; McCann v. Strang, 97 Wis. 551, 72 N. W. 1117; McCaffrey's Appeal, 105 Pa. 253; Gilbert v. Showerman, 23 Mich. 448.

In determining whether the maintenance tha stored upon the premises of the defendant.

To render a gas works a nuisance where it pollutes the air with noxious smells and vapors, it is not necessary that the owners of adjacent property shall be thereby driven from their dwellings; it is enough that the enjoyment of life and property is thereby rendered uncomfortable. Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. supra.

In Cleveland v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. supra, a company constructing a gas plant in a residential neighborhood was enjoined from using the so-called lime process for purifying gas, as well as any process of which lime was a substantial part, which sends forth noisome and noxious vapors and smoke, or manufacturing gas in any manner which would produce annoyance to persons dwelling near by, either by smoke, gases, odors, or other effluvia that might issue therefrom.

In Pottstown Gas Co. v. Murphy, 39 Pa. 257, the court held that an instruction, in an action against a gas company for maintaining a nuisance, defining a nuisance, as "wantonly, unnecessarily, or oppressively causing such smells as to annoy the plaintiff in a special and peculiar degree beyond others in the immediate vicinity;" when taken in connection with the further instruction that "a certain degree of offensive odor is inevitably incident to the business, and must be endured by the public" was as favorable to the defendant as a more perfect one would have been.

It was said in Bradbury Marble Co. v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 128 Mo. App. 96, 106 S. W. 594, that the operation of gas-making machinery is not a nuisance per se when not operated in a negligent manner; and whether it constitutes a nuisance to an adjoining landowner depends upon whether it interferes with the ordinary use and enjoyment of his property.

The destruction of trees, shrubs, and flowers, and rendering the adjoining soil unproductive by reason of the escape of noxious vapors and poisonous percolations from gas works, is a nuisance. Donahue v. Stockton of a lawful business, productive of noises or offensive gases of stenches, amounts to a nuisance, it is necessary to take into consideration all of the surrounding circumstances, such as the character of the stench or gas complained of, the constancy or frequency of the annoyance, the extent of the injury or inconvenience occasioned thereby, the nature of the business or erection, its location, the manner in which it is conducted or kept, and, in case of an erection, the manner of its construction.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 692; Stowe v. Miles, 39 Conn. 426; Com. v. Miller, 139 Pa. 77, 23 Am. St. Rep. 170, 21 Atl. 138; Fay v. Whitman, 100 Mass. 76; Pennoyer v. Allen, 56 Wis. 502, 43 Am. Rep. 728, 14 N. W. 609.

Gas & Electric Co. and Farley v. Gate City Gaslight Co. supra.

And the manufacture of gas in such a manner that the noxious vapors arising therefrom destroy crops upon adjoining premises will be restrained. Broadbent v. Imperial Gas Co. 7 DeG. M. & G. 436.

The owner of premises adjacent to a gas plant is not estopped from objecting to the continuance of a nuisance by reason of the fact that he did not object to its construction, where, ever since its operation began, he repeatedly objected to the continuance of such nuisance. Matthews v. Stillwater Gas & Electric Light Co. supra.

It was held error in Columbus Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Freeland, 12 Ohio St. 392, to instruct the jury to the effect that the degree of comfort one is entitled to in the use of his dwelling near a gas works is that ordinarily enjoyed by others in the same vicinity similarly situated; and that acts of the defendant, by reason of noxious vapors arising from the works, preventing this, would constitute a nuisance,—the vice of such instruction being that it might lead the jury into a mere comparison of the situation of the plaintiff with that of his neighbors, and away from the real question whether, by reason of the defendant's acts, the difference in the enjoyment of the plaintiff's property constituted actual damage to him.

Fouling wells and streams.

It is a nuisance to operate gas works so that percolations from the refuse matter therefrom contaminate the waters of neighboring wells to such an extent as to render them unfit for use. Donahue v. Stockton Gas & Electric Co. 6 Cal. App. 276, 92 Pac. 196; Pensacola Gas Co. v. Pebley, 25 Fla. 381, 5 So. 593; Farley v. Gate City Gaslight Co. 105 Ga. 323, 31 S. E. 193, s. c. 95 Ga. 796, 23 S. E. 119; Ottawa Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Graham, 28 Ill. 73, 81 Am. Dec. 263; Terre Haute Gas Co. v. Teel, 20 Ind. 131; Belvidere Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ill. App. 424; Beatrice Gas Co. v. Thomas, 41 Neb. 662, 43 Am. St. Rep. 711, 59 N. W. 925; Keiser v. Mahanoy City Gas Co. 143 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Dust, smoke, and cinders, even when accompanied by noxious gases, are not nuisances per se.

St. Louis v. Edward Heitzberg Packing & Provision Co. 141 Mo. 375, 39 L.R.A. 551, 64 Am. St. Rep. 516, 42 S. W. 954; Cleveland v. Malm, 5 Ohio N. P. 203; St. Paul v. Gilfillan, 38 Minn. 298, 31 N. W. 49; Roscoe Lumber Co. v. Standard Silica Cement Co. 62 App. Div. 421, 70 N. Y. Supp. 1130.

Messrs. William A. Mynster and E. E. Aylesworth for appellee.

Ladd, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is and has been for the ten years last past engaged in the pro-

Pa. 276, 22 Atl. 759; Pottstown Gas Co. v. Murphy, supra; Shuter v. Philadelphia, 3 Phila. 228.

It is unnecessary that a gas company be aware of the fact that the water of a nearby well is contaminated by it; it is sufficient to sustain a recovery that the natural and probable consequences of the defendant's act caused a nuisance, the result of which it was bound to foresee. Beatrice Gas Co. v. Thomas, supra.

It was held in Brown v. Illius, 25 Conn. 583, that contamination of the water of a well upon adjacent premises by refuse deposited from a gas works near the division line being washed therein by the surface water, as well as by percolation through the soil, constituted a nuisance. Upon a second appeal, however (27 Conn. 84, 71 Am. Dec. 49), this doctrine was limited so as to impose a liability only when such substances are, by means of rain, washed and carried along the surface of the ground into the well without soaking into the soil, or if, although not carried literally on the very surface, they soak into it and are thence spread and diffused laterally towards the plaintiff's land, and find their way into the well without mingling with any of the underground streams or currents of water by which the well is fed and supplied. The court said that in the latter event the defendant would not be liable, even after notice that the plaintiff's well was being thus contaminated, unless the defendant's conduct was malicious.

Under the English act hereinafter cited, a well which is not used by the owner for several years, on account of its having been contaminated by neighboring gas works, does not cease to be a well within the meaning of such act. Millington v. Griffiths, 30 L. T. N. S. 65.

Mere nonuser and covering over of a well in consequence of its being polluted, and the acceptance by the owner of the use of the wells of the defendant, do not constitute such an abandonment as to create a license for the defendant to pollute it. Ibid.

However, one who has a mere license to take water from the well of another cannot duction of compressed gas which it supplies to all the railroad companies whose lines enter Council Bluffs or Omaha. Immediately south and west of the plant are the extensive railroad yards essential to the business of a railroad center, and in other directions dwelling houses. The dwelling of plaintiff, occupied by a tenant, is within 135 feet to the northwest of it, with nothing intervening save a small coal shed. The plant consists of 4 furnaces, constructed of fire brick, with 5 or 6 smokestacks, 24 retorts, each 22 inches wide by 14 inches high, and 10 feet long, constructed of iron and steel. The oil is unloaded into tanks, from which it is drawn into these retorts or crucibles where the gas is produced, and this gas is then passed through the purifier into other tanks, from which it is delivered to purchasers. About four tons of soft coal are burned in twenty-four hours, the plant being operated continuously. It represents an investment of about $100,000, and the annual output approximates that sum in value. The complaint of the plaintiff is that as the prevailing winds are from the southeast in that locality, as the evidence tended to show, these carried such volumes of smoke and soot, together with offensive fumes, emitted from the plant over plaintiff's house as to interfere with its comfortable enjoyment and use, and that the noises from the exhaust on its boiler had the same effect. The sufficiency of the evidence to establish a nuisance is challenged, but, as defendant cheerfully complied with the re-recover damages for its contamination by a gas company. Ottawa Gaslight Co. v. Thompson, 39 Ill. 598.

It is a nuisance to conduct a gas plant in such a manner that refuse therefrom finds its way into a stream, and renders the property of a lower proprietor less valuable by causing noisome and noxious odors to penetrate his hotel to such an extent as to drive away his customers, notwithstanding the refuse from the defendant's gas works was turned into a pit upon its own premises. Keiser v. Mahanoy City Gas Co. supra. The court said: "The manufacturing of illuminating gas in a town or city . . . is a lawful business. If the ordinary processes of manufacture are employed and conducted in the ordinary manner, equity will not restrain the prosecution of the business; but, if the company neglects to make use of the ordinary processes, or the ordinary precautions, and harm is thereby done to others, the negligence will justify intervention by a court of equity to restrain its continuance, and sustain an action at law for the recovery of damages by the injured party."

So, it is a nuisance to contaminate the waters of a stream with tarry and oily substances from gas works to such an extent that the necessary use of the water by a lower proprietor in the manufacture of carpets injures the wool and other materials used therein. Carhart v. Auburn Gaslight Co. 22 Barb. 297.

And the defendant will be liable, notwithstanding the incompact and pervious nature of the soil upon which its plant stands permits it to be percolated by the waters of the stream without its agency or fault, and it is the claim of the defendant that the escaping of any noxious substances into the stream is due to the reflux of such percolations. Carhart v. Auburn Gaslight Co. supra. The court, in substance, said that the defendant could probably have obviated all the damage complained of by draining off the water of the stream from its lot; and that it was bound to do so if it continued its works upon the present site.

The right to recover damages for the deterioration of the value of premises by the pollution of a stream of water flowing beneath and near the surface of the earth under a gas plant, from which a neighboring landowner draws his supply, is recognized in Decatur Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Howell, 92 Ill. 19.

In England it is provided by statute that any gas company that shall empty, drain, or convey, or run, or flow any refuse from its plant into any river, brook, stream, reservoir, canal, aqueduct, or ditch, communicating with any of them, so as to spoil, foul, or corrupt the water contained therein, shall be liable therefor, a penalty being imposed for each offense. This act has been enforced in the following cases: Jordeson v. Sutton, S. & D. Gas Co. [1899] 2 Ch. 217, affirming [1898] 2 Ch. 614; Millington v. Griffiths, supra; Parry v. Croydon Commercial Gas & Coke Co. 15 C. B. N. S. 568.

In Hipkins v. Birmingham & S. Gaslight Co. 6 Hurlst. & N. 250, under its charter, expressly providing that it should be liable for creating a nuisance, a gas company was held liable for fouling a stream.

In a proceeding by indictment against a gas company for a nuisance by casting refuse from its plant into a public river, whereby the fish were destroyed and the water rendered unfit for drinking, it was held to be a question for the jury whether the acts of the defendant amounted to a nuisance. R. v. Medley, 6 Car. & P. 292.

The fact that, by reason of such nuisance, a considerable number of fishermen are thrown out of employment by reason of the diminution of the fish in the river, is not of itself sufficient ground to sustain an indictment. Ibid.

Effect of legislative authority to manufacture.

A gas manufacturing company is not absolved from liability for creating a private nuisance by reason of the fact that it is expressly empowered by the legislature to manufacture and supply gas (Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 122 N. Y. 18. 9 L.R.A. 711, 25 N. E. 246, affirming 45 Hun. 257; Rosenheimer v. Standard Gaslight Co. 36 quirement of the district court that its exhaust pipe be equipped with a muffler and the furnace with a smoke consumer or other device to lessen the escape of smoke, soot, and odors, we need only consider this question in so far as it bears on defendant's liability for damages.

A nuisance is defined by statute to be "whatever is injurious to health, indecent or offensive to the senses, or is an obstruction to the free use of property, so as essentially to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property;" and damages because thereof may be recovered. Code, § 4302. Every person has the right to have the air diffused over his premises in its natural state, freed from artificial impurities, and therefore the use of one's property so as to unwarrantably impregnate the atmosphere with foreign substances, such as smoke, soot, noisome fumes and odors which would not exist therein but for his instrumentality is regarded as a nuisance and is actionable as such. By atmosphere freed from artificial impurities is not meant air absolutely pure, but an atmosphere as free and pure as reasonably could be expected in view of the particular location and the business conducted there. As every chimney or smokestack emits smoke, doing so does not constitute a nuisance per se: St. Paul v. Gilfillan, 36 Minn. 298, 31 N. W. 49; St. Louis v. Edward Heitzberg Packing & Provision Co. 141 Mo. 375, 39 L.R.A. 551, 64 Am. St. Rep. 516, 42 S. W. 954. The air is more heavily laden with it in the thickly settled portions of a city or town than elsewhere, in the business portion more than the residence. Such contaminations are indispensable to the reasonable enjoyment of property, and with these the law does not interfere. Only when an unreasonable amount of smoke is emitted or is emitted in an unreasonable manner so as to inflict injury on another will the courts interfere. There is no precise test by which to determine when the smoke imparted to the atmosphere is of a greater degree than is permissible. The injury must be tangible. Mere annoyance is not enough. It must be such as to render the occupancy of the complainant's premises physically uncomfortable to a person of ordinary sensibilities for the purpose to which devoted. Every person is entitled, generally speaking, to the exclusive and uninterrupted enjoyment of his premises, and to redress if such enjoyment shall be interrupted or diminished. Wood, Nuisances, §§ 495, et seq.

An offensive trade or manufacture may require interference in equity as well as any other nuisance, for, though necessary and lawful, they should be exercised in remote places. Says Judge Cooley concerning the subject generally in Gilbert v. Showerman, 23 Mich. 448: "The right, nevertheless, to have such a business restrained is not absolute and unlimited, but is, and must be in the nature of things, subject to reasonable limitations which have regard to the rights of others not less than to the general public welfare. One man's comfort and enjoyment with reference to his ownership of a parcel of land cannot be considered by itself distinct from the desires and interests of his

App. Div. 1, 55 N. Y. Supp. 192; People v. New York Gaslight Co. 64 Barb. 55, 6 Lans. 467; or by the fact that it erected its plant with the consent of the municipality (Terre Haute Gas Co. v. Teel, 20 Ind. 131).

And this is true even though the plant is owned and operated by a municipal corporation, it being subject to the rule, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, in the same manner as an individual. Shuter v. Philadelphia, 3 Phila. 228.

Nor is a gas company relieved from liability for creating a nuisance by the fact that it is under a public obligation to furnish gas. Atty. Gen. v. Gaslight & Coke Co. L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 217; Terre Haute Gas Co. v. Teel, supra.

If legislative exemption from liability exists, it must be express, or clearly and unquestionably implied from the power expressly conferred; and it must appear that the legislature contemplated the doing of the very acts which caused the injuries. Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. supra.

But the legislative grant of the right to manufacture gas in a city operates as an estoppel against the state indicting it for creating a public nuisance by unwholesome 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

smells, stench, and smoke arising therefrom, which corrupt and render the air offensive, uncomfortable, and unwholesome,—especially when it is conceded that the process of manufacturing gas is the best, and that due care and diligence are used by the gas company in its business. People v. New York Gaslight Co. supra.

Adoption of method free from objectionable features.

Where it appears that a gas company intends to adopt a new process for purifying gas, which will not cause offensive and noisome odors and smells, and to dispose of the offensive refuse by placing it in an underground cistern, from which it will be conveyed through gas-tight pipes into boats and carried away, the construction of gas works in a residential neighborhood of a city will not be restrained. Cleveland v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 201. The court observed that it was not entirely satisfied that it was impossible to manufacture gas in some way that would not create a nuisance, but that it would permit the erection of the works to continue if the gas company desired to do so after hearing the views en-neighbors, as otherwise the wishes of one might control a whole community, and the person most ready to complain might regulate to suit himself the business that should be carried on in his neighborhood. In a crowded city, some annoyance to others is inseparable from almost any employment, and while the proximity of the stables of the dealers in horses, or of the shops of workers of iron or tin, seems an intolerable nuisance to one, another is annoyed and incommoded, though in less degree, by the bundles and boxes of the dealer in dry goods, and the noise and jar of the wagons which deliver, and remove them. Indeed, every kind of business is generally regarded as undesirable in the parts of a city occupied most exclusively by dwellings, and the establishment of the most cleanly and quiet warehouse might, in some neighborhoods, give serious offense and cause great annoyance to the inhabitants. This cannot be otherwise so long as the tastes, desires, judgments, and interests of men differ as they do, and no rule of law can be just which, in endeavoring to protect the interests and subserve the wishes of a complaining party, fails to have equal regard to the interests and wishes of others. The true principle has been said by an eminent jurist to be one 'growing out of the nature of well-ordered civil society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property is held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare. Rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such . . . reasonable restraints and regulations established by law as the legislature, under the governing and controlling power vested in them by the Constitution, may think necessary and expedient: Shaw, Ch. J., in Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 84." So that the degree of freedom from smoke in the atmosphere to which one is entitled is relative, and depends on the locality and prevailing use to which property there is put. What might constitute a nuisance in one locality would be what reasonably might be anticipated in another. As remarked at the outset, the smoke must be emitted in unreasonable amounts or emitted in an unreasonable manner in view of the locality and surroundings, to constitute a nuisance. These principles are of such universal acceptance that it seems unnecessary to cite authorities in their support, but see: Harley v. Merrill Brick Co. 83 Iowa, 73, 48 N. W. 1000; Shively v. Cedar Rapids, 1 F. & N. W. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 169, 7 Am. St. Rep. 471, 37 N. W. 133; Shiras v. Olinger, 50 Iowa, 571, 33 Am. Rep. 138; collection of cases in 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1187 et seq. Precisely the same rule obtains with reference to noises. That they may be disagreeable or annoying is not enough to warrant an interference by the courts. They must be of such a character as to be of actual physical discomfort to persons of ortertained by the court; and that, upon a final hearing, it would have no hesitation in granting a perpetual injunction if it appeared that the works, as proposed to be conducted, would annoy one occupying a house adjacent thereto, although only occasionally, by smoke, gas, or offensive vapors, which might render living there uncomfortable as the defendant had chosen to locate its works in one of the most populous parts of the city it had done so for its own pecuniary advantage, contrary to the usual, if not universal, practice of locating gas works, and if it is correct in its theory that it will be no nuisance at all, it is safe; but if, in view of these general protests against it, it completes the works, it cannot expect the court to take into consideration the total loss of its expenditures if any annoyance to the comfort of plaintiff or others similarly situated should require the use of its works to be suppressed.

And in Haines v. Taylor, 2 Phill. Ch. 209, affirming 10 Beav. 75, Lord Langdale refused to enjoin the erection of a gas works in the plaintiff's vicinity, saying that he regarded it as uncertain whether, when completed, the manufacture of gas would prove a nuisance as it appeared that it was possible to conduct the business without creating a nuisance, and, while he doubted that this could be accomplished, yet, with that doubt hanging over the matter, he would decline to grant an injunction.

So, in Francklyn v. People's Heat & Light Co. 32 N. S. 44, the court refused to enjoin a gas company where it appeared possible to remedy the defects in its works so as to obviate the annoyance created by it, provided the defendant would enter into an undertaking to correct such defects and compensate the plaintiff for the injury already suffered.

Effect of exercise of due care to prevent nuisance.

A gas company is not relieved from liability for maintaining a nuisance by the fact that it conducts its business with all reasonable care to avoid injuring the rights of others. Belvidere Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ill. App. 424; Rosenheimer v. Standard Gaslight Co. supra.

And in Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. supra, it was held that the court properly refused to instruct the jury to the effect inary sensibilities. See Redd v. Edna Cotton Mills, 136 N. C. 342, 87 L.R.A. 983, 48 S. E. 761; Hill v. McBurney Oil & Fertilizer Co. 112 Ga. 788, 52 L.R.A. 398, 38 S. E. 42; and authorities collected in 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1185.

Whether smoke or noise constitute a nuisance, then, depends on the evidence in each particular case. Reverting to that in the case at bar, it must be said that, owing to the proximity to the railroad yards the locality was noisy. The witnesses, however, especially complained of the peculiar noise from defendant's exhaust pipes, described by one as a popping noise, another as unbearable and happening day and night, and still another as "kind of popping noise which shakes the house and the glass." Others living in different directions from the plant do not appear to have been disturbed thereby. Some evidence was to the effect that the prevailing wind in the locality was from the southeast, and doubtless this and the relative distances from the plant account for the variance in the evidence. The showing that soot and smoke in unusual quantities and the odors were carried toward and enveloped plaintiff's house was all but conclusive. The tenants were shown to have been compelled to keep the doors and windows closed in warm weather to exclude the soot and fumes, and everything exposed was blackened. Without reviewing the evidence in detail, it is enough to say that the interference with the comfortable enjoyment of plaintiff's house was unreasonable and such as constitutes a nuisance.

2. Even though there was a nuisance, it does not follow that damages were proven. The dwelling was occupied by a tenant, and depreciation in the value of the premises because of the injury, as it was not permanent but subject to abatement, was not the measure of damages. Loughran v. Des Moines, 72 Iowa, 382, 34 N. W. 172; Shively v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co. supra; that, if the odors are those inseparable from the manufacture of gas with the most approved apparatus and with the utmost skill and care, and do not result from any defects in the works or from want of care in their management, the defendant will not be liable; as, where the damage is the necessary consequence of what the defendant is doing or is incident to the business itself, or the manner in which it is conducted, the law of negligence has no application, and the law of nuisance applies.

So, it was held in Atty. Gen. v. Gaslight & Coke Co. supra, that a public nuisance created by stenches from a gas works would be enjoined, notwithstanding gas of a required purity could not be manufactured without creating the same, and, by the charter of the company, the location where the works

Randolf v. Bloomfield, 77 Iowa, 52, 14 Am. Rep. 268, 41 N. W. 562; Ferguson v. Firmenwich Mfg. Co. 77 Iowa, 581, 14 Am. St. Rep. 319, 42 N. W. 448. In such a case, in the absence of injury to the property itself, the measure of damages is the diminution in the rental value caused by the maintenance of the nuisance. This depreciation must result from interference with the comfortable enjoyment of the premises, and not from the mere prejudice against the property in consequence of its proximity to the plant, for the latter depreciation cannot be said to have been caused by the injury. 4 Sutherland, Damages, § 1048; Rust v. Victoria Graving Dock Co. L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 113, 131; Robb v. Carnegie Bros. 145 Pa. 324, 14 L.R.A. 329, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694, 22 Atl. 649; San Antonio v. Mackey, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 145, 54 S. W. 33. The erection of undesirable buildings in the immediate neighborhood, as a livery barn or distillery, or the occupation of existing buildings for undesirable purposes in the immediate vicinity of the dwelling,—for instance, a saloon or poolroom,—might diminish the comfort of its use and even impair its rental value; but the owner would be without redress for any injury due to the proximity alone. If, however, the business is so conducted as to affect the use of the dwelling or the health of its occupants, these tangible injuries, capable of measurement by a pecuniary standard, may support an action for damages or other relief. Now the defendant had the right to construct its plant where it did, and to manufacture compressed gas at that place. If doing so affected the rental value of his house, the owner could no more complain than of the location of a saloon or livery stable in close proximity. The nature of the business must be left out of view, for this gas plant was not shown to be a nuisance per se, and it ought not to be so assumed in the absence of proof. The sole inquiry is whether harm has been done to were erected was declared to be well adapted for that purpose.

Prescriptive right to maintain nuisance.

In order to establish a prescriptive right to maintain a nuisance caused by a gas plant, it is incumbent upon it to show that during the entire statutory period the nuisance has produced an injury equal to and of the character complained of. Matthews v. Stillwater Gas & Electric Light Co. 63 Minn. 493, 65 N. W. 947.

And a prescriptive right to foul a well by percolations from a gas works will be defeated by a variation and excess in the degree of fouling during the prescribed period. Millington v. Griffiths, 30 L. T. N. S. 65.

plaintiff by or as the direct result of the prosecution of defendant's business in the manner charged at the place it had the right to locate and conduct it. Looking to the evidence, there will be found none to sustain the award of damages. Plaintiff disclaimed any knowledge of the rental value of his property, but testified that he had fixed the rental at $12.50 per month, that it had been vacant at different intervals,—in all, nine months,—and that the last tenant was paying $10 per month. In explanation of this he related that "people said it was too near the gas house." Smith and Larson estimated the rental value of the premises at $200 per year "if no gas plant were there." But this, as we have seen, was not the criterion by which to compute damages, for the company had the right to construct its plant at that locality. No evidence was adduced tending to show the diminution of the rental value because of the conduct of defendant's business in such a manner that smoke, soot, fumes, and noises emanated from the plant and interfered with the comfortable enjoyment of plaintiff's premises, and for this reason no more than nominal damages should have been allowed. The decree will be so modified as to eliminate the judgment for damages.

Modified and affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

(— C. C. A. —, 165 Fed. 423.)

Safety-appliance act — transporting car to shop.

1. Hauling to the repair shops in another state, as part of a regular train engaged in interstate commerce, a foreign empty car which has been damaged in a wreck so as to be defective under the safety-appliance act of Congress, is a violation of the provisions of that act, although the damaged end of the car is chained to another car, from which it is not intended to be separated until it reaches its destination.

Same — switching cars.

2. The switching from an exchange track, where it had been left by another carrier, of a loaded car from another state to its destination a few blocks away within the city, which is so defective as not to comply with the requirements of the safety-appliance act of Congress, is a violation of the provisions of that act.

Evidence — defective apparatus — im- plication.

3. Where a car is received from another company to be switched to its destination within a city without any inspection as to its condition, it cannot be inferred, when it is discovered that the coupling apparatus is so defective as not to meet the requirements of the safety-appliance act of Congress, which fact is discovered en route, that the break in the apparatus occurred at the time it was discovered to be out of order.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(November 27, 1908.)

Case Note. — Duty and liability under Federal and state railway safety-ap- pliance acts.

It should be observed at the outset that in all the cases herein cited which arose under the Federal statute the cars in question were engaged in interstate traffic unless otherwise stated.

Cases not arising under the Federal or state safety-appliance laws, which pass upon the common-law duty of railroad companies to equip cars with safety couplers, are excluded herefrom.

Questions relating to the practice and procedure pertaining to actions for a recovery of penalties provided for a violation of the Federal safety-appliance act are excluded from this note.

In general.

The Federal safety-appliance act of March 2, 1893, chap. 196, 27 Stat. at L. 531, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3174, provides that from and after a designated date "it shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce by railroad to use on its line any locomotive engine in moving interstate traffic not equipped with a power-driving wheel brake and appliances for operating the train-brake system, or to run any train in such traffic . . . that has not a sufficient number of cars in it so equipped with power or train brakes that the engineer . . . can control its speed without requiring brakemen to use the common hand brake for that purpose. [And] that when any . . . [carrier] engaged in interstate commerce by railroad shall have equipped a sufficient number of its cars [with brakes] . . . it may lawfully refuse to receive from connecting lines . . . any cars not [so] equipped. [Or] . . . to haul or permit to be hauled or used on its line any car used in moving interstate traffic, not equipped with couplers coupling automatically by impact, and which can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars. . . . [Or] to use any car in interstate commerce that is not provided with secure grab irons or hand holds in the ends and sides of each car for greater security to men in coupling and uncoupling cars." A penalty is imposed "for using any locomotive engine, running any train, or hauling or permitting to be hauled or used on its line any car in violation of the provisions of" such act. It is further provided that railway employees injured by any violation of provi-

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Iowa to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover penalties for alleged violations of the safety-appliance act. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Hook and Adams, Circuit Judges, and Garland, District Judge.

Messrs. J. C. Cook and H. Loomis for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Luther M. Walter and Marcellus L. Temple for defendant in error.

Hook, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by the United States against the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul sions thereof shall not "be deemed thereby to have assumed the risk thereby occasioned, although continuing in the employment of such carrier after the unlawful use of such locomotive, car, or train had been brought to his knowledge."

By an amendment, the provisions of the act were extended so as to apply "to common carriers by railroads in the territories and the District of Columbia, and shall apply in all cases, whether or not the couplers brought together are of the same kind, make, or type; and . . . [the other provisions of said act] shall be held to apply to all trains, locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, . . . [or] used in connection therewith." And it is further required that 50 per cent of the cars in such trains shall have their brakes so connected as to be operated by the engineer; the Interstate Commerce Commission being empowered to increase such minimum percentage. Act March 2, 1903, 32 Stat. at L. 943, chap. 976, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 885.

Such act should not be strictly construed so as to defeat its obvious intent. Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 363, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158, reversing 54 C. C. A. 508, 117 Fed. 467.

And it has been said that, although the Federal safety-appliance act is penal in its nature and should be construed strictly, yet the construction to be given it must be such as fully to carry out the legislative intent disclosed by the act. United States v. Southern R. Co. 135 Fed. 122; United States v. Central R. Co. 157 Fed. 893.

The Nebraska statute forbidding the use of a car, that has been in the shops for general repairs before a certain date, unless equipped with automatic couplers, does not render a railway company liable for injuries sustained by an employee, by a defective coupler upon a car which had not been in the shops for general repairs before the specified date. Thompson v. Missouri P. R. Co. 51 Neb. 527, 71 N. W. 61.

Apparently the duty of a carrier under the provisions of the so-called safety-ap-

Railway Company, a railroad corporation engaged in interstate and local commerce, to recover penalties for four separate violations of the safety-appliance statute. Act March 2, 1893, chap. 196, 27 Stat. at L. 531, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3174, amended by the acts of April 1, 1896, chap. 87, 29 Stat. at L. 85, and March 2, 1903, chap. 976, 32 Stat. at L. 943, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 885. Judgment was rendered against the company upon each of the four counts of the petition, but the only complaint here is of the recovery upon the first and fourth.

The evidence under the first count showed these facts without dispute: A west-bound freight train of the company was wrecked near Elmira, in the state of Missouri, and some of the cars were ditched. Among pliance act is the same whether it is sought to recover a penalty or damages for injuries sustained by a servant by reason of a breach of such duty.

Standard or measure of duty; exercise of reasonable care.

The duty to equip cars "used in moving interstate traffic" with couplers "coupling automatically by impact, which can be uncoupled without necessity for men going between the ends of the cars" as required by the Federal safety-appliance act and amendments thereto, is absolute. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 52 L. ed. 1061, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616; United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 153 Fed. 918; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Delk, 85 C. C. A. 95, 158 Fed. 931; United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 163 Fed. 519; United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 163 Fed. 517, reversing 150 Fed. 442; United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 162 Fed. 403; United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 162 Fed. 405; United States v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 162 Fed. 408; United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 162 Fed. 410; United States v. Southern P. Co. 154 Fed. 897; Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King (C. C. A.) 169 Fed. 372; United States v. Southern P. Co. (C. C. A.) 169 Fed. 407. United States v. Southern P. Co. supra.

For an instruction to the same effect see the unreported cases of United States v. Southern R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 367, Appx. and United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) id. 372, Appx.

It is generally held that a carrier's absolute duty to supply an automatic coupler and keep it in repair at all times is not satisfied by the exercise of reasonable care. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 163 Fed. 517; United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. supra; United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 162 Fed. 403; United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 162 Fed. 405; United States v. Pennsylvania R. Co.;

them was an empty foreign refrigerator car. In replacing this car on the track the coupler at one end was pulled out and the draft timbers and sills so broken as to be useless. It was then taken to the town of Elmira, the damaged end was chained to another car which was also injured in the wreck, and in that condition the two cars were incorporated in an east-bound freight train of the company and sent to its general repair shops at Dubuque, in the state of Iowa, about 350 miles from Elmira. During this interstate journey the refrigerator car moved upon its own trucks was empty, and was not equipped at its damaged end with the safety appliances prescribed by the statute.

Our conclusion is that the hauling by a railroad company from one state to another of a car not equipped with the required safety appliances, upon its own trucks, as a part of a train of other cars moving in interstate commerce, is a use of the defective car in violation of the act of Congress, though it is empty and is being transported to a repair shop in the state of its destination. Had the car in question been put upon a flat car and so transported from Missouri to Iowa, that would have been a movement in interstate commerce, for traffic may as well consist of the property of carriers as of the property of merchants. In such a case the law would have required that the flat car be equipped with safety appliances. But, instead of adopting that course, the company used the injured car as the vehicle of its own movement; and it would

United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co.; United States v. Southern P. Co.; United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., and United States v. Southern R. Co.,—supra; United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 162 Fed. 185; United States v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 156 Fed. 180; United States v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. 167 Fed. 198; United States v. Southern P. Co. (C. C. A.) 169 Fed. 407.

For instructions to the same effect see the unreported cases of United States v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. (Jan. 30, 1907, D. C. Ariz.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 274, Appx.; United States v. Wabash R. Co. (1907; U. S. D. C. E. D. Ill.) id. 282, Appx.; United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Jan. 18, 1909; U. S. D. C. N. D. W. Va.) id. 357, Appx.; United States v. Southern R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) id. 367, Appx.; and United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) id. 372, Appx.

Nor does the highest degree of care in the inspection of cars for defective safety appliances satisfy the Federal act. United States v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. (April 8, 1907; U. S. D. C. W. D. Tex.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 279, Appx.

In United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (June 6, 1908; U. S. D. C. S. D. Cal.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 329, Appx., an instruction was given that defects in safety appliances must be discovered by a carrier at its peril, and that the exercise of diligence and care in inspecting cars will not excuse the failure to discover them.

The carrier's duty is not satisfied by equipping its cars in the first instance with automatic couplers; but they must at all times be kept in such condition that they may be operated without the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars to couple and uncouple them. Southern R. Co. v. Carson, 194 U. S. 136, 48 L. ed. 907, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609, affirming 68 S. C. 55, 48 S. E. 525; United States v. Southern R. Co.; Johnson v. Southern P. Co. supra; Chicago, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Voelker, 70 L.R.A. 264, 65 C. C. A. 226, 129 Fed. 522; Southern R. Co. v. Simmons, 105 Va. 651, 55 S. E. 459; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Winkler, 4 Penn. (Del.) 387, 56 Atl. 112; United States v. Erie R. Co. 166 Fed. 352; United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 167 Fed. 696; United States v. Southern R. Co. and United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. supra; United States v. Nevada County N. Gauge R. Co. 167 Fed. 695; United States v. Great Northern R. Co. 145 Fed. 438, s. c. 150 Fed. 229.

For an instruction to the same effect see the unreported cases of United States v. Wabash R. Co. (1907; U. S. D. C. E. D. Ill.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 282, Appx.; United States v. Terminal R. Asso. (U. S. D. C. E. D. Mo.) id. 325, Appx.

The preparation of a coupler for the impact is not distinct from the act of coupling so as to relieve a carrier from the requirements of the statute making it unlawful to use a car which cannot be coupled without the necessity of going between the ends of the cars. Johnson v. Southern P. Co.; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Voelker; Southern R. Co. v. Simmons; and Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Winkler,—supra.

In United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. Ariz.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 299, Appx., an instruction was given that it is not sufficient that a coupling device may be operated with great effort from the side of a car but it must be in such condition that it may be operated with the use of reasonable effort.

In United States v. Boston & M. R. Co. 168 Fed. 148, an instruction was given to the effect that, if it is necessary that the air brake hose between two cars be connected or disconnected in order to couple or uncouple them, one going between cars for that purpose is engaged in coupling or uncoupling cars within the meaning of the Federal act requiring the ends of cars to be equipped with grab irons or handholds.

The Federal act is not complied with when a car, by reason of one coupler being defect-seem as though the duty to comply with the requirements of the statute still remained. Even if the car did not itself carry traffic, it was engaged in intercourse between the states. The particular purpose of the movement or the character of the vehicle running on the rails between points in different states is not important. The statute applies to an engine which hauls but does not carry freight, to a dining car for the refreshment of passengers (Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 363, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158), to an empty freight car (Voelker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. [C. C.] 116 Fed. 867), and even to a steam-shovel car consisting of machinery bolted to a platform supported on trucks (Schlemmer v. Buffalo, K. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 681, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep.

407). In the last case the court said the phrase "used in moving interstate traffic," occurring in the act of March 2, 1893, should not be taken in a narrow sense. The car in question was one of the connecting links between the engine and the caboose, and was a constituent part of a train moving on an interstate mission. Moreover, the case is wholly within the spirit of the act of Congress, for the presence in such a train of an empty, crippled car having no appliances as prescribed by § 2 of the act, or no grab irons or hand holds required by § 4, or with draw-bars higher or lower than as fixed under § 5, albeit the car is being forwarded for repairs, threatens the very dangers to life and limb against which Congress has commanded the maintenance of safeguards. It is said it was ive, may be coupled or uncoupled from one side of the train only. United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. and United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. supra; United States v. Central R. Co. 157 Fed. 893; United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 149 Fed. 486; Wabash R. Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 1.

And in United States v. Southern P. Co. 167 Fed. 699; United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 160 Fed. 696; United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 167 Fed. 696; United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Dec. 1, 1908; U. S. D. C. N. D. Cal.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 333, Appx.; United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. Ariz.) id. 299, Appx.; and United States v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Dec. 2, 1908; U. S. D. C. S. D. W. Va.) id. 339, Appx., the court instructed the jury that it was the duty of the carrier to keep both ends of its cars equipped with the safety device.

As such duty is absolute, it is no defense for the carrier to show that a car with a defective automatic coupler was moved without its knowledge. United States v. Southern P. Co. supra.

To same effect, see Crawford v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 166.

As a carrier's duty to inspect and repair automatic couplers is absolute, it is unnecessary, in order to charge it with negligence, that notice of the defect therein be given to the person designated by it for that purpose. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walters, supra.

And such absolute duty cannot be delegated so as to relieve the master from liability. Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King (C. C. A.) 169 Fed. 372.

And it is no defense for a carrier to show that it employed competent inspectors and repairers to care for such safety appliances. United States v. Southern R. Co. supra.

Nor will the failure of a railway company's inspector to discover defective safety appliances relieve it from liability. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) U. S. D. C. Ariz.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 299, Appx.

For an instruction to the effect that it is not the duty of a Federal inspector, employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to discover violations of the Federal safety appliance act, to notify the railway company's employees of defects in cars, see the unreported cases of United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. Ariz.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 299, Appx.; United States v. Southern R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) id. 367, Appx.; United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) id. 372, Appx.

In Crawford v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. supra, a nisi prius case, the jury was instructed that it was no defense on the part of a railway company that cars not equipped with automatic couplers were not owned by it, as, if it permitted such cars to be hauled on its road, it would be liable for resulting injuries to an employee.

As a railway company is under no obligation to receive cars from a connecting carrier with defective couplers, if it does so it must know at its peril that they are properly equipped with the required safety appliances, which are in good order and condition. United States v. Southern P. Co. 167 Fed. 699.

And it is no excuse that the coupling device of a car was deliberately put out of order by an employee for the purpose of placing part of it upon another car. United States v. Southern P. Co. supra.

For an instruction to the same effect see the unreported cases of United States v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. N. D. Ohio) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 331, Appx.

The fact that a car with defective coupler was hauled with an "M. C. B." card attached stating that the couplers were defective will not relieve the company from liability. United States v. Southern R. Co. 135 Fed. 122.

not intended that the two cars chained together should be separated before they reached the repair shops, but no one could foretell that an emergency would not arise requiring it; and the probability or improbability of it being necessary for an employee to go between the cars cannot qualify the duty of the carrier to observe the requirements of the statute. We pass by the evidence of the parties as to the existence or nonexistence of facilities for repairing the car in Missouri. Whether the duty of the carrier should be made to depend upon its course in maintaining suitable repair shops in the state where cars may need repairs is a question for Congress. The present statute makes no provision upon that subject, and a court cannot interpolate one. These conclusions follow from the act of 1893, and we forbear discussing the larger questions arising under the amendment of 1903.

These were the facts under the fourth count: Another railroad company delivered to the defendant upon an exchange track in its yards at Ottumwa, in the state of Iowa, a string of six freight cars among which was a foreign car loaded with lumber that had come from a point in the state of Arkansas and was consigned to an industry located a few blocks distant from the exchange track. A switching crew of the defendant company with a switch engine pulled the cars out of the track where they had been placed, and were engaged in distributing them when it was discovered that the coupling appliance on the foreign car would

So, a jury has been instructed that placing a "bad order" card on a car, which has defective safety appliances, does not relieve the carrier from liability for moving it while in that condition. United States v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. W. D. Mo.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 362, Appx.

And in United States v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. supra the trial court instructed the jury that a carrier will be liable to the prescribed penalty if a car stands in its yards one hour, and is then moved without a defective coupling device having been discovered.

So, the Federal act is violated by starting a car in transit with a defective coupler which might have been discovered by inspection. United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. (March 2, 1909; C. C. A. 6th C.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 376, Appx.

Notwithstanding, however, that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the duty prescribed by such act is absolute, there are decisions holding that equipping cars with the required safety appliances satisfies the carrier's absolute duty; and that thereafter it is bound to exercise only ordinary care and diligence to keep them in repair. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Delk, supra; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walters, 217 Ill. 87, 75 N. E. 441, affirming 120 Ill. App. 152; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Brinkmeier, 77 Kan. 14, 93 Pac. 621; Southern P. Co. v. Allen (Tex. Civ. App.) 106 S. W. 441.

Irrespective of whether it is a defense to show that a carrier has exercised diligence to provide and maintain safety appliances, it will be liable to the penalty prescribed by the Federal act if it hauls a car with a defective coupler but a few miles, and it is probable that the defect would not have occurred by the ordinary handling of the car in that distance, and it would have been discovered at the point of the inception of its journey by proper inspection, as, if diligence is to be recognized as a defense, it must be of the highest form. United States v. Indiana Harbor R. Co. 157 Fed. 565, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The Federal act is not violated if the safety appliances become defective while the car is in transit provided there is no subsequent lack of diligence in discovering or repairing it. United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. (March 2, 1909; C. C. A. 6th C.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 376, Appx.

A carrier is liable for the penalty prescribed by the act where two inspections were made without discovering the loss of a grab iron or hand hold upon the side of a car. United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 156 Fed. 193.

But the act is not violated where the automatic-coupling device becomes defective without the carrier's knowledge. United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. supra.

And in United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. supra, it was held necessary that the government show that an alleged defect in an automatic coupler existed at the time a car was started on its journey; and that the fact that the car had been traveling for one day when the defect was discovered would not warrant an inference that it existed when the journey began, it being presumed to have been sustained during that time.

In refusing the prosecution a new trial in United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 150 Fed. 442, it was held that the Federal act was not violated by moving a car received from a connecting carrier to a side-track without discovering a defective coupler, which was repaired immediately upon being discovered, as due diligence was disclosed, and it did not appear that during the time the car was in possession of the respondent any person coupled or uncoupled it.

It is for the jury to determine whether the use of a car with a defective automatic coupler was the proximate cause of the injury sustained by a servant by catching his foot in an unblocked frog while stepping between the cars to uncouple them. Donegan v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 165 Fed. 869.

The substitution of a short or "stub" pilot in place of a long one in order to equip a locomotive with an automatic coupler does not constitute negligence, although it was the cause of the derailment of the not work so it could be uncoupled from the car next to it. A switchman then went between the ends of the cars and with his hands manipulated the coupler of the opposite car and so detached them. The car with the defective coupler was then put back on the exchange track from whence it was taken. The defect consisted of a broken finger or lifting key that worked within the coupling block. The break would not appear to an external view, but there was substantial evidence that a mere manipulation of the lever without moving the car would disclose it. At the conclusion of the evidence each party requested a directed verdict in its favor; the trial court granted the request of the government. There had been no delivery of the car in question at its ultimate destination, and the switching of it from the time it was taken by defendant's employees on the exchange track to the time of the discovery of the defect was in the course of such delivery and constituted a use in interstate commerce. There was no proof of such an inspection of the car while it was at rest on the exchange track as would have disclosed the condition of the coupling appliance, and there was no proof indicating the defect was caused while the switching crew were performing their duties. It cannot, therefore, be inferred that the finger or lifting key might have been broken at the time it was discovered to be out of order. The duty of defendant under the statute is an absolute one, and is not discharged by the exercise of reasonable care. The case is controlled by the principles announced in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 52 L. ed. 1061, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616, and by this court in United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (C. C. A.) 163 Fed. 517, and United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (C. C. A.) 163 Fed. 519.

The judgment is affirmed.

locomotive in a collision with cattle. Briggs v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 60 C. C. A. 513, 125 Fed. 745.

Specific requirements.

Section 5 of the Federal safety-appliance act does not require that the drawbars of loaded or unloaded cars shall be of uniform height provided they do not vary more than the 3 inches prescribed as the maximum variation from the standard. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 52 L. ed. 1061, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616, reversing 71 Ark. 445, 78 S. W. 220, and same case on second appeal, 83 Ark. 591, 98 S. W. 958.

A carrier's absolute duty in this regard is not discharged by furnishing its car inspectors and train men metallic wedges or "shims" to use as occasion demands, to raise to the legal standard drawbars lowered by the natural effect of proper use. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 52 L. ed. 1061, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616.

The jury has been instructed that the Federal act requires that drawbars of a car shall be not more than 34½ inches nor less than 31½ inches from the top of the rail. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. Ariz.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 299, Appx.

Equipping locomotives and cars with automatic couplers of such different type as not to couple with each other automatically by impact does not satisfy the provisions of the Federal act. Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 363, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158.

And in United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 162 Fed. 185, the jury was instructed that it was a violation of the Federal act to haul a car loaded with interstate traffic with a locomotive having a defective air-brake pump, and which was not equipped with means of applying power brakes to 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the train, or having its driving wheels equipped with power brakes.

For an instruction as to the duty of a carrier to have 75 per cent of the cars of its freight trains equipped with automatic brakes, and its duty to repair defects therein when occurring while a train is upon its journey, see United States v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. supra.

In United States v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. S. D. W. Va.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 339, Appx., the jury was instructed that in estimating the 75 per cent of the cars of a train that are required to be equipped with air brakes the engine and tender should be counted as two cars.

In United States v. Boston & M. R. Co. 168 Fed. 148, and United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Jan. 18, 1909, U. S. D. C. N. D. W. Va.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts 357, Appx., the jury was instructed that if the end of a car is equipped with a ladder, brake lever, or thing other than a grab iron or hand hold, which affords equal security, there is no violation of the Federal act.

To what lines or traffic duty attaches.

A carrier whose line lies wholly within one state is within the Federal act and its amendments, when transporting, in its own cars, not equipped with automatic couplers, goods billed from a point without the state to one within; the test of whether a carrier is engaged in interstate traffic being the transportation of articles in interstate traffic, and not the means of transportation. United States v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 167, 85 C. C. A. 27, 157 Fed. 321, overruling United States v. Geddes, infra.

A car consigned to a point without the state is within the Federal safety-appliance act although the defendant hauls it only from the point of loading, and delivers it to another carrier within the same state. United States v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. 143 Fed. 353; United States v. Southern R. Co. 135 Fed. 122.

It was held in United States v. Southern R. Co. 164 Fed. 347, that the Federal act and amendments are applicable where an interstate carrier hauls loaded cars of commodities consigned from point to point entirely within a state, in the same manner as though it had hauled them in interstate traffic.

And a railway company whose line is located entirely within a state is within the Federal act and its amendments by carrying articles of interstate commerce under a contract with an express company, although it has no control or management of the carriage thereof, so as to render it liable to a penalty for hauling a train carrying such articles, with an engine not equipped with an automatic coupler. United States v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co. supra, Philips, J., dissenting.

A binding instruction was given, in the unreported case of United States v. Pacific Coast R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. S. D. Cal.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 285, Appx., that an intrastate carrier is within the Federal act when hauling a car over defendant's line consigned from a point without the state to one within on the line of another carrier where its destination had been diverted to the line of the intrastate carrier before it reached the state.

A dining car used in interstate traffic, while waiting to be made up into an interstate train for its next trip is "used in moving interstate traffic" within the meaning of the Federal act and amendments thereto. Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 303, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158, reversing 54 C. C. A. 508, 117 Fed. 467.

So, a locomotive with a defective coupler is within the Federal act if used in moving interstate traffic, although it is used exclusively within a state. United States v. Great Northern R. Co. 145 Fed. 438.

And a car of merchandise consigned from one point to another in the same state comes within the Federal act if, in transit, it is carried through a portion of another state. United States v. Erie R. Co. 166 Fed. 352.

But the terms of the Federal safety-appliance act are not applicable to a railroad located entirely within a state when handling cars consigned from point to point therein. Rio Grande Southern R. Co. v. Campbell (Colo.) 96 Pac. 986.

And in United States v. Geddes, 65 C. C. 320, 131 Fed. 452, overruled in United States v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co. supra, it was held that the Federal safety-appliance act of 1893 did not apply to a road entirely within a state, which does not accept freight from an interstate carrier on through bills of lading, but requires it to be delivered to it and transported on local bills of lading at its own rates.

A shipment originating in one state does not lose its interstate character, so as to 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

prevent its falling within the provisions of the safety-appliance act, by being temporarily suspended on its journey, whether its ultimate destination is near or remote. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Voelker, 70 L.R.A. 264, 65 C. C. A. 226, 129 Fed. 522, reversing 116 Fed. 867.

In United States v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 162 Fed. 775, the court instructed the jury that an interstate train remained such although the cars composing it when it started on its journey may have been set out and new ones taken on, and the train crew and engine changed; and it was immaterial whether the cars were owned by the defendant company or another.

And in United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 149 Fed. 486, the jury was instructed that a car of old rails belonging to a carrier was engaged in interstate commerce when hauled in a construction train from one state to another.

In United States v. Southern R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 367, Appx., an instruction was given to the effect that a car containing sand, intended for a carrier's own use, if hauled from one state to another in a train engaged in interstate commerce, is within the Federal act.

So, a car which has been set apart exclusively for and is loaded with intrastate traffic is within the Federal act and its amendments when hauled by an interstate train with cars engaged in interstate traffic. Wabash R. Co. v. United States (C. C. A.) 168 Fed. 1; United States v. Erie R. Co. 166 Fed. 352.

Juries have been instructed to the effect that it is a violation of the Federal act to move a car with defective safety appliances, although not containing an interstate shipment, in a train containing other cars engaged in interstate traffic. United States v. Southern R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 367, Appx.; United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) id. 372, Appx.

But the contrary was held in United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. 166 Fed. 997, unless the intrastate car is so located in a train as to require that it be coupled to, or uncoupled from, another car engaged in interstate traffic. The court being of the opinion that the words "used in connection" with interstate traffic, as contained in the amendment of March 2, 1903, chap. 976 (32 Stat. at L. 943, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 885), meant the actual connection between cars so used.

Railway tracks owned by a stockyard company and located exclusively on its own premises connecting several interstate railway lines, over which, with its own locomotives and servants, it hauls for hire and delivers cars loaded with interstate shipments to the transfer tracks of such interstate carriers, is within the terms of the Federal safety appliance act and amendments thereto. Union Stockyard Co. of Omaha v. United States (C. C. A.) 169 Fed. 404, affirming 161 Fed. 919.

So, when a car consigned from one state to another is hauled in a train from the tracks of one interstate carrier to those of another by a belt line company whose tracks lie entirely within a city, and connect the tracks of various interstate carriers, and for so doing it receives an arbitrary charge per car from the interstate carriers, it is within the Federal act. Belt R. Co. v. United States (C. C. A.) 168 Fed. 542.

A jury has been instructed that if the coupling device of a shifting engine becomes defective while engaged in moving a car loaded with an interstate shipment from one yard to another at its destination, the company cannot be liable for a violation of the Federal act if the defect was repaired as soon as possible before moving it again. United States v. Southern R. Co. (Feb. 24, 1909; U. S. D. C. S. C.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 367, Appx.

It has been held that cars are within the provisions of the safety-appliance act when being moved for the purpose of making up a train to be moved in interstate traffic. Mobile. J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bromberg, 141 Ala. 258, 37 So. 395. See Crawford v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 166, a nisi pruis case, for an instruction to the same effect. When a terminal company transfers a car delivered to it by an interstate carrier from one line of railway to another; and it is liable for the penalty if the car has a defective coupling. United States v. Northern P. Terminal Co. 144 Fed. 861. When a car is taken from one carrier and moved by another to its yards in order to be placed in a train and forwarded to its destination in another state, so as to render it liable for a penalty if the car is without a grab iron or hand hold. United States v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 143 Fed. 360. When a car has arrived at its destination, and nothing further remains but to deliver it to the consignee, but, by reason of a broken chain attached to the automatic-coupling device, and other defects therein, it is placed upon a siding for repairs, and, while switching it, an employee is injured by reason of the defects. Lurton, J., dissented. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Delk, 86 C. C. A. 95, 158 Fed. 931, rehearing denied in 162 Fed. 145.

But it was held in Rosney v. Erie R. Co. 68 C. C. A. 155, 135 Fed. 311, that, if it does not appear that cars being switched in a railway yard were used in interstate commerce, they are not within the Federal safety-appliance act.

The Federal act and amendments require that carriers engaged in interstate traffic shall keep the cars used therein equipped with safety devices at all times,—not only while actually used in such traffic, but when in use upon its road as well. United States v. Great Northern R. Co. 145 Fed. 438.

As the term "used in moving interstate traffic" does not require that a car be actually loaded with interstate traffic on its journey from state to state, it is a violation of the Federal act to haul an empty car with a defective coupler. United States v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 154 Fed. 516. The court observed that the more natural meaning of the Federal act was that a car that has been used for interstate traffic, and stands ready and is intended to be so used whenever needed, is within the purview of the act. And, to the same effect, see also United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 162 Fed. 185; United States v. Great Northern R. Co. supra.

The Federal safety appliance act is applicable to both loaded and empty cars. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. Ariz.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 299, Appx.

So, the provisions of such act require that grab irons or hand holds be applied to all cars used in interstate commerce, whether empty or loaded. Malott v. Hood, 201 Ill. 202, 66 N. E. 247.

And an empty car is within the Federal act, if customarily or generally employed in interstate traffic, when moved by an interstate train. United States v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. 167 Fed. 198; Wabash R. Co. v. United States (C. C. A.) 168 Fed. 1.

But in United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. 156 Fed. 182, the jury was instructed that an empty car is not within the provisions of the Federal act unless it appears that it was used, or intended to be used, in moving interstate traffic.

And a car not shown to have ever been used or intended to be used in interstate traffic is not within such act. United States v. Erie R. Co. 166 Fed. 352.

And in United States v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. S. D. W. Va.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 339 Appx., an instruction was given that it is immaterial whether a car is loaded or empty as it is within the Federal act if carried in a train which is composed of at least one car which engaged in interstate traffic.

But it was held in United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. 166 Fed. 997, that a car used in intrastate traffic did not fall within the Federal act and its amendments when hauled in a train containing a car bearing interstate traffic, but in a different part thereof.

In Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Flipppo, 138 Ala. 487, 35 So. 457, it was held to be for the jury to determine whether a car of coal was engaged in interstate traffic within the meaning of the Federal act of 1893, where it was drawn from a mine to the main line of an interstate carrier's road and placed upon a siding, and was afterwards billed and shipped to another state.

Duty to make immediate repairs.

The trial court, in United States v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 162 Fed. 775; United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. and United States v. Southern P. Co. supra, instructed the jury that it was the carrier's duty, if by any means the safety appliance of a car became injured or out of repair so as to become inoperative while being hauled upon its journey, immediately to repair the same, if it could be done with the means and appliances at hand at the time and place where the defect was discovered, or could have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable care; but, if such means and appliances were not at hand, it would have the right, without incurring a penalty, to haul the car to the nearest point on its line where the defects might be remedied; but, if it hauled the car from a place where repairs could have been made, it would be liable for the penalty.

In the last case the court gave a similar instruction as to the effect of the act if a train was started on its journey with 75 per cent of its cars equipped with automatic brakes, and, by reason of defects therein while upon the road, the number of cars so equipped was reduced below that number.

If a break or defect occurred during the journey of the car, the carrier will be liable if it was not repaired at the first opportunity; it being the duty of the carrier to exercise the utmost degree of diligence that would be used by highly prudent persons under the circumstances to discover and repair such defect. United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. 156 Fed. 182.

To same effect see United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. (March 2, 1909; C. C. A. 6th C.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability and Safety Appliance Acts, 376, Appx.

Juries have been instructed that it is the duty of a carrier to establish reasonable repair points along its lines for the purpose of repairing the safety devices required by the Federal act. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. Ariz.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 299, Appx; and United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Dec. 1, 1908; U. S. D. C. N. D. Cal.) id. 333, Appx.; and United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Jan. 18, 1909; U. S. D. C. N. D. W. Va.) id. 357, Appx.

Instructions have been given to the effect that if couplers become defective while enroute they must be repaired at the nearest point where repairs can be made, and that a car cannot be hauled further, as it is the duty of the carrier to have on hand materials and facilities for making prompt repairs. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1908; U. S. D. C. Ariz.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 299, Appx; United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Dec. 1, 1908; U. S. D. C. N. D. Cal.) id. 333, Appx.; United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Jan. 18, 1909; U. S. D. C. N. D. W. Va.) id. 357, Appx.

Cars being hauled to repair shops.

It is a violation of the Federal safety-appliance act to haul two empty freight cars chained together from one state to another for repairs if the carrier has a repair shop at the point where the car becomes defective (United States v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. supra); or to haul an empty car without a grab iron or hand hold from one state to another to a repair shop (United States v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 157 Fed. 616); or to haul a car with a defective coupler 2 miles to a repair shop, notwithstanding it has other defects, which can not be repaired without sending the car to the shops, where the defective coupler can be repaired at the point where it becomes defective (United States v. Southern P. Co. 154 Fed. 897).
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It was held in United States v. Southern P. Co. (C. C. A.) 169 Fed. 407, that the Federal act was violated by moving a car, actually engaged in interstate traffic, in connection with other cars, from one yard track to another, where its defective safety appliances could be conveniently repaired, the defendant claiming that it was necessary to move the car in order to get it out of the way and not interrupt the operation of its yard. And to the same effect see Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King (C. C. A.) 169 Fed. 372.

So, a trial court has instructed a jury that it is a violation of the Federal act to haul two cars without automatic couplers, which have been badly damaged, 379 miles to a repair shop in another state, where it passes through three points where the couplers might have been repaired. United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 149 Fed. 486.

But it was held in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. United States (C. C. A.) 168 Fed. 236, that an empty car, generally used in interstate traffic, which, with a defective grab iron or hand hold, is hauled alone just across a state line for the sole purpose of being repaired, is not within the meaning of the Federal act and its amendments.

In United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. supra, the trial court instructed the jury that it is a violation of the Federal act to move a car engaged in interstate traffic, received from a connecting carrier at its destination with a defective coupler, to a track for repairs, as, under such act, the carrier need not accept a defective car from a connecting carrier.

But in United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 156 Fed. 195, the trial court instructed the jury that it was not a violation of the Federal act to move a car, upon arrival at its destination with a defective coupler, four blocks to the consignee's place of business, which was nearer than the defendant's repair track, and, after it was unloaded, to remove it to the repair tracks, where the point where the defect was discovered was such that it could not be there repaired without blocking the entire business of the carrier's terminal yard.

A damaged car which has lost its automatic-coupling device while being moved to a repair shop is not used "in moving traffic," within the Massachusetts statute for bidding the handling of cars so used which are not equipped with automatic couplers operating by impact. Taylor v. Boston & M. R. Co. 188 Mass. 390, 74 N. E. 591.

What are "cars" within the meaning of the safety-appliance act.

The following have been held to be "cars" within the meaning of the Federal safety-appliance act: A steam-shovel car (Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 681, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407, reversing 207 Pa. 198, 56 Atl. 417); a locomotive (Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 363, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158, reversing 54 C. C. A. 508, 117 Fed. 462); the tender of a switch engine used in placing cars engaged in interstate traffic upon a yard siding (Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Winkler, 4 Penn. [Del.] 387, 56 Atl. 112, affirming 4 Penn. [Del.] 80, 53 Atl. 90); a dining car, which is in constant use, while waiting for the making up of a train for its next interstate trip (Johnson v. Southern P. Co. supra).

A locomotive is not within the meaning of the Iowa statute requiring "cars" to be equipped with automatic couplers. Bryce v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 119 Iowa, 274, 93 N. W. 275. The court bases its decision upon the fact that the act specifically provides that certain devices shall be used upon locomotives, which does not include safety couplers, and, had it been the legislative intent to have so required, the act would have so stated; but in Johnson v. Southern P. Co. supra, the Supreme Court of the United States refused to adopt this reason for holding that the Federal safety-appliance act did not include a locomotive.

A locomotive tender is not a car, within the meaning of the Massachusetts act forbidding any car to be used or hauled which is not equipped with automatic couplers. Larabee v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 182 Mass. 348, 66 N. E. 1032.

In United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Jan. 18, 1909; U. S. D. C. N. D. W. Va.) reported in Thornton on Employers' Liability & Safety Appliance Acts, 357, Appx., an instruction was given that an engine and tender are within the Federal act.

A state statute requiring brakes to be placed upon freight cars other than four-wheeled cars applies to a gondola car used for hauling lumber, which has eight wheels. Mew v. Charleston & S. R. Co. 55 S. C. 90, 32 S. E. 828.

A locomotive tender is not within the meaning of the Michigan statute requiring automatic couplers to be applied to "freight cars." Blanchard v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 139 Mich. 694, 103 N. W. 170.

A state statute requiring cars to be equipped with automatic couplers does not apply to electric cars. Cleveland & E. R. Co. v. Somers, 24 Ohio C. C. 67.

Neither does such act apply to cars used in railway construction. Ibid. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Right of action for injury to servant.

As any breach of the carrier's duty imposed by the so-called safety-appliance acts renders it liable to a servant who is injured by reason thereof, the reader is referred to the cases cited in the preceding sections, for a discussion of what will constitute a breach of the carrier's duty.

A carrier's failure to equip its cars with the required safety appliances, or to keep them in repair, will render it liable for injuries sustained by a servant in consequence thereof. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 52 L. ed. 1061, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616, reversing 71 Ark. 445, 78 S. W. 220, same case on second appeal, 83 Ark. 591, 98 S. W. 958; Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 363, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158, reversing 54 C. C. A. 508, 117 Fed. 467; Southern R. Co. v. Carson, 194 U. S. 136, 48 L. ed. 907, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609, affirming 68 S. C. 55, 46 S. E. 525; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 681, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407, reversing 207 Pa. 198, 56 Atl. 417; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Delk, 86 C. C. A. 95, 158 Fed. 931, rehearing denied in 162 Fed. 145; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Voelker, 70 L.R.A. 264, 65 C. C. A. 226, 129 Fed. 522; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Flipppo, 138 Ala. 487, 35 So. 457; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bromberg, 141 Ala. 258, 37 So. 395; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Winkler, 4 Penn. (Del.) 387, 56 Atl. 112; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walters, 217 Ill. 87, 75 N. E. 441, affirming 120 Ill. App. 152; Malott v. Hood, 201 Ill. 202, 66 N. E. 247; Crawford v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 166; Mew v. Charleston & S. R. Co. 55 S. C. 90, 32 S. E. 828; Southern P. Co. v. Allen (Tex. Civ. App.) 106 S. W. 441; Southern R. Co. v. Simmons, 105 Va. 651, 55 S. E. 459; and see also the cases hereinafter cited.

The violation of the Federal safety-appliance act will permit an employee who is injured in consequence thereof to maintain an action in the courts of any state. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bromberg, and Southern P. Co. v. Allen, supra.

A prima facie case of negligence is established by showing the neglect to equip cars engaged in interstate traffic with automatic couplers, and an injury resulting therefrom. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bromberg, supra.

Assumed risk.

By the terms of § 8 of the Federal act, an employee of any common carrier, who is injured by reason of noncompliance with the provisions of the act, is declared not to have assumed the risk thereby occasioned, although he continues in the employment of the carrier after knowledge of the unlawful use of the rolling stock, which is not equipped with the required safety appliances. This has been applied in Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Flipppo; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bromberg; and Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Winkler,—supra.

The Federal act relieves a servant of the assumption of risk of injury from the negligence of his fellow servant where the carrier has failed to discharge its duty to equip its cars with automatic couplers. Southern P. Co. v. Allen, supra.

A switchman does not assume the risk of injury from a car with a defective automatic coupling device because the track on which it is located is sometimes used to handle cars in need of repairs, but which is not a hospital track, but is used actively for handling trains and the defective car by which he is injured is not marked. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Voelker, supra.

The possibility that a railway employee, while attempting to make a coupling with a car not equipped with an automatic coupler, might miscalculate the height to which he might safely raise his head, is so inevitably and clearly attached to the risk which, under § 8 of that act, he does not assume, as to prevent a court from holding as a matter of law that he was guilty of contributory negligence which would defeat any recovery for lifting his head a little too high after being warned of the danger. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 681, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407.

But the provisions of the act relieving an employee of the assumption of risk will not excuse a failure to use ordinary prudence where one is aware that the grab irons or hand holds upon a car are missing. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Baker, 33 C. C. A. 468, 63 U. S. App. 553, 91 Fed. 224.

And a servant who uses cars which are not equipped with such safety appliances as are required by the Ohio statute, after knowledge thereof, assumes the risk of injury therefrom. Cleveland & E. R. Co. v. Somers, 24 Ohio, C. C. 67.

Upon the general subject of assumption of risk from master's violation of a statutory duty, see case notes to Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 981, and Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 646.

Contributory negligence.

The Federal safety-appliance act does not deprive a carrier of the right to interpose the defense of contributory negligence. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Arrighi, 63 C. C. A. 649, 129 Fed. 347; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Baker; Crawford v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co.; Southern P. Co. v. Allen,—supra. To same effect see Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bromberg, supra.

It is for the jury to determine whether the employee was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to go to the opposite side of the train, where he might have uncoupled the cars without going between them. Southern P. Co. v. Allen, supra.

And the question of contributory negligence is for the jury, where it appears that an accident would not have occurred if the engineer had not moved the cars in disobedience of a signal given by the injured servant before he entered between them. Ibid. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

So, it is for the jury to determine whether a brakeman was guilty of contributory negligence in going between cars to prepare them for coupling, which the nature of the coupling device requires shall be done, and was injured by the engineer moving the cars upon a signal from the conductor, where the employee alleges that the conductor, having sent him to make the coupling, must have known of the danger of his position. Southern R. Co. v. Simmons, 105 Va. 651, 55 S. E. 459.

For a similar decision where a switchman, apparently with the knowledge of the engineer and conductor, went between cars to repair a broken coupler, and was injured by the movement of the train, see Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King (C. C. A.) 169 Fed. 372.

So, it is for the jury to determine whether it was contributory negligence for one who had no reason to anticipate the defective condition of an automatic coupler to go between a car and a moving engine in the nighttime without stopping it to prepare the coupler, immediate action being required, believing he had time safely to make the coupling in that manner. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walters, 217 Ill. 87, 75 N. E. 441.

It is not contributory negligence, as a matter of law, for a brakeman to place his arm between the buffers of a car, where the engine was moved in disobedience to his signal, which he had a right to assume would be obeyed. Southern P. Co. v. Allen, supra.

So, the question of contributory negligence is for the jury where one, by reason of a defective coupler, went between moving cars to uncouple them, and caught his foot in an unblocked frog. Donegan v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 165 Fed. 869.

But it was contributory negligence for one to go between cars to uncouple them when equipped with sufficient automatic couplers, so that they might have been uncoupled from the side of the car. Gilbert v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 63 C. C. A. 27, 128 Fed. 529.

So it is contributory negligence for an experienced brakeman to go between cars which are not equipped with automatic couplers that will couple by impact, and to guide a link into a drawhead with his hand. Denver & R. G. Co. v. Arrighi, supra.

And it is contributory negligence for a brakeman, where an automatic coupler fails to open by the use of the lever upon one side of the train, to go between the cars to uncouple them without first attempting to use the lever upon the opposite side thereof. Morris v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co. 47 C. C. A. 661, 108 Fed. 747; Gilbert v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. and see Southern P. Co. v. Allen, supra.

But the contrary, however, was held in Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bromberg, 141 Ala. 258, 37 So. 395, where an employee, while attempting to make a coupling from the inside of a curve by reason of the defective condition of the coupler, went between the ends of the cars to uncouple them, and was injured.

See also United States v. Denver & R. G.

R. Co. 163 Fed. 519; United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 162 Fed. 185; United States v. Central R. Co. 157 Fed. 893; United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 149 Fed. 486; Wabash R. Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 1, cited under the title "Standard or measure of duty," supra.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAMSON-HALSELL FRAZIER COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JOSEPH J. ACKERMAN et al.

(77 Kan. 502, 94 Pac. 807.)

Mortgage — duress — threatened prosecution.

1. A contract, in order to be valid and binding, must be the result of the free assent of the parties making it; and, where a father is coerced into executing a mortgage to secure the payment of a defalcation of Headnotes by JOHNSTON, Ch. J.

Case Note. — Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of a relative.

The earlier cases on this subject are presented in a note to the case of City Nat. Bank v. Kusworm, 26 L.R.A. 48, and the present note is confined to the decisions rendered since that note.

As opposed to public policy, as compounding a felony.

As shown in the earlier note (subd. 1, b), such contracts have been held void upon the ground of public policy, as amounting to the compounding of a felony.

It is an abuse of process for a creditor to use the criminal process for the purpose of coercing a father into securing the debt of his son. Green v. Moss, 65 Ill. App. 594.

It is against public policy that the enforcement of the criminal law should be obstructed by contracts made on such consideration in furtherance of personal and private interests. Corbett v. Clute, 137 N. C. 546, 50 S. E. 216.

A mortgage executed in consideration of an agreement to compound a felony is void and unenforceable. Ibid.

It is both an illegal and an immoral act to make an agreement, for a consideration, to suppress the prosecution of a criminal offense, whether the offense is of the grade of felony, or misdemeanor. Jones v. Dannenberg Co. 112 Ga. 426, 52 L.R.A. 271, 37 S. E. 729.

Money paid by a wife to save her husband from threatened prosecution for a felony of which he is innocent, is not compounding a felony, since none in fact exists. Woodham v. Allen, 130 Cal. 194, 62 Pac. 398.

A mortgage executed to prevent a threatened prosecution of the mortgagor's son for his son by threats of the arrest and prosecution of the son for embezzlement if such security is not given, the mortgage may be avoided on the ground of duress.

Same — test of duress.

2. The test in determining whether there was duress is not so much the means by which the father was compelled to execute the mortgage as it is the state of mind induced by the means employed,—the fear which made it impossible for him to exercise his own free will.

Duress — threatened prosecution — guilt of accused.

3. If the threats of the arrest and prosecution of the son operated to deprive the father of his free-will power and to constrain the execution of the mortgage, the actual guilt or innocence of the son upon the charge of embezzlement was not a material question in determining whether there was duress; and, in charging the jury upon that defense, it was not essential that the court should give a complete definition of the offense of embezzlement.

(March 7, 1908.)

a felony is invalid for illegality of consideration. Koons v. Vauconsant, 129 Mich. 260, 95 Am. St. Rep. 438, 88 N. W. 630.

Such a mortgage cannot be rendered valid by showing that the son was in fact innocent, so that there was no felony to be compounded. Ibid.

A note executed by a husband and wife is void when given in settlement of pre-existing debts, and in consideration of discontinuing a pending criminal prosecution against the husband. Stanard v. Sampson (Okla.) 99 Pac. 796.

There can be no binding ratification of such a contract between the same parties. Ibid.

And a contract, the consideration for which was that a brother should not be prosecuted for embezzlement is against public policy and void. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Miller, 54 Neb. 644, 74 N. W. 1061.

An agreement given to suppress a criminal prosecution of a son-in-law for embezzlement will not be enforced. Tracy v. Deatrick, 10 Ohio C. C. 111.

Under Iowa Code, § 4889, which makes it a crime for any person to take any money or valuable consideration, or promise therefor, on an agreement, express or implied, not to prosecute a criminal, a note given in part consideration of such an agreement is void. Rosenbaum Bros. v. Levitt, 109 Iowa, 292, 80 N. W. 393.

Thus, a mortgage executed to a bank because of threats made by an officer of the bank to prosecute a brother of the mortgagor for embezzlement, and because of a promise not to prosecute if the mortgage was executed, is void. Henry v. State Bank, 131 Iowa, 97, 107 N. W. 1034.

A note given to one whose money has been

ERROR to the District Court for Sedgwick County to review a judgment in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover on three promissory notes and to foreclose a mortgage purporting to secure the payment thereof. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. C. Sluss, H. E. Valentine, and A. A. Godard for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. David M. Dale, Samuel B. Amidon, Kos Harris, and V. Harris, for defendants in error:

Even if the accused was guilty of embezzlement, the notes were void.

Adams v. Irving Nat. Bank, 116 N. Y. 606, 6 L.R.A. 491, 15 Am. St. Rep. 447, 23 N. E. 7; Dunham v. Griswold, 100 N. Y. 224, 3 N. E. 76; Heaton v. Norton County State Bank, 59 Kan. 281, 52 Pac. 876; Thompson v. Niggley, 53 Kan. 664, 26 L.R.A. 803, 35 Pac. 290; Gorringer v. Reed, 23 Utah, 120, 90 Am. St. Rep. 692, 63 Pac. 902; Morse v. Woodworth, 155 Mass. 233, 27 N. E. 1010, 29 N. E. 525; Giddings v. Iowa Sav. Bank, 104 Iowa, 676, 74 N. W. 21; Delta County Bank v. McGranahan, 37

Wash. 307, 79 Pac. 796; Mack v. Prang, 104 Wis. 1, 45 L.R.A. 407, 76 Am. St. Rep. 848, 79 N. W. 770; City Nat. Bank v. Kusworm, 91 Wis. 166, 64 N. W. 843; Hovorka v. Havlik, 68 Neb. 14, 110 Am. St. Rep. 389, 93 N. W. 990; Foote v. De Poy, 126 Iowa, 366, 68 L.R.A. 302, 106 Am. St. Rep. 365, 102 N. W. 112; 2 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. p. 969; Galusha v. Sherman, 105 Wis. 263, 47 L.R.A. 417, 81 N. W. 495; Silsbee v. Webber, 171 Mass. 378, 50 N. E. 555; Baker v. Morton, 12 Wall. 150, 20 L. ed. 262; Brown v. Pierce, 7 Wall. 205, 19 L. ed. 134; Fay v. Oatley, 6 Wis. 42; First Nat. Bank v. Bryan, 62 Iowa, 42, 17 N. W. 165; Green v. Scranage, 19 Iowa, 461, 87 Am. Dec. 447; Hatter v. Greenlee, 1 Port. (Ala.) 222, 26 Am. Dec. 370; Bane v. Detrick, 52 Ill. 19; Severance v. Kimball, 8 N. H. 386; Watkins v. Baird, 6 Mass. 506, 4 Am. Dec. 170; Strong v. Grannis, 26 Barb. 122; Bowker v. Lowell, 49 Me. 429; Work's Appeal, 59 Pa. 444; Taylor v. Cottrell, 16 Ill. 93; Phelps v. Zuschlag, 34 Tex. 371; Shenk v. Phelps, 6 Ill. App. 612; Richardson v. Duncan, 3 N. H. 508; Shaw v. Spooner, 9

embezzled (by the brother of the maker), for the amount of his civil damages, to prevent a criminal prosecution, is void as against public policy. Groesbeck v. Marshall, 44 S. C. 538, 22 S. E. 743.

And a check given in pursuance of a contract not to prosecute the maker's son was held void in McNeese v. Carver, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 129, 89 S. W. 430.

A note executed for the purpose of making restitution of money misappropriated is not void, in the absence of an express agreement by the payee not to prosecute the obligor for the crime. Powell v. Flanary, 109 Ky. 342, 59 S. W. 5.

While a person cannot convert a crime into a source of profit or benefit to himself, yet this rule does not prevent a person whose property has been misappropriated from seeking to recover the same by compromise or otherwise, if nothing is done to suppress the criminal prosecution. Ibid.

A contract to repay the person whose property has been stolen is not of itself illegal. But, if the consideration for the promise in whole or in part be an agreement to stifle or discontinue prosecution for the crime committed, the contract will not be enforced. Giles v. De Cow, 30 Colo. 412, 70 Pac. 681.

Thus, a contract to return property alleged to have been stolen by defendant's brother-in-law, and also to pay a debt owed by him to plaintiff, in consideration that plaintiff would not prosecute the brother-in-law for the larceny, is illegal and unenforceable. Ibid.

It is not necessary for a person to be under arrest and actually in the course of being prosecuted to enable one who secures the termination of the prosecution for a money consideration to plead the illegality of the consideration in bar of its collection. Beal & 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

D. Dry Goods Co. v. Barton, 80 Ark. 326, 97 S. W. 58.

The fact that the money procured from plaintiffs was to be used to settle claims held by persons against defendant's brother, who was being prosecuted criminally for wrongful appropriation of property, does not render void the contract under which the money was advanced, where plaintiffs had no knowledge of any agreement to stifle the criminal proceedings. Cohen v. Grimes, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 327, 45 S. W. 210.

There can be no recovery on a note executed by a father to avoid a threatened prosecution of his son and son-in-law for obtaining money by false representations. First Nat. Bank v. Payne, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 839, 42 S. W. 736.

A note given in settlement of a deficit of an agent, and for the purpose of securing to him further employment, is not invalid because the agent was liable to prosecution for his defalcation, in the absence of any threat to prosecute or agreement not to prosecute. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Edmonds, 95 Tenn. 53, 31 S. W. 168.

An agreement by a corporation to waive a large money claim against an employee accused of embezzlement, and to retain him in its employ, is sufficient consideration for a deed to such corporation by the employee's wife. Girty v. Standard Oil Co. 1 App. Div. 224, 37 N. Y. Supp. 369.

Promissory notes, with sureties, for the amount embezzled by the maker's son-in-law, are based upon sufficient consideration, although the chief consideration therefor is to obtain the latter's release from arrest and prevent his further prosecution. Loud v. Hamilton (Tenn. Ch. App.) 45 L.R.A. 400, 51 S. W. 140. The court based its decision upon Allen v. Dunham, 92 Tenn. 257, 21 S.

N. H. 197, 32 Am. Dec. 348; Hackett v. King, 6 Allen, 58; Seiber v. Price, 26 Mich. 518; Osborn v. Robbins, 36 N. Y. 365; Harris v. Carmody, 131 Mass. 51, 41 Am. Rep. 188; Sharon v. Gager, 46 Conn. 189; Foley v. Greene, 14 R. I. 618, 51 Am. Rep. 419; Hullhorst v. Scharner, 15 Neb. 57, 17 N. W. 259; Schoener v. Lissauer, 107 N. Y. 111, 13 N. E. 741; Searle v. Gregg, 67 Kan. 1, 72 Pac. 544; James v. Blackman, 68 Kan. 725, 75 Pac. 1017.

Johnston, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the William-son-Halsell Frazier Company to recover on three notes, one for $1,166.66 and each of the other two for $1,166.67, due respectively, in one, two, and three years after date, signed by Joseph J. Ackerman and his two children, John H. Ackerman and Mary H. Sproat, and to foreclose a mortgage on the home of Joseph J. Ackerman, purporting to secure the payment of the notes. The defense of Joseph J. Ackerman was that the notes and mortgage were signed under duress, and therefore unenforceable, and this defense prevailed. The defendant alleged, and offered testimony to show, that during the years of 1903 and 1904, John H. Ackerman was an employee of the plaintiff corporation, and that Halsell, a representative of the company, came to Joseph J. Ackerman, and informed him that John had embezzled about $4,000 of the company's money; that he, Halsell, had obtained and

W. 898, where it is said that the statute permits the settlement of an embezzlement charge, and that it would constitute a sufficient consideration for a contract.

An agreement for the lease of a building for a stipulated rental, with a further consideration that defendants would not prosecute plaintiff's husband on a charge of burglary, is void as against public policy. Graham v. Hiesel, 73 Neb. 433, 102 N. W. 1010.

A deed by parents conveying land in payment of a debt due grantee from their son, on grantee's agreement to forego his purpose to prosecute the son criminally, is void as contrary to public policy. (Medearis v. Granberry, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 187, 84 S. W. 1070), being a compounding of crime under Penal Code, art. 291.

A note signed by a father as surety, upon an agreement to conceal the crime of embezzlement committed by his son, is void and unenforceable. Folmar v. Siler, 132 Ala. 297, 31 So. 719.

A guaranty of a son's debt, made to suppress a criminal prosecution, is not rendered valid by the fact that a legal consideration also entered into the agreement. Beal & D. Dry Goods Co. v. Barton, supra.

A mortgage executed by a wife to raise money to pay her husband's debts and to compromise a criminal prosecution against him was valid as to the sum used in payment of the debts, but invalid as to the amount used in compromising the prosecution, where the mortgagee assisted in such compromise. Pierson v. Green, 69 S. C. 559, 48 S. E. 624.

In Keating v. Morrissey, 6 Cal. App. 163, 91 Pac. 677, the court held the evidence sufficient to support a finding that defendant's note was made in consideration of plaintiff's forbearance to sue the son civilly, and was not, therefore, void as a contract to refrain from prosecuting the son criminally, though he was guilty of the crime of forgery.

The mere fact that a landowner executing a mortgage in consideration that the mortgagor would not prosecute the mortgagor's son for a felony was guilty of compounding the son's crime did not prevent him from annulling the contract on the ground of duress. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Gray v. Freeman, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 556, 84 S. W. 1105.

Voidable upon the ground of duress.

As shown in the earlier note, such contracts have been held voidable upon the ground of duress. As a general rule an agreement cannot be avoided because the duress was imposed on a third person. In other words, the law does not regard one person as under duress who enters into a contract to relieve another person and not himself. An exception to the general rule is where the subject of duress is the wife, husband, parent, child, or other near relative, as is the case of an aunt or brother who enters into a contract under duress to protect a nephew or brother.

What constitutes duress is matter of law; whether duress existed in a particular transaction is matter of fact. There is no legal standard of resistance which a person acted upon must come up to at his peril of being remediless for a wrong done to him, and no general rule as to the sufficiency of facts to produce duress. The question in each case is, Was the person so acted upon by threats of the person claiming the benefit of the contract, for the purposes of obtaining such contract, as to be bereft of the quality of mind essential to the making of a contract; and was the contract thereby obtained? Galusha v. Sherman, 105 Wis. 263, 47 L.R.A. 417, 81 N. W. 495.

The doctrine that, in order to produce duress by threats, there must be such threats as are reasonably necessary to control by fear the free-will power of a person of ordinary firmness and courage, is not the true doctrine or the law of Wisconsin. Ibid.

If, in making a contract, one party to the transaction is incapable of exercising his free will by reason of threats made by the other for the purpose of producing such condition, to the end that he may obtain such contract, such party may, at his option, repudiate such contract on the ground of duress. Ibid.

The court held, in Jaeger v. Koenig, 30 Misc. 580, 62 N. Y. Supp. 803, that it was had in his pocket a warrant for John's arrest for embezzlement, and that there was a deputy sheriff waiting in an adjoining room to serve the warrant, and, unless the notes and mortgage were signed, the warrant would be served and John would be convicted and sent to the penitentiary; that, when the father and sister of John asked that they be permitted to consult with John about signing the papers, Halsell objected, saying that he would deliver the warrant which he had in his pocket to the deputy sheriff, and that the prosecution would go on, but that, if the notes and mortgage were signed, there would be no prosecution. After negotiation which continued for about two hours, Halsell insisted that, in case the notes and mortgage were not executed,

John would be arrested and locked up, but, if they were given, no arrest would be made, and, after Mrs. Sproat, who was frightened and crying, had begged her father to save John, he signed the notes and mortgage in suit. Two days afterwards a flaw was found in the mortgage, and a representative of the company came to Wichita and demanded a corrected mortgage, and, when Mr. Ackerman held back, he was informed that a refusal meant a prosecution and the penitentiary for his son, and, under these threats, a corrected mortgage was executed. There was abundant testimony to show that the notes and mortgage were secured from Ackerman by threats of arrest and prosecution of his son, and that they would never have been executed if not necessary to show any definite or precise method of duress; but that the question of duress must be decided upon all the facts and circumstances adduced upon the trial.

The age, sex, state of health, temper, and disposition of the party, under the circumstances, calculated to give greater or less effect to the violence or threats, must be taken into consideration. Gray v. Freeman, supra.

In WILLIAMSON-HALSELL FRAZIER CO. v. ACKERMAN a father was held to be subject to duress because of threats directed against a member of his family, as much as if they had been directed against himself.

A mortgage given by an old woman seventy years of age, who was told that she would have to sign the mortgage to save her son-in-law from jail, was held void for duress. Bentley v. Robson, 117 Mich. 691, 76 N. W. 146.

Guilt or innocence of a threatened criminal charge is immaterial in determining whether there was duress. Thompson v. Nigley, 53 Kan. 604, 26 L.R.A. 803, 35 Pac. 290; Hensinger v. Dyer, 147 Mo. 219, 48 S. W. 912; WILLIAMSON-HALSELL FRAZIER CO. v. ACKERMAN; Beindorff v. Kaufman, 41 Neb. 824, 60 N. W. 101.

And it is of no consequence whether the threat is of lawful or unlawful imprisonment. Gorringe v. Reed, 23 Utah, 120, 90 Am. St. Rep. 692, 63 Pac. 902.

Whether the threat by which a wife is induced to enter into a contract is of lawful or unlawful imprisonment of her husband, she may make the defense of duress where the guilt of the husband has not been conceded or shown. Heaton v. Norton County State Bank, 59 Kan. 281, 52 Pac. 876.

In order for duress of imprisonment, either actual or threatened, to have been available at common law as a defense to a contract, the imprisonment must have been unlawful. Bailey v. Devine, 123 Ga. 653, 107 Am. St. Rep. 153, 51 S. E. 603.

A threat to detain a son in prison for an indefinite period, and prevent a trial from taking place, amounts to a threat of unlawful imprisonment. Ibid.

The unlawful imprisonment of one's child, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

or the threat of such imprisonment, may constitute duress. Ibid.

Hesitation and long deliberation and repeated attempts at a compromise are held to show an absence of duress. Loud v. Hamilton (Tenn. Ch. App.) 45 L.R.A. 400, 51 S. W. 140.

Threats to arrest a man for embezzlement unless his wife will execute a mortgage constitutes duress which will avoid the mortgage obtained thereby, if they are sufficient to control her will. Mack v. Prang, 104 Wis. 1, 45 L.R.A. 407, 76 Am. St. Rep. 848, 79 N. W. 770.

Duress is a sufficient defense to an action upon a contract where it shows that, by reason of threats, the defendant was deprived of his free will. Nebraska Mut. Bond Assn. v. Klee, 70 Neb. 383, 97 N. W. 476.

Threats which so overcome the wills of a husband and wife as to induce them to affix their signatures to a mortgage upon their homestead and thus give a security which they would not voluntarily have executed, are sufficient to constitute duress, and avoid the operation of the instrument so obtained. Hargreaves v. Korcek, 44 Neb. 660, 62 N. W. 1086.

A mortgage given upon a homestead and signed by the wife was executed under duress, where her fear or affections were worked upon through threats made against her husband, and she was induced thereby, against her will, to convey her property to secure his debt, although the liability was valid and the threat was of a lawful prosecution of a crime which he had in fact committed. Giddings v. Iowa Sav. Bank, 104 Iowa, 676, 74 N. W. 21.

In Lessor County v. Allen, 80 Miss. 298, 31 So. 815, it was held that, where the wife of a defaulting county treasurer is threatened by a district attorney with the prosecution of her husband unless she conveys all of her property to the county, and refuses; but subsequently, while her husband is still living and liable to prosecution, conveys a part of her property on a renewal of the application,—her deed is void as the result of duress. In the statement of the facts, it is said: "It does not appear that the Ackerman had been left to act of his own free will.

The plaintiff complains that the trial court did not properly define the crime of embezzlement, and that it took from the consideration of the jury an element necessary to determine whether or not John was guilty of the offense. The suit was not one to determine the guilt or innocence of John; nor was the matter of his actual guilt an essential feature of the defense of duress. The point for decision was whether the threats of arrest and prosecution of John put the father in fear, and thus overcame his will, and rendered him incompetent to contract. If there was no free will in the execution of the notes and mortgage, there is no contract, nor any binding obligation. Under the modern theory, duress is to be tested, not by the nature of the acts or threats, but rather by the state of mind of the victim induced by such acts and threats. In Galusha v. Sherman, 105 Wis. 263, 47 L.R.A. 417, 81 N. W. 495, there is a full discussion of the subject and of the development of the law from the ancient doctrine that duress should be tested by the means used to overcome the person threatened to the later and better one of the condition of the mind induced by the threats. It was there said: "The making of a contract requires the free exercise of the will power of the contracting parties, and the free meeting and blending of their minds. In the absence of that, the essential of a contract is wanting; and, if such threats were repeated at the time she signed the deed last presented to her." But the court granted her relief.

'The fact that a wife lived two years after making a deed, void because made under threats of the prosecution of her husband, and expressed satisfaction at the acceptance of the deed and the prevention of disgrace, is not a sufficient ratification to validate the deed, the husband being still alive and subject to prosecution. Ibid.

A mortgage executed to a bank by a woman to secure the amount of her son's forgeries was held to be voidable as being executed under duress through fear that her son would be prosecuted criminally, where she was assured by her son's friend that such steps would be taken and would result in imprisonment, and she believed that there was no other way to prevent the prosecution, though neither the bank nor its attorneys ever authorized the statements, or knew anything about them. National Bank v. Cox, 47 App. Div. 53, 62 N. Y. Supp. 314.

A mortgage executed under an implied threat of a criminal prosecution is obtained by duress and undue influence, equally as if given under an express threat of prosecution. Benedict v. Roome, 106 Mich. 378, 64 N. W. 193.

Thus, a mortgage by a wife to secure the repayment of money embezzled by her husband, executed at the time she was first informed of her husband's crime, and after she had been told by the one whose money had been appropriated that he "must have the money or the security, or there are the papers;" and "I shall go on with the proceedings,"—will be set aside as having been obtained by duress. Ibid.

And a payment made by a wife to her husband's employer after he had informed her that her husband had been discharged for larceny, and also informed her that, while detectives were looking for her husband, "it would go no farther" if she settled the claim, may be recovered as money obtained by duress. Jaeger v. Koenig, supra.

Whether an assignment was obtained by duress was for the jury, where it appeared that defendant had threatened several times to tell plaintiff's husband, who was in poor health, that her son had embezzled defendant's money; and plaintiff, fearing the knowledge would make her husband insane, and to prevent defendant doing so, assigned her share in her father's estate. Silsbee v. Webber, 171 Mass. 378, 50 N. E. 555.

Threats made by an officer of a bank to prosecute a brother of the mortgagor for embezzlement if the mortgage was not executed were held sufficient to constitute duress, in Henry v. State Bank, 131 Iowa, 97, 107 N. W. 1034.

A threat by a man to his wife, that, unless she signed certain papers, he would be arrested for embezzlement, and would commit suicide, does not constitute duress. Girty v. Standard Oil Co. 1 App. Div. 224, 37 N. Y. Supp. 369.

In Moyer v. Dodson, 212 Pa. 344, 61 Atl. 937, it was held to be no defense to a mortgage that it was given to stop a threatened criminal prosecution of the mortgagor's husband, where no showing was made of a promise not to prosecute if the mortgage was executed; that the opposite party must have agreed to abandon or suppress the prosecution, else it is not duress.

Duress of the mortgagor in executing a mortgage is not established where it appears that her son requested her to execute the mortgage, and, upon her refusal, told her that if she did not the mortgagee would have him arrested and put in prison, and that she executed the mortgage to save him the disgrace; where it also appeared that the mortgagor executed the mortgage in expectation of receiving part of the amount thereof in cash from the mortgagee. Dodd v. Averill, 7 App. Div. 290, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1097.

Duress of the principal in a contract is not a defense to either surety or indorser who assumes the undertaking with knowledge of that duress, unless the relationship between them is that of parent and child, or husband and wife. East Stroudsburg Nat. Bank v. Seiple, 29 Pa. Co. Ct. 245.

In Woodham v. Allen, 130 Cal. 194, 62 Pac. 398, a wife gave her notes to save her husband from threatened imprisonment, and, absence be produced by the wrongful conduct of one party to the transaction, or conduct for which he is responsible, whereby the other party, for the time being, through fear, is bereft of his free-will power, for the purpose of obtaining the contract, and it is thereby obtained, such contract may be avoided on the ground of duress. There is no legal standard of resistance which a party so circumstanced must exercise at his peril to protect himself. The question in each case is: Was the alleged injured person, by being put in fear by the other party to the transaction for the purpose of obtaining an advantage over him, deprived of the free exercise of his will power, and was such advantage thereby obtained? If the proposition be determined in the affirmative, no matter what the nature of the threatened injury to such person, or his property, or the person or liberty of his wife or child, the advantage thereby obtained cannot be retained." Following the same theory, neither the legality of the threatened arrest and prosecution, nor the guilt or innocence of John, was material to the determination of whether there was duress. The conduct of John, whatever it may have been, was no excuse or justification for intimidating and coercing the father to pay John's debt, or to give a mortgage on his home to secure the payment of such debt. If it is assumed that John misappropriated the money of the plaintiff, and was therefore indebted to it for a large sum of money, it nevertheless gave its rep-in a suit to recover the money, it was held that the taint of duress attaching to the execution of the notes was not removed by payments on the notes, made under the same influence which controlled its original execution; and that, if the payment was made under fear of the arrest of her husband, caused by the threats of the defendant, the money could be recovered back.

Duress is not a defense to notes and a deed given to settle a claim against a son-in-law and release him from arrest for felony, when he enters into the transaction deliberately after manœvering for a compromise, and on an understanding with his daughter that the payment shall constitute an advancement to her. Loud v. Hamilton (Tenn. Ch. App.) 45 L.R.A. 400, 51 S. W. 140.

Though a father, in executing a mortgage, had been guilty of compounding the son's crime, that fact would not prevent him from annulling the contract on the ground of duress. Gray v. Freeman, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 550, 84 S. W. 1105.

The right of a mortgagor to have a cancellation of the mortgage on the ground that it was obtained by duress passed to the purchaser of the land. Ibid.

Recovery of money paid by plaintiff in settlement with defendant while under duress—because her husband was accused of stealing from defendant—could not be defeated on the ground that the payment was compounding a felony, when no criminal action had been contemplated. Jaeger v. Koenig, 30 Misc. 580, 62 N. Y. Supp. 803.

An act of the legislature authorizing a board of supervisors to take land in settlement of the debt of a defaulting county treasurer, and providing that, upon such settlement, he should be relieved from all liability for the indebtedness, does not include his relief from criminal liability, nor prevent the deed whereby his wife conveyed her land to effectuate the settlement from being void for duress, resulting from threats of his prosecution. Leflore County v. Allen, supra.

A note and mortgage executed by a wife on consideration that the payee would cease to 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

prosecute her husband for a criminal offense are void; and such fact may be pleaded and proven as a defense to the foreclosure of the mortgage so given, even in the hands of one who was a bona fide holder of such note for value, before due, and without notice. Jones v. Dannenberg Co. 112 Ga. 426, 52 L.R.A. 271, 37 S. E. 729.

A note and mortgage extorted from a husband and wife by means of threats of prosecution for criminal offenses of which the husband was guilty in fact, but which were in no manner connected with the demand for which compensation was sought, may be avoided not only in the hands of the original payee, but of his assignees having notice of the circumstances under which the securities were taken. Thompson v. Niggley, 53 Kan. 664, 26 L.R.A. 803, 35 Pac. 290.

A wife is entitled to recover property transferred by her for the purpose of suppressing a criminal prosecution against her husband and son, and to settle a debt due by the husband. Mills v. Hudgins, 97 Ga. 417, 24 S. E. 146.

In Beindorff v. Kaufman, 41 Neb. 824, 60 N. W. 101, the evidence tended to show that defendant executed a mortgage because of threats of prosecution and imprisonment of his son; and the court held such mortgage might be avoided. To the same effect, Delta County Bank v. McGranahan, 37 Wash. 307, 79 Pac. 796 (husband).

In Page v. Cranford, 43 S. C. 193, 20 S. E. 972, it was held that, where a married woman held the legal title to a half interest in a tract of land conveyed to her by her brother as security for a debt which the brother had afterwards paid, her mortgage of such moiety at her brother's request, when he was under a threat of criminal prosecution, to pay another debt due by him, was a valid instrument.

Relief in equity.

Equity will not enforce an agreement given to suppress a criminal prosecution. Tracy v. Deatrick, 10 Ohio C. C. 111.

Equity will cancel a mortgage executed through fear of a criminal prosecution representatives no right to use, or threaten the use of, the criminal law to make the father pay or secure the debt. Such a method is not an appropriate one for enforcing the payment of the debt by the debtor himself, much less to compel the securing of it by one who was in no sense liable for its payment. In Heaton v. Norton County State Bank, 59 Kan. 281, 52 Pac. 876, where it was held that a wife was not bound by a contract induced by the threats of parties that, if she failed to enter into the contract, they would cause the arrest and imprisonment of her husband, the court, in speaking of the misuse of the criminal law, said: "Imprisonment may be lawful so far as the public or those representing the public are concerned; but is it ever lawful for a party to force the signing of a contract, the surrender of property, or the obtaining of some other private advantage, against the will of another, by using or threatening to use the machinery of the law intended for the protection of the public and the punishment of criminals?" In Thompson v. Niggley, 53 Kan. 664, 26 L.R.A. 803, against a relative, induced by threats and representations made by the mortgagee for the express purpose of obtaining it. Gray v. Freeman, supra (son); Leflore County v. Allen, 80 Miss. 298, 31 So. 815 (husband); Davis v. Smith, 68 N. H. 253, 73 Am. St. Rep. 584, 44 Atl. 384; Henry v. State Bank, 131 Iowa, 97, 107 N. W. 1034 (brother).

A court of equity will set aside a mortgage executed under an implied threat of a criminal prosecution, as having been procured by duress and undue influence. Benedict v. Roome, 106 Mich. 378, 64 N. W. 193.

Equity may grant relief from an agreement to stifle a criminal prosecution when the parties, though in delicto, are not in pari delicto, as when at the time of the transaction the complainant was under undue influence, and acted involuntarily. Goringe v. Reed, 23 Utah, 120, 90 Am. St. Rep. 692, 63 Pac. 902.

One who made use of the criminal process for the purpose of overcoming the will of another to secure an advantage to himself is not in a position to obtain and hold the fruits of a contract on the ground that both parties were in pari delicto, and that in equity the court will leave them where it finds them. Ibid.

Where a creditor resorts to the use of criminal process to coerce the father of a debtor into securing the debt of his son, and not for the purpose of enforcing the criminal law, a note given to avoid the threatened prosecution will be canceled. Green v. Moss, 65 Ill. App. 594.

The maxim, In pari delicto, melior est conditio defendentis, does not apply to a case where a married woman sues to set aside a deed of her separate property, made by her under express or implied threats of the prosecution of her husband for the crime

35 Pac. 290, the question of whether a charge of duress could be maintained by showing threats to prosecute a person for an offense of which he was in fact guilty was considered. There Niggley and his wife were induced to execute a note and also a mortgage upon their home by threats of the prosecution of Niggley for certain offenses which he conceded were committed, but which were in no way connected with the debt sought to be secured. The court repudiated the doctrine that duress could not be predicated upon a threatened arrest and prosecution for an offense of which the party was in fact guilty, saying: "We are not inclined to encourage a resort to such pressure as was used in this instance to compel the settlement of private demands." The decision as formulated in the syllabus is: "Written securities, extorted by means of threats of prosecution for criminal offenses of which the party threatened was guilty in fact, but which were in no manner connected with the demand for which compensation was sought, may be avoided by the parties executing them, not of embezzlement, and to save him from such prosecution,—particularly so when she was sick and nervous, and when she does not appear to have had abundant opportunity for consideration and consultation with disinterested advisers. Burton v. McMillan, 52 Fla. 469, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 991, 120 Am. St. Rep. 220, 42 So. 849, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 380.

A wife is not in pari delicto with a defendant, so as to preclude a recovery for a sum of money paid to check an unwarranted prosecution of her husband for a felony, unless she paid such sum. Woodham v. Allen, 130 Cal. 194, 62 Pac. 398.

In Gregor v. Hyde, 10 C. C. A. 290, 27 U. S. App. 75, 62 Fed. 107, it was held that a threat of lawful arrest of a son justly amenable to criminal prosecution for embezzlement is not ground for cancellation of a deed, though it was executed under pressure of such threat, where there were no circumstances of oppression or fraud, and no objection was made for nearly three years.

In Russell v. Durham, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 35, 29 S. W. 635, the court refused to set aside a foreclosure sale of a wife's land on the ground that she had been induced to execute the mortgage because of the importunities of her husband, who was a defaulter, and because of threats of criminal prosecution by his sureties, where she did not defend the suit brought to enforce the mortgage liens, and the lands had been sold and a deed made to a stranger.

The courts will not aid the grantee in recovering possession of land from the grantor under a deed the consideration for which was the compounding of crime. Medearis v. Granberry, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 187, 84 S. W. 1070.

only in the hands of the original payee, but of his assignees having notice of the circumstances under which such securities were taken."

In a very early case the supreme court of New Hampshire, in considering what amounted to duress, said: "Where there is an arrest for improper purposes, without just cause; or an arrest for a just cause, but without lawful authority; or an arrest for a just cause and under lawful authority, for an improper purpose; and the person arrested pays money for his enlargement,—he may be considered as having paid the money by duress of imprisonment, and may recover it back in an action for money had and received." Richardson v. Duncan, 3 N. H. 508. The supreme court of Alabama, in a recent case, ruled that threats of unlawful imprisonment were not necessary to constitute duress; and that, if there was a liability for arrest and imprisonment, and such liability was used to overcome the will and compel the making of a contract, which would otherwise not have been made, it would amount to duress. In disposing of the case, the court said: "It was never contemplated in the law that either the actual or threatened use or misuse of criminal process, legal or illegal, should be resorted to for the purpose of compelling the payment of a mere debt, although it may be justly owing and due, or to coerce the making of contracts or agreements from which advantage is to be derived by the party employing such threats. Ample civil remedies are afforded in the law to enforce the payment of debts and the performance of contracts; but the criminal law and the machinery for its enforcement have a wholly different purpose, and cannot be employed to interfere with that wise and just policy of the law that all contracts and agreements shall be founded upon the exercise of the free will of the parties, which is the real essence of all contracts." Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 111 Ala. 456, 20 So. 651. See also Morse v. Woodworth, 155 Mass. 233, 27 N. E. 1010, 29 N. E. 525; Adams v. Irving Nat. Bank, 116 N. Y. 606, 6 L.R.A. 491, 15 Am. St. Rep. 447, 23 N. E. 7; Henry v. State Bank, 131 Iowa, 97, 107 N. W. 1034.

The important consideration in cases like this one is not whether there was ground for the arrest or imprisonment threatened, but rather whether the free will of the party making the contract was constrained by the threats of the other. It is clear, therefore, that an explicit and complete definition of the crime of embezzlement was not essential in charging the jury upon the issues pleaded in this case. If, for any reason, it had been necessary to advise the jury as to the elements of embezzlement, either with respect to duress or to the stifling of a prosecution, there would be little reason to complain of the instruction given. The complaint is that in one part of the charge the court said that the taking of the employer's money without returning it upon demand is a felony under the statute. It is contended that the court should have stated that it was the fraudulent misappropriation of the money which constitutes the crime of embezzlement. The phrase was used by the court, not in defining "embezzlement," but for the purpose of informing the jury that embezzlement was a felony. It appears that, when the court undertook to define the crime of embezzlement, it was fully and correctly done; the statutory language being employed. In no view can the statement criticized be deemed to have prejudiced the plaintiff.

In the same connection, it is said that there is an absence of evidence showing an intention on the part of John to appropriate the plaintiff's money,—a contention that is hardly consistent with plaintiff's own evidence in which John is characterized as a defaulter and an embezzler. There is no lack of testimony to show threats of the arrest and prosecution of John, nor that the notes and mortgage were procured through the fear excited by the threats. Joseph J. Ackerman was subject to duress because of the threats directed against a member of his family, as much as if they had been directed against himself. In Winfield Nat. Bank v. Croco, 46 Kan. 620, 26 Pac. 939, as well as in Heaton v. Norton County State Bank, supra, it was held that a threatened prosecution of the husband may cause duress of the wife. Many cases may be found in the books where the threatened prosecution of a child amounted to duress of the parent. An illustration may be found in Williams v. Bayley, L. R. 1 H. L. 200, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 717, where bankers had acquired paper forged by a young man, and had brought pressure upon the father to assume the payment of his son's obligations. The lord chancellor spoke of the pressure brought upon the father as of this nature: "We have the means of prosecuting and so transporting your son. Do you choose to come to his help, and take on yourself the amount of his debts,—the amount of his forgeries? If you do, we will not prosecute. If you do not, we will. That is the plain interpretation of what passed. Is that, or is it not, legal? In my opinion, my lords, I am bound to go the length of saying that I do not think it is legal." Lord Westbury, in concurring in the judgment, said: "The question, therefore, my lords, is whether a father appealed to under such circumstances to take upon himself an amount of civil liability, with the knowledge that, unless he does so, his son will be exposed to a criminal prosecution, with the certainty of conviction, can be regarded as a free and voluntary agent. I have no hesitation in saying that no man is safe, or ought to be safe, who takes a security for the debt of a felon, from the father of the felon, under such circumstances. A contract to give security for the debt of another, which is a contract without consideration, is, above all things, a contract which should be based upon the free and voluntary agency of the individual who enters into it." See also City Nat. Bank v. Kusworm, 88 Wis. 188, and note thereto in 26 L.R.A. 48 (43 Am. St. Rep. 880, 59 N. W. 564).

Finding no error in the record, the judgment will be affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

JOHN DEERE PLOW COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

B. F. SPATZ.

(—Kan. —, 99 Pac. 221.)

Dismissed action—expense of defense—recovery.

1. Where a plaintiff commences a civil action, and, before trial, dismisses it with prejudice and pays all legal costs incurred therein, the defendant, in the absence of malice, want of probable cause, and bad faith, cannot recover damages for loss of time, expenses, or attorney fees incurred by him on account of such suit.

Headnotes by GRAVES, J.

Case Note.—Right of purchaser of goods to recover costs and other expenses incurred by him in defending a collateral action, as damages for breach of the seller's warranty.

An extended search fails to disclose but one case other than JOHN DEERE PLOW Co. v. SPATZ, and the case therein cited, where it was sought to recover from the vendor the expenses incurred in defending an action for the purchase price, brought by either the vendor, or a third person in whose hands notes given for the purchase price had fallen.

This case is Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Hancock, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 302, 23 S. W. 384, where it was held that a purchaser of a harvesting machine, who executes his note therefor, cannot, in a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same—elements of action to recover expenses—malice.

2. S. bought a threshing machine, giving his promissory note in payment therefor. In the contract of purchase it was stipulated that, if the machine did not work, the notes would be returned and the machine taken back. The machine failed to work and was returned, and the notes demanded. The demand to return the notes was refused. Afterwards an action commenced on the notes, and before trial was dismissed with prejudice, and the plaintiff paid all the costs taxed in the case. Afterwards the defendant commenced an action against the plaintiff to recover attorney fees, hotel, traveling, and other expenses incurred when preparing for the trial in the case which was dismissed. No malice, want of probable cause, or bad faith being alleged against the plaintiff.—Held, that such an action cannot be maintained.

(November 7, 1908.)

ERROR to the District Court for Jewell County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover moneys expended in preparing for the defense of an action which was afterward dismissed without trial. Reversed.

Statement by GRAVES, J.:

Spatz bought a threshing machine from the John Deere Plow Company for which he gave three notes. The machine was warranted to work, and, if it did not, the notes were to be returned upon delivery of the machine. It did not work. It was returned, and the notes demanded by Spatz. The plow company refused to return the notes and brought suit on them in the district court of Jewell county, where the cases were dismissed because the plaintiff, being a foreign corporation, had not complied with the statute usually called the "Bush law." On proceedings in error to this court, the district court was affirmed. John Deere Plow Co. v.

suit to rescind the sale for failure of the machine to work, and for damages, recover costs and attorneys' fees paid by him in an action on such note by the indorsee thereof.

In regard to those cases passing upon the question whether a purchaser of a chattel may recover from his vendor the cost and other expenses incurred by defending his title from a third person, or incurred by defending a suit for breach of warranty by one who purchased from him, it has been almost universally held that, if the original vendor had notice of the suit, his vendee may recover, besides the other damages sustained, the costs incurred in such suit. and, where asked, his attorneys' fees as well. Cases so holding are Balte v. Bedemiller, 37 Or. 27, 82 Am. St. Rep. 737, 60 Pac. 601; Carleton v. Lombard, A. & Co. 19

Wyland, 69 Kan. 255, 76 Pac. 863, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 304. Afterwards the plow company commenced another action in Jewell county upon the same notes, and, after some delay, it dismissed the case with prejudice, and paid the costs. In making preparation for the trial of this last case, Spatz employed lawyers, took depositions in other states, and expended large amounts in anticipation of a trial, all of which was made unnecessary by the dismissal of the case by the plaintiff. He then commenced this action in the district court of Jewell county to recover the money so uselessly expended, and recovered a judgment for $1,010, and the plow company brings the case here for review. The petition contains no specific allegations of malice, want of probable cause, or bad faith.

Messrs. Lee Monroe and George A. Kline, for plaintiff in error:

In the absence of malice and without proof of probable cause the failure to maintain a civil action does not afford ground for a suit for damages beyond the costs allowed by statute.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 673; Carbondale Invest. Co. v. Burdick, 67 Kan. 329, 72 Pac. 781; 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 20; Emory v. Eggan, 75 Kan. 82, 88 Pac. 740; Mitchell v. Southwestern R. Co. 75 Ga. 398; Mayer v. Walter, 64 Pa. 283; Norcross v. Otis, 152 Pa. 481, 34 Am. St. Rep. 669, 25 Atl. 575; Smith v. Michigan Buggy Co. 175 Ill. 610, 67 Am. St. Rep. 242, 51 N. E.

569; Wetmore v. Mellinger, 64 Iowa, 741, 52 Am. Rep. 465, 18 N. W. 870; 2 Addison, Torts, Wood's ed. p. 78; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 220; Salado College v. Davis, 47 Tex. 135; McNamee v. Minke, 49 Md. 122; Rice v. Day, 34 Neb. 100, 51 N. W. 464; Cade v. Yocum, 8 La. Ann. 477; Terry v. Davis, 114 N. C. 31, 18 S. E. 943; Thomas v. Rouse, 2 Brev. 75; Potts v. Imlay, 4 N. J. L. 330, 7 Am. Dec. 603; Paul v. Fargo, 84 App. Div. 9, 82 N. Y. Supp. 369; Lucy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 31 Ohio L. J. 22.

Messrs. Frank T. Burnham and George W. Dashiell, for defendant in error:

In an action against a vendor for damages for breach of warranty the costs incurred in preparing the defense to an action on a purchase-money note are a legitimate consequence of the wrongful action of the defendant in suing upon the note, and may be taken into consideration by the jury.

D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Ehrhard, 37 Kan. 413, 15 Pac. 590; Sutherland, Damages, 2d ed. § 58; Philpot v. Taylor, 75 Ill. 309, 20 Am. Rep. 241; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Richardson, 135 Mass. 473; Smith v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 33 L. ed. 279, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39; Bennett v. Lockwood, 20 Wend. 223, 32 Am. Dec. 532; Roberts v. Heim, 27 Ala. 678; Seay v. Greenwood, 21 Ala. 492; Ferguson v. Baber, 24 Ala. 402; Pond v. Harris, 113 Mass. 114; First Nat. Bank v. Williams, 62 Kan. 434, 63 Pac. 744; Westfield v. Mayo, 122 Mass. 100, 23 Am. Rep. 202; Newhaven & N. Co. v. Hayden, 117 Mass. 433.

App. Div. 297, 46 N. Y. Supp. 120, affirmed without opinion in 162 N. Y. 628, 57 N. E. 1120; Scaling v. Knollin, 94 Ill. App. 443; Shultis v. Rice, 114 Mo. App. 274, 89 S. W. 357; Johnson v. Blanks, 34 Mo. 255; Thurston v. Spratt, 52 Me. 202; Boyd v. Whitfield, 19 Ark. 447; Hammond v. Bussey, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 79; Lewis v. Peake, 7 Taunt. 153; Noel v. Wheatly, 30 Miss. 181; Rowland v. Shelton, 25 Ala. 217.

And especially so where the original vendor instructed his vendee to defend the title, and promised that he would pay all costs and expenses of the controversy. Bash v. Young, 2 Ind. App. 297, 28 N. E. 344.

In Reggio v. Braggiotti, 7 Cush. 166, it is held that, where a purchaser of opium is compelled to pay damages for breach of warranty to his own vendee, if he has given his vendor notice of the suit, he may recover, besides other damages, the taxable costs of the former suit, but in no case counsel fees.

So, in Armstrong v. Percy, 5 Wend. 535, it seems to have been held that a vendee may recover from his vendor the costs paid in a suit for breach of warranty of title, which was brought by a subvendee, the court at the same time denying the recovery of attorneys' fees.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But, where a suit is unnecessarily resisted by the vendee, the costs so incurred are not chargeable against the vendor. Lunt v. Wrenn, 113 Ill. 168.

So, in Western v. Short, 12 B. Mon. 153, where a vendee of a slave, against whom a foreclosure suit had been brought, executed a bond to have the slave forthcoming to abide the result of the suit, and then evidently unnecessarily permitted a suit to be brought upon his bond, it was held that he could not hold his vendor responsible for the costs of such suit.

And so, where no notice is given the vendor of the pending suit and to defend, costs and attorneys' fees are not recoverable. Marlatt v. Clary, 20 Ark. 251; Eldridge v. Wadleigh, 12 Me. 372; Erie City Iron Works v. Tatum, 1 Cal. App. 286, 82 Pac. 92.

In Nashua Iron & Steel Co. v. Brush, 33 C. C. A. 456, 50 U. S. App. 461, 91 Fed. 213, it was recognized that, if the seller was given no opportunity to defend in the suit against the buyer for damages, he should not be held for any of its costs and expenses.

Cases involving the sale of notes or other commercial paper are not included within this note.

Graves, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plow company contends that the object of this action is to recover damages on account of the unsuccessful suit filed against the plaintiff, Spatz, and the nature of the damages alleged in the petition are such that no recovery can be had in the absence of malice and want of probable cause, which are not alleged. In other words, it is contended that the action is, in substance, an action for malicious prosecution with the essential elements omitted. On the other hand, Spatz claims that it is merely an action on a breach of the warranty upon which the machine was purchased. The petition is too long to give a copy in full. It will be sufficient to say that it recites fully the contract of purchase, the warranty, the failure of the machine to work, the return thereof, and a demand for the notes, the refusal to comply with the demand, the suits brought to recover on the notes, and then proceeds as follows: "That, by reason of the refusal of the defendant to return said notes when demanded, and accept said worthless machinery, and by reason of its institution of the actions hereinbefore set out, plaintiff was compelled to and did employ counsel to defend, and was compelled to and did pay out large sums of money as counsel and attorneys' fees in maintaining his defense thereto; that the reasonable value of the services that he was compelled to and did procure was the sum of $430; that, by reason of said wrongful acts of the defendant, plaintiff was compelled to pay out $297 to procure testimony and maintain his defense in said actions; that, in preparing and maintaining such defense, he was put to large expense in the way of traveling expenses, hotel bills, printing briefs, etc., to the amount of $83; and that he necessarily lost a great deal of time from his work, the fair value of which was $200. The plaintiff has been damaged by the failure of the defendant to comply with the terms of said contract, in the aggregate sum of $1,010. Prays judgment for $1,010 and costs."

From this the nature of the damages sought to be recovered appears quite clearly. They are not such as followed directly from the refusal to take back the machine and return the notes. The immediate cause of the alleged damages was this last action on the notes. If it had not been commenced, the injuries of which the plaintiff complains in his petition would not have been sustained. It seems, therefore, that the real object of the suit is one to recover damages sustained on account of the prosecution of an action against the plaintiff, and nothing else. The suit was the proximate cause of the damages alleged, and the breach of warranty had no direct connection therewith. The plow company paid all the legal costs incurred in the action dismissed. This is the measure of liability incurred by an unsuccessful litigant where there is no malice or wrong intent on his part in commencing the action. 1 Sedgw. Damages, 52, 174, and notes; Salado College v. Davis, 47 Tex. 131; Young v. Courtney, 13 La. Ann. 193; Henry v. Davis, 123 Mass. 345. This law is conceded by the defendant in error to be elementary, but he insists that it does not apply to this action. Malice, want of probable cause, bad faith, it is insisted, are not necessary elements in this action; it being brought merely for the purpose of recovering damages for a wrongful breach of warranty. The case of D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Ehrhard, 37 Kan. 413, 15 Pac. 590, is cited in support of this contention. We do not understand that case to sustain this view. In that case Ehrhard bought a machine under a contract similar to the one in this case. The machine was returned and accepted. A demand was made for the note given therefor, as in this case. This was refused, and the note was sold to an innocent holder, who brought suit thereon. While the words "malice," "want of probable cause," or "bad faith," do not occur in the petition, the language used quite clearly shows that the company in that case, with full knowledge that the machine was worthless, accepted it as such and then placed the note in other hands with the evident design that it should be collected, knowing that no defense could be made thereto. This was bad faith, if not fraud. The damages which resulted to the defendant in that case were the direct result of the action brought by the holder of the note, and were contemplated and intended by the company when the note was transferred to an innocent holder. In this respect the case here being considered falls far short of the one cited.

The refusal of the plow company to deliver the notes to Spatz upon demand may have created a cause of action which gave Spatz a right to recover damages therefor; but, if it did, none of such damages constituted any part of those here sought to be recovered. These damages and every item thereof resulted directly from bringing the suit, but their connection with the refusal to deliver the notes, if any, is too remote to be considered.

We conclude that the petition fails to state facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment for any of the damages awarded. The facts found by the court are insufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment for any of the damages prayed for or awarded to him. The court's conclusion of law is erroneous.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed, with instruction to grant a new trial and proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Petition for rehearing denied December 18, 1908.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

STATE OF MAINE

v.

J. P. BASS PUBLISHING COMPANY.

(— Me. —, 71 Atl. 804.)

Intoxicating liquor — advertisements — punishment.

1. A statute imposing a penalty upon anyone publishing a newspaper in which appear advertisements of the keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, applies to those kept without as well as within the state.

Same — interstate traffic.

2. Since the passage by Congress of the Wilson act, a state may forbid the publication, within its limits, of advertisements of the keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors at places in other states.

(July 15, 1908.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Penobscot County upon an agreed statement of facts for the opinion of the full bench of a conviction by the Bangor Municipal Court of a violation of a statute prohibiting the publishing of advertisements of intoxicating liquors. Judgment for the State.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. H. H. Patten for the State.

Messrs. F. H. Appleton and Hugh R. Chaplin for defendant.

Emery, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Chapter 29 of the Revised Statutes, popularly known as the "prohibitory law," contains, in § 45, the following prohibition: "Whoever advertises or gives notice

Note. — No other reported case has been found presenting the point decided in STATE v. J. P. BASS PUB. CO., either as to the power of a state to forbid the publication within its limits of advertisements of the keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors at places in other states, or as to the application of a statute forbidding a publisher to advertise the keeping for sale of intoxicating liquor, to liquors kept for sale without the state.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of the sale or keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, or knowingly publishes any newspaper in which such notices are given, shall be fined for such offense the sum of $20 and costs, to be recovered by complaint."

The defendants knowingly published, August 10, 1906, at Bangor, in Penobscot county, a newspaper, the Bangor Daily Commercial, in which was given a notice and advertisement that intoxicating liquors were sold and kept for sale at 297 Congress street, in Boston, Massachusetts, by Charles Gallagher & Company, who were then carrying on business in Massachusetts, and were legally authorized under the laws of that commonwealth to sell and keep for sale intoxicating liquors. Their advertisement in question was published in the Bangor Daily Commercial in pursuance of a contract made in Boston, Massachusetts, between them and an advertising agency there acting as the agent of the defendants.

The defendants claim that their act of publishing the advertisement was lawful upon two grounds: (1) That the statute is susceptible of the construction that it only prohibits notices or advertisements of liquors for sale or kept for sale within this state, and, being a penal statute, should therefore receive this strict construction; (2) that, if it should be construed as prohibiting notices or advertisements of liquors for sale or kept for sale in another state where such sale and keeping for sale are lawful, as in this case, then, so construed, the statute is so far nullified by that clause of the Constitution of the United States known as the "commerce clause," which confers upon Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes." U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, ¶ 3.

1. In construing the statute, penal though it be, the intent and object of the legislature in enacting it are to be ascertained and given effect if the language be fairly susceptible of such a construction. As said by the Massachusetts court per Shaw, Ch. J., in a criminal case (Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 366, 370): "It is unquestionably a well-settled rule of construction, applicable as well to penal statutes as to others, that, when the words are not precise and clear, such construction will be adopted as shall appear most reasonable and best suited to accomplish the objects of the statute." In a criminal case (United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. ed. 830) the court at page 396 of 6 Wall., said of the penal statute there in question: "The proper course in all cases is to adopt that sense of the words which best harmonizes with the context and promotes in the fullest manner the policy and objects of the legislature. The rule of strict construction is not violated by permitting the words of the statute to have their full meaning, or the more extended of two meanings, as the wider popular, instead of the more narrow technical, one; but the words should be taken in such a sense, bent neither one way nor the other, as will best manifest the legislative intent."

The statute in this case is but a part of the legislation of this state upon the subject-matter of the sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, and is to be construed, so far as its language will fairly and reasonably allow, in harmony with what appears from that legislation to be the legislative policy and purpose. The selling and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors are in themselves harmless acts. If the people purchasing such liquors used them only "for medicinal, mechanical, and manufacturing purposes," no harm would result to the people of the state; and the sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, for such purposes are provided for in § 14. of chapter 29. It is common knowledge that it is the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage that is deemed harmful, and is the mischief sought to be prevented by the legislation. The prohibition of the sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors is only a means. The end sought for is the prevention, or at least the diminution, of the drinking of intoxicating liquors by the people of the state. The legislation upon the subject, including the statute in question, should be construed to further that end, so far as the language, without bending either way, fairly allows.

The language of the statute (§ 45) is comprehensive. There are in it no words limiting the prohibition to notices or advertisements of liquors kept for sale or to be sold within this state. Read in connection with the other legislation, its evident purpose is to further the ulterior purpose of all that legislation, viz., to diminish the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. To effect that purpose, it must be construed as prohibiting notices and advertisements of liquors for sale or kept for sale without the state as well as within; and we think the language fully permits, if it does not require, such a construction, and we accordingly accept it as the true construction.

We are not unmindful of the rule that penal statutes are to be construed strictly. "But, though penal laws are to be construed strictly, yet the intention of the legislature must govern in the construction of penal as well as other statutes, and they are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature." United States v. Lacher, 134 U. S. 624, 632, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

33 L. ed. 1080, 1084, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625. In United States v. Winn, 3 Sumn. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 16,740, the statute provided a punishment if "any master or other officer" without justifiable cause imprisoned "any one or more of the crew," etc. The master was indicted for imprisoning the "chief officer." It was held that, to further the purpose of the statute, the word "crew" should be held to include the "chief officer," though the rule of strict construction alone might exclude him. So, in United States v. Moulton, 5 Mason, 537, Fed. Cas. No. 15,827, gold coin was held to be included in the term "personal goods" in a penal statute, though the rule of strict construction might exclude it. We think further illustration or authority unnecessary.

2. As to the second ground of defense, it may be conceded that but for the act of Congress known as the "Wilson act" (act August 8, 1890, chap. 728, 26 Stat. at L. 313, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3177), the state statute as above construed would be in conflict with the commerce clause of the United States Constitution. The Wilson act, however, goes far to remove intoxicating liquors from the protection of that clause, and to give full effect to state legislation concerning them. Decisions of United States courts upon the subject, made prior to the passage of that act, are now inapplicable, and need not be considered. Since the Wilson act the state may prevent the sale within its limits of intoxicating liquors in the original package, and to that end may seize them in such packages the moment they are delivered. Also, to further the welfare of its people, the state may now prohibit the solicitation within the state of orders for the purchase of liquors without the state. This seems to be settled by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 51 L. ed. 724, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 733. Delamater, a salesman for a firm of liquor dealers in Minnesota, carried on the business in South Dakota of soliciting orders from residents of that state for the purchase of intoxicating liquors from his firm in Minnesota. The law of South Dakota imposed an annual license charge upon "the business of selling or offering for sale" intoxicating liquors within the state. The statute was admittedly a police regulation, and not a revenue measure. Delamater did not offer to make sale of intoxicating liquors within the state. He merely solicited orders for liquors to be sold in Minnesota, and shipped from there to the purchaser at his risk. Being prosecuted for not paying the license fee, he set up in defense the commerce clause of the United States Constitution. The United States Supreme Court, following the decision of the supreme court of South Dakota, held the state statute constitutional on the ground that the Wilson act authorizes a state to restrain persons from soliciting within its territory orders for the purchase of intoxicating liquors in another state to be shipped to the purchaser in his state.

Under that decision neither the Boston firm of Charles Gallagher & Company, nor any agent for them, can, within the territory of this state, solicit orders for the purchase of intoxicating liquors in Massachusetts to be shipped to the purchaser in Maine, if our statutes so forbid. Since advertising is really soliciting, it would seem to follow that they cannot lawfully advertise in this state such liquors for sale in Massachusetts, and that the publishers of newspapers within this state cannot lawfully publish such advertisement in the face of the state statute expressly forbidding it. It may be noted that in the advertisement in this case the advertisers say to the reader: "Send us $3 and we will ship you in plain sealed case prepaid, with no marks to show contents, four full quarts of Gilbert Club Pure Rye Whisky." The advertisement was in a Maine newspaper, and plainly was for orders for intoxicating liquors to be shipped to the purchaser in Maine. The case would therefore seem to be well within the rule of the decision in the case cited.

For answer to the able argument and citations of the defendant's counsel, we refer them and the profession to the opinion of the court in the Delamater Case, supra. The Supreme Court in that case did not hold, nor do we hold in this case, that an inhabitant of a state where the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited may not purchase intoxicating liquors in another state and bring them into his own state for any lawful use; but we understand that court to hold, and hence we hold, that a state may prohibit an inhabitant of another state making in this state a contract for, or soliciting orders for, the sale of intoxicating liquors in any state. The question is fully discussed in the opinion with illustrations drawn from some state insurance statutes. While a state cannot prevent one of its citizens from making a contract of insurance in another state, it may forbid the making, within its own borders, insurance contracts by foreign companies or their agents. Cooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Com. v. Nutting, 175 Mass. 154, 78 Am. St. Rep. 483, 55 N. E. 895; Nutting v. Massachusetts, 183 U. S. 553, 46 L. ed. 324, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 238. The court there goes on to say: "The ruling thus made is particularly pertinent to the subject of intoxicating liquors and the power of the state in respect thereto. As we have seen, the right of the states to prohibit the sale of liquor within their respective jurisdictions in and by virtue of the regulation of commerce embodied in the Wilson act is absolutely applicable to liquor shipped from one state into another, after delivery, and before the sale in the original package. It follows that the authority of the states, so far as the sale of intoxicating liquors within their borders is concerned, is just as complete as is their right to regulate within their jurisdiction the making of contracts of insurance. It hence must be that the authority of the states to forbid agents of nonresident liquor dealers from coming within their borders to solicit contracts for the purchase of intoxicating liquors which otherwise the citizen of the state 'would not have thought of making' must be as complete and efficacious as is such authority in relation to contracts of insurance, especially in view of the conceptions of public order and social well-being which it may be assumed lie at the foundation of regulations concerning the traffic in liquor."

The defendant's counsel urge upon us the language of this court in its opinion in the case. Corbin v. Houlehan, 100 Me. 246, 70 L.R.A. 568, 61 Atl. 131. The decision in that case, however, sustained the state statute as not in conflict with any provision of the United States Constitution. So far as the opinion discussed the question here involved, it must be regarded as dicta only. The question is a Federal question, the decision of which rests finally with the United States Supreme Court. In view of the decision of that court and the reasons stated therefor in the case cited (Delamater v. South Dakota, supra), whatever may have been said in the opinion in Corbin v. Houlehan, we must now hold that the statute in question (§ 45) at the time of its violation by the defendants in 1906 was not in conflict with the state or United States Constitution, but was valid and operative upon the defendants.

The defendants further urge that newspapers and magazines published in other states and containing advertisements of intoxicating liquors for sale come into this state by mail and otherwise in large quantities, and yet cannot be interfered with by the state authorities. That may be; but it does not follow that the state may not prevent such advertisements being printed in newspapers published in this state. If the state cannot wholly prevent the mischief of such advertisements by excluding from the state all newspapers containing them wherever published, it may yet prevent such increase and spread of the mischief as would result from such advertisements being printed in newspapers published within the state. It may to that extent control the conduct of printers and publishers within its own territory. Such we understand to be the logical result of the decision and reasoning in the Delamater Case by the court of last resort upon such questions.

It follows that the state must have judgment.

Judgment for the State.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

JOHN GODKIN

v.

JOSEPH F. WEBER, Plff. in Err.

(154 Mich. 207, 117 N. W. 628.)

Statute of frauds — acceptance.

1. That personal property is in possession of an intending purchaser at the time he makes a verbal offer for it which is duly accepted is not sufficient to comply with a statute providing that no contract for the sale of goods of the value of $50 or more shall be valid unless the purchaser shall accept and receive part of the goods sold.

Same — estoppel.

2. Failure of one who has made a verbal offer to purchase chattels, to reply to a letter accepting the offer, does not effect a contract binding upon him.

Same — sufficient acceptance.

3. A binding contract to purchase mill culls is not effected by the fact that one making a verbal offer for them accepted and paid for merchantable lumber which was cut from them.

(Grant, Ch. J., and Blair and Moore, JJ., dissent.)

(September 16, 1908.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the purchase price of certain mill culls alleged to have been sold and delivered. Reversed.

A decision was reached and opinion handed down in this case on January 31, 1908, reversing the decision below; but a rehearing was granted, and the former opinion so materially modified that it is of little value upon the question of principal interest in the case, and is therefore omitted.

Statement by Carpenter, J.:

A detailed statement of the facts in this case will be found in the former opinion, written by Chief Justice Grant, 154 Mich. 207, 114 N. W. 924. The testimony, stating it most favorably to the plaintiff, may be briefly summarized as follows: On the 16th of February, 1905, there was in defendant's possession mill culls belonging to plaintiff amounting to 22,957 feet. Defendant made a verbal offer to plaintiff's agent to purchase these at $9.50 per M. This offer was communicated to plaintiff February 17th. On that day plaintiff wrote defendant, accepting the offer. Very soon thereafter defendant informed plaintiff's agent that he would not purchase at that figure, and later, on the 22d of February, he wrote plaintiff offering to purchase at $9 per M. This last offer never was accepted. Did this evidence justify an inference of sale?

Mr. Jasper C. Gates, for plaintiff in error:

Mere possession does not take the case out of the statute.

J. H. Silkman Lumber Co. v. Hunholz, 132 Wis. 610, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1008, 112 N. W. 1081; Hinchman v. Lincoln, 124 U. S. 38, 31 L. ed. 337, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Couillard v. Johnson, 24 Wis. 533; Snider v. Thrall, 56 Wis. 674, 14 N. W. 814; Edan v. Dudfield, 1 Q. B. 302; Taylor v. Wakefield, 6 El. & Bl. 765; Duplex Safety Boiler Co. v. McGinness, 64 How. Pr. 99; Re Hoover, 33 Hun, 553; Dorsey v. Pike, 50 Hun, 534, 3 N. Y. Supp. 730; Caulkins v. Hellman, 47 N. Y. 449, 7 Am. Rep. 461; Stone v. Browning, 51 N. Y. 211; Cooke v. Millard, 65 N. Y. 352, 22 Am. Rep. 619.

Mr. Lee E. Joslyn for defendant in error.

Note.—The question as to the receipt and acceptance necessary to satisfy the statute of frauds when the goods are in possession of the purchaser at the time of the agreement is discussed in a case note to J. H. Silkman Lumber Co. v. Hunholz, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186.

The doctrine of the majority of the cases as there shown is followed in the subsequent case of Charlotte Harbor & N. R. Co. v. Burwell (Fla.) 48 So. 213, holding that, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

where the owner of crushed granite offers to sell the same to a party on whose premises the rock is located, who accepts the offer, the latter must do some act showing an acceptance of the rock, as, for instance, selling or attempting to sell or dispose absolutely of the whole or some portion of it, or altering its nature, or the like, in order to take the contract out of the statute of frauds, if there is no note or memorandum or part payment to satisfy the statute.

Carpenter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The important question in this case is this: Has there been a compliance with § 9516, Comp. Laws 1897? That section reads: "No contract for the sale of any goods, wares, or merchandise, for the price of $50 or more, shall be valid, unless the purchaser shall accept and receive part of the goods sold, or shall give something in earnest to bind the bargain or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the bargain be made, and signed by the party to be charged thereby or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized." When this case was first determined by us, we decided that there was in writing nothing to indicate defendant's assent to the sale. We adhere to that determination for the reason stated in our former opinion; that is, to be specific, we hold that defendant's letter of February 14th, which it was claimed contained an offer for these culls, referred to other culls, and not to those in controversy. It is urged that the section was complied with because the goods were already in defendant's possession. We assented to this view on the former hearing. In doing this I think we failed to note—at least, I failed to note—that the statute required acceptance as well as delivery. There is in this case no evidence of acceptance. And to hold that the statute was complied with is to disregard that portion of the statute requiring acceptance. In Duplex Safety Boiler Co. v. McGinness, 64 How. Pr. 99, it is said (this is quoted from the headnote, but it is correct): "In order to constitute a delivery and acceptance of goods, something more than words are necessary; and the fact that the goods are already in the defendant's possession under a prior understanding does not amount to a delivery or acceptance. There must be some affirmative act of his to take the case out of the statute." This is supported by a long line of cases. See Dorsey v. Pike, 50 Hun, 534, 3 N. Y. Supp. 730; Follett Wool Co. v. Utica Trust & D. Co. 84 App. Div. 151, 82 N. Y. Supp. 597; Hinchman v. Lincoln, 124 U. S. 38, 31 L. ed. 337, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; J. H. Silkman Lumber Co. v. Hunholz, 132 Wis. 610, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1008, 112 N. W. 1081; Lillywhite v. Devereaux, 15 Mees. & W. 285; Proctor v. Jones, 2 Car. & P. 532; Taylor v. Wakefield, 6 El. & Bl. 765.

It is contended that Webster v. Anderson, 42 Mich. 554, 36 Am. Rep. 452, 4 N. W. 288; Couillard v. Johnson, 24 Wis. 533, 1 Mechem 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

on Sales, § 389, and 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 2d ed. p. 985, are opposed to this view of the law. We think otherwise. In Webster v. Anderson and Couillard v. Johnson there was no question about an acceptance. The question of delivery alone was in doubt, and therefore these authorities have no application. It is not to be inferred from 1 Mechem on Sales, § 389, or 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 2d ed. p. 985, that evidence of acceptance is unnecessary where the goods are in possession of the purchaser. I quote from Mr. Mechem as follows: "'If it appears,' said the court in a leading case upon the subject, 'that the conduct of a defendant in dealing with goods already in his possession is wholly inconsistent with the supposition that his former possession continues unchanged, he may properly be said to have accepted and actually received such goods under a contract, so as to take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds.'" It is said in 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 2d ed. p. 985: "It may be stated as a general proposition that the buyer has little more to do, if anything, than to remain in possession and claim under the contract of sale." The necessity of an acceptance is here sufficiently indicated.

It is urged that, because defendant, after receiving plaintiff's letter of February 17th, delayed replying until February 22d, an inference of acceptance may thereby be drawn. In other words, it is argued that defendant was bound by the void parol contract because he did not repudiate it. This is only an indirect method of evading the statute, and it forces upon defendant the obligations of a contract contrary to the provisions of the statute. It should also be said that the record does not sustain the claim that defendant delayed until February 22d in notifying the plaintiff that he refused to accept the culls in accordance with the terms of the letter of February 17th; for it is shown by a letter of plaintiff, written February 21st, that prior to that time defendant had informed plaintiff's agent that he would not purchase the culls on those terms. Out of the mill culls rejected by defendant, plaintiff's agent, Ward, cut out 5,424 feet of merchantable lumber, which defendant accepted and paid for as such. Plaintiff insists that this was an acceptance of the mill culls. We do not think this argument sound. This 5,424 feet was accepted and paid for upon the ground that it was not a part of the mill culls. Its acceptance had no effect upon the transfer of title of the mill culls. In my judgment, the trial court should have directed a verdict in defendant's favor.

Judgment reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Montgomery, Ostrander, Hooker, and McAlvay, JJ., concurred.

Grant, Ch. J., dissenting:

I see no occasion to retreat from my former opinion. The question, as I read the record, is not: Was the defendant bound by a void parol contract because he did not repudiate it? The question is: Was the contract, otherwise void, made valid by delivery? Under the record as I read it, defendant made a parol offer for the property already in his possession, bulky, and as to which further delivery was unnecessary and impracticable. This parol offer was promptly communicated to plaintiff. He wrote accepting the offer, and defendant kept silence for five days. Where one having goods in his possession belonging to another makes a parol offer to buy, and that parol offer is accepted, the law does not require the vendee to accept the acceptance of his offer to purchase in order to complete the sale. Remaining in possession and keeping silence for five days, when an answer, if the vendee intended repudiation, could have been made in a few minutes by telephone or a few hours by letter, are evidence of delivery and acceptance of the goods. The circumstances in this case are, in my judgment, sufficient to justify the finding by the jury that there was a delivery which satisfied the statute of frauds and made a valid contract.

The inspection of the culls, made by plaintiff's inspector, in conjunction with the defendant's inspector and the defendant's men, was made February 15th, and at that time the ends were cut off from certain culls, leaving the balance merchantable lumber. The amount of this merchantable lumber was 6,435 feet, leaving the amount of the culls 22,957. Defendant's offer to pay $9.50 per M. was made after this inspection and communicated to the plaintiff on the 16th. On the 21st of February plaintiff wrote defendant, demanding payment. The bill claimed 22,957 feet of mill culls at $9.50 per M. I am unable to find anything in that letter indicating that defendant had informed plaintiff's agent, subsequent to the time of his offer, that he would not purchase the culls on those terms. There is evidence of a refusal to purchase before that time.

Blair and Moore, JJ., concur with Grant, Ch. J.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

EDWARD A. BRAASCH, by Next Friend,

v.

MICHIGAN STOVE COMPANY, Appt.

(153 Mich. 652, 118 N. W. 366.)

Master — minor — false statement of age.

1. A minor whose age is falsely represented with his knowledge and acquiescence, for the purpose of securing employment for him, is not estopped, in an action against his employer to recover damages for personal injuries, from showing that he was under the age at which the statute permitted him to be employed.

Expert evidence — erroneous admission — error.

2. Admitting expert testimony upon the question of the dangerous character of a machine at which a minor is set at work, in an action by him to hold his employer liable for an injury, is not reversible error where the machinery is so dangerous that the court will take judicial notice of the danger.

Master — minor — dangerous machine — elevator.

3. A freight elevator which passes floors is a dangerous machine, within the meaning of a statute forbidding employment of children under sixteen years of age upon such machines.

Appeal — instruction — damages.

4. A reviewing court will not reverse a judgment for error in an instruction in an action by a minor to recover damages for personal injuries, which does not expressly deny a recovery for reduced earning capacity during minority, to which no exception was taken at the time, although the statute permits the assignment of errors upon the charge after judgment, where, from the whole instruction, the jury must have understood that such damages could not be allowed, they having been instructed that he could not recover for lost time.

(July 13, 1908.)

Case Note. — Liability of master for injury to employee under statutory age of employment as affected by misrepresentations as to his age by himself or his parents.

In Koester v. Rochester Candy Works, 194 N. Y. 92, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 783, 87 N. E. 77, reversing 122 App. Div. 894, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1134, it was held that, since the gist of the civil liability is the negligence of the master in employing a person of such tender years that the legislature has forbidden his employment, the representation of the employee as to his age was not conclusive, even if accompanied by a similar statement by his parents; but that if the employer, in the exercise of proper vigilance and due caution, was led to believe, and was justifi-

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Wayne County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bowen, Douglas, Whiting, & Murfin, for appellant:

The statute will not protect an infant under the age of sixteen who either affirmatively or negligently misrepresents his age for the purpose of obtaining employment.

Beghold v. Auto Body Co. 149 Mich. 14, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 609, 112 N. W. 691; Malloy v. American Hide & Leather Co. 148 Fed. 482; Newcomb v. Boston Protective Department, 146 Mass. 596, 4 Am. St. Rep. 354, 16 N. E. 555; Leathers v. Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. 144 N. C. 330, 9

L.R.A.(N.S.) 349, 57 S. E. 11; Bishop. Non-Contract Law, §§ 132-141; Schmidt v. Bruen, 56 Misc. 130, 106 N. Y. Supp. 443; People v. Welch, 71 Mich. 548, 1 L.R.A. 385, 39 N. W. 747.

Expert testimony was not admissible to show that this employment was such as to endanger the life or limb of the plaintiff.

Atherton v. Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241, 72 N. W. 208; Girard v. Kalamazoo, 92 Mich. 610, 52 N. W. 1021; Smead v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 58 Mich. 202, 24 N. W. 761; Smith v. Sherwood Twp. 62 Mich. 159, 28 N. W. 806; Harris v. Clinton Twp. 64 Mich. 447, 8 Am. St. Rep. 842, 31 N. W. 425; Lindley v. Detroit, 131 Mich. 11, 90 N. W. 665; People ex rel. Esper v. Detroit & S. Pl. Road Co. 125 Mich. 370, 84 N. W. 290; Melzer v. Peninsular Car Co. 76 Mich. 94, 42 N. W. 1078; Kelley v. Detroit, L. & N.

fed in the belief, that the employee was above the statutory age, he could not be charged with negligence in employing the child, in which event the statute forbidding such employment would have no bearing upon the case; that, since what would constitute vigilance in one case of misrepresentation might not in another, the question of the employer's negligence in failing to ascertain the truth should be left to the jury under proper instructions.

In Schmidt v. Bruen, 56 Misc. 130, 106 N. Y. Supp. 443, the court said that, since the master is liable in damages only for his negligence in employing a child under the age specified in the statute, statements of parents, affidavits and careful and painstaking investigations showing the child to be over that age, may be given in evidence to meet and rebut the presumption of negligence arising from the mere employment. It does not appear, however, that there was any misrepresentation in this case by the child or its parents.

In Malloy v. American Hide & Leather Co. 148 Fed. 482, where it was not disputed at the argument that the statute making it unlawful for persons under sixteen years of age to operate elevators was aimed at both employer and employee, it was held that plaintiff could not recover for the death of his intestate while operating an elevator, the intestate having secured employment by fraudulently misrepresenting that he was eighteen years of age, whereas in fact he was less than fifteen.

But in American Car & Foundry Co. v. Armentraut, 214 Ill. 509, 73 N. E. 766, the court—in answer to the contention that, if the child, knowing that he was under the age at which the statute forbids his employment in a factory, obtained the employment by falsely stating that he was over that age, he could not recover on the theory that the law will not permit one to recover where his own unlawful act concurs in causing the injury—said: "This doctrine is not applicable for the reason that the statute under consideration is aimed at the master, and not at the servant. The act of the child in accepting or entering into the employment is not unlawful. Moreover, if the child's statement to the effect that he was above the age of sixteen would constitute a defense, the law could never be enforced in any case where the child was willing to make a false statement in reference to his age for the purpose of obtaining the employment. The object of this statute was entirely to prevent the employment of children under the age of fourteen in the occupations named therein, and it should be given a construction that will effectuate that purpose if that end can be attained, as we think it can, without doing violence to the letter of the enactment."

In Swift & Co. v. Rennard, 119 Ill. App. 173, the court said: "The fact, if it be a fact, that appellee knew he was under the age of sixteen years, and concealed that fact from appellant, or that he falsely stated his age to appellant, would not relieve appellant from the duty to know, nor the responsibility of not knowing, that he was of legal age, before employing him and exposing him to the perils absolutely prohibited by the statute enacted solely for the protection of children, thus legislatively declared to be incapable of protecting themselves. Anything such a child might say about his age would be competent evidence, to be considered by the jury in connection with all the other evidence, as bearing upon the question of age, in a suit wherein such child was a party, but a false statement of its age to its employer would not bar its right of action."

In Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak (Ind.) 87 N. E. 229, it was held that the corporation was chargeable with knowledge of the legal disabilities of children to engage in it—ice, and was required to ascertain at its peril that a child employed in the operation of its factory, which had been classified by the legislature as dangerous, was above the age fixed by the statute which prohibited

R. Co. 80 Mich. 237, 20 Am. St. Rep. 514, 45 N. W. 90; 17 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 25 et seq.; Clinton v. Root, 58 Mich. 184, 55 Am. Rep. 671, 24 N. W. 667; Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. 119 Mich. 282, 44 L.R.A. 500, 77 N. W. 948; Indiana Bituminous Coal Co. v. Buffey, 28 Ind. App. 108, 62 N. E. 279; Sprague v. Atlee, 81 Iowa, 1, 46 N. W. 756; Gleason v. Smith, 172 Mass. 50, 51 N. E. 460; Bergen County Traction Co. v. Bliss, 62 N. J. L. 410, 41 Atl. 837; Harley v. Buffalo Car Mfg. Co. 142 N. Y. 31, 36 N. E. 813; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Thompson, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 170, 21 S. W. 137; Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331, 29 Atl. 380; Hunt v. Kile, 38 C. C. A. 641, 98 Fed. 49; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Myers, 11 C. C. A. 439, 24 U. S. App. 295, 63 Fed. 793.

No recovery can be based upon a failure to give the warning of danger where it appears affirmatively that the plaintiff, though of tender years, knew of the danger and appreciated it.

Ertz v. Pierson, 130 Mich. 161, 89 N. W. 680; Beghold v. Auto Body Co. supra; Berlin v. Mershon, 132 Mich. 183, 93 N. W. 248; Allen v. Jakel, 115 Mich. 484, 73 N. W. 555; Dutchowski v. Handy Things Co. 141 Mich. 11, 104 N. W. 358; Roberts v. Sanitas Nut Food Co. 142 Mich. 589, 106 N. W. 68; Kolodziejski v. Seestadt, 143 Mich. 38, 106 N. W. 557.

Mr. James H. Pound, with Mr. William Van Dyke, for appellee:

The manner of operating a hydraulic-pressure elevator, and the training, skill, and experience needed by the operator, is not a matter of such common knowledge as to preclude the giving of expert testimony.

James v. Rapides Lumber Co. 50 La. Ann. 717, 44 L.R.A. 33, 23 So. 469; Punkowski v. New Castle Leather Co. 4 Penn. (Del.) 544, 57 Atl. 559; Gammel-Statesman Pub. Co. v. Monfort (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 1029; Finn v. Cassidy, 165 N. Y. 591, 53 L.R.A.

the employment of children under fourteen years of age; and the master was not relieved from liability for an injury to a child under that age, due to the unlawful employment, because of the fact that its mother, to secure its employment, made affidavit that it was above that age.

In Beghold v. Auto Body Co. 149 Mich. 14, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 609, 112 N. W. 691, it was held that evidence that a master believed, and was informed by the child's brother, that the child was above the statutory age, did not entitle the master to an instruction relieving him from liability based on a violation of the statute, where the minor, at the time of his employment, was not asked his age, and did not know that it had been misrepresented by his brother.

In Syneszewski v. Schmidt, 153 Mich. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

877, 59 N. E. 311; Combs v. Rountree Constr. Co. 205 Mo. 389, 104 S. W. 77; Helfenstein v. Medart, 136 Mo. 595, 36 S. W. 863, 37 S. W. 829, 38 S. W. 294; Fischer v. Edward Heitzberg Packing & Provision Co. 77 Mo. App. 113; McNamara v. Logan. 100 Ala. 197, 14 So. 175; Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Shea, 142 Ala. 119, 37 So. 796; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 25 L. ed. 487; Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Harkins, 5 C. C. A. 326, 17 U. S. App. 22, 55 Fed. 932; Schroeder v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 128 Iowa, 365, 103 N. W. 985; Kehler v. Schwenk, 151 Pa. 505, 31 Am. St. Rep. 777, 25 Atl. 130; Taylor v. Monroe, 43 Conn. 36; Rochester & S. R. Co. v. Budlong, 10 How. Pr. 289; Union Show Case Co. v. Blindauer, 175 Ill. 325, 51 N. E. 709, 75 Ill. App. 358; Merkle v. Bennington Twp. 68 Mich. 145, 35 N. W. 846; Bettys v. Denver Twp. 115 Mich. 228, 73 N. W. 138; Blank v. Livonia Twp. 79 Mich. 2, 44 N. W. 157; Laughlin v. Street R. Co. 62 Mich. 222, 28 N. W. 873; Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 369, 13 Am. St. Rep. 399, 37 N. W. 361; Williams v. Lansing, 152 Mich. 169, 115 N. W. 962; Blank v. Livonia Twp. supra; Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233, 72 N. W. 150; Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard, 123 Wis. 1, 107 Am. St. Rep. 984, 100 N. W. 1066; Ryder v. Jacobs, 182 Pa. 630, 38 Atl. 471; Philadelphia use of McAvoy Vitrified Brick Co. v. Neill, 211 Pa. 363, 60 Atl. 1033.

Allowing the boy to operate the electric elevator in which there was no skirting or apron to the floors was flagrant negligence.

O'Brien v. Sanford, 22 Ont. Rep. 136; Goodsell v. Taylor, 41 Minn. 209, 4 L.R.A. 673, 16 Am. St. Rep. 700, 42 N. W. 873; Connors v. Morton, 160 Mass. 333, 35 N. E. 860; Webb, Passenger & Freight Elevators, §§ 52, 58, 59.

438, 116 N. W. 1107, it was held no defense in an action for injuries in a factory to an employee thirteen years old, by a coemployee, that he falsely stated that he was over fourteen; that the statute prohibiting employment of any child under fourteen years in any manufacturing establishment did not accept the mere statement of a child as to his age, and the court could not aid one who did accept it.

In Kirkham v. Wheeler-Osgood Co. 39 Wash. 415, 81 Pac. 869, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 532, it was held that, in an action for injuries to a child twelve years old, employed contrary to the provisions of a statute forbidding the hiring out of children under fourteen years of age in factories, it was no defense that the child represented himself as being over fourteen, since the doctrine of estoppel in pais is not applicable to infants.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant, a corporation engaged in the manufacture of stoves, employed the plaintiff, and set him at work running an electric freight elevator in its factory. A few hours later he was injured; his foot being crushed between the elevator and a floor. It is obvious that this happened by reason of his foot being allowed to extend over the edge of the floor of the elevator as it approached the fifth floor of the factory from below. He recovered upon this, the second trial of the cause, a verdict and judgment for $4,000; and, a new trial having been denied, the defendant has appealed. The plaintiff gave testimony tending to show that at the time of his employment he was fourteen years and eight months old, and it is claimed on his behalf that such employment was in violation of §§ 2 and 3, Pub. Acts 1901, p. 157, No. 113, and conclusive evidence of defendant's negligence. The defendant produced testimony tending to show that application for work was made, on behalf of the plaintiff, by his cousin, one Myers, an employee of the defendant; that later he was told by defendant's superintendent to bring the plaintiff to the factory. He did so, and at the interview Callan, the superintendent, in plaintiff's presence, asked Myers "How old is he; has he got papers?" and Myers answered, "Why no; he doesn't need any papers. He is as big as you [Callan] are;" that he [Callan] told plaintiff to stand up, which he did, and that he was at least 2 inches taller than Myers. He was therefore employed and, soon after, placed under the charge of a man then running the elevator, with direction to the latter to instruct him in his duties, and to stay with him until he had learned it all. It is defendant's contention that the superintendent was deceived, by the statement of Myers, into the belief that the plaintiff was more than sixteen years of age, and that the plaintiff was a party to such deception, and estopped from making a claim that the defendant was guilty of a violation of the statute. The learned circuit judge left the cause to the jury and a verdict for $4,000 followed.

The cause is before us for a second time. In our former decision we reversed the judgment previously rendered in favor of the plaintiff, holding that the defendant had a right to have the verdict of a jury upon the following questions, viz. (Braasch v. Michigan Stove Co. 147 Mich. 676, 111 N. W. 197): "Whether the employment of a boy under sixteen, to run an electric freight elevator is within the prohibition of § 3, act No. 113, p. 157, Pub. Acts 1901, as amended L.R.A. (N.S.) dangerous life or limb, is a question for the jury. In an action by a boy under sixteen for injuries received in operating an electric freight elevator, evidence examined, and held that whether he should have had other and further instructions as to the danger incident to his employment, and should have been warned of its danger, were questions for the jury." Upon the present record, it is claimed that the court erred in refusing to give defendant's seventh request; i. e.: "It appears from the testimony of the witnesses Braasch, Myers, and Callan that it was represented to Callan, the superintendent of the Michigan Stove Company, that the plaintiff, Braasch, was of the age of sixteen or over; and, if you believe that Mr. Callan employed Braasch relying upon the statements, made in Braasch's hearing by Myers, that he did not require any papers, then the defendant did not in any way violate the provisions of Pub. Acts 1901, p. 157, No. 113, in reference to the employment of persons under sixteen years of age, and the plaintiff cannot recover." It is urged that the record conclusively shows that the defendant was deceived in regard to the age of the plaintiff, and that he (the plaintiff) should therefore be estopped from claiming damages upon the ground of a violation of the statute. One who deliberately falsifies regarding his age to get employment is not entitled to much sympathy, in a suit against the employer whom he has deceived, in an action based upon the statute. It is said that he should be estopped from recovering on such a claim. We held the contrary in the case of Syneszewski v. Schmidt, 153 Mich. 438, 116 N. W. 1107.

A witness was called by plaintiff's counsel, as an expert, to prove that a freight elevator was a place of danger to life and limb. Counsel truly say that this was a question which it was the province of the jury to decide, and there is force in the contention that it was not competent to call witnesses to decide it for them. We understand that this injury was not the result of any inherent and hidden danger involved in the use of the machine, but was the obvious consequence of placing a foot over the edge of the floor of the elevator, voluntarily or involuntarily. This was as apparent to a juror as anyone, and the jurors could decide that it was so, as well without the opinion of the expert as with it. We think the testimony was within the rule laid down in Melzer v. Peninsular Car Co. 76 Mich. 94, 42 N. W. 1078, and other cases cited in appellant's brief. But this was harmless error, for we will take judicial notice that a freight elevator is a place of danger to life and limb in the hands of an inexperienced rienced boy of fourteen years. The legislature has seen fit to forbid the employment of such persons for the management of dangerous machinery, fixing the age limit at sixteen years. An elevator, like many other machines, is a reasonably safe machine under proper management, but accidents are not infrequent. Any construction of the statute which does not take into account the inexperience and natural heedlessness of children overlooks an important consideration. Undoubtedly it was passed to protect children against accidents, which in adults might well be said to result from negligence on the part of the victim, but which in children would be largely due to a want of experience, or heedlessness, for which experience is ordinarily the only cure. Without implying that a child can never be chargeable with contributory negligence in such a case, it may well be said that all so-called heedlessness may not be negligence. But this may, perhaps, be thought a digression. The point of it all is that we feel justified in saying that the management of an elevator passing floors, as this did, is an occupation, dangerous, within the meaning of the statute, to the life and limb of a boy of fourteen years of age. It is not a question of the obviousness of the danger, but whether the occupation is one attended with dangers which a child would not be competent, in view of childish habits and instincts, to understand or avoid. The case of Allen v. Jakel, 115 Mich. 484, 73 N. W. 555, was a case involving an obvious danger, but it was held that an increased obligation, growing out of the ignorance and inexperience of childhood, rested upon one who would employ a child. This did not involve a statute against child labor, and the case was a recognition of an increased duty of instruction, growing out of immaturity of the employee. See also Sterling v. Union Carbide Co. 142 Mich. 284, 105 N. W. 755, where we said that "the statute . . . clearly recognizes that a child under sixteen years is immature in judgment."

Error is assigned upon the following charge: "He is entitled further, gentlemen of the jury, to recover damages for his decreased earning capacity, if you find from the evidence in this case, and from your observation from the injured limb, that during his lifetime his earning capacity will be decreased by reason of the injury." It is said that this permitted the jury to award damages to his earning capacity for the period intervening the trial and the time when plaintiff should reach the age of twenty-one years, a period somewhat over a year, which counsel claim was a right belonging to his father, and not to him, upon the theory that his father was entitled to his earnings for that time; no proof of emancipation being offered. From the charge itself we take the following: "If you resolve all these questions, gentlemen of the jury, in favor of the plaintiff, you will then consider the question of damages. I charge you, first, as to what damages he cannot recover. He cannot recover for any medical attendance or doctor's bills, to start with. He cannot recover for any time lost during the time that he was ill. I think the testimony shows that there was about a year that he was unable to get work. He is an infant, and under the law his time, at this time, would belong to his father, and there is no evidence in the case that his father manumitted to him, or gave him his own time, so that that element of damage is not in the case for your consideration. He is entitled to recover, gentlemen of the jury, if you find under my instructions that he is entitled to recover. He is entitled to recover for his pain and suffering, not alone what he has suffered in the past, but what you find he will suffer in the future, as the direct and necessary result of the accident. He is entitled to recover for the inconvenience and the humiliation which you find that he will suffer by reason of his crippled condition, if you find that his condition will entail either inconvenience or humiliation in the future. Now, gentlemen of the jury, both of these elements of damage are elusive. It is hard to determine accurately what the plaintiff is entitled to for the value of that pain, or suffering, or inconvenience and humiliation. As I have said before, they can neither be weighed nor measured. They ought never to be oppressive, but they ought to be full and fair compensation for those elements. They must, in the last analysis, be referred to the exercise of the judgment of twelve honest men, intent only upon doing the right thing between these two parties. He is entitled further, gentlemen of the jury, to recover damages for his decreased earning capacity, if you find from the evidence in this case, and from your observation from the injured limb, that during his lifetime his earning capacity will be decreased by reason of the injury. There is no testimony in the case tending to show that, since the happening of the injury up to the present time his earning capacity has been decreased. But I am still of the opinion that you may, viewing the foot and taking into consideration the condition in life of the plaintiff, that you are the judges as to whether or not such an injury will result in a decreased earning capacity through the life of this boy; and, if you find that the injury is such a one as to decrease his capacity to earn a livelihood, then your verdict should include such a sum as will fairly compensate him for that decrease, if you find it to exist." The jury was explicitly told that he could not recover for lost time while ill, and that his time, during the year that he could not get work, belonged to his father. But he afterwards allowed them to find damages through his lifetime "if they should find that his earning capacity will be decreased," etc.

The defendant's counsel did not call attention to the question now raised, in any request to charge, although plaintiff's sixth request plainly claimed damage for loss of earning capacity. Nor did they, when the charge was given, call attention to the omission to notice the period of a year or two between the trial and the time when he would reach his majority. Had they done so, no doubt, the judge would have said to the jury, expressly what he had impliedly said before as to failure to get work, that he had no right to recover for lost earning capacity prior to his majority. Under the former and fairer practice of requiring exceptions to be taken before the return of a verdict, the court and plaintiff would have been protected against errors of this kind, and the statute allowing assignments of error upon the charge, after judgment and without exception, is productive of injustice, affording, as it does, the opportunity for raising points before us which have not been brought to the attention of the trial court. It certainly is not conducive to the administration of justice that just and hard-earned verdicts and judgments, procured at large expense, should be lost through the intentional or inadvertent omission of opposing counsel to carefully cover all points involved before the trial court, and his right, based on a recent statute, to raise them later in this court. Thereby the plaintiff is made an insurer of the accuracy of all the instructions of the trial court, and the defendant is relieved from the necessity of bringing all points that he intends to rely on before the trial court. There is nothing in this case to indicate any intentional omission of counsel to raise this point before verdict. On the contrary, we have every reason to believe that their conduct of the case was eminently fair. What has been said is merely to call attention of the bar to the injustice of the existing statute eliminating exceptions to the charge, and the manifest injustice that has followed its enactment, in the many cases which we have been obliged to reverse upon comparatively unimportant points. We think, however, that the charge, when it is all read together, shows that the learned circuit judge intended that the jury should not award any damages for lost earnings during plaintiff's minority, and it would be a stupid juror who would render a verdict for decreased earning capacity covering a period when the earnings, if made, would not belong to the plaintiff. He expressly told them that he could not recover for time already lost, whether from inability to get work, or want of ability to work, for the reason that he was an infant during this time, and his father had not emancipated him. It is not unreasonable to presume that every citizen competent to act in the capacity of juror knows that a person is an infant, and that his father is entitled to his services until he reaches the age of twenty-one years. We find nothing to indicate a claim to the contrary in this record, and we feel warranted in the conclusion that court, counsel, and jurors must all have understood that recovery for increased earning capacity must commence when the plaintiff became his own master.

We are not convinced that the verdict was so excessive as to require a reversal, or that the court erred in denying a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied November 30, 1908.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

HARRY DYER et al., Respts.,

v.

PETER SCHNEIDER et al.

MINNEAPOLIS THRESHING MACHINE COMPANY, Claimant, Appt.

(106 Minn. 271, 118 N. W. 1011.)

Chattel mortgage—threshing outfit — future earnings—validity.

A chattel mortgage is void—at least against creditors without actual notice—which purports to assign, to secure a speci-

Headnote by START, Ch. J.

Case Note.—Validity of chattel mortgage of future earnings of threshing outfit.

It will be noticed that in the foregoing case the court, in holding that a chattel mortgage on future earnings of a threshing outfit is void, bases its decision upon the broad ground that future earnings are, at most, mere contingencies or expectancies, and are too vague and uncertain to be the subject of a chattel mortgage. But in South Dakota such mortgages have been held valid where the instrument itself satisfies the requirements of the law in respect to chattel mortgages, and a suggestion is made in fied debt, all the future earnings of a threshing machine, therein described, also of any other threshing machine operated by the mortgagor, and of the crew, including men and teams, operating them, which may accrue for threshing during the then ensuing two years within three designated townships.

(December 24, 1908.)

A PPEAL by claimant from a judgment of the District Court for Stearns County disallowing its claim upon a complaint in intervention in garnishment proceedings as a creditor of defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

one decision that a mortgage of this character should be upheld upon the ground of public policy.

Thus, in Flanders v. French, 20 S. D. 316, 106 N. W. 54, it was held that such a mortgage was valid where the machine was described by numbers so as to be easily identified, and the territory and the years in which it was to be operated were definitely indicated and described. The court further said: "The terms of the contract seem to fulfil the most exacting requirements of the rule which requires the intention of parties to be clearly and fully expressed before a court will enforce the contract. We can discover no reason why such a contract, if sufficiently clear and specific, should not be enforced by the courts. Such contracts enable parties of small means to secure threshing rigs, and to pay for them out of their earnings. There is nothing in the terms of such contracts contrary to public policy, or to the best interests of agricultural communities, but they rather tend to encourage and develop such interest."

So, in Sykes v. Hannawalt, 5 N. D. 335, 65 N. W. 682, the validity of such chattel mortgages was asserted, but the one in dispute, not having been filed, was held void as to a creditor who, without knowledge of the mortgage, relied for security for defendant's debt upon the debtor's supposed ownership of the machine and its earnings. The court distinguished between the earnings of the machine as such and the earnings of the men who operated it. "In holding that it was competent for the owner and operator of a threshing machine to mortgage the future earnings of such machine, we must not be understood as intending to hold that the accounts due from the farmers to the person operating the machine necessarily represent such earnings. Such accounts usually, in this state, represent not only the earnings of the machine, but also the earnings of a large number of men and teams used in conducting the business of threshing. A description such as we find in the instrument in this case, to wit, 'all and singular the earnings of the aforesaid threshing rig' would not cover the earnings of the men and teams."

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mr. J. D. Sullivan for appellant.

Mr. James E. Jenks for respondents.

Start, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal by claimant from a judgment of the district court of the county of Stearns in favor of the plaintiffs, and against the garnishee, for the amount of their claim against the defendant, with costs and disbursements against the claimant.

The admitted facts upon which the judgment is based are to the effect following: The plaintiffs duly recovered judgment against the defendant and duly instituted garnishee proceedings, and at the time of

It may be well to call attention to the fact that the Sykes Case is cited in Dyea v. SCHNEIDER as sustaining the proposition that such mortgages are invalid for uncertainty; but that point was not raised in the Sykes Case, and the quotation given above clearly shows that the South Dakota court considered such mortgages valid if sufficiently definite and properly filed.

And in Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Skau, 10 S. D. 636, 75 N. W. 199, a mortgage of such earnings was held void solely upon the ground of its uncertainty, the instrument not giving the number of the machine or the name of its maker, nor describing the place where it was to be operated or the person or persons from whom the earnings were to accrue.

So, also, in Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson, 83 Iowa, 567, 14 L.R.A. 126, 49 N. W. 1031, it was implied that a mortgage on threshing machine accounts not yet earned might be valid, but the mortgage in question was held void as to the earnings for lack of definite description, they being described only as all such accounts which shall be earned up to the time the mortgage debt is fully paid by a threshing machine which was also included in the mortgage.

In Baylor v. Butterfass, 82 Minn. 21, 84 N. W. 640, the court questioned, but did not determine, the validity of such a mortgage.

A search has failed to reveal any other decisions which pass upon the validity of a chattel mortgage of the future earnings of a machine or machinery which was at the time of the mortgage owned or controlled by the mortgagor.

Upon the question, mortgage or assignment of future accounts or earnings, see note to Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson, 14 L.R.A. 126.

As to sale or mortgage of future crops, see note to Dickey v. Waldo, 23 L.R.A. 449.

As to chattel mortgage on after-acquired property, see case note to Burrill v. Whitcomb, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 451.

the service of the garnishee summons there were funds in the hands of the garnishee, amounting to $95, which represented moneys earned by the defendant with the threshing outfit described in the chattel mortgage hereinafter referred to, upon which there was then due and unpaid more than $95. The plaintiffs' demand against the defendant was for extras furnished and labor performed by them in repairing his threshing outfit at his request. The claim of the claimant to the money in controversy was based upon an alleged chattel mortgage, executed by the defendant to it, to secure a specified debt, of all the earnings of the outfit and of the men and teams connected therewith. The mortgage purported to mortgage all the earnings of a threshing outfit, therein described, and of any other threshing outfit owned or operated by the mortgagor, and of the crew, including men and teams, used with such outfits, which might accrue for threshing during the then ensuing two years within three designated townships. When the mortgage was executed there were no existing contracts under which threshing was to be done, nor were there any parties named for whom it was to be done. The mortgage purported to cover not only the earnings of any and all threshing machines the defendant might thereafter operate for two years, but also the earnings of all the men and teams operating the same. The mortgage was duly filed, but the plaintiff had no actual notice of the claim of the claimant. Upon these facts, the trial court held the mortgage invalid as against the creditors of the mortgagor without actual notice. The correctness of this conclusion is the only question for our decision.

This precise question has never been directly decided by this court. See Baylor v. Butterfass, 82 Minn. 21, 84 N. W. 640. But the reasoning of our prior decisions sustains the conclusion of the trial court. In Steinbach v. Brant, 79 Minn. 383, 79 Am. St. Rep. 494, 82 N. W. 651, we held that an assignment of wages to become due, without limit as to amount or time, and without acceptance by the employer, was void as to an attaching creditor without notice. In Leitch v. Northern P. R. Co. 95 Minn. 35, 103 N. W. 704, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 63, we held, distinguishing the cases holding valid a mortgage on crops to be thereafter raised upon specified land, that an assignment of wages to be earned in the future under an existing contract of employment, to secure a present debt or future advances, was a valid agreement, which would take effect as the wages were earned, but that an assignment of wages to be earned under an existing contract, without limit as to 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) amount or time, was void. In each of these cases there was an existing contract for the employment of the assignor. In the case at bar there were no existing contracts for employment, nor were any persons named or in any manner designated in the mortgage from whom future earnings were to accrue.

There can be no difference in principle between an absolute assignment of future earnings to secure a debt, and a chattel mortgage of such earnings; that is, a conditional assignment. There can be no earnings of a threshing outfit, except in connection with the earnings of the men, including the mortgagor, and teams operating it; hence the mortgage is, in effect, a mortgage of the future earnings of the mortgagor and his employees in operating a threshing machine, if, perchance, they should ever do so. The description of the supposed personal property attempted to be assigned by this mortgage is so vague and uncertain as to afford no protection to third parties working for or extending credit to the mortgagor on the strength of his earnings in operating the machine, having no actual knowledge of the claim of the mortgagee. Again, the supposed property attempted to be mortgaged in this case had then no existence, substantial or incipient. It was, at most, a mere expectancy depending on contingencies, or, as said in Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Woodring, 116 Pa. 513, 9 Atl. 58, "a mere possibility of a subsequent acquisition of property." See also Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson, 83 Iowa, 567, 14 L.R.A. 126, 49 N. W. 1031, and Sykes v. Hannawalt, 5 N. D. 335, 65 N. W. 682.

We therefore hold that the mortgage in question, so far as it attempted to assign the future earnings of the threshing outfit and the men and teams who might operate it, was void, at least as to creditors without actual notice.

Judgment affirmed.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

T. J. CAMPBELL, Appt.,
v.

D. E. BROOKS.

(— Miss. —, 47 So. 545.)

Replevin — deed.

Replevin will not lie to recover possession of a title deed where the real con-

Case Note. — Replevin to recover deed of real property.

Replevin will not lie for the unlawful taking or wrongful detention of a title deed of real estate where the delivery thereof is troversey is as to whether or not there had been such a delivery of it as to pass title to the property.

(November 30, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Washington County in defendant's favor in a replevin proceeding to recover possession of a deed. Affirmed.

The parties to this controversy had agreed to exchange lands on certain conditions. They met in the office of a notary public, where each signed and acknowledged the deed for the property intended to be conveyed. The deeds were handed by the notary public to Mr. Campbell, and he subsequently attempted to deliver his deed to Mr. Brooks by messenger. Mr. Brooks refused to accept the deed until certain encumbrances had been provided for in accordance with the exchange agreement. Subsequently Mr. Brooks, upon meeting Mr. Campbell, asked to see his deed, and, when it was handed to him, he declined to return it, whereupon this action was brought to recover its possession.

disputed and the controversy thus involves the determination of the title to the land described therein. Hooker v. Latham, 118 N. C. 179, 23 S. E. 1004; Bridgers v. Ormond, 148 N. C. 375, 62 S. E. 422; Flannigan v. Goggins, 71 Wis. 28, 36 N. W. 846.

So, when the delivery of a deed is disputed, replevin therefor will not lie in a court without jurisdiction to determine actions involving title to real estate. Simonsen v. Curtis, 43 Minn. 539, 45 N. W. 1135.

In the last case the court said it could not see why replevin might not be maintained in a court of competent jurisdiction to recover possession of a title deed, where the only fact to be determined affecting the title to the property therein described is that of the delivery of the deed.

But in Atkinson v. Baker, 4 T. R. 229, Lord Kenyon, sustained an action of detinue, without questioning the right to maintain the action for title deeds, notwithstanding it became necessary to decide to whom an estate descended in order to determine who was entitled to the possession of the deed.

The following cases apply the doctrine that, where the object sought is to obtain possession of a title deed, and not to test the right or title to the property represented by it, replevin may be maintained therefor. Goodman v. Boycott, 31 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 69; Reeve v. Palmer, 5 C. B. N. S. 91; Phillips v. Robinson, 4 Bing. 106; Parker v. Stevens, 12 U. C. C. P. 81; Anderson v. Hamilton, 4 U. C. Q. B. 372; Wilson v. Rybolt, 17 Ind. 391, 79 Am. Dec. 486; Pasterfield v. Sawyer, infra; and this doctrine is recognized in Bridgers v. Or- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Hugh C. Watson, for appellant:

The deed in question was a proper subject of an action of replevin.

24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 479; 7 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 3632; Saunders v. Jordan, 54 Miss. 428. Hall v. Whittier, 10 R. I. 530; Johnson v. Stone, 69 Miss. 826, 13 So. 858.

Messrs. Campbell & Cashin, for appellee:

Replevin will not lie to recover a deed to lands where there is a dispute as to its delivery, involving a determination of the title to the land.

Cobbye, Replevin, § 79; Flannigan v. Goggins, 71 Wis. 28, 36 N. W. 846; Hooker v. Latham, 118 N. C. 179, 23 S. E. 1004; Pasterfield v. Sawyer, 132 N. C. 258, 43 S. E. 799; 7 Lawson, Rights Rem. & Pr. § 3643; Wilson v. Rybolt, 17 Ind. 391, 79 Am. Dec. 486.

Mayes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Without entering into any discussion of the facts in this case, we simply say that the mond; Hooker v. Latham; and Flannigan v. Goggins,—supra.

In Wilson v. Rybolt, supra, however, one justice dissented on the ground that a deed was not "personal goods," within the meaning of a replevin statute.

It was held in Pasterfield v. Sawyer, 132 N. C. 258, 43 S. E. 799, that a court that is without jurisdiction to entertain an action involving the title to real estate is not deprived of jurisdiction of a replevin suit to recover possession of a deed by reason of the fact that the defendant's answer alleges that he holds the deed in escrow, the conditions of which have not been complied with on the part of the plaintiff, the court not being deprived of jurisdiction until proof of such facts is made. And, upon a second appeal of the case (see 133 N. C. 42, 45 S. E. 524), it was held that the evidence did not establish an escrow, but at most a right to hold the deed as bailee, and that the latter question should have been submitted to the jury.

A mortgagee, to whom two title deeds were delivered under a condition in the mortgage that all deeds and security affecting the encumbered property should be deposited with him, upon discovering one of the deeds to be a forgery, may, by an action of detinue, recover the original from one to whom the mortgagor had subsequently, without notice of the plaintiff's right, delivered the deed as security for money advanced thereon. Newton v. Beck, 3 Hurlst. & N. 220.

But detinue for deeds deposited as security for a loan will not lie at the suit of the depositor prior to the repayment of the loan. Bank of New South Wales v. O'Connor, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 273.

action of replevin will not lie to recover the deeds sued for here. While it is true, as said in the case of Hooker v. Latham, 118 N. C. 179, 23 S. E. 1004, that a writ of replevin "will lie for the recovery either of deeds or certificates of stock, where the object is to regain possession of the specific paper, and not to test the right to the property which it represents," yet replevin cannot "be maintained for the unlawful taking or the wrongful detention of a title deed, where there is a dispute about its delivery, and the controversy involves the determination of the title to the land conveyed by it." A deed, as such, is recoverable in an action of replevin, where same is unlawfully detained, if the controversy be really about the deed and nothing else, and the delivery of the deed is beyond dispute; but, where the real thing sought is an adjudication of title to property, and not the actual recovery of the specific deed, as is the case here, the action of replevin is not an appropriate remedy and will not be maintained. The real controversy here is as to title. The real issue in this case is whether the deeds have been delivered, and the court properly dismissed the cause. Flannigan v. Goggins, 71 Wis. 28, 36 N. W. 846; Pasterfield v. Sawyer, 132 N. C. 258, 43 S. E. 799; Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 3643; Wells, Replevin, § 58, and note.

Affirmed.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

WILL SHERROD, Appt.,
v.
STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

(— Miss. —, 47 So. 554.)

Criminal law — presence of accused — waiver.

One on trial for a capital offense cannot waive his right to be present when the verdict is rendered, even by voluntarily absenting himself from the court room in case he is on bond; and it is immaterial that the verdict actually returned is for an offense not capital.

(November 30, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Winston County convicting him of manslaughter. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jones & Jones for appellant.

Mr. George Butler for the State.

Note. — As to right of accused to waive his presence at the time of receiving verdict upon the trial for felony, see case note to State v. Way, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 603. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Whitfield, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant was indicted for murder, and convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to five years in the penitentiary.

At the time of the trial appellant was on bond, but present during the progress of the trial until the case was given to the jury, when he voluntarily absented himself and went into the country to spend the night, as he says, though the court announced in his presence before the jury that, if a verdict should be agreed upon before 11 o'clock that night, he would return to the courthouse and receive it. About 8:30 o'clock the jury came in to render their verdict, and the appellant could not be found. The verdict was received in his absence, and this is assigned for error. It will thus be seen that this is an indictment charging a capital offense, and that the appellant's absence when the verdict was received was voluntary; that he was not in jail, and thus subject to the power of the court to have him present.

The learned assistant attorney general, in endeavoring to save the case, cites four authorities: Gales v. State, 64 Miss. 105, 8 So. 167, but that was an indictment for assault with intent to kill and murder, not a capital charge at all, and is not in point; Finch v. State, 53 Miss. 363, which was an indictment for grand larceny, and is also not in point; Stubbs v. State, 49 Miss. 716. In this case the indictment was for murder, but the case is not in point here, for the reason that Stubbs was in jail, and not on bond, in which respect the Stubbs Case is like the Finch Case, supra. Finch also was in jail when the verdict was received. Price v. State, 36 Miss. 531, 72 Am. Dec. 195, but that was an indictment for assault with intent to kill and murder, and is therefore not in point.

In this case it was held, the case not being a capital one, that, since the defendant was on bond, and had voluntarily absented himself, he could not complain of the verdict having been received in his absence. He was present when the trial began, and when the case was put to the jury, but absconded before the verdict was rendered. It will thus be seen that, of the four cases cited by the learned assistant attorney general, only one was a case where there was an indictment for murder, and in that case the judgment was reversed because defendant was not present when the verdict was received, he being in the jail at the time; and the reasoning of the court would indicate that it would have been reversed for that reason whether he was in jail or out of jail, though that is not expressly stated, the charge being a capital one. We have no case exactly like this in which there was an indictment for murder, and the defendant, being on bond, voluntarily absented himself when the verdict was returned, having been present throughout the trial up to that time.

We have most carefully examined all authorities cited on both sides, and many more, and as a result of this examination we announce the following conclusions:

First. In the trial of all felonies, not capital, where the defendant is on bond, and has been present throughout the delivery of the testimony, up to the rendition of the verdict, but is absent at the rendition of the verdict, voluntarily, he will not be permitted to avail himself of his own wrong in being thus voluntarily absent, but the verdict may be properly received in his absence. In other words, he may waive the right to be present when the verdict is received, which is not, as seems popularly supposed, a constitutional right, though a very sacred right, secured by the common law as well as by statute.

Second. Wherever the charge is a capital one, the courts have held uniformly, in favorem vitæ, that the defendant cannot waive his right to be present, and that whether he be in jail, subject to the power of the court to produce him, or on bond, it is fatal error to receive the verdict in his absence.

Third. Even in felonies, not capital, if the defendant be in jail when the verdict is received, it is fatal error.

Fourth. In cases not capital, the right of the defendant, where he is on bond, to waive his own presence when the verdict is received, is strictly his personal right, and no such waiver can be exercised for him by his own counsel.

These four propositions are clearly sustained by an overwhelming weight of authority. Indeed, we have found no case anywhere holding that, where the charge is a capital one, the defendant's failure to be present at the time the verdict is rendered is not fatal error, whether he be in jail or whether he be on bond. We will refer briefly to a few of the authorities.

In support of the first proposition above we cite the cases cited by the learned assistant attorney general, supra, except the Stubbs Case, Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, vol. 1, § 273, and the learned note of Mr. Freeman in 28 Am. Dec. 630, 631. In this note he points out the two lines of authorities, holding, the one that the record must affirmatively show the presence of the prisoner when the verdict is received, which is the rule in Mississippi (Kelly v. State, 3 Smedes & M. 518), and the other rule, which he pronounces the better rule, which he declares in these terms: "In view of the fact that the appellate court will not presume error on the part of the court below, it seems somewhat difficult to perceive the justice of these decisions. The doctrine best supported by authority, and, as it seems to us, best sustained by reason, is that where the record shows that the accused was present at the commencement of his trial, and nothing to the contrary appears therefrom, it will be presumed that he was present at every subsequent stage of the proceeding down to the rendering of the final judgment of the court." In Rolls v. State, 52 Miss. 395-397, the record was silent as to whether the defendant was present when his motion to set aside the judgment and sentence was heard; but it stated that he made that motion in person, and the court concluded from this that he was personally present, although there was no affirmative express recitation to that effect in the record. This case supports the first proposition above clearly, and the court pronounces that holding to be "the rule of safety." Mr. Freeman, in the note just above referred to, quotes that great judge, Chief Justice Gibson, as saying, in Prine v. Com. 18 Pa. 105, that "the right of a prisoner to be present at his trial is inherent and inalienable;" and Mr. Freeman pronounces this an extreme statement of the law, and deduces the correct rule to be, as stated in the first proposition above, that the accused may waive that right, where he voluntarily absents himself during the progress of the trial, meaning in cases not capital. The case of Booker v. State, 81 Miss. 395, 95 Am. St. Rep. 474, 33 So. 221, also supports the first proposition fully, though that is properly put upon the higher constitutional right the prisoner had to be confronted by the witnesses against him. The right to be present when the verdict is received is not a constitutional right, but a very sacred legal right, which may, as indicated, be waived under the conditions stated in the first proposition. These authorities just referred to abundantly support the first proposition, supra.

Coming, now, to the second proposition, we think that clearly settled by the authorities. The Stubbs Case, supra, is a clear authority for the second proposition. Scaggs v. State, 8 Smedes & M. 723, in principle also supports the second proposition. In Dyson v. State, 26 Miss. 362, the indictment was for murder, and the court, at page 383, in commenting on the principle under discussion, stated: "Out of abundant tenderness for the right, secured to the accused by our Constitution, to be confronted by the witnesses against him and to be heard by himself or counsel, our court has gone a step further, and held that it must be shown by the record that the accused was present in court pending the trial. This is upon the ground of the peculiar sacredness of this high constitutional right. It is also true, as has been held by this court, 'that nothing can be presumed for or against a record, except what appears substantially upon its face.' But this rule has reference to those indispensable requisites necessary to the validity of the record as a judicial proceeding, and can have no application to those incidental matters which transpire during the progress of the proceeding in the court." Among those "indispensable requisites" the court placed the rendition of the verdict. This case is approved in Lewis v. United States, 146 U. S. 374, 36 L. ed. 1013, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137, and that court pointed out the important fact, as to the question of the right of defendant to waive his presence in a capital case, that "the public had an interest in his life and liberty," as well as himself: citing 1 Bl. Com. 133; the court holding in the case of Lewis that it was not in the power of the prisoner, by himself or his counsel, to waive the right to be personally present during the trial, and, further, that the record must show affirmatively the prisoner's presence in court. But it must be remembered that this language was used with reference to an indictment for murder, and not a felony not capital, though it must be confessed the language of the court does not itself draw this distinction; the court apparently holding squarely that this would be true in the case of all felonies. We think the statement in the Dyson Case, as to its being a constitutional right, must be understood with reference to the confrontation of the witnesses by the accused, guaranteed by the Constitution, and not to the right merely to be present when the verdict is received, which is not a constitutional right. In State v. Jenkins, 84 N. C. 814, 37 Am. Rep. 644, the great Judge Ruffin said, in a case of arson, not capital, that "in every criminal prosecution it is the right of the accused to be informed of the accusation against him and to confront his accusers. In capital trials this right cannot be waived by the prisoner, but it is the duty of the court to see that he is actually present at each and every step taken in the progress of the trial. State v. Blackwelder, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 38; State v. Craton, 28 N. C. (6 Ired. L.) 164. In prosecutions for lesser felonies, the accused has exactly the same rights. State v. Bray, 67 N. C. 283. Whether the right can be waived in such cases is a point about which the authorities seem to be still divided some holding his actual presence to be necessary during the entire trial, and others that, being a right personal to the accused and established for his benefit, it might be waived by him."

By far the clearest and best authority we have anywhere found on this subject is the case of State v. Kelly, 97 N. C. 404, 2 Am. St. Rep. 299, 2 S. E. 185. We quote as follows: "That the prisoner in capital felonies has the right to be, and must be, personally present at all times in the course of his trial, when anything is done or said affecting him as to the charge against him on the trial in any material respect, is not questioned. Indeed, it is conceded that he has such right, and that he must be so present. State v. Craton; State v. Blackwelder; and State v. Bray,—supra; State v. Jenkins, 84 N. C. 812, 37 Am. Rep. 643. As to felonies less than capital, the prisoner has precisely the same right to be present, but it is not essential that he must be, at all events. In the case last cited Mr. Justice Ruffin said, in reference to the prisoner's right to be present: 'Whether the right can be waived in such cases is a point about which the authorities seem to be still divided; some holding his actual presence to be necessary during the entire trial, and others that, being a right personal to the accused and established for his benefit, it might be waived by him.' The rule that he must be so present in capital felonies is in favorem vite. It is founded in the tenderness and care of the law for human life, and not in fundamental right,—certainly not in this state, as seems to be supposed by some persons. The Constitution (art. 1, §§ 11–13) provides, in respect to persons charged with crime, that 'in all criminal prosecutions, every man has the right to be informed of the accusation against him, and to confront the accusers and witnesses with other testimony, and to have counsel for his defense;' that he shall be put to answer for a criminal charge only 'by indictment, presentment, or impeachment,' except in cases of petty misdemeanors, and that he shall not be 'convicted of any crime but by the unanimous verdict of a jury of good and lawful men in open court.' These embrace all the provisions of the Constitution bearing upon the subject, and surely they cannot be reasonably interpreted to imply that it is essential that the party 'put to answer any criminal charge' shall—must—be continuously present at his trial at all events. They do not have such meaning, in terms or effect. The just and reasonable implication is that the party accused of crime shall have fair opportunity to defend himself in all respects as allowed and secured by the principles of law, procedure, and statutory provisions applicable to and regulating criminal trials. While it is settled in this state that the prisoner has the right to be so present during his trial upon a charge for a felonious offense not capital, there is neither principle, nor statute, nor judicial precedent that makes it essential that he shall be; nor, in our judgment, is there any common principle of justice, essential to the security of personal right, safety, and liberty, that so requires. Unquestionably a party put to answer any criminal charge may plead guilty, or nolo contendere. In such case he waives a trial altogether. The law allows him to do so, presuming that he has capacity and intelligence to know and be advised as to his rights, and that he will not voluntarily refuse to make defense if innocent. The law in such cases will not compel him to make defense for himself, nor will it make defense for him; it will only afford him just opportunity to do so for himself. He could not reasonably expect or ask more, nor is there anything in the nature of personal safety or liberty that requires more. If the prisoner may thus waive his right to a trial altogether, why may he not waive his right to be present at his trial, if he shall, for any cause, see fit to do so? We can conceive of no just reason why he may not, especially when he is represented by counsel, as he has the right to be, who, it is presumed, is fully advised by him, and can generally take care of his rights better than he could do himself. He may deem it of advantage to him not to be present, or it may be inconvenient for him to be. He may choose to rely upon the skill and judgment of his counsel, and expect that the court will see that the trial is conducted according to law, as it will always do. He may do this; but the waiver should appear to the satisfaction of the court, either expressly, or by reasonable implication from what he says, or by his conduct. His counsel cannot waive his right for him. State v. Epps, 76 N. C. 55; State v. Paylor, 89 N. C. 539; State v. Sheets, 89 N. C. 543; Price v. State, 36 Miss. 531, 72 Am. Dec. 195; Fight v. State, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 180, 28 Am. Dec. 626, and numerous cases there cited."
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

That court further says, speaking of the right of a defendant to waive his presence in offenses not capital, when the verdict is received: "In such cases, if the defendant fly, pending the trial, the court is not bound to stop the trial and discharge the jury [that is, where the defendant on a charge less than a capital one is on bail], and thus give the defendant a new trial. To do so would compromise the dignity of the court, trifle with the administration of justice, and encourage guilty parties to escape. The defendant has no right, fundamental or otherwise, that renders such absurd practice and procedure necessary." It will thus be seen that the second proposition above is supported by two authorities in our own state, the Stubbs Case and the Scaggs Case, both cases of murder, and by many authorities which we have cited elsewhere, including the Supreme Court of the United States.

The third proposition above is also thoroughly well settled, and is directly held in the case of Finch v. State, 53 Miss. 365. Finch, though indicted for only grand larceny, was nevertheless allowed to make the point that the verdict was received in his absence, because he was in jail, and it was the duty of the court to exercise its power and have him present when the verdict was received.

The fourth proposition above set forth is supported by the case just quoted from, State v. Kelly, supra, and by all the authorities.

Mr. Freeman, in his note to Fight v. State, 28 Am. Dec. 630, says: "The waiver must be the act of the accused himself, and not that of his counsel. People v. Perkins, 1 Wend. 91; R. v. Streek, 2 Car. & P. 413; Rose v. State, 20 Ohio, 31. And his absence must be due to his own voluntary act; for, if he is prevented from being present by being confined in jail, proceeding with the trial in his absence will be an irregularity for which a new trial will be granted."

So that we regard the four propositions which we have stated as abundantly settled, both on principle and authority. Of course, it is entirely immaterial that the verdict in this case was for manslaughter. The test is, Was the charge in the indictment a capital one? It is curious to note, in passing, that in Tennessee it has been held that the absence of the prisoner, even when due to his having made his escape, in a felony not capital, deprives the court of jurisdiction to proceed with the trial at all. Andrews v. State, 2 Sneed, 550.

The judgment is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded.

Fletcher, J., took no part in this decision.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. C. ELAM, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF MT. STERLING.

(— Ky. —, 117 S. W. 250.)

Pleading — obstruction in street.

1. A complaint seeking to hold a city liable for injuries caused by its piling stones in a street in such a manner as to be likely to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness must allege that they would naturally do so, where the mere placing of the stones in the street was not in and of itself negligence.

Same — gentleness of horse.

2. A complaint in an action to hold a city liable for injuries caused by its placing in the street an object calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness should allege that the horse which was in fact frightened was of ordinary gentleness.

Highway — frightening horse — liability of municipality.

3. A city cannot be held liable for injuries due to the frightening of a horse by stones which, for the purpose of repairing a highway, it had piled along the curb out of the traveled path, if it has used due care in their location, although they may be of such a nature that horses of ordinary gentleness are occasionally frightened by them, though they are permitted to remain longer than is absolutely necessary before the injury occurs.

(March 10, 1909.)

Subject Note. — Liability of municipal corporation for defects or obstructions in streets.

I. Scope, 516.

II. Different general rules as to liability.

- a. The common-law rule, 516.
- b. Rule of liability based on control and duty to keep in safe condition, 518.
- c. Liability under statutes, 523.
- d. Exemption from liability by statute, 526.

III. Power to perform duty as affecting liability.

- a. Generally, 529.
- b. Insufficiency of funds, 529.
- c. Insufficient time or opportunity, 531.

IV. Application of rule as to nonliability for governmental and discretionary acts.

- a. Generally, 532.
- b. In particular classes of cases, 535.

V. Delegation of duty.

- a. Right and effect of generally, 538.
- b. Imposition on railway in street, 539.
- c. Imposition on abutting owner, 540.

VI. Cause of obstruction or defect as affecting liability.

- a. Generally, 541.
- b. By act of city itself, 542.
- c. By act of agent or servant, 544.
- d. By permission or license of city, 547.
- e. By independent contractor.

- 1. General rules where contract calls for obstruction, 547.

- 2. Application in particular cases, 548.

- 3. Injury collateral to contract work, 549.

- 4. Effect of retention of control, 550.

- 5. Particular contract required by law, 552.

- f. By wrongdoer, 552.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Prewitt & Senff for appellant.

Messrs. W. C. Hamilton and W. B.

White, for appellee:

In order to establish this cause of action, it was indispensably necessary that the petition should allege that the object at which the horse took fright should be such an object, or should be placed in such a way, as was "naturally calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness," or was "reasonably

VI.—continued.

- g. By abutting owner, 553.

- h. By act of railroad occupying street, 553.

VII. Ways as to which the duty exists.

- a. Generally, 553.

- b. The question of title, locality, etc., 554.

- c. Opening and improvement of ways, 556.

- d. Dedication and acceptance, 558.

- e. Improvement, repair, and other acts of recognition as affecting.

- 1. Generally, 560.

- 2. Sufficiency of recognition, 562.

- f. Particular ways and classes of ways.

- 1. Sidewalks.

- (a) Generally, 565.

- (b) Sidewalks made by citizens, 568.

- (c) Walks outside of highway, 569.

- 2. Bridges, 571.

- 3. Crossings, 572.

- 4. Alleys, tunnels, and passageways in public buildings, 573.

- 5. Park paths, bicycle paths, etc., 574.

- g. Streets in annexed territory, 575.

- h. Abandonment and closing, 575.

VIII. The degree of diligence or care as affecting liability.

- a. General rules, 577.

- b. Necessity of negligence to liability, 579.

- c. What constitutes reasonable diligence, 581.

- d. Reasonable diligence, how determined, 583.

IX. The degree of perfection required.

- a. General rules, 583.

- b. As affected by locality and uses, 585.

- c. With reference to whole width of street.

- 1. The roadway, 588.

calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness."

28 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1380; Elliott, Roads & Streets, § 616; Smith, Mun. Corp. § 1543; Nicholasville v. Fain, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 564, 99 S. W. 275; Royal Center v. Bingaman, 37 Ind. App. 626, 77 N. E. 811.

The obstructions were not, as a matter of law, such obstructions as were reasonably calculated to frighten a horse of ordinary gentleness.

Bloor v. Delafield, 69 Wis. 273, 34 N. W. 115; Ouversen v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 676; Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Wynant, 114 Ind. 525, 5 Am. St. Rep. 644, 17 N. E. 118; Pearce v. Lancaster, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 412.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the of the court:

The appellant, in his petition to recover damages for personal injuries received, alleged that the city of Mt. Sterling, by its officers and agents, negligently and carelessly placed and permitted to remain on Richmond street, in said city, two large piles of crossing stones directly opposite each other on each side of the street, so close to the route of travel as to frighten horses passing same, thereby rendering the street dangerous and unsafe for travel, which fact was known to the officers of the city, or could have been known by them by the exercise of ordinary diligence on their part; that, while driving a gentle horse attached to a buggy along the street in the ordinary and usual mode of travel, his horse became frightened at the stones and ran away, causing his buggy to collide with another vehicle, which collision resulted in appellant being thrown violently to the ground, thereby injuring him severely. A demurrer to the petition being overruled, an answer was filed traversing the averments of the peti-

IX. c—continued.

2. The sidewalk, 591.
3. Use of sides of street.
 - (a) Generally, 592.
 - (b) Objects outside of traveled track.
 - (1) General rules, 592.
 - (2) Park strips, 593.
 - (3) Obstructions, excavations, etc., outside the right of way, 595.
 - (4) Obstructions in proximity to sidewalks, 597.
- d. What obstructions or defects impose liability.
 1. Generally, 598.
 2. Obstructions authorized by law, 600.
 3. Obstructions for general public convenience, 600.
 4. Obstructions for private or individual convenience, 602.
 5. Obstructions for improvement or repair.
 - (a) Generally, 602.
 - (b) Barriers, lights, etc., 604.
 - (c) By abutting owner, 606.
 6. Particular obstructions and classes of obstructions.
 - (a) Poles, posts, stumps, trees, etc., 607.
 - (b) Rubbish, refuse, etc., 610.
 - (c) Storage of vehicles, lumber, etc., 612.
 - (d) Machines, tools, etc., 613.
 - (e) Markets and other business or individual enterprises, 614.
 - (f) Stones and other similar articles, 615.
 - (g) Unevenness, inequalities, 618.

IX. d, 6—continued.

- (h) Slopes or grades, 619.
- i) Hydrants and other appliances pertaining to municipal waterworks, 620.
- (j) Cellar ways, stairways, and other projections, 622.
- (k) Railways in streets, 624.
- (l) Embankments, 626.
- (m) Gutters and drains, 627.
- (n) Holes and openings,
 - (1) Generally, 629.
 - (2) For sewer purposes, 631.
- (o) Defects and obstructions in sidewalks and crossings.
 - (1) Breaks, excavations, and depressions, 632.
 - (2) Holes, 634.
 - (3) Hatchways, areas, and other openings, 635.
 - (4) Steps, 637.
 - (5) Unevenness, inequalities, 640.
 - (6) Holes in cross walks, 641.
- (p) Decay and wear, 642.
7. Overhanging and falling objects.
 - (a) Generally, 644.
 - (b) Awnings, sheds, etc., 645.
 - (c) Signs, billboards, etc., 646.
 - (d) Electric wires, appliances, etc., 648.
 - (e) Trees, poles, etc., 649.
 - (f) Other objects or structures in and over streets generally, 650.

tion and pleading contributory negligence. Upon the conclusion of the evidence for the plaintiff the trial judge directed the jury to return a verdict for the city; so that the question we are called upon to determine is whether or not this ruling of the trial judge was erroneous.

The testimony established, in substance, that the city, desiring to make a foot crossing out of stone across the street, employed a contractor to do the work, and this contractor, on Saturday, the 22d of February, hauled crossing stones to the point where the crossing was to be laid, and placed them in the street close to the curbing of the sidewalk and parallel with it. The stones, four in number, were 6 feet long, 4 feet wide, and 4 inches thick; two being placed on each side of the street, one on top of the other. They were not on the traveled or macadamized part of the street, and the space in the street for vehicle travel between the stones was some 15 feet. It was the intention of the contractor to lay the stone walk on the Monday following, but rain and other pressing engagements delayed him in the work, and it was not commenced until Wednesday, the 26th, the day appellant was thrown from his buggy. There was some conflict in the testimony as to the gentleness of the horse, but the weight of the evidence was to the effect that he was ordinarily gentle. The appellant offered to prove by several witnesses that stones placed on the street as these were were reasonably calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness; but objection to this character of evidence was made and sustained. He also offered to prove by other witnesses that gentle horses driven by them were frightened by these stones before the accident to appellant occurred; and one witness was permitted to say that his horse did scare at them, and that they were rea-

IX. d, 7—continued.

- (g) Objects and structures adjacent to streets, 651.

8. Objects calculated to frighten horses.

- (a) Generally, 652.
- (b) Steam rollers, etc., 654.
- (c) Building material and other objects, 655.

9. Snow and ice.

- (a) Limitation to recent cases, 656.
- (b) General rules, 656.
- (c) Mere slipperiness, 657.
- (d) Ordinary falls of snow, 657.
- (e) Rough accumulations of snow and ice, 658.
- (f) Time and opportunity for removal, 661.
- (g) Snow and ice combined with defect in street, 662.

a. General condition and other accidents as evidence of negligence.

- 1. General condition of street, 665.
- 2. Subsequent repair or removal of defect or obstruction, 667.
- 3. Other accidents, 668.

f. Sufficiency of way, how determined, 670.

X. Failure to prevent improper conduct in streets as affecting liability, 671.

XI. Precautions against injury.

a. Warning of obstruction.

- 1. General rules, 671.
- 2. Necessity of, 673.
- 3. Nature and sufficiency of barrier, 676.
- 4. Application to particular classes of obstructions,
 - (a) Excavations, embankments, etc., 678.

XI. a, 4—continued.

- (b) Defective bridges, 681.
- (c) Elevated streets and sidewalks, 682.
- (d) Objects outside of way, 684.

b. Lighting streets, 686.

XII. Knowledge or notice of obstruction.

a. Necessity of, to liability.

- 1. General rules, 689.
- 2. Effect of special statutory provisions, 692.

b. Actual knowledge or notice.

- 1. General rules, 694.
- 2. How established, 695.
- 3. Officers or agents whose knowledge or notice is binding, 697.

4. Creation of obstruction as affecting.

- (a) By act of city itself, 701.
- (b) By officers, agents, or servants, 703.
- (c) By contractor, 704.
- (d) Under permit or license, 705.

c. Constructive or implied notice.

- 1. General rules, 705.
- 2. Duration of existence of obstruction as affecting.
 - (a) Generally, 708.
 - (b) Visible and notorious defects as distinguished from latent ones, 711.
- 3. Cause naturally calculated to produce obstruction, 714.
- 4. General defectiveness or obstruction as affecting particular defect, 717.
- 5. Other accidents, 721.
- 6. Place, circumstances, etc., 721.
- 7. Removal of safeguard by unlooked-for event, 723.
- 8. The duty to inspect, 725.

sonably calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness.

It is the contention of the appellee that the offered evidence that the stones were reasonably calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness was properly excluded, because there was no averment in the petition to this effect. It is further insisted that, in omitting to state this fact, the plaintiff failed to set out a cause of action, and a demurrer to the petition should have been sustained. As the cause of action was necessarily grounded upon the proposition that the stones were calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, it seems to us the petition should have contained this or a like averment. Placing the stones in the street was not in and of itself an act of negligence. The negligence, if any, consisted in the fact that the stones were calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness. If they were not calculated to do this, it was not negligence to place them in the street, and travelers would have no cause of action against the city on account of their presence. As a general rule, a person cannot recover for injuries inflicted by the fright of his horse unless he proves that his horse was ordinarily gentle; and hence it would seem to follow that there should be an allegation of this fact. The stones might have frightened horses, but this fact of itself would not warrant a recovery against the city unless the horse so frightened was ordinarily gentle, and the stones calculated to frighten such a horse. Elliott,

XII. c—continued.

9. Time to remove, 728.

d. Question for the jury, 730.

XIII. Injury as result of obstruction or defect.

a. Generally, 732.

b. Proximate cause.

1. General rules, 732.

2. Immediate contact with obstruction, 735.

3. The primary or original cause as the proximate one, 737.

4. Active as distinguished from passive agency of obstruction, 739.

5. Fright of horses as affecting, 742.

XIV. Right to redress of the person injured.

a. With reference to the person.

1. Nature of the injury, 746.

2. Character, capacity, and condition, 748.

b. With reference to the use of the street.

1. General rules, 750.

2. Loitering, deviation, 751.

3. Play, 753.

4. Relative use of footways and carriage ways, 754.

5. Use of bicycles and automobiles, 756.

XV. Notice of claim and cause of injury, 757.

XVI. Effect of concurrent liability of third person, 760.

XVII. Contributory negligence, 763.

XVIII. Damages.

a. Generally, 763.

b. Exemplary damages, 764.

XIX. Conclusion, 765.

I. Scope.

This note is confined to the question of the liability for creating or permitting defects or obstructions in a street of a municipal corporation proper as distinguished from quasi municipal corporations, such as towns, counties, etc. The liability of townships for defects in highways is fully considered in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a subject note to James v. Wellston Twp. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1219, and this note includes cases with relation to incorporated cities and villages only, except, perhaps, in a few instances in which principles have been declared in township cases which are equally applicable to cities and villages.

II. Different general rules as to liability.

a. The common-law rule.

The general and common-law rule has been held to be that, in the absence of express statutes declaring liability, a municipal corporation is not liable for damages sustained by individuals upon its streets and highways in consequence of defects therein or obstructions thereon. Bates v. Rutland, 62 Vt. 178, 9 L.R.A. 363, 22 Am. St. Rep. 95, 20 Atl. 278; Buchanan v. Barre, 66 Vt. 129, 23 L.R.A. 488, 44 Am. St. Rep. 829, 28 Atl. 878; Parker v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 224; Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 443; Arkadelphia v. Windham, 49 Ark. 139, 4 Am. St. Rep. 32, 4 S. W. 450; Ft. Smith v. York, 52 Ark. 84, 12 S. W. 157; Chope v. Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 4 L.R.A. 325, 12 Am. St. Rep. 113, 21 Pac. 364; Tranter v. Sacramento, 61 Cal. 271; Winbigler v. Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 36; Arnold v. San Jose, 81 Cal. 618, 22 Pac. 877; Haines v. Lewiston, 84 Me. 18, 24 Atl. 430; Barry v. Lowell, 8 Allen, 127, 85 Am. Dec. 690; Roberts v. Detroit, 102 Mich. 64, 27 L.R.A. 572, 60 N. W. 450; McEvoy v. Sault Ste. Marie, 136 Mich. 172, 98 N. W. 1006; McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357, 55 Am. Rep. 687, 25 N. W. 313; Carter v. Rahway, 55 N. J. L. 177, 26 Atl. 96, affirmed in 57 N. J. L. 197, 30 Atl. 863; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532; Dunn v. Barnwell, 43 S. C. 398, 49 Am. St. Rep. 843, 21 S. E. 315; Young v. Charleston, 20 S. C. 116, 47 Am. Rep. 827; Navasota v. Pearce, 46 Tex. 535, 26 Am. Rep. 279; Uecker v. Clyman (Wis.) 118 N. W. 247; St. John v. Campbell, 26 Can. S. C. 1.

Within this rule, a municipal corporation is liable for injury caused by a defect in a street only by force of the statute. Beards-

Roads & Streets, § 616; 28 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1380; Royal Center v. Bingaman, 37 Ind. App. 626, 77 N. E. 811; Rushville v. Adams, 107 Ind. 476, 57 Am. Rep. 124, 8 N. E. 292; Ayer v. Norwich, 39 Conn. 376, 12 Am. Rep. 396; Nicholasville v. Fain, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 564, 99 S. W. 275.

Without passing upon the correctness of the rulings of the trial court in respect to the evidence offered and rejected, we will proceed to consider the question whether or not placing the stones in the street and permitting them to remain there for the time mentioned was an actionable nuisance. It is elementary doctrine that cities and towns must keep their streets, and all parts of them, in reasonably safe condition for public travel; but streets can only be kept in reasonably safe condition for public travel by improving and repairing them. And, if it becomes necessary to improve or repair streets, the municipal authorities must of necessity have the right to put in the streets the material needed to improve and repair them, as well as the implements and machinery that it is requisite or proper to use in this kind of work. It would be most unreasonable to impose upon a city the duty to improve and repair, and at the same time to hold it liable for accidents happening on account of horses becoming frightened at the material or implements or machinery used. In cases of this character the doctrine of nonliability should be applied, unless there is negligence independent of merely placing material needed in a proper place ley v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 529, 47 Am. Rep. 677; Daly v. New Haven, 69 Conn. 644, 34 Atl. 397.

And, where a public duty with reference to streets or otherwise is imposed on a town or other quasi corporation without its consent, express or implied, such town or corporation is not liable to an action for negligence in respect to such duty, unless a right of action is given by statute. Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1.

In this respect municipal corporations are not distinguishable in principle from counties. Tranter v. Sacramento; Winbigler v. Los Angeles; and Arkadelphia v. Windham,—supra; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84, 4 Am. Rep. 450.

And this has been held to be the rule though the municipal corporation is charged by its charter with the duty of keeping in proper repair the streets or public highways within the corporate limits. Dunn v. Barnwell; Young v. Charleston; Ft. Smith v. York; and Roberts v. Detroit,—supra; King v. St. Landry, 12 La. Ann. 858; Moore v. Shreveport, 3 La. Ann. 645.

And the acceptance by an incorporated village of a charter which merely allows the village, as a volunteer, to take supervision of the highways does not impose upon it the duty of keeping the highways in repair, where the town never surrendered the right of control over them, and never had been released from its obligation to repair. Parker v. Rutland, supra.

The New England idea is that creating villages and cities by legislative action does not, by implication, impose upon them civil liability for the neglect of corporate duties in respect of those matters which are governmental in their nature and which they administer as it were for and in behalf of the state, such as the control of the streets and the like. Weller v. Burlington, 60 Vt. 28, 12 Atl. 215.

And substantially the same idea obtains in Arkansas. Arkadelphia v. Windham, supra.

So, in Michigan the duty of a city to keep its streets which are public highways 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) in repair was regarded as a duty to the public, and not to private individuals, the mere neglect of which is a nonfeasance only; and, for an injury resulting from such neglect, no cause of action arose. Detroit v. Blackeby, supra.

And the rule is the same in South Carolina. Young v. Charleston, supra.

And it is immaterial, on the question of exemption of a municipal corporation from liability to a civil action for damages at the suit of an individual who has sustained an injury either in person or property by reason of a failure on the part of the corporation to perform a duty imposed upon it, in the absence of a statute imposing such liability, whether such duty is imposed upon one set of public officers or another. Ibid.

In the above case it was said that the decision in Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440, infra, II., b, was by a divided court, and that it is quite manifest from an examination of the case that the question now under consideration was not so fully considered as its importance demands. And it was said that Bathurst v. Macpherson, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 256, infra, II., b, seems to rest the decisions mainly upon the ground that the defect in the highway which caused the injury complained of was the result of an act of the corporation; and it declined to decide the general question whether the corporation was bound to keep all the roads in the municipality in good repair and was therefore liable for an injury sustained by reason of any defect in such roads.

This doctrine seems to have been founded upon Russell v. Devon, 2 T. R. 668, an early case which is frequently cited to sustain it, and which holds that no action will lie by an individual against the inhabitants of a county for an injury sustained in consequence of a county bridge being out of repair.

In Zanesville v. Fannan, 53 Ohio St. 605, 53 Am. St. Rep. 664, 42 N. E. 703, however, it is said that a municipal corporation is liable at common law for permitting a nuisance in streets under its control.

And Greensboro v. McGibbony, 93 Ga.

on the street. The city should, of course, exercise care in placing the material; and, if it is of an unusual character, the additional duty might be imposed of exercising reasonable care to prevent injuries growing out of the fright of horses using the street. But in the case before us the uncontradicted evidence is that there was nothing unusual, or grotesque, or out of the ordinary, in the stones at which the horse became frightened. And it also appears that these stones were put at the place in the street where they would be least likely to frighten horses. They could not well have been put on the pavement or sidewalk, and to have placed them in the traveled part of the street would have been negligence, and so they were put alongside the curbing and parallel with it, and over a ditch or gutter, leaving both the sidewalk and the traveled part of the street entirely free from obstruction. It is a matter of common knowledge that piles of rock that have been placed there for the purpose of repair are constantly seen on the side of turnpikes and highways, and are permitted to remain there until it is convenient or deemed advisable to use them; and so, in the repair of streets and sidewalks in towns and cities, brick, sand, rock, and other material used in the construction or repair are placed conveniently for use. And, if occasionally horses become frightened at rock on the side of the turnpike, or brick or stones on the side of the street that have been placed with due care and out of the traveled part of the highway, 672, 20 S. E. 37, holds that the right to redress for an injury occasioned by a defective structure erected and maintained by a municipal corporation upon a public highway within its territory is a right derived from the common law.

And substantially the same holding was made in Batdorff v. Oregon City (Or.) 100 Pac. 937.

And public highways, whether they are in the country or in a city, belong entirely to the public at large; and any unauthorized obstruction which unnecessarily impedes or incommodes the lawful use of a highway is a public nuisance at common law. Richmond v. Smith, 101 Va. 161, 43 S. E. 345; Yates v. Warrenton, 84 Va. 337, 10 Am. St. Rep. 860, 4 S. E. 818.

And, where a municipality has control of its streets, it may proceed in its corporate name to prevent or remove obstructions therein by judicial proceedings. Yates v. Warrenton, supra.

And a city which suffers a dangerous structure constituting a nuisance to remain in its principal thoroughfare for a long time is liable to a person injured thereby while exercising reasonable and proper care, where the injuries complained of were caused by the structure or nuisance. King v. Oshkosh, 75 Wis. 517, 44 N. W. 745.

And the rule has been asserted that a municipal corporation is liable in damages for personal injuries caused by its negligence in causing or permitting a street to be left in an unsafe condition, in the absence of any express statutory provision imposing such liability. Guthrie v. Swan, 5 Okla. 779, 51 Pac. 562; Ludlow v. Fargo, 3 N. D. 485, 57 N. W. 506; Webster v. Beaver Dam, 84 Fed. 280.

And that the duty of a municipal corporation to keep its streets and sidewalks in repair may exist without express statutory provision. Montgomery v. Wright, 72 Ala. 411, 47 Am. Rep. 422.

b. Rule of liability based on control and duty to keep in safe condition.

The prevailing rule in the American states 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

would seem to be that municipalities having the full, complete control of and power over the roads, streets, and bridges within their precincts, ordinarily conferred upon them, are charged with the duty of using reasonable care in their proper construction and repair and in keeping them free from obstructions. McLaughlin v. Corry, 77 Pa. 113, 18 Am. Rep. 432; Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, 20 So. 424; Albrittin v. Huntsville, 60 Ala. 486, 31 Am. Rep. 46; Smoot v. Wetumpka, 24 Ala. 112; Denver v. Dunamore, 7 Colo. 328, 3 Pac. 705; Makepeace v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 360, 50 Atl. 876; Larson v. Grand Forks, 3 Dak. 307, 19 N. W. 414; Anderson v. Wilmington (Del.) 70 Atl. 204; Colbourn v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 443, 56 Atl. 605; Sterling v. Thomas, 60 Ill. 264; Bloomington v. Bay, 42 Ill. 503; Springfield v. Le Claire, 49 Ill. 476; Vandalia v. Huss, 41 Ill. App. 517; Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561; Dooley v. Sullivan, 112 Ind. 451, 2 Am. St. Rep. 209, 14 N. E. 566; Centerville v. Woods, 57 Ind. 192; Grove v. Ft. Wayne, 45 Ind. 429, 15 Am. Rep. 262; Clark v. Epworth, 56 Iowa, 462, 9 N. W. 359; Jansen v. Atchison, 16 Kan. 358; Shawnee County v. Topeka, 39 Kan. 197, 18 Pac. 161; Langan v. Atchison, 35 Kan. 318, 57 Am. Rep. 165, 11 Pac. 38; Cline v. Crescent City R. Co. 41 La. Ann. 1031, 6 So. 851; Baltimore v. Walker, 98 Md. 637, 57 Atl. 4; Baltimore v. Marriott, 9 Md. 160, 66 Am. Dec. 326; Hagerstown v. Klotz, 93 Md. 437, 54 L.R.A. 940, 86 Am. St. Rep. 437, 49 Atl. 836; Young v. Waterville, 39 Minn. 196, 39 N. W. 97; St. Paul v. Seitz, 3 Minn. 297, Gil. 205, 74 Am. Dec. 753; Moore v. Minneapolis, 19 Minn. 300, Gil. 258; Shurtle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308, Gil. 284; Ruppenthal v. St. Louis, 190 Mo. 213, 88 S. W. 612; Buckley v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. 188, 68 S. W. 1069; Reinhard v. New York, 2 Daly, 243; Nelson v. Canisteo, 100 N. Y. 89, 2 N. E. 473; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Hines v. Lockport, 50 N. Y. 238; Requa v. Rochester, 45 N. Y. 129, 6 Am. Rep. 52; Garrett v. Buffalo, 26 N. Y. Week. Dig. 257, 7 N. Y. S. R. 96; Wallace v.

there can be no recovery for the damages sustained. There is quite a difference between the liability of a city for placing or permitting to remain in its streets material or objects not necessary for the use of the city in the construction or improvement of its streets and its liability for occupying its streets with material that is needed for construction or repair. In the first-mentioned state of case the city would not be keeping its streets reasonably safe for public travel if by its negligence it permitted them to become encumbered with articles or objects calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness; whereas, in the other instance, no liability would attach if proper care was taken in the location of the usual material.

Cities are not liable for every accident or injury that happens because horses take fright at objects on the side of the street. As said in 2 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 1019: "From what has already been said . . . it follows that a municipal corporation is not an insurer against accidents upon the streets and sidewalks; nor is every defect therein, though it may cause the injury sued for, actionable. It is sufficient, we think, if the streets (which include sidewalks and bridges thereon) are in a reasonably safe condition for travel in the ordinary modes by night as well as by day; and whether they are so or not is a practical question to be determined in each case by its particular circumstances." Generally the question whether or not an object is one calculated to frighten horses of ordinary

New York, 2 Hilt. 440, 9 Abb. Pr. 40, 18 How. Pr. 169; Russell v. Canastota, 98 N. Y. 496; Murphy v. Dayton, 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 354; Moon v. Middletown, 14 Ohio C. C. 498; Evans v. Cincinnati, 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 462; Farquar v. Roseburg, 18 Or. 271, 17 Am. St. Rep. 732, 22 Pac. 1103; Erie City v. Schwingle, 22 Pa. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 87; Aiken v. Philadelphia, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 502; Fritsch v. Allegheny, 91 Pa. 226; Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90; Navasota v. Pearce, 46 Tex. 525, 26 Am. Rep. 279; Roanoke v. Harrison, 1 Va. Dec. 801, 19 S. E. 179; Gordon v. Richmond, 83 Va. 436, 2 S. E. 727; Noble v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 271, 31 Am. Rep. 726; Mischke v. Seattle, 26 Wash. 616, 67 Pac. 357; Lorence v. Ellensburg, 13 Wash. 341, 52 Am. St. Rep. 42, 43 Pac. 20; Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273; Hutchinson v. Olympia, 2 Wash. Terr. 314, 5 Pac. 606; Larsen v. Sedro-Woolley, 49 Wash. 134, 94 Pac. 938; Curry v. Mannington, 23 W. Va. 14; Griffin v. Williamstown, 6 W. Va. 312; Evanston v. Gunn, 99 U. S. 660, 25 L. ed. 306; Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black. 418, 17 L. ed. 298; Weightman v. Washington, 1 Black. 39, 17 L. ed. 52.

And that a city or village having exclusive control of its streets, and ample means under the control of its constituted authorities to maintain its streets in a reasonably safe condition, is liable to travelers exercising ordinary care and using them in the usual mode, who are injured by a failure to perform such duty. Goodrich v. University Place, 80 Neb. 774, 115 N. W. 538; Omaha v. Olmstead, 5 Neb. 446; Selma v. Perkins, 68 Ala. 145; Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, 20 So. 424; Bessemer v. Carroll (Ala.) 45 So. 419; Denver v. Magivney (Colo.) 96 Pac. 1002; Denver v. Dunsmore, 7 Colo. 328, 3 Pac. 705; Denver v. Dean, 10 Colo. 375, 3 Am. St. Rep. 594, 16 Pac. 30; Larson v. Grand Forks, supra; Carson v. Genesee, 9 Idaho, 244, 108 Am. St. Rep. 127, 74 Pac. 862; Sterling v. Thomas and Bloomington v. Bay, supra; Browning v. Springfield, 17 Ill. 146, 63 Am. Dec. 345; Grove v. Ft. Wayne, supra; Muncie v. Hey, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250; Kentland v. Hagan, 17 Ind. App. 1, 46 N. E. 43; Laporte v. Osborn (Ind. App.) 86 N. E. 995; Eudora v. Miller, 30 Kan. 494, 2 Pac. 685; Kansas City v. Bradbury, 45 Kan. 381, 23 Am. St. Rep. 731, 25 Pac. 889; Ft. Scott v. Brothers, 20 Kan. 455; Topeka v. Tuttle, 5 Kan. 311; Jansen v. Atchison, supra; Gould v. Topeka, 32 Kan. 485, 49 Am. St. Rep. 496, 4 Pac. 822; Langan v. Atchison, supra; Henderson v. Sizemore, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1134, 104 S. W. 722; O'Neill v. New Orleans, 30 La. Ann. 220, 31 Am. Rep. 221; Cline v. Crescent City R. Co. 43 La. Ann. 327, 26 Am. St. Rep. 187, 9 So. 122; Aucoin v. New Orleans, 105 La. 271, 29 So. 502; Baltimore v. Beck, 96 Md. 183, 53 Atl. 976; Baltimore v. Walker, 98 Md. 637, 57 Atl. 4; Shartle v. Minneapolis, supra; Kellogg v. Janesville, 34 Minn. 132, 24 N. W. 359; Young v. Waterville, 39 Minn. 196, 39 N. W. 97; Bell v. West Point, 51 Miss. 262; Smith v. St. Joseph, 45 Mo. 449; Bowie v. Kansas City, 51 Mo. 454; Beaudan v. Cape Girardeau, 71 Mo. 392; Loewer v. Sedalia, 77 Mo. 431; Maus v. Springfield, 101 Mo. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 634, 14 S. W. 630; Young v. Webb City, 150 Mo. 333, 51 S. W. 709; Carthage v. Garner, 209 Mo. 688, 108 S. W. 521; Hedges v. Kansas City, 18 Mo. App. 62; Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96; McCune v. Missoula, 10 Mont. 146, 25 Pac. 442; Sullivan v. Helena, 10 Mont. 134, 25 Pac. 94; May v. Anaconda, 26 Mont. 140, 66 Pac. 759; Snook v. Anaconda, 26 Mont. 128, 66 Pac. 756; Lincoln v. O'Brien, 56 Neb. 761, 77 N. W. 76; McDonough v. Virginia City, 6 Nev. 90; Durant v. Palmer, 29 N. J. L. 544; Wendell v. Troy, 39 Barb. 329, affirmed in 4 Abb. App. Dec. 563; Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131; Garrett v. Buffalo, supra; Seymour v. Salamanca, 137 N. Y. 364, 33 N. E. 304; Wallace v. New York, 18 How. Pr. 169; Davenport v. Ruckman, 10 Bosw. 20, 16 Abb. Pr. 341, affirmed in 37 N. Y. 568; gentleness is for the jury; but there are exceptions to this rule, and we think the case before us affords an illustration of one of them. The fact that the plaintiff's horse, assuming that he was ordinarily gentle, became frightened, is not the sole test of the city's liability. Whether or not it is liable depends primarily upon the question whether or not the street at that place was reasonably safe for public travel; and this, in turn, brings into view the final inquiry, whether or not the things in the street constituted a nuisance or rendered it unsafe for public travel. The objects at which the horse became frightened were plain, ordinary stones, put there for a lawful purpose, and out of the usual way of travel. We therefore hold as a matter of law that a municipal corporation is not liable in damages because of injuries sustained by the fright of an ordinary gentle horse at objects, not of an unusual character, placed upon the side of a street, out of the traveled way, for the purpose of constructing, improving, or repairing the same, although they may be permitted to remain a longer time than is necessary before being used. As it was not a nuisance to place them there, neither was it a nuisance to leave them a few days. Farrell v. Oldtown, 69 Me. 72; Nichols v. Athens, 66 Me. 402; Barrrett v. Walworth, 64 Hun, 526, 19 N. Y.

Supp. 557; Loberg v. Amherst, 87 Wis. 634, 41 Am. St. Rep. 69, 58 N. W. 1048; District of Columbia v. Moulton, 182 U. S. 576, 45 L. ed. 1237, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840.

We have examined the cases cited by counsel for appellant, as well as others along the same line, and they are not in conflict with the views we have expressed. In Fugate v. Somerset, 97 Ky. 48, 29 S. W. 970, the piles of lumber at which the horse became frightened were placed at right angles with the street, covering several feet of the improved part of it and extending upon the metal part. The lumber had been placed there to repair the sidewalk, and a portion of it was permitted to remain some time after the sidewalk had been repaired. In Nicholasville v. Fain, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 564, 99 S. W. 275, the nuisance in the street consisted of a pile of rubbish containing scraps of tin, an old bath tub, oil cans, and other things. In Hazelrigg v. Frankfort, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 207, 92 S. W. 584, the pile of rock, which was 3 feet high, 8 feet wide, and 11 feet long, was in part on the side of the street and partly in the traveled way.

Upon the whole case, we think the trial judge correctly ruled as a matter of law that the placing and leaving of the stones in the street was not an actionable nuisance.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

Hutson v. New York, 5 Sandf. 289; Chaplin v. Penn Yan, 34 Hun, 33, affirmed in 102 N. Y. 680; Dillon v. Raleigh, 124 N. C. 184, 32 S. E. 548; Neal v. Marion, 129 N. C. 345, 40 S. E. 116; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532; Evans v. Cincinnati, supra; Farquar v. Roseburg, supra; Batdorf v. Oregon City (Or.) 100 Pac. 937; Stevenson v. Phenixville, 1 Chester, Co. Rep. 113; Boyle v. Hazleton, 171 Pa. 167, 33 Atl. 142; Burns v. Bradford, 137 Pa. 361, 11 L.R.A. 726, 20 Atl. 997; Redford v. Coggeshall, 19 R. I. 313, 36 Atl. 89; Dallas v. Strayer (Tex. Civ. App.) 73 S. W. 980; Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90; Galveston v. Posnainsky, 62 Tex. 118, 50 Am. Rep. 517; Galveston v. Barbour, 62 Tex. 172, 50 Am. Rep. 519; Noble v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 271, 31 Am. Rep. 726; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369; Lorence v. Ellensburg, 13 Wash. 341, 52 Am. St. Rep. 42, 43 Pac. 20; Shearer v. Buckley, 31 Wash. 370, 72 Pac. 76; Mischke v. Seattle, supra; Saylor v. Montesano, 11 Wash. 328, 39 Pac. 653; Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273; Hutchinson v. Olympia, 2 Wash. Terr. 314, 5 Pac. 606; Griffin v. Williamstown, 6 W. Va. 312; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 557, 23 L. ed. 445; Dant v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 557, 23 L. ed. 446; Maxwell v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 557, 23 L. ed. 445; Nebraska City v. Campbell, 2 Black, 590, 17 L. ed. 271; Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298; Providence 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Clapp, 17 How. 161, 15 L. ed. 72; Gallagher v. St. Paul, 28 Fed. 305; Delger v. St. Paul, 14 Fed. 567; Cuzner v. Calgary, 1 N. W. Terr. 162; Bathurst v. Macpherson, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 256.

And this is so even in the absence of an express statute declaring the liability. Galveston v. Posnainsky and Galveston v. Barbour, supra; Albrittin v. Huntsville, 60 Ala. 486, 31 Am. Rep. 46; Bessemer v. Carroll (Ala.) 45 So. 419; Carson v. Genesee, 9 Idaho, 244, 108 Am. St. Rep. 127, 74 Pac. 862; Shawnee County v. Topeka, 39 Kan. 197, 18 Pac. 161; Bell v. West Point, 51 Miss. 262; Evans v. Cincinnati, 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 462; Noble v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 271, 31 Am. Rep. 726; Shearer v. Buckley; Saylor v. Montesano; and Sutton v. Snohomish, supra; Jacksonville v. Smith, 24 C. C. A. 97, 41 U. S. App. 657, 78 Fed. 292.

And the rule as generally applied by a large number of cases, and which may be said to be practically universal either under general or special statutes, is that it is the duty of a municipal corporation to use ordinary and reasonable care to keep its streets and sidewalks free from obstruction, and in a reasonably safe condition, so that persons can pass along them in the ordinary methods of travel in safety. Idlett v. Atlanta, 123 Ga. 821, 51 S. E. 709; Harrell v. Macon, 1 Ga. App. 413, 58 S. E. 124; Americus v. Johnson, 2 Ga. App. 378, 58 S. E. 518; Massey v. Columbus, 75 Ga. 658; Atlanta v. Buchanan, 76 Ga. 585; Blume v. New Orleans,

104 La. 345, 29 So. 106; Stidham v. Delaware City (Del.) 67 Atl. 175; Green v. Newark, 5 Penn. (Del.) 316, 62 Atl. 792; Hogan v. Chicago, 168 Ill. 551, 48 N. E. 210, reversing 59 Ill. App. 446; Purcell v. Chicago, 231 Ill. 164, 83 N. E. 137; Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561; Hennepin v. Coleman, 132 Ill. App. 604; Murphy v. Indianapolis, 83 Ind. 76; Crawfordville v. Smith, 79 Ind. 308, 41 Am. Rep. 612; Aurora v. Bitner, 100 Ind. 396; Glantz v. South Bend, 106 Ind. 306, 6 N. E. 632; Rushville v. Adams, 107 Ind. 475, 57 Am. Rep. 124, 8 N. E. 292; Teague v. Bloomington, 40 Ind. App. 68, 81 N. E. 103; Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757; Salem v. Walker, 16 Ind. App. 687, 46 N. E. 90; Ft. Wayne v. Patterson, 3 Ind. App. 34, 29 N. E. 167; Worthington v. Morgan, 17 Ind. App. 603, 47 N. E. 235; Padelford v. Eagle Grove, 117 Iowa, 616, 91 N. W. 899; Nocks v. Whiting, 126 Iowa, 405, 106 Am. St. Rep. 371, 102 N. W. 109; Shinnick v. Marshalltown, 137 Iowa, 72, 114 N. W. 542; Mickey v. Indianola (Iowa) 114 N. W. 1072; Smith v. Leavenworth, 15 Kan. 81; Bellevue v. Genoway, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 304; Louisville v. Bailey, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 6, 74 S. W. 688; Carlisle v. Secrest, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 336, 75 S. W. 268; Flynn v. Neosho, 114 Mo. 567, 21 S. W. 903; Blake v. St. Louis, 40 Mo. 569; Welsh v. St. Louis, 73 Mo. 71; Russell v. Columbia, 74 Mo. 480, 41 Am. Rep. 325; Carvin v. St. Louis, 151 Mo. 334, 52 S. W. 210; Vogelgesang v. St. Louis, 139 Mo. 127, 40 S. W. 653; Buckley v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 16, 56 S. W. 319; Taubman v. Lexington, 25 Mo. App. 218; Fockler v. Kansas City, 94 Mo. App. 464, 68 S. W. 363; Brennan v. St. Louis, 92 Mo. 482, 2 S. W. 481; Sweeney v. Butte, 15 Mont. 274, 39 Pac. 286; Lincoln v. Calvert, 39 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115; Beatrice v. Reid, 41 Neb. 214, 59 N. W. 770; Davis v. Omaha, 47 Neb. 836, 66 N. W. 859; Aurora v. Cox, 43 Neb. 727, 62 N. W. 66; Lincoln v. Walker, 18 Neb. 244, 20 N. W. 113; Elliott v. Concord, 27 N. H. 204; Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095; Todd v. Troy, 61 N. Y. 506; Hutson v. New York, 9 N. Y. 163, 59 Am. Dec. 526; Corcoran v. New York, 188 N. Y. 131, 80 N. E. 660; Wilson v. Watertown, 3 Hun, 508, 5 Thomp. & C. 579; Champlin v. Penn Yan, 34 Hun, 33, affirmed in 102 N. Y. 680; Bradner v. Warwick, 91 App. Div. 408, 86 N. Y. Supp. 935; Kopper v. Yonkers, 110 App. Div. 747, 97 N. Y. Supp. 425, affirmed in 188 N. Y. 592, 81 N. E. 1168; Van Gorder v. Seneca Falls, 104 N. Y. Supp. 299; Gage v. Hornellsville, 2 N. Y. S. R. 351; Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 431; Kinsey v. Kinston, 145 N. C. 106, 58 S. E. 912; Fleming v. Wilmerding (Pa.) 72 Atl. 624; Archer v. Johnson City (Tenn.) 64 S. W. 474; Sherman v. Williams, 77 Tex. 310, 14 S. W. 130; Tucker v. Salt Lake City, 10 Utah, 173, 37 Pac. 261; Arthur v. Charleston, 51 W. Va. 132, 41 S. E. 171; Colby v. Beaver Dam, 34 Wis. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

285; Grand Forks v. Allman, 83 C. C. A. 554, 153 Fed. 532.

And if it fails to do so it is liable for damages for injuries sustained in consequence of such failure. Harrell v. Macon and Americus v. Johnson, supra; Lord v. Mobile, 113 Ala. 360, 21 So. 366; Makepeace v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 360, 50 Atl. 876; Vandalia v. Huss, 41 Ill. App. 517; Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561; Decatur v. Fisher, 53 Ill. 407; Glantz v. South Bend, 106 Ind. 306, 6 N. E. 632; Worthington v. Morgan and Mickey v. Indianola, supra; Collins v. Council Bluffs, 32 Iowa, 324, 7 Am. Rep. 200; Bellevue v. Genoway and Carlisle v. Secrest, supra; Fugate v. Somerset, 97 Ky. 48, 29 S. W. 970; Baltimore v. Beck, 96 Md. 183, 53 Atl. 976; Estelle v. Lake Crystal, 27 Minn. 243, 6 N. W. 775; Blake v. St. Louis; Russell v. Columbia; and Vogelgesang v. St. Louis,—supra; Waltemeyer v. Kansas City, 71 Mo. App. 354; Fockler v. Kansas City; Lincoln v. Calvert; and Turner v. Newburgh,—supra; Clemence v. Auburn, 66 N. Y. 334, affirming 4 Hun, 386, 6 Thomp. & C. 633; Todd v. Troy; Hutson v. New York; Wilson v. Watertown; and Gage v. Hornellsville,—supra; Brown v. Towanda, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 378; Niblett v. Nashville, 12 Heisk. 684, 27 Am. Rep. 755; Knoxville v. Bell, 12 Lea, 157; Baugus v. Atlanta, 74 Tex. 629, 12 S. W. 750; King v. Oshkosh, 75 Wis. 517, 44 N. W. 745; Little v. Madison, 42 Wis. 643, 24 Am. Rep. 435; Colby v. Beaver Dam, supra.

A city having notice of defects or dangerous places in its streets must remove them within a reasonable time, and failure to do so is negligence rendering it liable for resulting injuries. Revis v. Raleigh (N. C.) 63 S. E. 1049; McLemore v. West End (Ala.) 48 So. 663; Benton v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118 S. W. 418.

Where the injury would not have occurred but for the obstruction or defect. McLemore v. West End, supra.

And, where the duty of cities to keep their streets in repair and the consequent liability to travelers injured by reason of the want of such repair are imposed by general laws of the state, they apply to all cities and towns situated in the state, irrespective of their charter provisions. James v. Portage, 48 Wis. 677, 5 N. W. 31.

These rules apply to injuries caused by the neglect or omission of a municipal corporation to keep its streets in a safe condition for travel, as well as to those caused by defects occasioned by the wrongful acts of others, where the corporation has actual or constructive notice of the defect which caused the injury. Aurora v. Bitner, supra.

And the duty of a municipal corporation to keep its streets in repair includes the duty to keep them free from dangerous obstructions; and a corporation is liable for negligence in allowing such obstructions to continue after notice thereof may be imputed to it. Monticello v. Kennard, 7 Ind. App. 135, 34 N. E. 454.

And, if a city undertakes to open and grade its streets and keep them in reasonable repair for the use of the public, either by itself or its agents, it must accomplish that undertaking or be responsible for its failure. Tritz v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 632.

And a statute prescribing that a municipal corporation shall keep its streets open and in repair and free from nuisances, etc., may properly be read by the trial judge in his charge to the jury in an action for negligence against the city for permitting an excavation to remain unguarded and unlighted in a place used by the public as a sidewalk. Toledo v. Nitz, 23 Ohio C. C. 350.

So, the ordinances of a city are admissible in evidence in an action against it for an injury resulting from its neglect in keeping its sidewalks free of obstruction and in a safe condition, when they tend to show that the city has control of the streets and sidewalks. Rockford v. Hildebrand, 61 Ill. 155.

The principle of cases of this class is that, when the duty of a city to protect the traveling public from injury liable to happen in consequence of street improvements is not directly and specifically imposed by law, it arises by necessary implication from the primary duty to repair streets and keep them in repair, and keep them, when open to public use, fit and safe for such use. Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 10 N. W. 162; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369.

The liability of a municipal corporation for neglect to keep its streets in repair and free from obstruction arises from power possessed by the municipality to levy and collect taxes for general revenue purposes, upon property within the limits of the city, and to open and improve streets and make assessments therefor, such powers carrying with them the duty to keep the streets in reasonably safe and convenient condition; and, if it fails to do so, it can be held to respond in damages. Guthrie v. Swan, 5 Okla. 779, 51 Pac. 562; Schigley v. Waseca (Minn.) 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 689, 118 N. W. 259; Troy v. Cheshire R. Co. 23 N. H. 83, 55 Am. Dec. 177; Evanston v. Gunn, 99 U. S. 660, 25 L. ed. 306.

And an action for damages resulting from negligence will lie, on principles of common law, against a municipal corporation, if the duty to make repairs is fully declared, and adequate means are put within the power of the corporation to perform the duty. Chicago v. Keefe, 114 Ill. 222, 55 Am. Rep. 860, 2 N. E. 267; Cleveland v. King, 132 U. S. 295, 33 L. ed. 334, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90.

When a city or town is incorporated, and is given control over the streets and walks within its corporate limits, and is empowered to provide the means to make and repair them, the corporation not only assumes this duty, but by implication agrees to perform it for the benefit and protection of all who may have occasion to make use of these public easements; and, for failure to discharge this duty, the corporation is responsible to the party injured. Wilson v. Wheel- ing, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Curry v. Mannington, 23 W. Va. 14; Omaha v. Olmstead, 5 Neb. 446; Champlin v. Penn Yan, 34 Hun, 33, affirmed in 102 N. Y. 680; Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 161, note.

And this implied agreement, made with the sovereign power, inures to the benefit of every individual interested in the proper performance of such duties. Omaha v. Olmstead, 5 Neb. 446; Curry v. Mannington, supra.

The grant by the government to the municipality, of a portion of its sovereign power, is to be deemed a sufficient consideration for an implied contract on the part of the corporation to perform the duties which the charter imposes; and the contract made with the sovereign power inures to the benefit of every individual interested in its performance. Conrad v. Ithaca, 16 N. Y. 158; Weet v. Brockport, supra.

Within these rules, a village charter which makes the village a separate road district, and constitutes the trustees commissioners of highways for the village, with the same powers and duties over the road and streets therein as commissioners of streets in towns, and with like powers to appoint overseers of highways having the powers of overseers in towns, and providing for the assessment of highway labor by trustees, imposes a corporate duty, and the trustees, in respect to the care and control of the highways of the village, are the agents of the corporation, and not independent public officers, and for their neglect to perform the duty imposed upon them the corporation is responsible. Weed v. Ballston Spa, 76 N. Y. 329; Hungerford v. Waverly, 125 App. Div. 311, 109 N. Y. Supp. 438, reversing, 56 Misc. 186, 107 N. Y. Supp. 291; Clark v. Lockport, 49 Barb. 580; McSherry v. Canandaigua, 35 N. Y. S. R. 432, 12 N. Y. Supp. 751, affirmed in 129 N. Y. 612, 29 N. E. 821; Stebbins v. Oneida, 1 Silv. Sup. Ct. 240, 5 N. Y. Supp. 483.

And, although a city charter does not in express terms confer the power or impose the duty of keeping the streets and bridges within the corporate limits in a proper condition and repair, where the charter grants to the corporate authorities the power to impose such taxes upon all the real and personal estate within the corporate limits as they shall deem necessary for the support of the government or for other purposes, and enforce the collection of the same, and the authorities have assumed and exercised corporate functions over the streets, and have negligently constructed or failed to keep in repair a bridge upon one of them, whereby a traveler sustains an injury, the corporation is liable for the injury. Greensboro v. McGibbony, 93 Ga. 672, 20 S. E. 37.

So, the duty of a city to keep its streets in repair and free from obstructions is a corporate duty resting upon the municipality, under a charter provision making the common council commissioners of highways within the city, and empowering it to pass ordinances to regulate and keep in repair the streets of the city and to prevent encumbrances thereon, and making it the duty of the mayor to cause the laws and ordinances of the city to be duly executed, such ordinances prohibiting the placing of any obstructions upon the streets or sidewalks unless duly licensed by the city. Kunz v. Troy, 104 N. Y. 344, 58 Am. Rep. 508, 10 N. E. 442; Diveny v. Elmira, 51 N. Y. 506; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43.

And, under a city charter conferring upon the municipality full power and authority to keep the streets and sidewalks, etc., in good order, and to remove any obstructions or nuisances, it is the duty of the corporation to exercise the power, and to keep the streets, sidewalks, etc., in such condition that persons passing over or along them may do so with safety and convenience; and it is liable for injury arising from a failure to remove a nuisance. Parker v. Macon, 39 Ga. 725, 99 Am. Dec. 486.

And charter provision that, before the city shall be liable for damages to any person injured by any of the streets, avenues, alleys, or sidewalks thereof, the person so injured, or someone in his behalf, shall give the mayor or city council notice within thirty days after the same had been received, constitutes a clear and positive legislative recognition of the principle that the city may be liable for injuries occasioned by defective streets and sidewalks. Denver v. Williams, 12 Colo. 475, 21 Pac. 617.

Likewise, for a failure to discharge the duty of a municipal corporation to keep its streets in a reasonably safe and secure condition so that they may be safely used by the traveling public, the municipality is liable to a public prosecution by indictment. Champlin v. Penn Yan and Weet v. Brockport, supra.

c. Liability under statutes.

Many of the states, including many if not all of those originally holding to the common-law rule of nonliability, have adopted statutes or given charters expressly imposing liability upon municipal corporations to persons injured by reason of defects or obstructions in their streets; the liability under those statutes, of course, depends in each case upon a proper construction of the statute applicable to it.

Where the liability of cities for injuries suffered in their streets is statutory, there is no liability except under the declared conditions. McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357, 55 Am. Rep. 687, 25 N. W. 313; Reed v. Madison, 83 Wis. 171, 17 L.R.A. 733, 53 N. W. 547.

And, where a city would not be liable in the absence of a statute creating a liability for an obstruction in a street, a statute giving a right of action against a municipal corporation for any injury sustained by reason of defective highways, streets, bridges, cross walks, and culverts does not create a municipal liability for injuries caused by defective sidewalks, since a statute attempting, in derogation of the common law, to create a liability, cannot be carried beyond the clearly expressed provisions of the act. Detroit v. Putnam, 45 Mich. 263, 7 N. W. 815.

And a walk crossing a public alley is a cross walk as distinguished from a sidewalk, within the meaning of a statute creating municipal liability in favor of persons sustaining a bodily injury upon any of the public highways or streets by reason of neglect to keep such public highways or streets and all cross walks, etc., in good repair. Pequignot v. Detroit, 16 Fed. 211.

Nor does a provision of a city charter requiring the council to see that all ordinances relating to the keeping of sidewalks free from obstruction are strictly enforced make the city liable for the negligence of a contractor in erecting a barrier across a sidewalk, when the contractor was employed by the owner of adjacent property to build the sidewalk. Thompson v. West Bay City, 137 Mich. 94, 100 N. W. 280.

And, where the statute gives a municipal corporation power to open and repair streets, but leaves the opening and repairing and keeping in order discretionary with the corporation, if a defect in a street, from which a person received injuries, was not the result of wear and tear, but was left in that condition by the authorities when they opened the street, the city is liable for the resulting injury suffered by a person exercising proper care; but, if the street was, when opened, put in good condition, and the defect occurred afterwards, but not by the direct act of the municipal corporation, it is not liable. McDonough v. Virginia City, 6 Nev. 90.

And a statute providing that all the public squares, public grounds, streets, highways, and public walks, within the limits of a borough, shall be under the exclusive direction and control of the borough and the officers thereof; and the expense of maintaining the same shall be borne exclusively by the borough and the inhabitants thereof; enacted for the purpose of giving cities and boroughs the right to determine for themselves what improvements in these respects shall be made,—does not impose upon the cities and boroughs liability for injuries caused by a defect in the street, but leaves it upon the town. Nead v. Derby, 40 Conn. 205.

But, where a statute provides that an action may be maintained against an incorporated town or other public corporation for an injury to the rights of the plaintiff arising from some act or omission of such corporation, a municipal or other public corporation is liable for damages occasioned to travelers in consequence of the neglect of its officers to keep its streets and highways in repair, unless exempted from such liability by express provision of its charter. Sheridan v. Salem, 14 Or. 328, 12 Pac. 925.

And a statutory provision that cities and towns shall have the care and control of public highways and streets, and shall cause the same to be kept in repair and free from nuisances, imposes a mandatory, and not a discretionary, duty upon municipalities of keeping the streets in repair and free from nuisances and obstructions. Parmenter v. Marion, 113 Iowa, 297, 85 N. W. 90.

And a statutory provision that all highways within any town are to be kept in repair so as to be safe and convenient, at the expense of the town under the direction of the surveyors of highways; who are also authorized, when any highway is encumbered with snow, to cause so much thereof to be removed or trod down as will render the road passable, making the town liable for any neglect to keep the highway in repair, —applies to cities as well as towns, and to sidewalks when they are a part of the highway. Providence v. Clapp, 17 How. 161, 15 L. ed. 72.

Likewise, a charter provision of a city imposing upon it the duty of repairing all highways within its limits, and authorizing it to assume by contract the maintenance and repair of turnpike roads within its limits, makes the city liable to pay for damages received by reason of defects in any existing highway, and any that shall hereafter be established, whether through the action of its authorities, or through dedication and acceptance. Makepeace v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 360, 50 Atl. 876.

And, where the charter of a municipal corporation gives power to levy a specific tax for the purpose of constructing and maintaining bridges, it is sufficient to impose upon the municipal corporation the duty of keeping in safe condition a public bridge within its limits; and, in an action for a failure to perform such duty when the charter is pleaded by the title, the court will take judicial notice of all its provisions. Shartle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308, Gil. 284.

So, under Me. Rev. Stat. 1903, chap. 23, § 56, declaring that highways legally established shall be open and kept in repair so as to be safe and convenient for travelers, if, through structural defects or want of repair a way is not reasonably safe and convenient, and an injury is received through the defect alone, the person injured is entitled to recover therefor against the city. Moriarty v. Lewiston, 98 Me. 482, 57 Atl. 790.

And towns are liable, within the meaning of that statute, to any person who sustains damage through any defect or want of necessary repair, as well as for injuries received in consequence of obstructions placed on, or deposited in, a highway or street, as for inherent defects. Frost v. Portland, 11 Me. 271.

So, under N. H. Laws 1893, chap. 59, § 1, providing that towns are liable for damages happening to any person, his team or carriage, traveling upon a bridge, culvert, or sluiceway, or dangerous embankment and defective railings upon any highway by reason of any obstruction, defect, insufficiency, or want of repair of such bridge, culvert, or sluiceway, or dangerous embankment and defective railings, which renders it unsuitable for travel thereon, a person injured, to maintain an action against a town, must establish that the matter of which he complains as the cause of his injury, and which he alleges rendered the highway unsuitable, was an obstruction, defect, insufficiency, or want of repair, of one of the highway structures named in the statute. Wilder v. Concord, 72 N. H. 259, 56 Atl. 193.

And the obstruction contemplated by the New Hampshire statute with reference to the obstruction of highways is in general one from or by reason of mere matter; and the encumbrances which surveyors of highways are empowered to remove are those by inert matter. Ray v. Manchester, 46 N. H. 59, 88 Am. Dec. 192.

And the duty imposed upon towns by N. H. Pub. Stat. chap. 75, enforceable by indictment as therein provided, to keep all highways within their limits suitable for travel thereon, was not affected by the legislation of 1893; but the liability at the private suit of a traveler, for damages happening to him by reason of the unsuitability of a highway as established by N. H. Pub. Stat. chap. 76, §§ 1, 2, was abolished by express repeal of those statutes by N. H. Laws 1893, chap. 59, § 5. Wilder v. Concord, 72 N. H. 259, 56 Atl. 193.

So, under Mass. Stat. 1877, chap. 234, §§ 1, 2, requiring towns and cities to keep their ways reasonably safe, it is the duty of a town or city to use reasonable care and diligence not only to remedy defects, but to guard against causes existing within the limits of the way, which are liable to produce such defects. McGowan v. Boston, 170 Mass. 384, 49 N. E. 633.

But a statutory provision that highways shall be kept in repair at the expense of the town or city in which they are situated, so that they shall be safe and convenient for travelers; and that any person who receives injury through a defect or want of repair in a highway may recover damages therefor of the town or city by law obliged to repair the same, if such town or city had reasonable notice of the defect, or the defect had existed for twenty-four hours previously to the occurrence of the injury, —does not limit the liability of towns and cities to open and visible defects, but leaves it applicable to all defects. Burt v. Boston, 122 Mass. 223.

And provisions of this class give the rule and measure of liability of cities and towns, not making them liable for every defect or want of repair, nor for every object which makes the highway unsafe or inconvenient for travelers; under it, to make them liable the cause of any injury must be both a defect or want of repair and something which makes the highway unsafe or inconvenient, and the injury must be attributable to the defect or want of repair. Barber v. Roxbury, 11 Allen, 318.

And a person injured by a defective sidewalk must prove that the town, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, should have ascertained and remedied the defect. Mason v. Winthrop, 196 Mass. 18, 81 N. E. 644.

But, where a railroad crossed a highway over the level thereof by means of a bridge, and the highway was lowered for the purpose of having the railroad pass over it, that portion of the highway which was so lowered is included in the approaches to the bridge, within the meaning of Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 128, so that the railroad company is liable for an accident happening thereon, and the city is exonerated. Whitcher v. Somerville, 138 Mass. 454.

So, S. C. Rev. Stat. 1893, § 1582, providing that any person who shall receive bodily injury or damage in his person or property through a defect in any street or public way, or by reason of defect or mismanagement in anything under the control of the corporation within the limits of any town or city, may recover in an action against the same the amount of actual damage sustained by him by reason thereof, renders a municipal corporation liable not only for neglect in making repairs on the streets, but also for mismanagement of anything under the control of the corporation in making such repairs; but it does not make a municipal corporation liable for any other nonfeasance or misfeasance on its part except such as is connected with the keeping of the streets, etc., in proper and safe repair. Dunn v. Barnwell, 43 S. C. 398, 49 Am. St. Rep. 843, 21 S. E. 315.

And N. Dak. Comp. Laws, § 4600, makes a city liable for an injury resulting from permitting an obstruction in a street, where the injury is the proximate result of its act, though it was not reasonably anticipated. Ouverson v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 676.

So, a municipal corporation is liable for injuries occasioned by its failure to keep its streets, alleys, sidewalks, roads, and bridges in repair, by statute, in West Virginia, to the same extent that private individuals are liable for the same character of negligence. Gibson v. Huntington, 38 W. Va. 177, 22 L.R.A. 561, 45 Am. St. Rep. 853, 18 S. E. 447.

And negligence of a city in failing to keep its streets, alleys, sidewalks, roads, and bridges in repair is presumed, and notice of the defect is not required. Ibid.; Arthur v. Charleston, 51 W. Va. 132, 41 S. E. 171.

So, the duty of townships, villages, etc., to keep highways in good repair so that they shall be safe and convenient for public travel is made imperative by statute in Michigan. Malloy v. Walker Twp. 77 Mich. 448, 6 L.R.A. 695, 43 N. W. 1012; Grand Rapids v. Wyman, 46 Mich. 516, 9 N. W. 833; Burnham v. Byron Twp. 46 Mich. 555, 9 N. W. 851; Campbell v. Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655, 45 N. W. 652.

And such liability, being expressly declared, exists whether, under the provisions of their municipal charters, they would be held so liable or not. Campbell v. Kalamazoo, supra.

And How. Anno. Stat. (Mich.) § 1442, making municipalities liable for bodily injuries sustained by reason of the neglect to keep public highways in good repair and in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel, imposes upon municipalities an obligation to use diligence to keep their highways and streets in a condition reasonably safe and fit for public travel, including an obligation on the part of a municipality to remove obstructions within a reasonable time after it has knowledge or notice of their existence. McEvoy v. Sault Ste. Marie, 136 Mich. 172, 98 N. W. 1006.

And, upon the incorporation of a village, and upon its assuming control over the corporate territory, it becomes its duty to take prompt measures to remedy any existing defects in sidewalks by reason of any disconnected system, and to supply the necessary regulations, and to raise the necessary funds; and after having failed, it cannot resist a recovery by a person who has been injured by reason of a defective walk. Lombar v. East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14, 48 N. W. 947.

Mich. Pub. Acts 1879, p. 223, How. Anno. Stat. §§ 1442, 1446, giving an action against municipalities for injuries caused by neglect to keep streets and highways in good repair and in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel, however, was not intended to put villages and cities under any different obligation from townships in regard to the good repair of such ways as are to be kept in order. McKellar v. Detroit, 57 Mich. 158, 58 Am. Rep. 357, 23 N. W. 621.

And this statutory remedy is confined to cases in which the want of repair is the immediate cause of injury, as where there are obstructions or defects in a roadway, or bridge, and a vehicle, in passing over it, encounters the mischief complained of. Agnew v. Corunna, 55 Mich. 428, 54 Am. Rep. 383, 21 N. W. 873.

So, the Michigan statutes imposing liability upon cities for neglect to keep their highways in a safe condition fix the liability for injury only to persons and property upon the highway, and impose no liability for injury to abutting lands. Tatman v. Benton Harbor, 115 Mich. 695, 74 N. W. 187.

And they confine municipal liability to such defects in streets as arise from their being out of repair, and do not cover objects forming no part of the streets and not affecting their condition as ways kept in proper repair. McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357, 55 Am. Rep. 687, 25 N. W. 313.

So, while municipal corporations are liable for torts, and in a certain sense all governments are municipal corporations, the rule of liability is applied to corporations supposed to have a private character, as distinguished from quasi corporations, such as counties, townships, etc., consisting of a political subdivision created as an instrument of the state or government; and, in creating the government of the territory of Hawaii, Congress did not intend to create a municipal corporation proper, with the liabilities of such a corporation; and the territory is not liable for injuries from obstructions or defects in streets. Coffield v. Territory, 13 Haw. 478.

And the act of Congress creating a board of public works for the District of Columbia, and providing that they shall have entire control of the streets, and shall make all regulations for keeping them in repair, the members of which are to be appointed and paid by the United States, thus empowering them to act independently of the municipal government of the district, confers upon the government of the district no control over the avenues, streets, or alleys thereof, and does not impose upon it any duty to repair or keep them in order; and an action for an injury caused by a defect in one of the streets will not lie against the district. Barnes v. District of Columbia, 1 MacArth. 322.

So, the acceptance of a special charter by a city or borough authorizing the corporation to perform a strictly governmental duty, such as the passage and enforcement of ordinances to keep its highways from being rendered unsafe by obstructions or nuisances, does not create a contract between the corporation and the state that the duty shall be performed, and make the city or borough liable for an omission to perform, or a negligent performance of it, constituting an exception to the general doctrine that for the nonperformance or negligent performance of a public governmental duty a municipal corporation is not liable. Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 475, 9 Am. Rep. 342.

In the above case Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the duty which the city had contracted with the state to perform was a strictly private one.

So, under a statutory provision that a city shall constitute a road district, and every road district shall be responsible for all damages sustained by any person in consequence of any defects in the roads and bridges in said district, action for damages for an injury by reason of a hole or defect in the planks of a bridge, constituting part of a street in a city, is properly brought against the city, and not against the road district. Rusch v. Davenport, 6 Iowa, 443.

And, where the duty to keep its streets in repair is imposed upon a municipality by its charter or general statute, of which the court is bound to take judicial notice, no averment in the declaration in an action against the city for an injury due to a defect or obstruction in a street, as to such obligations, is necessary. Hysell v. Central City (W. Va.) 61 S. E. 43; Cronan v. Woburn, 185 Mass. 91, 70 N. E. 38; Hayes v. West Bay City, 91 Mich. 418, 51 N. W. 1067; Erie City v. Schwingle, 22 Pa. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 87.

So, where the law imposes upon the authorities of incorporated towns the imperative duty of keeping in proper repair the streets and bridges of the town, for a failure to fulfil its requirements they may subject themselves to criminal liability. Rus- sell v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 720, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823, 21 S. E. 550.

Whether it is the duty of a city, under its charter, to keep its sidewalks in repair, is a question of law, and should not be submitted to a jury in an action for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk. Bonine v. Richmond, 75 Mo. 437.

d. Exemption from liability by statute.

The liability of a city for injuries resulting from defective streets or sidewalks rests exclusively upon express or implied provisions of the statute; and it is competent for the legislature to limit such liability or remove it entirely. Goddard v. Lincoln, 69 Neb. 594, 96 N. W. 273.

Where the right to recover for injuries arising from want of repair of sidewalks, streets, etc., is a purely statutory one, it being optional with the legislature whether it would confer upon persons injured a right of action therefor or leave them remediless, it can attach to the right conferred any limitations it chooses, and whether the limitations imposed are reasonable or unreasonable in such cases are questions for the legislature, and not for the courts. Moulter v. Grand Rapids (Mich.) 118 N. W. 919.

And a statute relieving a city from liability for damages for injuries sustained on its streets in consequence of their being out of repair, which affords an ample remedy against those whose acts or negligence were the cause of the injury, is not a violation of the constitutional right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property. Parsons v. San Francisco, 23 Cal. 462.

Nor is a charter provision of a city that it shall never be liable for any damage sustained by any person in consequence of the neglect of any person to keep his sidewalk clear from obstructions invalid as class legislation. MacLam v. Marquette, 148 Mich. 480, 111 N. W. 1079.

But a city charter exempting the city from liability for any injury on account of the condition of any street, and not exonerating any officer of the city when the accident is caused by his wilful neglect, gross negligence, or wilful misconduct, practically denies a remedy to a person injured through a defective sidewalk, and contravenes a constitutional provision that everyone should have a remedy for injury done to person or property. Batdorff v. Oregon City (Or.) 100 Pac. 937.

So, under a municipal charter declaring the village to be a separate road district of the town, and transferring the duties of executing the highway laws from the town to the village officers, and directing that the trustees of the village shall have the same powers and be charged with the same duties over the roads in the village as commissioners of highways in towns have or possess, the trustees are independent officers so far as their duties as commissioners of highways are concerned, governed by the several acts of legislature concerning highways; and the corporation is not liable for their omissions to perform a duty imposed upon them by statute as commissioners of highways; and it is not liable for an injury sustained by a person in consequence of his falling, in the nighttime, into an open ditch in one of the streets of the village, allowed to remain open without any protection or guard. Hickok v. Plattsburgh, 15 Barb. 427.

And, under a statutory provision exempting municipalities from all liability for damages for injuries sustained by reason of an accumulation of snow or ice upon a highway, unless such accumulation shall have existed for three weeks, a municipality is not liable, unless the defect causing the injury existed continuously for three weeks immediately prior to the happening thereof. Byington v. Merrill, 112 Wis. 211, 88 N. W. 26; Uecker v. Clyman (Wis.) 118 N. W. 247.

And, where there was a ridge of snow and ice in the center of a sidewalk 12 inches wide 4 inches high in the center and sloping toward the sides, together with a covering of hard snow on the level portions of the walk, made slippery by having been walked on and roughened in places by footprints made in soft weather and afterwards frozen, and, about two weeks before the accident in question, the walk had been covered with heavy wet snow from 12 to 18 inches deep, and thereafter for some time travel was confined to a narrow path near the center of the walk, the insufficiency which caused the injury complained of had not existed continuously for three weeks prior thereto, within the meaning of such a statutory provision. Byington v. Merrill, supra.

So, a statute requiring every superintendent of highways to clear out snow blocking any highway in his district gives no right of action for injuries sustained by reason of a snow blockade in a highway, though the town officers were negligent in failing to remove the blockade as required by such statute, unless such negligence had continued for such a length of time as to be made actionable by another statute providing that the accumulation must have continued for three weeks. Uecker v. Clyman, supra.

And, under a city charter declaring the city not to be liable to anyone for an injury resulting from a defective condition of the streets; but an officer thereof who, by his wilful neglect of a duty enjoined by law, causes such injury, is so liable,—the common council is bound to provide by ordinance for the repair of the streets; and if it wilfully neglects to do so, the members thereof are liable personally in damages to anyone who is injured in consequence thereof. Balls v. Woodward, 51 Fed. 646.

But the common council of a municipal corporation cannot be said wilfully to neglect to order the repair of a street, so as to be liable personally in damages to anyone injured in consequence thereof, unless 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

it has actual or constructive notice of its defective condition. Ibid.

So, a city having a charter provision authorizing it to compel all persons to keep sidewalks in front of their premises owned or occupied by them clear from obstructions, and providing that the city shall never be liable for any damages for injuries to any person in consequence of the neglect of any person to keep such sidewalk clear from obstruction, is not liable to a person injured by an obstruction in the street, notwithstanding the general law of the state providing a general liability against municipalities in such cases. MacLam v. Marquette, 148 Mich. 480, 111 N. W. 1079.

In the above case Campbell v. Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655, 45 N. W. 652, supra, II. c, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the charter of the city was silent upon the subject of liability.

And, under a village law providing that the street commissioner of a village shall have supervision of the construction, improvement, and repairs of the streets as the board of village trustees may determine, the street commissioner is not called upon to act, and is not liable for negligence, until the trustees have determined what repairs shall be made, and have directed the commissioner to make them. Hungerford v. Waverly, 125 App. Div. 311, 109 N. Y. Supp. 438, reversing 56 Misc. 186, 107 N. Y. Supp. 291.

So, in Canada a municipal corporation is not responsible for an accident which occurs on a road within the limits of the municipality, where the road is under the control of a turnpike company. Brunet v. St. Joachim de la Pointe Claire, Rap. Jud. Quebec 14 C. S. 278.

A city is not absolved from performance of its duty to keep its streets and sidewalks free from obstruction and in a safe condition, however, by a charter provision giving it power to cause suitable sidewalks to be made, requiring the lot owners to build them. Rockford v. Hildebrand, 61 Ill. 155.

But a charter provision requiring lot owners to keep and maintain sidewalks in front of their premises in a safe, convenient, and effective condition, and giving persons injured by their failure to do so the right to recover against them, and providing that, when an execution upon a judgment against the lot owner shall be returned unsatisfied, the injured party may commence an action against the city, remains in force notwithstanding the subsequent enactment of a provision that, when damage shall happen in a highway by reason of the negligence of a third person, such person shall be primarily liable therefore, but that the municipality may be sued in the same action with the person liable, and the right to sue the city at all remains dependent on the condition precedent that execution shall have been returned unsatisfied on a judgment against the lot owner. Devine v. Fond du Lac, 113 Wis. 61, 88 N. W. 913.

And a statutory provision that, when any injury shall happen by reason of any defect in any sidewalk or other cause for which the city would be liable, and such defect or other cause of injury shall arise from the default or negligence of any person, such person shall be primarily liable for such injury; and the city shall not be liable therefor until after all legal remedies against such person have been exhausted,—applies only where the default or negligence of the person was the sole cause of the injury; and, where an abutting owner neglects to keep an opening in the sidewalk properly protected, and this, together with a failure on the part of the city to keep the sidewalk itself in repair, causes an injury, action may be brought in the first instance against the city, or the owner, or both, and, in an action against either, the wrongful act or negligence of the other is no defense. Papworth v. Milwaukee, 64 Wis. 389, 25 N. W. 431.

So, a village law providing that the streets of a village shall be under the exclusive supervision of the board of trustees does not cast the duty of keeping the streets of the village in repair on the president and trustees of the village individually, or relieve the village from such liability. Hungerford v. Waverly, supra.

And a charter provision of a city authorizing it to establish streets and sidewalks, and to compel the removal of obstructions from any street, but providing that the city shall not be liable for any failure to exercise this power, does not exempt the city from liability for injuries occasioned by defects in streets or avenues over which the city had not exercised the powers conferred, but which had otherwise become public highways by use of the public generally, or otherwise. Bessemer v. Carroll (Ala.) 45 So. 419.

But a statutory provision for the appointment of sewer, water, and street commissioners for a village, prescribing their powers and duties, and declaring that the street commissioners shall be commissioners of highways, charged to keep the streets in proper repair, and that they shall be a body corporate, and that all actions for any act omitted by them shall be brought against them in their name of office, etc., points to the commission as a defendant in an action for an injury caused by falling over flagstones placed upon a walk during its repair, and left there over night without proper guard, and relieves the village from the burden of occupying that position. Scott v. Saratoga Springs, 115 N. Y. Supp. 796.

Nor does a statutory provision authorizing the mayor and alderman of a city to establish streets, and to regulate and control the paving and curbing of streets and sidewalks, and to open and improve them; and that the mayor and alderman shall not be liable for a failure to exercise his power,—exempt the city from liability for establishing a dangerous or defective sidewalk. Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, 20 So. 424.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And, where a city charter provided for the construction and repair of sidewalks at the expense of owners of abutting lots, by making the cost a lien on the property, an exemption therein of the city from liability for injury through defects in the walk, not occasioned by the direct act of the city, in the event that, because the same adjoins a homestead, or for any other reason, the city is unable lawfully to compel the owner to construct and repair a sidewalk by fixing a lien on his property for the cost, does not apply to a case of injury through a defect in the grating covering an excavation under the walk, to the repair of which the general police power of the city is adequate and the proceeding by lien inapplicable. Lentz v. Dallas, 96 Tex. 258, 72 S. W. 59.

So, where a city charter provides that the cost of constructing all sidewalks, including keeping the same in repair, shall be defrayed entirely by the owners of lots fronting on the sidewalk, and defines the method of procedure upon the part of the city to fix a lien for such costs, and provides that the city shall never be liable for damages to any person or property by reason of any defect in a sidewalk not immediately occasioned by the direct act of the city or some officer for whose act the city is responsible at law, and the provision for procedure in collecting the cost of construction and repairs of sidewalks is declared unconstitutional, the city cannot escape liability for an injury caused by a defective or obstructed sidewalk on the theory that it cannot lawfully compel the abutting property owner to construct and repair a sidewalk, and therefore it is exempted from liability, by the exemption provision of its charter, for damages resulting from defects therein. Dallas v. Strayer (Tex. Civ. App.) 73 S. W. 980.

Nor does the remote obligation upon highway surveyors of repairing highways relieve the town from its primary liability for injuries resulting from defective or obstructed highways. Hardy v. Keene, 52 N. H. 370.

And a statutory provision that commissioners of a department of public parks of the city shall have exclusive power to locate and lay out and construct and maintain all public parks, streets, roads, and avenues, places the duty as to all the streets upon the park commissioners; but it is a duty which they discharge, not for themselves or for the public generally, but for the city; and the duty is not taken away from the city; it is still bound to discharge it; and the park commissioners are the agency through which it does so. Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622.

Nor do statutory provisions declaring that every city is responsible for injuries to property within its limits by mobs or riots indicate a legislative intent to exempt cities from liability for injuries by obstructions in streets, or for other torts. May v. Anaconda, 26 Mont. 140, 66 Pac. 759.

And a city charged by its charter (with the duty of keeping its streets in a safe condition for public use, and making it responsible for injuries to individuals resulting from its negligent act or omission, is not relieved from such liability by a charter provision declaring that it shall not be liable in damages for any misfeasance or nonfeasance of any officer of the city of any duty imposed upon him; this provision applying only where a duty is devolved, not upon the city, but directly upon some officer or department. Bieling v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 98, 24 N. E. 389.

Nor is the duty of a municipal corporation to keep the avenues of travel within its jurisdiction in a reasonably safe condition for the ordinary mode of use to which they are subjected, and the corresponding liability to respond in damages to those injured by a neglect to perform the duty, affected by a statutory provision by which a street commissioner is elected by the people and not subject to removal by the council, charging him with the care of the streets, avenues, sidewalks, and the like, and requiring him to keep the same free from obstructions and defects and to superintend the work of construction and repair, the expenses of such repairs and improvements and changes being required to be provided for by the council, that body alone having authority to levy taxes for these among other municipal purposes, the statute in such case simply designating the duties of the commissioner as a factor in the general administration of the city's affairs. Denver v. Williams, 12 Colo. 475, 21 Pac. 617.

So, where the law made it the absolute duty of a city to remove nuisances from its streets within a reasonable time, holding it liable for damages resulting from neglect of that duty; and a city suffered a dead horse to remain in one of the public streets, which caused an injury, the fact that an ordinance prohibited anyone except a contractor to interfere in the matter neither added to nor took from the character of the city's obligation; and the ordinance is inadmissible in evidence in an action by the person injured, against the city, for the injury. Sallee v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 615, 54 S. W. 463.

III. Power to perform duty as affecting liability.

a. Generally.

The duty of a city to remove obstructions or repair defects in its streets depends upon its character and upon the means provided thereby to enable it to perform this duty; and it cannot be liable for neglect in any case where it is not reasonably capable of acting efficiently; but it is responsible for diligence in the performance of any duty which it is capable of performing so far as the means in its power will enable it to act. Dewey v. Detroit, 15 Mich. 307.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

b. Insufficiency of funds.

The rule has been asserted that the absence of necessary funds and of legal means to procure them will excuse the neglect of a municipal corporation to keep its streets in repair so as to prevent them from becoming dangerous to the public; but this must be shown as a defense. Hines v. Lockport, 50 N. Y. 238; Orth v. Milwaukee, 59 Wis. 336, 18 S. W. 10.

And that it is within the discretion of the commissioners of highways of a town, where they have not sufficient funds in their hands to make all needed repairs, to apply the funds in making such repairs as, in their judgment, are most urgently needed; and they are not responsible for an error of judgment in doing so. Monk v. New Utrecht, 104 N. Y. 552, 11 N. E. 268.

And the legislature may constitutionally reserve to itself the power of levying the taxes of a taxing district including a municipal corporation; and, where the corporation is so restricted in the use of the proceeds of special taxes assessed by the legislature, and is totally deprived of the power of taxation to meet any liability for injuries, the taxing district is not liable in damages to a person whose property is injured by a failure to keep the streets in repair. Williams v. Taxing Dist. 16 Lea, 531.

So, under a city charter making specified officers, through whose negligence defects in streets remain unrepaired, liable to a person injured, for damages sustained, such officers are not liable for failure to repair defective sidewalks where they have no means with which to repair them. Taylor v. Manson (Cal. App.) 99 Pac. 410.

But it is not necessary, in an action against a municipal corporation for damages for an injury caused by a defective bridge, for the plaintiff to plead in the first instance that the means for repairing the bridge were provided for or placed at the disposal of the defendants, unless, by the terms of the act of incorporation, the possession of such means is made a condition precedent of the municipal corporation's liability. Shartle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308, Gil. 284.

And the prima facie presumption that the means provided or placed at the disposal of a city to keep its bridges in repair were sufficient is not affected by the fact that there was a limitation fixed upon the amount of tax to be levied in any one year. Ibid.

So, where full control is given to city authorities by charter over the streets and sidewalks, and money can be raised in various ways therein provided, to be expended upon them, that a municipal corporation had no means at hand is not an excuse for failure to keep a sidewalk in repair. Springfield v. Doyle, 76 Ill. 202.

And, where a city charter authorizes the common council to raise money by tax to defray the expenses of the city, but prohibits the council from pledging the credit of the city for such purpose, and the committee on ways and means has borrowed the money with which to repair sidewalks, and there are ample funds in the treasury for such purpose, the city cannot escape liability for an injury due to nonrepair of a city sidewalk while using the funds thus provided, by the claim that sufficient time had not elapsed after the law became operative and before the accident to enable the city to raise by tax the money necessary to put the sidewalk in repair. Moon v. Ionia, 81 Mich. 635, 46 N. W. 25.

The general rule has been held however, to be, that the lack of funds by a municipality is not a justification for failure to repair its streets, and is not a defense in an action for damages for personal injuries caused by defects or obstructions in a street. Dallas v. Strayer (Tex. Civ. App.) 73 S. W. 980; McKinney v. Brown (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 88.

And that every municipality is bound at its peril to keep its highways in sufficient repair, or to take precautionary means to protect the public against danger from insufficient highways; and that evidence, in an action against a municipality for an injury caused by an obstructed street, that the municipality had expended all the means at its disposal in repairing its streets,—has no tendency to excuse it, and is inadmissible for that purpose. Prideaux v. Mineral Point, 43 Wis. 513, 28 Am. Rep. 558.

And evidence of a want of means, upon the part of a municipal corporation, with which to keep a street in repair without detriment to more important streets, is irrelevant upon the trial of an action against the corporation for damages resulting from falling into a ditch or gully across one of its public streets along which the plaintiff was walking in the night. Milledgeville v. Cooley, 55 Ga. 17.

Nor is evidence that the revenue collected by a municipal corporation for street purposes had all been expended in other necessary repairs admissible in an action against the corporation for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in a street, to rebut the charge of negligence in omitting to repair the defect complained of, where the village could have discharged its duty in this respect by requiring the owner of the adjacent property to make the necessary repairs, or by causing them to be made upon his default and charging the cost upon the property. Shelby v. Clagett, 46 Ohio St. 549, 5 L.R.A. 606, 22 N. E. 407.

Within this rule, the liability of a city for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street does not depend upon whether or not the city has funds in its treasury to pay for making or repairing streets; but upon the question whether or not it had the power to raise funds to defray such expenses. Peach v. Utica, 10 Hun, 477.

And a municipal corporation cannot be relieved of responsibility for damages resulting from an unguarded excavation in a street because of the insufficiency of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

means at the disposal of the authorities for the purpose of street improvements or repairs, in the absence of proof that the city authorities had exhausted the means at their command for the performance of their duty. Birmingham v. Lewis, 92 Ala. 352, 9 So. 243; Lord v. Mobile, 113 Ala. 360, 21 So. 366.

Nor can a city be excused for failure to repair a dangerous place in a street, consisting of a precipitous descent of some 5 or 6 feet, by the fact that it was little used by the public, and it had expended all its available funds on streets in a more populous part of the city, where, by its charter, it is given extensive power of taxation over property, persons, and privileges for such purposes. Whitfield v. Meridian, 66 Miss. 570, 4 L.R.A. 834, 14 Am. St. Rep. 596, 6 So. 244.

And a municipal corporation having the right to issue its warrants in anticipation of a levy of taxes will not be excused from repairing its sidewalks because there were no funds in the treasury, if a tax has been levied against which warrants may be issued in anticipation of its collection. Mt. Vernon v. Brooks, 39 Ill. App. 426.

And where, by statute, a city is permitted to compel the adjacent owner on a street to maintain the sidewalk, and, in default, to maintain the same and charge the cost on the land, the city cannot set up as a defense in an action for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk that it had no money to keep the sidewalk in repair. Belton v. Turner (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 831.

Nor is a person who fell into a hole negligently allowed by a city to be in a street, and received personal injuries, prevented from recovering from the city therefor by a constitutional provision that the city shall not be allowed to become indebted in any manner for any purpose to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, and by the fact that the city had reached the limit of its power to levy taxes and contract debts, since the liability of a city for allowing its streets to remain out of repair or obstructed so as to render them unsafe for use is a liability imposed by law, and does not depend on contract, and is not in the technical sense a debt. Conner v. Nevada, 188 Mo. 148, 107 Am. St. Rep. 314, 86 S. W. 256.

And it is no defense to an action against a city for an injury resulting from a perpendicular declivity of 18 inches in a street that it had no money in its treasury with which it could make repairs, and that it was indebted in an amount exceeding the prescribed limit of city indebtedness. Rice v. Des Moines, 40 Iowa, 638.

Nor is it a defense to an action against a city for an injury resulting from permitting its streets to remain out of repair that the city had no funds on hand to expend in repairing streets, and that the regular tax levy was exhausted, where the character of the city permitted it, with the consent of a majority of its inhabitants, to levy a larger tax for purposes of general utility. Erie City v. Schwingle, 22 Pa. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 87.

And a village will not be relieved from liability for an injury received from a defective street on the ground that it had no funds with which to repair them, on the evidence of the village superintendent that he did not have any money in his hands for that purpose, where there was no proof that there were not sufficient funds in the treasury of the village which, under the charter, could have been placed in his hands and used for that purpose if he had applied for it. Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43.

So, the mere fact that, at the date of an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in a highway in a municipal corporation, the town had not actually paid over to the corporation its proportion of the highway moneys previously agreed upon for that particular year does not prevent the statutory liability for the obstruction or defect from attaching to the municipal corporation. Hall v. Norwalk, 65 Conn. 310, 32 Atl. 400.

Nor does the rule that a private suit cannot be sustained against commissioners of highways for the neglect to repair highways and bridges in their respective towns, unless it be shown that they had the requisite funds for that purpose in their hands or under their control, apply to a municipal corporation in its capacity of commissioners of highways having within its control the funds for repairing the highways, or being in fault for not having them; in such case its duty to repair is absolute, and it is answerable in damages to any person sustaining an injury by reason of its neglect of duty. Hutson v. New York, 5 Sandf. 289.

And where, in an action against a city for personal injuries caused by a water shut-off projecting above the traveled part of a sidewalk, it is sought to be shown that a failure to remedy the alleged defect was not want of reasonable care by evidence of the amount of money that could be raised by taxation, it is proper, on cross-examination of witnesses called by the city, to show that the shut-offs were taken care of by the water department, and not by the highway department, of the city, and that the income of the water department exceeded its expenses. O'Brien v. Woburn, 184 Mass. 598, 69 N. E. 350.

So, a municipal corporation cannot escape liability to a person injured by the want of repair of a bridge constituting part of a street, on the ground that it was unable, for want of funds, to place such bridge in repair, where, instead of closing the bridge, it kept it open to travel as a part of one of its public highways. Carney v. Marseilles, 136 Ill. 401, 29 Am. St. Rep. 328, 26 N. E. 491.

And a statutory provision with reference to territory annexed to a city, that for 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

twenty years from the passage of the act only such sums as may arise from taxes assessed in the annexed territory shall be expended in maintenance, improvement, and protection thereof, unless, in the discretion of the mayor and council, it may be desired so to expend a greater sum from the general treasury of the city, does not affect the duty of the municipal authorities to keep the streets and sidewalks in the annexed territory in a safe condition for public use; and the fact that they did not have funds available for this purpose, derived from taxes assessed therein, is not a sufficient excuse for failure in this respect. Columbus v. Ogletree, 102 Ga. 293, 29 S. E. 749.

c. Insufficient time or opportunity.

A city charged with the duty of keeping its streets reasonably in repair and free from obstruction is not relieved from its performance by difficulties which may attend it; these will rather have the effect to increase the diligence required in its performance. Stafford v. Oskaloosa, 64 Iowa, 251, 20 N. W. 174.

And a city which undertakes to open and grade its streets and keep them in reasonable repair for the use of the public cannot excuse its failure to do so upon the ground that its agents and servants failed to perform this duty because their other duties required their time. Tritz v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 632.

So, a municipal corporation cannot be heard to urge the incompetency of its officers and servants as an excuse for its dereliction in failing to keep a sidewalk in a proper condition. Anna v. Boren, 77 Ill. App. 408.

Nor can it be permitted to say that it had so much to do it could not perform its whole duty. Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 419, 75 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 34.

And it cannot evade its liability because it has laid out more streets, sidewalks, and footways for the use of the public than it could keep in a reasonably safe condition. Ibid.

And that the street force of a city was busy in repairing other damages caused by a rain on a previous night is not a good excuse for leaving a highway in a dangerous condition caused by such rain, in the absence of anything to show reasonable diligence in the employment of a street force for the emergency, no warning having been given of the danger. Bradford v. Anniston, 92 Ala. 349, 25 Am. St. Rep. 60, 8 So. 683.

So, where the statute imposes the duty to repair and liability for neglect to repair streets upon a city, the city, at its peril, must do whatever is needful to protect itself against actions for injury; and it cannot defend such an action on the ground that there were but two street commissioners for the whole city, and that there was no corporate negligence because these two officers were not able to supervise the streets of the whole city so as to discover at once and remedy such defects. Grand Rapids v. Wyman, 46 Mich. 516, 9 N. W. 833.

And an omission by a village to appoint overseers of highways, or to exercise the powers possessed by it to secure the labor necessary for the reparation and protection of its streets, does not excuse the performance of the duty imposed by charter to keep its streets in repair, or prevent the attachment of liability for injuries resulting from defective streets. Weed v. Ballston Spa, 76 N. Y. 329.

And, where a city, in cleaning crossings, created a mound of mud and earth at a crossing, which caused an injury, it cannot escape liability on the claim that the soil of which the streets of the city is composed is of such a character that accumulations of earth of a dangerous nature are liable to occur at every crossing from the ordinary use of the streets at any time when they are muddy. Stafford v. Oskaloosa, supra.

So, the extent of the territory covered by a city, and the number of other crossings and streets demanding care, and the number and nature of other duties devolving upon the city and claiming its care and attention, do not affect the question, in an action against the city for an injury caused by an alleged defective crossing, whether, at the time and place of the accident, it was a reasonably safe crossing. Cincinnati v. Frazier, 19 Ohio C. C. 604.

But evidence of the number of miles of a city's streets, the value of its taxable property, the amount of money that can be raised by taxation, and the amount appropriated and expended for highways, is competent in an action against a city for personal injuries from a water shut-off projecting above the traveled part of the sidewalk, to show that a failure to remedy the alleged defect was not want of reasonable care. O'Brien v. Woburn, 184 Mass. 598, 69 N. E. 350.

IV. Application of rule as to nonliability for governmental and discretionary acts.

a. Generally.

There is a manifest distinction between the political powers of a municipal corporation, by virtue of which it exercises in a subordinate degree the functions of government, and those private and civil duties of a ministerial character, which devolve upon it either as the agency by which it holds its property, or in consequence of duties imposed upon it by the sovereign; so far as it exercises the functions of a government its action is discretionary, but, where a municipal corporation has a fixed and certain duty assigned to it of a merely ministerial character, and the means are placed at its disposal sufficient for its performance, it is under obligation to perform it at the risk of being made to answer for the consequences of its neglect to do so. Hutson v. New York, 5 Sandf. 289; Collier v. Ft. Smith, 73 Ark. 447, 68 L.R.A. 237, 84 S. W. 480, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And the rule has been asserted by many of the cases that, where power is conferred on a municipal corporation to make improvements, such as streets, sewers, etc., and keep them in repair, the duty to make them is quasi judicial or discretionary, involving a determination as to their necessity, requisite capacity, location, etc.; and for a failure to exercise this power, or an erroneous estimate of the public needs, no civil action can be maintained. Urquhart v. Ogdensburg, 91 N. Y. 67, 43 Am. Rep. 655; Hines v. Lockport, 50 N. Y. 238; Peck v. Batavia, 32 Barb. 634; Clay City v. Abner, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 602, 82 S. W. 276; Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373; Bates v. Rutland, 62 Vt. 178, 9 L.R.A. 363, 22 Am. St. Rep. 95, 20 Atl. 278; Kent v. Cheyenne, 2 Wyo. 6; Weightman v. Washington, 1 Black, 39, 17 L. ed. 52.

Within this rule, a recovery can be had against a municipal corporation only where it negligently performs or negligently fails to perform a duty in its nature ministerial, and then only in cases where the ministerial duty is imposed by law. Anderson v. East, 117 Ind. 126, 2 L.R.A. 712, 10 Am. St. Rep. 35, 19 N. E. 726.

And the alleged duty must have been absolute and imperative. Herrington v. Corning, 51 Barb. 396; Peck v. Batavia, supra.

And it has been held that negligence cannot be predicated on a work done by a municipal corporation in its streets in accordance with its design or plan, even though it does not sufficiently protect the public. Davis v. Jackson, 61 Mich. 530, 28 N. W. 526.

Nor is a municipal corporation liable, either at common law or by statute, for injuries to a traveler on one of its highways occasioned solely by a defect in the plan by which it was constructed. Hoyt v. Danbury, 69 Conn. 341, 37 Atl. 1051; Rhinelander v. Lockport, 38 N. Y. S. R. 567, 14 N. Y. Supp. 850; Collett v. New York, 51 App. Div. 394, 64 N. Y. Supp. 693.

Unless the plan was so radically deficient as to leave the highway, immediately upon its completion, in need of repairs in order to make it safe for travel. Hoyt v. Danbury, supra.

And, where the determination of the plan of a public work is in the nature of legislative action, there must be something besides the proper execution of the plan.—some negligence in its execution or some other distinct wrong.—before the municipality constructing the work can be held responsible as for a tort, for an injury from an excavation or obstruction in a street resulting therefrom. Lansing v. Toolan, 37 Mich. 152.

And a mere defect in the plan adopted and followed by a municipality in the construction of a highway is not a neglect to keep the highway in repair, within the meaning of a statute imposing upon the municipality the duty to keep it in repair. Hoyt v. Danbury, supra.

Nor are motives or malice of members of a city council in refusing to repair streets material or relevant in an action against a city for damages resulting from alleged neglect to repair streets. Montgomery v. Gilmer, 33 Ala. 116, 70 Am. Dec. 562.

The functions of a common council of a city having power to adopt suitable regulations for the prevention and removal of encroachments upon its streets are those of a local legislature within certain limits, and are not of a character to render the city responsible for the manner in which the authority is exercised. Griffin v. New York, 9 N. Y. 456, 61 Am. Dec. 700.

To determine whether there is a municipal responsibility for a defect or obstruction in a street, the inquiry must be whether the department whose misfeasance or nonfeasance is complained of is a part of the machinery for carrying on the municipal government, and whether it was at the time engaged in the discharge of a duty or charged with a duty primarily resting upon the municipality. Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. R. v. 622; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095.

In the enactment of ordinances and in the appointment of officers and agents for their enforcement, a municipal corporation exercises a governmental authority, and, within its limits, acts as the representative of the state, and its officers are regarded as agents, not of the municipal corporation, but of the state; and the municipal corporation cannot be held liable for negligence in appointing and maintaining in office negligent and inefficient officers, and knowingly permitting the violation of a city ordinance requiring the streets to be kept free from obstruction by them. O'Rourke v. Sioux Falls, 4 S. D. 47, 19 L.R.A. 789, 46 Am. St. Rep. 760, 54 N. W. 1044; Stillwell v. New York, 17 Jones & S. 360.

And municipal corporations may, by the exercise of their police power, prohibit such an adjustment of the modes of transportation in their streets as would endanger life; but their failure to exercise that power would not render them liable to respond in damages; and the violation of a prohibitory ordinance, and consequent injury, does not involve them in liability. Kennedy v. Lansing, 99 Mich. 518, 58 N. W. 470.

When the discretion of a municipal corporation to make improvements has been exercised, and the street or other improvement has been made, however, the duty of keeping it in repair so as to prevent it from becoming dangerous to the public is ministerial, and for a negligent omission to perform this duty an action lies by the party injured. Hines v. Lockport, 50 N. Y. 238; Urquhart v. Ogdensburg, 91 N. Y. 67, 43 Am. Rep. 655; Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131; Collins v. Council Bluffs, 32 Iowa, 324, 7 Am. Rep. 200; Jones v. Henderson, 147 N. C. 120, 60 S. E. 894.

A municipal corporation, in the ordinary 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and usual care of its streets, both as to repairs and cleanliness, acts in the discharge of the special power granted by the legislature, in the exercise of which it is a legal individual, as distinguished from its governmental functions, when it acts as a sovereign. Missano v. New York, 160 N. Y. 123, 54 N. E. 744.

And a municipal corporation is liable for injuries caused by a dangerous defect or obstruction in a street or sidewalk which it suffers to remain after reasonable notice of its existence, though it arose in the construction or alteration of the street or sidewalk in accordance with a plan adopted by the municipal authorities. Circleville v. Sohn, 59 Ohio St. 285, 69 Am. St. Rep. 777, 52 N. E. 788; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324.

In planning a public work a municipal corporation must determine for itself to what extent it will guard against possible accidents; but in the construction of its works after the plans are fixed upon, and in their management afterwards, due care must be observed, though negligence is not to be predicated of the plan itself. Lansing v. Toolan, 37 Mich. 152; McDonough v. Virginia, 6 Nev. 90; Augusta v. Little, 115 Ga. 124, 41 S. E. 238; Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373.

A municipal corporation acts judicially when it selects and adopts a plan for the construction of a public improvement, such as a sewer in a street; but in carrying out such plan it acts ministerially, and is bound to see that the work is done in a reasonably safe and skillful manner. Chicago v. Seben, 165 Ill. 371, 56 Am. St. Rep. 245, 46 N. E. 244.

The grant by the legislature to a municipal corporation of power to do the work of grading streets necessarily implies a condition that the work is to be done in a skillful and proper manner; and, if the work is not done with ordinary skill and caution, the corporation has not acted in pursuance of the power vested in it, and its act is not lawful, and it is liable for damages caused by it. Meares v. Wilmington, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412.

And the liability of a municipal corporation for negligence with reference to powers and privileges which are to be exercised for the improvement of the territory within the corporate limits, and as to which the pecuniary and proprietary interests of individuals are represented, as the construction of a bridge or placing water mains in a street, is largely, if not entirely, measured by the liability of individuals for similar acts. Robinson v. Greenville, 42 Ohio St. 625, 51 Am. Rep. 857.

So, while a municipality is not to be held liable for damages resulting from mere performance of governmental functions, such exemption applies only against those toward whom the act is governmental, and not against those toward whom the city's attitude and relation is that of a proprietor; and, when a municipality is performing a function of general state government in making highways, it becomes an owner of property in so doing, and is bound to govern its management of such property by substantially the same rules as other proprietors similarly situated. Morrison v. Eau Claire, 115 Wis. 538, 95 Am. St. Rep. 955, 92 N. W. 280.

And, while a village corporation is not liable for nonfeasance or misfeasance committed by independent corporate officers, it is liable for injuries arising from an omission to repair streets when the duty is due from it and absolutely imposed upon it as a corporation. Hickok v. Plattsburgh, 15 Barb. 427.

Nor is the liability of a city for a defect or obstruction in a street affected by the fact that the executive duty of enforcing the ordinances of the city by inspection of streets and reporting violations of them is vested by law in the police, which is an independent body and not subject to the authority or control of the city; since the general control of all public streets is vested in the city by law, and the right which it has to pass ordinances and appoint officers to enforce them carries with it the power to make these ordinances effectual. Reinhard v. New York, 2 Daly, 243.

And the rule that a municipality is not responsible for the acts of policemen, who are acting under the orders of the police department and within the scope of their police duties, based upon the principle that the police are appointed by the municipality in obedience to a statute, to perform a public service, not local or corporate, and to perform a service in which the municipality has no pecuniary interest, has no application to a service performed by the police officers without authority of law in the pecuniary interests of the corporation; in such case, when the police officer acts it is outside of his public duties, and he becomes the servant of the municipality whose pecuniary interests he serves. Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131.

So, the position has been taken by many of the late cases, and seems to be growing in favor, that the duty of a municipal corporation to keep the avenues of travel within its jurisdiction in a reasonably safe condition for the ordinary modes of use to which they are subjected is municipal or ministerial, and not governmental, in its nature. Denver v. Dunsmore, 7 Colo. 328, 3 Pac. 705; Circleville v. Sohn, 59 Ohio St. 285, 69 Am. St. Rep. 777, 52 N. E. 788; Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273.

And that it requires the removal from such ways of all dangerous defects and obstructions from whatever cause arising, when brought to the notice of the corporation; and it is no defense or excuse that a defect or obstruction was caused by a work done in conformity with a plan adopted by the municipal authorities, with reference to which its action was discretionary. Circleville v. Sohn, supra. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And that the making, improving, and repairing of streets by a municipal corporation relates to its corporate interests only; and it is liable for its failure to perform such duty. Goodrich v. University Place (Neb.) 115 N. W. 538; Wilson v. Atlanta, 60 Ga. 473; Sutton v. Snohomish, supra.

And that a municipal corporation is liable for an injury caused by an unsafe public structure in a street, such as a bridge, although the defect exists in the plan adopted for its construction, if there is no reasonable necessity for the existence of the defect. McDonald v. Duluth, 93 Minn. 206, 100 N. W. 1102.

And that, where a street as planned or ordered by the governing board of a city is so manifestly dangerous that a court, upon the facts, can say as matter of law that it is dangerous and unsafe, the city should generally be held liable for any resulting injury to individuals. Gould v. Topeka, 32 Kan. 485, 49 Am. Rep. 496, 4 Pac. 822; Teager v. Flemingsburg, 109 Ky. 746, 53 L.R.A. 791, 95 Am. St. Rep. 400, 60 S. W. 718.

Under this theory, a city has no more right to plan and create an unsafe and dangerous condition of one of its streets than it has to plan or create a common nuisance. Gould v. Topeka, supra; Hinds v. Marshall, 22 Mo. App. 208.

The principle that actionable negligence cannot be predicated on the plan itself of the work in question does not exempt a city from liability for work done in a street, if the plan leaves the street in an unsafe and dangerous condition for public use. Hinds v. Marshall, supra.

If, in adopting the plan of a sidewalk, there is such gross error of judgment upon the part of the municipal corporation as to show that in fact no intelligent judgment at all was ever exercised, as where there were no obstacles to be overcome which would furnish any reason or excuse for the dangerous condition complained of, the city is liable for constructing and maintaining the sidewalk on such defective plan. Conlon v. St. Paul, 70 Minn. 216, 72 N. W. 1073.

And that a defect in a street is a part of the original plan of construction does not relieve the city from liability for injuries to travelers, caused by it, the doctrine that municipal liability does not exist for any defect in a street being inapplicable in a state where there is an implied liability for unsafe streets. Stone v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 65, 67 L.R.A. 253, 70 Pac. 249; Stone v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 644, 74 Pac. 808.

The judgment of the common council of a city is not conclusive of the sufficiency of a street; and evidence, in an action against the city for an injury caused by an obstructed highway, that the authorities of the city, upon actual view, were satisfied with the condition of the highway, is inadmissible to excuse the municipality. Prideaux v. Mineral Point, 43 Wis. 513, 28 Am. Rep. 558.

And evidence, in an action for such an injury, that other sidewalks were built upon the same plan of construction, is inadmissible. Stone v. Seattle, supra.

But, when the plan is one that many prudent men might approve, or where it would be so doubtful upon the facts whether the street as planned or ordered is dangerous or not that different minds might entertain different opinions on the subject, the benefit of the doubt should be given to the city, which should not be held liable. Teager v. Flemingsburg, 109 Ky. 746, 53 L.R.A. 791, 95 Am. St. Rep. 400, 60 S. W. 718; Carroll v. Louisville, 117 Ky. 758, 78 S. W. 1117; Gould v. Topeka, supra; McDonald v. Duluth, 93 Minn. 206, 100 N. W. 1102; Conlon v. St. Paul, supra.

In such case the decision of the municipality on the question cannot be reviewed by the courts. McDonald v. Duluth and Conlon v. St. Paul, supra.

Where such a work as a street or sidewalk is planned, ordered, or accepted by the governing authority of a city, and is so manifestly dangerous and unsafe that the court can say as a matter of law that it is so, the city should be held liable for a resulting injury, but not otherwise; and it should not be left to a jury to say whether the city was negligent in the plans or methods thus ordered or accepted. Healy v. Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 183.

But, before a municipal corporation can claim exemption from liability for a defect in a highway or street because of a fault in the plan, it must be made to appear not only that the work was done precisely in accordance with the plan, and that the injury resulted because of it, but also that, if the defect is such as to make the street dangerous, some steps have been taken so far as possible to remedy the defect, or to advise persons using the highway of the existence of the defect so that they may protect themselves against it. Collett v. New York, 51 App. Div. 394, 64 N. Y. Supp. 693.

b. In particular classes of cases.

Municipal authorities have been held to be the exclusive judges of the time, place, and manner in which streets shall be opened, graded and paved, and made into highways. Hughes v. Baltimore, Taney, 243, Fed. Cas. No. 6,844; Clay City v. Abner, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 602, 82 S. W. 276.

And the omission of a city to grade and improve a street at a point where an accident happened, and to place a rail on the side along an uncovered drain, or to cover it so as to make it a thoroughfare for public travel, is not of itself such negligence as will render it liable to a person injured. Hughes v. Baltimore, supra.

And, under a statutory provision or charter of incorporation of a village giving power to open and improve streets within the corporate limits and maintain sidewalks therein, and to require the owners or occupants of land on the streets to construct sidewalks in front of their premises, and, in case of their default, to make the improvements and charge the expense upon the land, the exercise of the power to lay out and open streets is quasi judicial and discretionary, and no private action lies for the omission by the village to exercise the power, although it may be that the public interest requires its exercise. Seymour v. Salamanca, 137 N. Y. 364, 33 N. E. 304; Cole v. Medina, 27 Barb. 218; McDonough v. Virginia, 6 Nev. 90.

And, under charter power given to a municipal corporation to open, grade, and pave streets as in its judgment the public convenience may require, and to repair the same whenever needed, the power is discretionary, and the municipal authorities cannot be compelled thereunder to open, widen, or extend streets, or adopt a particular grade or any particular plan of improvement; but any particular plan that may be adopted must be a reasonable one, and its manner of execution becomes, with reference to the rights of the citizen, a mere ministerial duty, for any negligence or unskillfulness in the execution of which or the construction of the work, whereby injury is inflicted upon private right, the municipality will be held responsible. Hitchins Bros. v. Frostburg, 68 Md. 100, 6 Am. St. Rep. 422, 11 Atl. 826.

So, a city may establish the grade of its streets, and may make the streets and sidewalks conform thereto, subject only to an action for damages to abutting property in particular cases. Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373.

The rule has been asserted, however, that a city which, by grading a street, diverts water from its natural course and carries it where it had not previously run, is bound to take care of it. Beach v. Scranton, 5 Lack. Leg. News, 25; Kensington v. Wood, 10 Pa. 93, 49 Am. Dec. 582.

And, under a constitutional provision that no person's property shall be taken, damaged, or obstructed, or applied to public use, without adequate compensation being made, a city is liable for damage to private property resulting from the overflow of water caused by its raising the grade of a street above the adjoining lots and its failure to provide a sufficient sewer to carry off the water, notwithstanding its authority by its charter to grade its streets and lay sewers therein. Cooper v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 239, 29 Am. St. Rep. 645, 18 S. W. 565.

And if any work of public improvement in a street can be carefully done without detriment to the owner of abutting property, and it is negligently performed so as to injure the same, such owner is entitled to compensation. Jones v. Henderson, 147 N. C. 120, 60 S. E. 894.

And, if a municipal corporation, in the exercise of its authority to grade a street, including the sidewalk, proceeds with the work in a negligent and unskillful manner, by reason of which the property of an abutting owner is injured, he is entitled to recover damages for the injury simply because the town did not act in pursuance of its rightful authority to change the grade of the street, but exceeded it by doing the work in a negligent and unskilful manner. Ibid.

And, where a municipal corporation has caused the natural flow of surplus water to be interrupted by the elevation of the grade of a street, and the water has been concentrated in a gutter and made to flow to the mouth of a sewer and thence flow back upon private property, this constitutes a nuisance, and as such it is the duty of the municipal corporation to remove it, and for the neglect of such duty it is liable to the private owner. Hitchins Bros. v. Frostburg, supra.

And a complaint alleging that the work of grading a street was not carefully done, and that consequently the property of an abutting owner was injured by obstructing his right of ingress and egress is sufficient as against a demurrer. Jones v. Henderson, supra.

So, when the work of grading a street and constructing gutters, culverts, and drains is left in such an unfinished condition as to cause water to flow upon and injure private property, the municipal corporation is liable for the injury caused. Beach v. Scranton, supra.

And, where the outlet of a stream of water passed under a bridge, and the bridge was removed and the street filled up, and two small iron pipes were used for the purpose of carrying the water of the stream under the street, and a wooden grating or crib placed above the entrance of the pipes was carelessly and negligently permitted to be obstructed with brush, dirt, and debris so as to clog up the pipes and dam back the water upon the premises of an adjoining owner, a case for a jury appears on the question of negligence in the manner in which the pipes are cared for. Rife v. Middletown, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 68.

And where, in such case, there was evidence that the damage took place at the time of an unusually high flood, the rule of law is that, although an act of God entails no injury upon anyone in contemplation of law, yet, if man contributes toward it, it is the man alone that is responsible. Ibid.

So, a village the trustees of which are empowered to repair and maintain its streets, and who in so doing construct ditches along a highway, and a tile drain extending some 8 feet over and upon the premises of an abutting landowner, through which the surface water is collected and discharged upon such premises, is liable for the damages sustained if it suffers the drain to continue in that condition after notice; and knowledge of its trustees will be its knowledge. Whipple v. Fair Haven, 63 Vt. 221, 21 Atl. 533.

And, where a city graded a street, and on complaint of an abutting owner that a necessary embankment would extend over onto her property, filled in the street to only about one half its width, leaving a hole 150 to 200 feet long and about 15 feet wide, and provided no gutter to carry the water around this hole, and the water flowed into it and so on over to the abutting owner's property, for any changes to the property necessitated by 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the plan of the street as so made the remedy was by proceedings under the statute for compensation, but as to the injuries caused by water flowing onto the premises by reason of the condition in which the street was left, the city was liable in trespass for damages. Beach v. Scranton, 5 Lack. Leg. News, 25.

A municipal corporation is not liable for injury from surface water, however, which results to property abutting on a street by reason of its being below grade, where this occurs without negligence upon the part of the municipality. Ibid.

And, if a lot abutting on a street is left too low by reason of grading the street, which is carefully done, the owner must submit to the inconvenience under the elementary principle that individual interest must give way to the public convenience, and cannot recover damages for the injury. Jones v. Henderson, supra.

Nor is the grade of a street established with a view to enable adjoining proprietors to turn surface water upon it, and city authorities may rightfully prevent surface water from escaping to the highway from the land of an adjoining owner without being liable to such owner for injury to his property by surface water. Keith v. Brockton, 136 Mass. 119.

And to hold a city liable for grading a street by a fill having insufficient culverts, and thereby obstructing the flow of surface water and causing it to be discharged on abutting property, it is necessary to show that the work was directed by an ordinance of the city. Gleason v. Kirksville (Mo. App.) 118 S. W. 120.

And a city not originally responsible for the erection of a nuisance consisting of a fill in a street with insufficient culverts, thereby obstructing the flow of surface water and discharging it over abutting property, is not liable to the owner of such adjoining property for its continuance in the absence of notice or request to abate it. Ibid.

So, whether the whole or a portion of a street in a city shall be prepared and then opened to public use is a governmental question, action upon which imposes no liability upon the city. Ruppenthal v. St. Louis, 190 Mo. 213, 88 S. W. 612.

Nor is error in judgment on the part of municipal authorities in establishing the grade of a street negligence. Betts v. Gloversville, 29 N. Y. S. R. 331, 8 N. Y. Supp. 795; Augusta v. Little, 115 Ga. 124, 41 S. E. 238; Ely v. St. Louis, 181 Mo. 723, 81 S. W. 168.

And a city cannot be held liable for a mistake in judgment in the capacity of a gutter, whereby it overflows and causes damage to an abutting property owner. Beach v. Scranton, supra.

And the principle that an action will not lie at the instance of an individual having suffered a special damage, from neglect of a corporate body in the performance of a public duty, applies where city authorities authorized water commissioners to build a sewer in a street, and, in performing the work, holes were left to permit men to go into the sewer when necessary, which holes were coped with stone and one of them was raised above the surface of a street in consequence of the neglect of the city to fill the street to its proper grade, and injury resulted to a traveler from the impediment. Pray v. Jersey City, 32 N. J. L. 394.

But when a city, in grading a street, leaves a high and steep embankment in the street without railing, light, or other guard or warning to prevent travelers from falling off such embankment, it may be adjudged guilty of negligence, although the width of the cut and the height of the embankment were established by the council, and although the work of grading was done in a proper and careful manner, since in such case the negligence consists, not in the plan of the work or the manner in which it was done, but in the failure to provide suitable protection against accident after the work of grading had been finished. Wyandotte v. Gibson, 25 Kan. 236.

Though if a city should order that a high and narrow embankment with precipitous sides should be made in a public street, intending that travel should pass over it, and should say nothing concerning railings, guards, or other barriers, and nothing concerning street lamps or other lights to prevent persons from falling or driving off the embankment in the nighttime and thereby being injured, it should not be held that the city had planned or ordered that no such railings, guards, barriers, lamps, or lights should be used, but it should be held that the city had made no order with reference thereto; and, if no such railings, barriers, guards, lamps, or lights were used, and thereby injury resulted, the city should be held liable. Gould v. Topeka, 32 Kan. 485, 49 Am. Rep. 496, 4 Pac. 822.

Nor can a municipality be held liable solely for a failure to construct a walk or a part thereof. Shietart v. Detroit, 108 Mich. 309, 66 N. W. 221.

And a city which is the successor of a borough in which there was a defect in a sidewalk is not in fault in allowing the sidewalk to remain in the same condition, provided it is free from negligence in respect to its repair. Hoyt v. Danbury, 69 Conn. 341, 37 Atl. 1051.

So, whether, at the outer side of an alley crossing in a city, there shall be a perpendicular step or a gradual slope from the sidewalk down to the inclined plane below, is ordinarily a question for the city officials, and not for the courts. Conlon v. St. Paul, 70 Minn. 216, 72 N. W. 1073.

Nor is the authority of a municipal corporation to determine how a sidewalk shall be built abridged because it happens to own the land upon which the walk is laid. Hoyt v. Danbury, supra.

But, where a traveler slipped on an ice-coated slope of an alley approach and was injured, evidence, in an action against the city for the injury, that the city had provided in specifications for grading and paving the alleys and streets, including the street in question, that approaches should be graded as directed by the city engineer, does not show the adoption of a plan of a competent engineer so as to relieve the city of responsibility for a dangerous method of construction. Hodges v. Waterloo, 109 Iowa, 444, 80 N. W. 523.

And a municipal corporation is liable for a wrongful act committed by its street commissioner while performing his duties in improving a street, the work being a ministerial function and relating to corporate interests only. Barree v. Cape Girardeau, 132 Mo. App. 182, 112 S. W. 724.

And, where a plank walk which had been used by the public for eight years became out of repair and in a condition liable to injure a foot traveler on the street, it was the ministerial duty of the city to abate the nuisance or repair the walk after notice; and no question arises in an action against it for an injury caused thereby, of a failure of the corporation to exercise its discretionary or quasi judicial powers. Lehn v. Brooklyn, 46 N. Y. S. R. 548, 19 N. Y. Supp. 668, affirmed in 143 N. Y. 674, 39 N. E. 21.

So, the duty of a municipal corporation to adopt a system of drainage rests with the legislature; and it is not prima facie responsible for an injury caused by a flow of rain water from the streets upon adjacent lands. Montgomery v. Gilmer, 33 Ala. 116, 70 Am. Dec. 562.

And whether or not the plain of a sewer in a street is such as to guard the public sufficient against accidents is one for the municipal authorities, and cannot be referred to the jury. Toolan v. Lansing, 38 Mich. 315.

But construction and regulation of sewers built upon the adoption of a general plan are ministerial duties, and the municipal corporation is responsible for damages caused by the careless or unskilful manner of performing such work. Chicago v. Seben, 165 Ill. 371, 56 Am. St. Rep. 245, 46 N. W. 244.

And the liability of a city for damages resulting from the negligent construction of a grating in a street, constituting a part of its drainage and sewer system, is not affected or taken away by the fact that the system was authorized by its charter. Dallas v. Webb, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 48, 54 S. W. 398.

And, while appliances for drainage are necessary in a city, and the manner in which drainage may be accomplished is peculiarly within the discretion of the municipality, and it cannot be called to account by the courts respecting its errors of judgment in the plan of a public improvement, if, after the construction of an improvement according to a plan and specifications adopted by the municipal authorities, notice should be brought home to the municipality that the street was not reasonably safe for use under ordinary circumstances by reason of a faulty construction of the improvement, it would become a ministerial duty of the corporation to remove the defect, and a failure or refusal to do so after such notice would make it liable to respond in damages for an injury resulting from the defect. Dayton v. Taylor, 62 Ohio St. 11, 56 N. E. 480.

So, the right, duty, and power of a city to erect safety gates at the intersection of a street with a railroad carries with it a discretion to determine where such gates shall be erected and the character of the gates to be erected; and this discretion is not subject to judicial review or control unless it is so exercised as to amount to a practical obstruction of the street for street purposes, or to a virtual withdrawal of the street from public use. Seibert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 188 Mo. 657, 70 L.R.A. 72, 87 S. W. 995.

And, though a city has power to compel a railroad company whose railroad crosses a street to erect, maintain, and use such proper and suitable safeguards as seems best, the power is legislative or governmental,—one to be exercised or not, in its discretion; and for the nonexercise of such power the city cannot be held liable in damages for an injury resulting from the absence of such safeguards. Kistner v. Indianapolis, 100 Ind. 210.

So, where a railroad company had a statutory right to maintain a turntable in a street, and the city was called upon to exercise a discretion of a judicial nature as to the place where the obstruction should be, the exercise of such discretion cannot be reviewed by the court; and the city cannot be held liable to a person who dismounted from a car upon a sidewalk and was struck by it when it was turned, before she could get out of the way. Fitch v. New York, 23 Jones & S. 494, 2 N. Y. Supp. 700, affirmed in 119 N. Y. 608, 23 N. E. 1143.

And, where municipal authorities adopted a plan of construction of a railroad crossing by which the space between the tracks intersecting the street and those between the rails was to be filled by placing parallel therewith iron or steel rails about 3 inches apart, between which was to be placed cement or some concrete substance; and this plan was followed by the railroad company; and a traveler, while riding horseback at night at a rapid pace, was thrown by his horse slipping on the crossing, and sustained fatal injuries; and there was testimony in the action for the injury that such a crossing was more durable than a wooden one, and less liable to get out of repair, but also that horses were more liable to slip thereon,—no recovery can be had against the city for the injury. Carroll v. Louisville, 117 Ky. 758, 78 S. W. 1117.

So, to prohibit bicycle riding on sidewalks is legislative and discretionary on the part of municipal corporations; and failure to exercise the right creates no liability for an injury caused by a bicycle on a sidewalk. Custer v. New Philadelphia, 20 Ohio C. C. 177; Tarbutton v. Tennille, 110 Ga. 90, 35 S. E. 282; Howard v. Brooklyn, 30 App. Div. 217, 51 N. Y. Supp. 1058; Rogers v. Binghamton, 101 App. Div. 352, 92 N. Y. Supp. 179, affirmed in 186 N. Y. 595, 79 N. E. 1115.

And the same rule applies to failure to enact an ordinance prohibiting horse racing in the streets, and to failure to enforce such 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) an ordinance after it is enacted. Marth v. Kingfisher (Okla.) 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1238, 98 Pac. 436.

And the failure of a city to enforce a police regulation making it unlawful to cast nails and other refuse in public alleys, whereby persons might be injured, and requiring red lights to be placed at night on loose material in alleys, does not impose on the city liability for injuries to a boy falling over a pile of boards with projecting nails in them, which was left in a public alley without a red light thereon. Mehan v. St. Louis (Mo.) 116 S. W. 514.

So, where the setting of a lamp-post by a gas company having a contract with a municipal corporation for lighting its streets was in the prosecution of a public improvement which the municipality had power to authorize, the manner of the exercise of the power is committed to municipal discretion; and negligence on the part of the city cannot be predicated of the manner in which the lamp-post was set. Van Wie v. Mt. Vernon, 26 App. Div. 330, 49 N. Y. Supp. 779.

And a statute providing a penalty of a specified amount for setting off fireworks in a city without the governor's special license applied only to individuals, and not to a city acting in its corporate capacity, so as to make it an unlawful act of a city to contract for firing of such fireworks on a public bridge of the city. Heidenwag v. Philadelphia, 168 Pa. 72, 31 Atl. 1063.

Where a village maintains a water system for the double purpose of supplying the inhabitants with water for private purposes and for providing against fire, however, the village is liable for any negligence in its construction and maintenance as to that portion of the system supplying individuals for hire. Wilkins v. Rutland, 61 Vt. 336, 17 Atl. 735.

But to make available the exception to the general rule that a municipal corporation is not liable for negligence in the exercise of its governmental power which exists when it attempts to perform a service for both public and private benefit, authority to perform the service for private benefit must be shown. Palestine v. Siler, 225 Ill. 630, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 205, 80 N. E. 345.

Municipal liability for a defective plan of street construction as distinguished from other defects is considered in note in Stone v. Seattle, 67 L.R.A. 253.

V. Delegation of duty.

a. Right and effect of generally.

Where a municipal corporation has the duty cast upon it, either by express statute, or implication of law, to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, that duty cannot be delegated to another in whatever form it may be attempted, so as to free the corporation from liability for any injury occurring to another on account of a failure to observe such duty and keep the streets in proper condition free from obstruction. Sterling v. Schiffmacher, 47 Ill.

App. 141; Springfield v. Scheevers, 21 Ill. App. 203; Anna v. Boren, 77 Ill. App. 408; Louisville City R. Co. v. Louisville, 8 Bush, 415; Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630; Jacksonville v. Drew, 19 Fla. 106, 45 Am. Rep. 5; Betz v. Liming, 46 La. Ann. 1113, 49 Am. St. Rep. 344, 15 So. 385; Baker v. Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447, 69 N. W. 740; Blake v. St. Louis, 40 Mo. 569; Welsh v. St. Louis, 73 Mo. 71; Russell v. Columbia, 74 Mo. 480, 41 Am. Rep. 325; Davis v. Omaha, 47 Neb. 836, 66 N. W. 859; Beatrice v. Reid, 41 Neb. 214, 59 N. W. 770; Omaha v. Jensen, 35 Neb. 68, 37 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. W. 833; Scanlon v. Watertown, 14 App. Div. 1, 43 N. Y. Supp. 618; Storrs v. Utica, 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437; McAllister v. Albany, 18 Or. 426, 23 Pac. 845; Williams v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 447; Watson v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 98, 23 Am. Rep. 420; Nashville v. Brown, 9 Heisk. 1, 24 Am. Rep. 289; Patterson v. Austin (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 1139; Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373; McCoull v. Manchester, 85 Va. 579, 2 L.R.A. 691, 8 S. E. 379; Drake v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 81, 94 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 Pac. 231.

Unless authorized by statute. Watson v. Tripp, supra.

The legal basis of liability of a municipal corporation for an injury sustained by the negligence of an independent contractor constructing a public improvement for such corporation is not based upon the doctrine of respondent superior, but upon the doctrine that a municipal corporation charged by law with the performance of a public duty, when sued for an injury, and for its failure to perform such duty, is estopped from alleging that it had delegated the performance of such duty to another, or had, by contract, exempted itself from liability for such injury resulting from its failure to perform such duty. Beatrice v. Reid, supra.

Nor is the liability of a municipal corporation for failure to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition affected by the fact that a company or individual had undertaken to keep the same in a reasonably safe condition, or the portion thereof in question, with respect to the injury complained of. Chicago v. Kubler, 133 Ill. App. 520.

And a city cannot escape responsibility for neglect to repair a sidewalk so as to make it reasonably safe for use by persons passing along it exercising ordinary care, on the plea that it is expressly made the duty of the department of public works to have general supervision over it and keep it in repair, the cost of the repairing to be paid out of the general fund of the city. Evansville v. Frazer, 24 Ind. App. 628, 56 N. E. 729.

b. Imposition on railway in street.

Where a street is permitted to remain open for travel, the duty of the city to take proper precautions to make it safe for travelers extends to the portions of the street occupied by the tracks of a street railway, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

though the railway company is bound by statute to keep the surface of the portions of the street occupied by its tracks in repair. Hyde v. Boston, 186 Mass. 115, 71 N. E. 118; Elliot v. Concord, 27 N. H. 204; Binner v. New York, 80 App. Div. 438, 81 N. Y. Supp. 226; Morristown v. Moyer, 67 Pa. 355; Watson v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 98, 23 Am. Rep. 420; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 186.

A statutory provision making a railway corporation using a street answerable for obstructions maintained by it therein does not relieve the municipal corporation from liability for an injury to a citizen by an obstruction maintained by the railway; and a citizen injured by such obstruction may maintain an action against either the railway or the municipality, at his election. Zanesville v. Fannan, 53 Ohio St. 605, 53 Am. St. Rep. 664, 42 N. E. 703; Hawks v. Northampton, 116 Mass. 420; Philadelphia v. Weller, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 24; Warren Bros. Co. v. Taylor (R. I.) 69 Atl. 303; Watson v. Tripp and Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. White, supra.

A municipal corporation is, in the first instance, responsible to persons who sustain damage by a defect in a road, though the defect is caused by the construction of a railroad in it, except where the defect in the highway is the necessary result of the building of a railroad. Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303.

But, where a railroad company occupying the streets of a city is bound by charter to restore all streets through which it lays its tracks to a good condition, and maintain them in repair, and is made liable for loss or damage occurring through its negligence in restoring or repairing such streets, and liable over to the city for all money which the latter is compelled to pay by reason of the nonrepair of such streets, when an injury is caused by work done upon a railway track in a street by the railroad company the liability of the railroad company is a matter which may be considered by the jury in an action for an injury against the city, in determining whether or not the city had been guilty of any culpable neglect or want of reasonable care. Watson v. Tripp, supra.

Nor is a city under duty to keep its streets in a safe condition absolved from its responsibility therefor by a contract whereby a street railway undertakes to keep in order the streets traversed by its railway. Aiken v. Philadelphia, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 502.

And, although a municipal corporation, by virtue of the right vested in it of control over its streets, can legitimately grant to a railroad company the privilege to build its tracks and run its cars on the same, imposing upon it the burden of keeping them from curb to curb or rail to rail in good order and condition so as to prevent injury, as it is itself bound to do, the concession of the grant and the imposition and acceptance of the burden do not relieve the corporation from liability should the railroad company fail to comply with its obligations, and by its negligence and default inflict injury to one using due care and precaution and not guilty of contributory neglect. Cline v. Crescent City R. Co. 43 La. Ann. 327, 26 Am. St. Rep. 187, 9 So. 122.

And a city is not relieved from liability to a person injured in one of its streets by the fact that by ordinance it authorized a railroad company to lay a track in the street, and the company left open a ditch between its tracks, which was left unlighted at night and into which the person injured fell, since the city's supervision of and responsibility for the street continued subject only to the use by the company as granted. Steubenville v. McGill, 41 Ohio St. 235.

Nor can the primary duty of a city, with respect both to the general public and occupants of premises along the streets, of keeping the streets free from permanent or long-continued nuisances, be evaded by urging the right and duty of a railway company to bridge its line at street crossings and maintain the bridges and crossings in proper condition. Bentley v. Atlanta, 92 Ga. 624, 18 S. E. 1013.

And, where a railroad company was authorized by the legislature to lay its tracks in the streets of a city with the permission of the city, and was charged with the duty of restoring the streets, and was granted permission by the city to build a track across a certain street, and, in doing so, it raised an embankment in it from which an injury resulted, the liability of the city for the injury cannot be avoided on the theory that, the railroad company being authorized by law to do what it did, and being charged with the duty of restoring the street, the control of the city over the street was suspended, and its duty in respect thereto was superseded to a corresponding degree. Wilson v. Watertown, 3 Hun, 508, 5 Thomp. & C. 579.

It has been held, however, that a city, in granting a franchise pursuant to authority received from the state to a railroad company to use its streets for the necessary plant for a street railroad, exercises a public function from which it derives no benefit; and it is not liable if the railroad company, in laying its tracks and erecting its plant, negligently obstructs the gutter so as to overflow adjoining lands and injure goods in the basement of a building thereon. Tatman v. Benton Harbor, 115 Mich. 695, 74 N. W. 187.

And the Massachusetts statute which gives a right to recover for injuries caused by defects or obstructions in streets limits it to cases in which the dangerous condition might have been remedied by reasonable care and diligence on the part of the county, city, town, or person by law obliged to repair the same; and, when railroad corporations construct their tracks across highways, and are required by law to keep that part of the highway in repair, the city or town is left with no duty to keep that part of the way in repair, and is not liable for an accident that happens at such a place. Cam- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

mett v. Haverhill, 197 Mass. 76, 83 N. E. 331.

c. Imposition on abutting owner.

The duty to use ordinary care to keep city sidewalks in repair and free from holes or obstructions is ordinarily on the city, and not on the abutting owner. San Antonio v. Wildenstein (Tex. Civ. App.) 109 S. W. 231.

And a statutory or charter provision making it the duty of real-estate owners and occupants to keep sidewalks in repair, and making them liable for injuries caused by defective sidewalks, does not relieve the city from the duty to keep sidewalks in repair and fit for use, and the consequent responsibility. Lincoln v. O'Brien, 56 Neb. 761, 77 N. W. 76; Lincoln v. Pirner, 59 Neb. 634, 81 N. W. 846; Betz v. Limingi, 46 La. Ann. 1113, 49 Am. St. Rep. 344, 15 So. 385; Dallas v. Myers (Tex. Civ. App.) 55 S. W. 742; Webster v. Beaver Dam, 84 Fed. 280.

And this is so though the municipality is required to give the property owner notice to make the improvement, and it is itself, only authorized to make it if the property owner fails to do so within the time fixed by the council. Dallas v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S. W. 606.

Nor does a charter provision that the cost of constructing and keeping sidewalks in repair shall be borne by the owners of lots fronting on such sidewalks relieve the city of its duty to construct, maintain, and keep sidewalks in repair, or relieve it from liability for injuries by defective sidewalks. Dallas v. Meyers, supra; Lord v. Mobile, 113 Ala. 360, 21 So. 366; Manchester v. Hartford, 30 Conn. 118; Niven v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 619; Russell v. Canastota, 98 N. Y. 496; Wallace v. New York, 18 How. Pr. 169; Fife v. Oshkosh, 89 Wis. 540, 62 N. W. 541; Cuthbert v. Appleton, 22 Wis. 642.

In the absence of proof that the city had made any requisition upon the lot owner, or taken any steps whatever to repair the sidewalk in question. Niven v. Rochester and Russell v. Canastota, supra.

And in such case it cannot be said as matter of law that the mere service of a notice upon an abutting owner or occupant to repair a sidewalk released the village from any further responsibilities for injuries resulting from the unsafe condition of the street or sidewalk. It was still the duty of the village to keep them in such condition that they might be safely traveled, and, after notice of existing danger, to cause immediate reparation, or, if delay was necessary, then by some guard or barrier to close it against the public so that no harm should happen from the repair being delayed. Russell v. Canastota, supra.

For a neglect of duty of a citizen to keep the walks in front of his premises free from obstruction, the city may impose such a penalty as would be calculated to secure its performance if it has power to impose such a burden; but it cannot create a liability to damages for a civil action by a private individual against one who failed to discharge the city's duty in that behalf. Norton v. St. Louis, 97 Mo. 537, 11 S. W. 242.

And, where an ordinance provides that certain improvements shall be made by abutting property owners, the performance of the work by the city upon the failure of the property owner to do it does not make the city the agent of the property holder; and the liability for an injury resulting therefrom is as great as if the city had undertaken it in the first place without reference to any duty of the property holder. Lancaster v. Walter, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2189, 80 S. W. 189.

And an ordinance requiring repairs of a sidewalk and notice to the owner constitute an admission of a necessity for the work, and, upon lapse of the time provided under the notice, on default of the owner, the duty to repair becomes imperative on the municipality, and it is liable for injuries happening from neglect to repair. Haskell v. Penn Yan, 5 Lans. 43.

Nor does permission granted by a municipal corporation to a private citizen to build a sidewalk absolve it from the duty of seeing that the same is kept in proper repair. Flora v. Naney, 31 Ill. App. 493, affirmed in 136 Ill. 45, 26 N. E. 645; Griider v. Jefferson Realty Co. (Ky.) 116 S. W. 691; Lambert v. Pembroke, 66 N. H. 280, 23 Atl. 81.

And a municipal corporation is not relieved from liability for injuries resulting from defects in a sidewalk, provided such defects are known to the municipal authorities, or could have been known by the exercise of ordinary care, in time to have been repaired by them before the accident, by the fact that the sidewalk was constructed by the owner of abutting property, and the authorities of the municipality had never required property owners to build sidewalks. Bromley v. Bodkin, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1245, 77 S. W. 696.

So, a charter provision of a municipal corporation giving it power over its streets, and power to establish the width and grade of the sidewalks and determine the kind of material of which they shall be constructed, and to cause them to be constructed and repaired by abutting lot owners at their own expense, and, in case of their failure to construct and repair them as desired, to order the same to be done, and cause the expense thereof to be assessed upon and enforced against abutting lots, imposes upon the municipality the duty of keeping the sidewalks in repair, and liability for neglect to do so. Young v. Waterville, 39 Minn. 196, 39 N. W. 97.

And the power conferred upon a municipal corporation by a charter provision giving its warden and burgesses control over sidewalks, cross walks, and footpaths in the street, but not of the construction and repair of highways, and empowering them to order landowners abutting upon the streets to make and repair such walks along their respective fronts, is exclusive, and carries 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) with it the commensurate duty of maintenance and repair. Hillyer v. Winsted, 77 Conn. 304, 59 Atl. 40.

So, while municipal authorities may justly and lawfully require citizens to keep sidewalks in front of their premises free from snow and ice, the duty of the municipality remains, and it must see to it that its ordinances on the subject are obeyed; but it is entitled to a reasonable time within which to perform the duty, and it is not guilty of contributory negligence if, observing that the work is being generally done, it awaits for a reasonable period the action of the citizens. Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 59 Am. Rep. 492, 11 N. E. 642.

Nor can the liability of a city for injuries resulting from an accumulation of ice and snow upon a sidewalk be removed by a mere notice thereof to the owner of abutting property. Wyman v. Philadelphia, 175 Pa. 117, 34 Atl. 621.

So, charter provisions authorizing assessments for local improvements, including repairs to highways, do not relieve the city from the duty of keeping its highways in repair so as to prevent their becoming dangerous to the public. Hines v. Lockport, 50 N. Y. 238.

Where the duty to build sidewalks rests upon the owner or occupant of adjacent premises, however, and the performance of it is in no sense the act of the city,—the city cannot be held liable for injuries resulting from the plan of constructing the walk, as where a step was left at one end of it. Marquette v. Cleary, 37 Mich. 296.

Duties of a municipal corporation to maintain its streets free from defects and obstructions, once imposed, and liabilities incurred by accepting and acting under an act of incorporation, cannot be divested unless the right to alter or amend is expressly reserved, or secured by the Constitution: and after such acceptance a statute making the abutting landowner solely responsible for damages resulting to persons or property from defects in or obstructions on streets or footways, unless caused by the city or its agents, is unconstitutional and void. Seward v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 189, 42 Atl. 451.

VI. Cause of obstruction or defect as affecting liability.

a. Generally.

Municipal corporations are bound to keep the public traveled streets and the sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition without regard to who constructed them, or whether the city had ordered their construction. Hill v. Sedalia, 64 Mo. App. 494.

And one which carelessly and negligently permits defects to exist in one of its sidewalks after notice thereof, or for so long a time that notice is presumed, becomes liable if a person is injured thereby without fault or negligence on his part, no matter how the defect was caused. Kansas City v. Bradbury, 45 Kan. 381, 23 Am. St. Rep. 731, 25 Pac. 889; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. State, 37 Ind. 489; Munger v. Marshalltown, 59 Iowa, 763, 13 N. W. 642; Pace v. Webster City, 138 Iowa, 107, 115 N. W. 888.

The liability of a city for an injury resulting from an obstruction in a street is not affected by the question of the way or means by which the obstruction got there. Waltemeyer v. Kansas City, 71 Mo. App. 354; McCarroll v. Kansas City, 64 Mo. App. 283.

And if dangerous excavations are made in a sidewalk, no matter by whom, the municipality must fill them up or cause them to be filled up; and if, in constructing a building, it is necessary to make excavations in a pavement, the municipality must, if they are dangerous, guard them, or cause the owner of the building, or his contractor, to guard them, and light them in the nighttime, or otherwise warn travelers against them. Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 567.

And the reasonable presumption is that, when an excavation several feet deep was made in a street to receive a curb wall within the limits of a city, it is done by the proper authority of the city; and, when the city is sued for an injury caused thereby, it cannot escape liability because of the absence of proof that the work was ordered by the common council or other authority of the city. Chicago v. Johnson, 53 Ill. 91.

Nor is there any distinction on the question of the liability of a town for injuries resulting from defects or obstructions produced by natural causes and one produced by the agency of man, either with or without his fault. Palmer v. Portsmouth, 43 N. H. 265; Fry v. Mercer, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 604.

And the essential fact in an action for an injury sustained by a person stepping through an aperture in a sidewalk where the boards had apparently been removed therefrom is that the boards were missing; and it is immaterial whether they had fallen through the stringers upon which the sidewalk was laid, or had been broken and fallen to the ground, or had been removed. Lincoln v. Staley, 32 Neb. 63, 48 N. W. 887.

And the fact that a sidewalk was injured by teams and wagons does not relieve the municipality from its duty. Munger v. Marshalltown, supra.

Nor can a town escape liability for an injury from an obstruction or excavation in a street upon the ground that the street was put in that condition by the road supervisor. Clark v. Epworth, 56 Iowa, 462, 9 N. W. 359.

So, a municipal corporation is under as great an obligation to remedy a defect or remove an obstruction placed in a street by nature as one placed there by artificial means. Lamb v. Cedar Rapids, 108 Iowa, 629, 79 N. W. 366.

And the liability of a city for an injury 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

resulting from an obstruction or defect in a street is not affected by the fact that the defect which made the street unsafe was caused by surface water. Murphy v. Indianapolis, 83 Ind. 76.

So, the duty of a municipal corporation having reasonable time and opportunity to at all times keep a cross walk in such state of repair as to be reasonably safe and convenient for public travel is just as imperative in the case of defects originating in individual misconduct as in the case of defects resulting from wear or decay. Dotton v. Albion, 50 Mich. 129, 15 N. W. 46.

And, under a statute declaring that highways legally established shall be open and kept in repair so as to be safe and convenient for travelers, making the city liable to whoever receives any bodily injury or suffers any damage through any defect or want of repair in any highway, it is immaterial whether such defect arose from negligence on the part of a town officer, or from causes which could not be controlled by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence on its part. Moriarty v. Lewiston, 98 Me. 482, 57 Atl. 790.

Municipal corporations are only under duty to provide roads suitable for ordinary travel conducted in an ordinary manner, and such safeguards as may be needed to meet the risks of such travel, however; and they are not bound to provide against extraordinary incidents or accidents of travel. Herr v. Lebanon, 149 Pa. 222, 16 L.R.A. 106, 34 Am. St. Rep. 603, 24 Atl. 207; Schrunk v. St. Joseph, 120 Wis. 233, 97 N. W. 946.

And a highway that is in suitable condition for ordinary travel conducted in an ordinary manner does not become defective because some extraordinary, unforeseen condition arises, in consequence of which it is momentarily too rough or too narrow to meet the exigencies of the situation; whatever is so much out of the ordinary course as not to be naturally foreseen as a probable result of the condition of the highway the municipality is not bound to provide against, and its neglect to make such provision can be neither the proximate, nor the concurrent, cause of an injury received in consequence of such extraordinary event or accident. Herr v. Lebanon, supra.

And municipal corporations are not liable for any injury caused by defects or obstructions in their streets resulting from the act of God, such as washouts by sudden storms, provided they have not had reasonable time to repair. Seward v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 189, 42 Atl. 451.

But, though a defect and obstruction in a street was the result of a washout by a sudden storm, if, after a reasonable time and notice, the municipality failed or neglected to repair the same, it is liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Ibid.

b. By act of city itself.

If the city, by its direct act or authority, causes or permits a street to be obstructed, or to get out of repair, it is liable for resulting injuries. Springfield v. Scheevers, 21 Ill. App. 203; Kankakee v. Linden, 38 Ill. App. 657; Russell v. Columbia, 74 Mo. 480, 41 Am. Rep. 325; Davenport v. Ruckman, 37 N. Y. 568; Milwaukee v. Davis, 6 Wis. 377.

It has no more right generally than a natural person to create and maintain a nuisance in a street or elsewhere, and is liable for injuries occasioned thereby in any case when a private person would be liable under like circumstances. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

And it is immaterial whether a city charged with the duty of keeping its streets in a good conditions does, or neglects to, discharge this duty through one officer or another. Masters v. Troy, 50 Hun, 485, 3 N. Y. Supp. 450.

The general rule is that a city has no power to place, or to cause or permit anyone to place, a nuisance or obstruction upon a public highway which renders the highway dangerous to travelers thereon. Seibert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 188 Mo. 657, 70 L.R.A. 72, 87 S. W. 995.

And the city has no right so to obstruct a street as to deprive the adjacent property holders of its use as such. Barrows v. Sycamore, 150 Ill. 588, 25 L.R.A. 535, 41 Am. St. Rep. 400, 37 N. E. 1096.

So, a city the streets or sidewalks of which are out of repair through the neglect of the corporation is liable to an action for such neglect at the suit of a person injured, whether the injury arises from some act done by the corporation, or from an omission of duty on its part. Davenport v. Ruckman, supra.

And, if a municipal corporation, instead of leaving the repair of its streets to the public officers designated by statute, undertakes to make the repairs by its own agents, it is liable for injuries caused by their negligence in operating a stone crusher to prepare material to be used in constructing a new street. Butman v. Newton, 179 Mass. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 349, 60 N. E. 401.

Nor does omission of a municipal corporation to make ordinances or by-laws in reference to repairing its streets relieve it from liability for an injury resulting from an obstruction therein. Nelson v. Canisteo, 100 N. Y. 89, 2 N. E. 473.

And, if a sidewalk and sewer of a city were dangerous to the traveling public, and remained so, the municipal corporation was bound to change and repair them; and, if it neglected to do so, it is answerable in damages to persons injured by such neglect. Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90.

Municipal authorities possessing general control over the streets, however, have the power to put and may authorize and render lawful obstructions and erections therein for a public purpose, which otherwise would be deemed nuisances, on the ground that such erections or structures merely constitute putting the street to a new and improved use as demanded and required by the necessities of the times and modern conveniences and appliances. Savage v. Salem, 23 Or. 381, 24 L.R.A. 787, 37 Am. St. Rep. 688, 31 Pac. 832.

And the rule, which requires municipal corporations to exercise a reasonable degree of care to keep their walks and streets unobstructed and in such condition that travelers may pass over them without incurring risk of personal injury, does not absolutely inhibit such corporation from permitting certain portions of its walks and streets to be devoted to such purposes as are necessary and useful to the occupants of abutting premises, provided an ample and unobstructed passageway is left for the purposes of the public. Tubensing v. Buffalo, 51 App. Div. 14, 64 N. Y. Supp. 399.

So, a city has the right to determine which part of a nominal highway shall be devoted to the various purposes of passage, and to set apart various parts of the space to sidewalks, gutters, streets, and other suitable uses, and upon this subject municipal discretion must prevail; and the plan adopted is beyond judicial review, unless some distinct legal duty has been imposed and violated. McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357, 55 Am. Rep. 687, 25 N. W. 313.

And, in determining what improvements are necessary for the purpose of keeping streets in condition for public use, the municipality acts judicially, and its failure to act does not render it liable in damages; but, where a municipality determines the necessity and commands the building of a street or sidewalk, it is thereafter bound to see that what it has judicially decided as necessary shall be done, and the street kept in a reasonably safe condition, and if, through its negligence, it is unsafe, and persons are injured thereby, it is liable to them. Van Gorder v. Seneca Falls, 104 N. Y. Supp. 299.

So, in compact populous and much-frequented business parts of our larger towns and cities foot passengers may reasonably require to be accommodated and protected by the erection of suitable sidewalks, curbstones, posts, and railings, to the exclusion of teams and carriages from a part of a public highway. Hall v. Manchester, 40 N. H. 410.

But, though the law authorizes the construction of electric-light lines, power lines, and telephone lines, and similar structures, along the streets and highways, this does not relieve the municipality from its duty to see that the streets and highways are kept reasonably safe and secure for the public use. Fox v. Manchester, 183 N. Y. 141, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 474, 75 N. E. 1116.

And a city owning and operating a telegraph wire for the use of its fire department is liable to a person injured by coming in contact with the wire, where the injury was caused by the negligence of the city in removing the wire, or authorizing it to be removed, from its original position, for a purpose not connected with the fire department. Neuert v. Boston, 120 Mass. 338.

c. By act of agent or servant.

Municipal corporations, when they act in the exercise of powers or in the discharge of duties in no wise discretionary or governmental, but purely ministerial in their character, like individuals, are liable for the neglect or unskilful acts of their servants and agents whenever those acts occasion special injury to the person or property of another. Weightman v. Washington, 1 Black, 39, 17 L. ed. 52; Boswell v. Wakley, 149 Ind. 64, 48 N. E. 637; Waldron v. Haverhill, 143 Mass. 582, 10 N. E. 481; Missano v. New York, 160 N. Y. 123, 54 N. E. 744; Orme v. Richmond, 79 Va. 86.

And they are liable for injuries to individuals arising from their negligence in the construction of a work which they are authorized to construct and maintain, and for those arising from a defective condition of their streets and sidewalks, without regard to the manner of appointment of their officers. District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 34 L. ed. 472, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990; District of Columbia v. Sullivan, 11 App. D. C. 533.

Nor has a city any right through a servant or agent to leave a dangerous obstruction in a street for the sole convenience of such agent or servant, and without any necessity therefor so far as his work at that particular point is concerned; and it is liable for an injury resulting from such obstruction. Mickey v. Indianola (Iowa) 114 N. W. 1072.

And, where the board of trustees of a village had the power to remove an obstruction in a street, it was their duty to do so, as soon as they knew of its existence; and their negligence in omitting to do it is, in law, the negligence of the village. Champlin v. Penn Yan, 34 Hun, 33, affirmed in 102 N. Y. 680.

And a person injured by the absence of guardrails and insufficient lights at a place where a sidewalk is obstructed is not deprived of his right to an action to recover damages for the injury by a charter provision authorizing an action to be brought against the officer guilty of negligence only in case of wilful or gross neglect or intentional violation of duty, since this would deprive him of all remedy. Fitzgerald v. Binghamton, 40 Hun, 332, affirmed in 111 N. Y. 686, 19 N. E. 286.

Nor can a municipality escape liability for an injury resulting from its neglect of duty in not keeping its streets and avenues lighted at night, because of the failure of an electric light company which had contracted to light the streets to perform its duty; in such case the neglect of the company would be the neglect of the city. Baltimore v. Beck, 96 Md. 183, 53 Atl. 976.

And a city is not relieved from liability for damages resulting from the use of steam motors upon its streets, by the fact that the action of the city council in granting the right to use such motors was without authority, since corporations are responsible for the acts of their officers and agents, done 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the apparent scope of their authority, and the streets of a city are under the control of the city council. Stanley v. Davenport, 54 Iowa, 463, 37 Am. Rep. 216, 2 N. W. 1064, 6 N. W. 706.

So, trustees or other officers of a municipal corporation, made by its charter commissioners of highways, are to be regarded in respect to that function not as independent public officers, but as agents of the corporation, so as to make the latter civilly responsible for their acts or omissions according to the law of master and servant. Conrad v. Ithaca, 16 N. Y. 158; Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 161, note; Mosey v. Troy, 61 Barb. 580; Niven v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 619; Sewell v. Cohoes, 75 N. Y. 45, 31 Am. Rep. 418.

And, where a street commissioner placed planks or sticks in a street, and they were negligently allowed to remain there by the city for several days prior to an accident caused thereby, and the city had or should have had notice that they were in the street at the time of the accident, the cause of action for the injury is not based upon the negligence of the street commissioner any more than it is upon that of the city itself; and the city is not entitled to judgment on the ground that the injury was the result of the negligence of the street commissioner. Saylor v. Montesano, 11 Wash. 328, 39 Pac. 653.

And a superintendent of waterworks of a municipal corporation, who improperly fills a trench dug for laying water pipes so as to create a defect in the street, is the agent or servant of the municipality with reference to the work, so far as to make the municipality chargeable with his negligence in what would naturally affect the condition of a street, though his general duty is to attend to another department of a public business, since his work necessarily creates dangers in the streets, and calls for careful attention in restoring them to a safe condition. Stoddard v. Winchester, 157 Mass. 567, 32 N. E. 948.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury resulting from a hydrant in a street, constituting a defect, by the fact that the hydrant was placed there by commissioners appointed by the city council where they acted for the city, and under the direction of the city in the construction of works, which had been authorized by a special statute and voluntarily accepted for the purpose of the receipt of profits therefrom. St. Germain v. Fall River, 177 Mass. 550, 59 N. E. 447.

And where a statutory provision made an annexed district a part of a city and subject to the same laws, obligations, and liabilities in every respect, and to the same extent, as if such territory had been originally part of the city; and provided that the commissioners of public parks should have exclusive power to locate and lay out the street and maintain all public streets,—the provision with reference to the commissioners of public parks consisted of a desig-ration of officers of the corporation who, as officers and agents, and not exercising a power directly conferred upon themselves, should lay out and maintain the highways of the annexed district; and their neglect to repair highways would be the neglect of the corporation. Richards v. New York, 16 Jones & S. 315.

So, a municipal corporation is answerable for the act of its board of water commissioners in creating an obstruction in a street when such board, though created by special statute, is recognized as a department of the city government in the charter, and charged with the duty of making necessary surveys and preparing a general plan and system of sewers for the city, and of preparing and approving specifications for construction of all sewers, drains, wells, fire cisterns, laying water pipes, and erecting hydrants. Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095; Deyoe v. Saratoga Springs, 1 Hun, 340, 3 Thomp. & C. 504.

And, where a ditch is dug by the water commissioners of a city in a principal street for the purpose of laying water pipes to supply the inhabitants of the city with water, the water commissioners, in digging the ditch, acting as agents of the city, the city is responsible for their negligence in leaving the excavation insufficiently lighted and guarded. Fox v. Chelsea, 171 Mass. 297, 50 N. E. 622; Grimes v. Keene, 52 N. H. 330.

So, if the work of laying water pipes in a street is intrusted by the municipal authorities to the superintendent of waterworks, the town is liable for the negligence of the superintendent or that of his servants in failing properly to fill the trench dug for the purpose of laying the pipes. Stoddard v. Winchester, supra.

And a board of public works consisting of three members appointed by the governor by and with the advice of the senate, having full and exclusive power to govern, manage, and direct all parks, boulevards, and pleasure ways within the city limits, which appoints and employs all inspectors needed by the city in the construction, repair, and maintenance of public improvements, and the salaries of each individual employee of which are payable out of the city treasury, the city furnishing the board with office stationery, instruments, and all facilities for the performance of its duties, is an agency for carrying out the objects and purposes of the municipality, and not an independent body; and the city is liable for its acts in the management of an article constituting an obstruction in a street. Denver v. Peterson, 5 Colo. App. 41, 36 Pac. 1111.

So, the neglect of commissioners to keep the public ways of a city in safe condition is the neglect of the municipal corporation, although they are subject to the permanent authority of Congress. District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 34 L. ed. 472, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990.

And the duties delegated to a commissioner of street cleaning, charged with keeping the streets clean and removing refuse as often as the public health and use of the streets may require, and invested with authority to engage and discharge at discretion all the employees necessary for the performance of the duties of the department, are such as primarily devolve upon the city as a municipal or corporate obligation; and he and his subordinates are agents of the city, and the city is liable for their acts of misfeasance or nonfeasance in the way of obstructing streets or otherwise in the course of their employment. Barney Dumping-Boat Co. v. New York, 40 Fed. 50.

Nor can a city which is bound to keep its streets free from nuisances, where a nuisance is placed in a street, escape liability therefor under a plea of ultra vires. Shinnick v. Marshalltown, 137 Iowa, 72, 114 N. W. 542.

And a city is liable for an injury caused by an obstruction or excavation in a street where the work was done by a city officer whose duty as such was to superintend the digging of all ditches for water pipes, notwithstanding the fact that in this particular instance he was acting without authority, since even in such case he did not cease to be a public officer. Ironton v. Kelley, 38 Ohio St. 50.

And, where a city was authorized to construct a road, and the road was constructed but not in the mode prescribed by law, this fact increases rather than diminishes its liability; and the city cannot defend against an action for an injury caused thereby upon the ground that the construction of the road was not the act of the city, but the act of its officers. Pekin v. Newell, 26 Ill. 320, 70 Am. Dec. 378.

So, where the trustees of the waterworks in a city authorized and directed the digging of trenches in the streets for the purpose of laying water mains in pursuance of a previous ordinance of council, and it was made the duty of the superintendent to cause such trenches to be dug and mains laid, the city is responsible for his negligent acts in doing the work, causing injury, while such authority and direction remained unrevoked, notwithstanding the trustees, individually, while such work was being done, notified the superintendent that they would have nothing further to do with it. Ironton v. Kelley, supra.

And, where by a special statute the commissioners of a county were authorized to levy a tax upon the property of the county, to be expended under the direction of the board of public works of a city in opening, grading, and completing an uncompleted highway wholly within the city limits and under the control of the city, and, by the neglect of the board in the prosecution of the improvements, the premises of an abutting owner were injured, the board is to be regarded as acting as agent of the city, and the city, and not the county, is liable for damages resulting from the injury. Johns

v. Cincinnati, 45 Ohio St. 278, 12 N. E. 801, reversing 1 Ohio C. C. 21.

The duties of police officers are of a public nature, however, and their appointment is devolved on cities and towns by the legislature as a convenient mode of exercising the public function, and they cannot be regarded as servants or agents of the city or borough; and the fact that their appointment is so devolved on cities and towns does not render the cities and towns liable for their unlawful or negligent acts. Norristown v. Fitzpatrick, 94 Pa. 121, 39 Am. Rep. 771.

And an incorporated village is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of an engineer of its fire department while he was engaged in thawing out a hydrant whereby water escaped, formed into ice on the street, and a traveler fell thereon and was injured, the members of the fire department not being agents of the corporation in the sense which rendered it liable for their acts, but being in the discharge of an official duty as public officers. Welsh v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 228, 48 Am. Rep. 762.

Nor is a city liable for the negligence of a laborer employed by its superintendent of streets in the construction of a new street which has been laid out by the board of aldermen, and which they have directed the superintendent to build, if, under the charter of the city, the superintendent was acting as a public officer. Jensen v. Waltham, 166 Mass. 344, 44 N. E. 339.

And the act of a boy sixteen years of age, employed by a city to light and extinguish street lamps, who had received a general direction from his superior to shut off the gas at midnight, of extinguishing a light at that time just after being told of a defect in the street near by, cannot be deemed the act of the city in such a sense as to carry with it responsibility for the accident which ensued. Monies v. Lynn, 119 Mass. 273.

So, a statutory provision making it the duty of a municipality to keep its streets in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel makes it liable only for its own negligence or the negligence of someone for whose conduct it is legally responsible, and not for the negligence of a contractor who is not its agent nor engaged in performing a duty imposed by law upon the municipality, but who is employed by a lot owner to build a sidewalk in front of his lot. Thompson v. West Bay City, 137 Mich. 94, 100 N. W. 280.

And a superintendent of streets under a city charter requiring the board of aldermen to elect three street commissioners, and empowering it to prescribe the duties and direct and control the administrative boards and officers in their performance of duties, but directing that they shall not exercise any authority over the administrative officers, is a public officer when acting as such; and a person injured by his negligence upon a public highway cannot recover of the city therefor. McCann v. Waltham, 163 Mass. 344, 40 N. E. 20.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And the granting of a license by a municipal corporation to a plumber to make and connect service pipes for conducting water from the distributing pipes of the city to private houses, and the giving of a special permit to him to connect with a city sewer under the direction of the city inspectors, does not make the plumber an officer or servant of the city when employed by and working for private parties; and, for damages occasioned by his negligence in such case in not guarding an excavation made by him in the street and leaving a pile of earth thereon while doing the work, the city is not responsible. Dorlon v. Brooklyn, 46 Barb. 604.

But, where a wire maintained by a city fell upon a trolley wire and became charged with electricity and caused the death of a passer-by, the city cannot relieve itself from responsibility for the defective construction of the line because it was used for the police department of the city, on the theory that, as that department is created by law for the discharge of a public duty, and not for the immediate benefit of the city, the city is not liable for the negligence of the police commissioners in the construction and maintenance of the wire, where the line was not constructed by the police department or its servants, but was constructed by virtue of a contract with the city and by city officers who were empowered to and did represent the city. Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131.

And charter and statutory provisions granting to the common council of a city authority to regulate by ordinance the cleaning of streets and sidewalks, and clothing the department of parks with the control and management of all public parks and streets immediately adjoining, do not transfer from the municipality to the park department the duty of keeping in proper condition the sidewalks bordering upon such parks. Twogood v. New York, 11 Daly, 167.

And special provisions of law by which surveyors of highways have the right to regulate sidewalks, and the acceptance by surveyors of sidewalks of a sidewalk with a cellar window occupying a part of the space, do not exonerate the city from liability for an injury resulting from the defect. Bacon v. Boston, 3 Cush. 174.

So, where, in the construction of a subway under a street, the surface of the street was excavated with the exception of space occupied by the railway tracks, and there was a depression in the pavement between the tracks, and a person driving an automobile attempted to pass from one track to the other and ran a wheel into this depression, which caused the automobile to swerve and run into the excavation, the city cannot be held liable upon the ground that it was negligent in allowing the existence of the hole between the tracks, and in maintaining an insufficient guard about the excavation for the subway, where the railroad company had built its tracks under legislative authority, and the subway was being excavated by contractors under like authority, the city having no control over either corporation, and it appears that the surface of the street was being constantly changed by the contractors. Morris v. Interurban Street R. Co. 100 App. Div. 295, 91 N. Y. Supp. 479.

d. By permission or license of city.

This subject is covered in a note to McKim v. Philadelphia, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 506.

e. By independent contractor.

1. General rules where contract calls for obstruction.

A city cannot be allowed to avoid the imperative duty which it owes to the public to keep its streets and alleys and highways in a safe condition for use in the usual manner by travelers, or to escape responsibility for its neglect or failure to perform such duty, upon the plea that it had entered into a contract with another person for the performance of work, which rendered such use of the street or highway dangerous to the traveling public. Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166; Jacksonville v. Drew, 19 Fla. 106, 45 Am. Rep. 5; Baltimore v. O'Donnell, 53 Md. 110, 36 Am. Rep. 395; Baker v. Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447, 69 N. W. 740; Ray v. Poplar Bluff, 70 Mo. App. 252; Deming v. Terminal R. Co. 169 N. Y. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 521, 61 N. E. 983; Buffalo v. Holloway, 7 N. Y. 493, 57 Am. Dec. 550; McManus v. New York, 115 N. Y. Supp. 150; Nashville v. Brown, 9 Heisk. 1; 24 Am. Rep. 289; Patterson v. Austin (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 1139; Hill v. Tottenham Urban Dist. Council, 79 L. T. N. S. 495.

The rule that municipal corporations are bound to keep the streets and highways in a proper state of repair and free from obstructions or defects in the roadbed which vigilance can detect and remove applies whether the work or repairs are being done by the city itself or by a contractor, the negligence of whose servants causes the injury complained of. Wendell v. Troy, 39 Barb. 329, affirmed in 4 Abb. App. Dec. 563.

And a municipal corporation cannot absolve itself from either its statutory or its common-law duty to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, and from its liability for failure to perform this duty by an attempted delegation of such duty to an independent contractor who is prosecuting a public improvement in the street, by inserting in the contract express provisions for the protection of the public by the contractor. Scanlon v. Watertown, 14 App. Div. 1, 43 N. Y. Supp. 618; Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 153, 16 N. E. 344; Pace v. Webster City, 139 Iowa, 107, 115 N. W. 888; Glasgow v. Gillenwaters, 113 Ky. 140, 67 S. W. 381; Louisville City R. Co. v. Louisville, 8 Bush. 415; Moore v. Townsend, 76 Minn. 64, 78 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. W. 880; Gable v. Toledo, 16 Ohio C. C. 515; Nashville v. Brown, supra.

Where the work which a city employs a contractor to do in its streets is necessarily dangerous, however skilfully done, the rule that, when the relation of employer and independent contractor exists, the contractor is alone liable for injuries occurring in the progress of the work, has no application; and the city is liable for a resulting injury. Gable v. Toledo, supra; Cincinnati v. Stone, 5 Ohio St. 38; Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 438, 11 Am. St. Rep. 136, 20 N. E. 38; Houston v. Isaacks, 68 Tex. 116, 3 S. W. 693; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780.

And the rule is the same where the party causing the work to be done is under a primary obligation imposed by law to keep the subject-matter of the work in a safe condition, as in case of a city directing the grading or ditching of streets. Jefferson v. Chapman, supra.

And, where an obstruction or defect in a street, which produces the injury, results directly and necessarily from acts which a contractor agreed with the city and was authorized to do, the city authorizing the contractor and the contractor are equally liable to the party injured. Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630; Dressell v. Kingeton, 32 Hun. 533; Nashville v. Brown and Wilson v. Wheeling, supra; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427.

The city is primarily liable, although the defect in the highway may be due to the act of some contractor or third person, done by authority of the city. Louisville v. Keher, 117 Ky. 841, 79 S. W. 270.

Where a city plans a street improvement, and employs a contractor for that work, the danger to the public arises from the nature of the improvement, and can be averted only by special precautions, such as placing guards or lighting the street, and the city authorizing the improvement is bound to take these precautions; the contractor may properly be bound by his agreement to take such precautions, but the municipal corporation cannot, by so appointing him, avoid either indictment on behalf of the public, or its liability to individuals. Glasgow v. Gillenwaters, supra.

And a complaint against a city and a construction company charging that the city had charge of an alley, and that it was within the city limits and was largely traveled by day and night, and that the construction company, under authority of the city, placed an obstruction in the alley by which the plaintiff was injured in the nighttime while it was not lighted, states a good cause of action for negligence at common law. Mehan v. St. Louis (Mo.) 116 S. W. 514.

And, where a city contracted with a contractor for the grading of a street, the work to be done under the direction and to the satisfaction of named city officers; and it was stipulated that the contractor should adopt and take all necessary precautions for the prevention of accidents during its progress, and this requirement he omitted to observe by having his servants blast a hole in the sidewalk near a footpath for the purpose of setting a curbstone, which he left uncovered and unguarded by light or otherwise, and an injury resulted,—the city is liable therefor, since the performance of the work necessarily rendered the street unsafe for night travel, and this is a result which does not at all depend upon the care or negligence of the laborers employed by the contractor. Dressell v. Kingston, supra.

2. Application in particular cases.

The fact that a city has placed the work of repairing a street in charge of an independent contractor does not relieve it of the duty to see that proper precautions are taken to warn travelers of the danger. Glasgow v. Gillenwaters, supra.

And, where contractors obtained a permit to occupy not more than one third of the carriage way of a street, and under it occupied more than half of it and continued to do so for several weeks, and a teamster was killed by driving upon an obstruction in the night when no lantern was placed on it, the jury, in an action for the injury, is justified in finding both the contractors and the city guilty of negligence. Rommeney v. New York, 49 App. Div. 64, 63 N. Y. Supp. 186.

Nor can a municipal corporation escape liability for injuries caused by refuse left piled in the street upon the completion of the work of resetting a curb, upon the theory that the work, being done by the abutting owner at its direction, was by an independent contractor for whose acts it was not responsible. Meyers v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 159, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 678, 66 Atl. 251.

And a contract between a city and a contractor for the performance of street work is competent in an action by a person injured by colliding with a pile of stones placed in the street by him, for the purpose of showing the relation existing between the city and the person who caused the obstruction. Godfrey v. New York, 104 App. Div. 357, 93 N. Y. Supp. 899.

So, if a scaffolding erected on a bridge under a contract with the city for the firing off of fireworks, from which a timber fell and killed a passer-by, was an unlawful structure, the city was guilty of negligence in authorizing its erection, and cannot shield itself from liability by showing that the death of the passer-by was due to the negligence of an independent contractor. Heidenwag v. Philadelphia, 168 Pa. 72, 31 Atl. 1063.

And, if a city contracting with contractors for the construction of waterworks in its street finds that in the progress of the work blasting is dangerous and unnecessary its duty to its inhabitants and the public requires that it shall prevent it; and, if the blasting is necessary, but, though dangerous, the danger can be averted by the use of proper precautions, its duty is to require the contractor to take such precautions. Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166.

And, where a city employed an independent contractor to lay a sidewalk, and the contractor cut the roots of trees standing in the street and left them without support, and, five or six days thereafter, the trees were blown down and against the dwelling of the abutting owner, causing damage, the city is liable for the damage to the dwelling, whether the contractor negligently cut the roots, or necessarily did so in the construction of the walk. Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373.

So, where an excavation is made in a public street under contract of the city authorities, the city cannot shift to the contractor the responsibility for keeping its streets in a safe condition, and thus relieve itself from liability for neglect to erect proper barriers to prevent accidents by falling into the excavation. Omaha v. Jensen, 35 Neb. 68, 37 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. W. 833; Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630; Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 438, 11 Am. St. Rep. 136, 20 N. E. 33; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 39 Hun. 449; Gable v. Toledo, 16 Ohio C. C. 515; McAllister v. Albany, 18 Or. 426, 23 Pac. 845; Drake v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 81, 94 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 Pac. 231; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

And in such case the city must exercise a continuing duty to see that the same is carefully guarded and made reasonably safe for travel, whether the actual work is performed by the city workmen or by workmen of an independent contractor. Newman v. New York, 57 Misc. 636, 108 N. Y. Supp. 676.

So, where a wayfarer is injured by falling into an open sewer in a public street, the city is not relieved from liability for the injury by reason of the fact that the opening was left unguarded by a contractor engaged in the construction of the sewer. Hull v. Kansas City, 54 Mo. 598, 14 Am. Rep. 487; Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630; Springfield v. Le Claire, 49 Ill. 476; South Bend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 54 L.R.A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200, 60 N. E. 271; Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344; Williams v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 447.

And this is so although it may have had no immediate control over the workmen. Birmingham v. McCary; Jefferson v. Chapman; Drake v. Seattle; and Wilson v. Wheeling,—supra.

And though the municipality had not yet accepted the work of the contractor. Turner v. Newburgh, supra.

And though it had stipulated in the contract that proper precautions should be taken by the contractor for the protection of the public. Jefferson v. Chapman and Drake v. Seattle, supra.

Nor is a municipality constructing a sewer in a public street relieved from liability for injuries to persons using the street by the fact that it was in the exclusive possession of a contractor, if it had notice, or might have had notice, by the exercise of proper oversight, that its licensee had acted in a negligent manner and left the street in an unsafe and dangerous condition. South Bend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 54 L.R.A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200, 60 N. E. 271.

And the fact that a contractor may be liable for negligence in making an open ditch across a street will not relieve the city authorities of liability for an injury resulting therefrom, if they are in law fixed with knowledge of such negligence. Kinsey v. Kingston, 145 N. C. 106, 58 S. E. 912.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury resulting from a ditch across a sidewalk, made to connect a sewer with the city's main sewer, because the excavation was made by a contractor who was doing the work for a citizen. Ibid.

So, a city which contracted for the construction of a cistern in a street is liable for the loss of a horse which fell into it and was killed for want of sufficient protection around and over the excavation to guard animals in the proper use of the street from danger, although it did not reserve or exercise any control or direction over the manner of doing the work except to see that it was done according to specifications which were a part of the contract. Circleville v. Neuding, 41 Ohio St. 465.

And, where a municipal corporation under statutory authority let a contract for grading and graveling a road within its limits, and the contractor took gravel from a point on adjacent private property and undermined a large tree standing close to the roadway, which fell upon and killed a traveler, the corporation was responsible for the act of the contractor in undermining the tree. to the same extent as if he had been a laborer acting under the orders of the road inspector or board of works. Stevens v. South Vancouver, 6 B. C. 17.

So, where a contractor made an excavation in a street, and a person fell into it and was injured, the fact that at the time of the accident the contractor had failed to comply with certain of the provisions of the city charter, compliance with which was required to make the contract binding upon the city, does not relieve the city from liability for the injury. Groves v. Rochester, 30 Hun, 5.

And a city is not absolved from its statutory duty to keep its streets, including bridges, open, in repair, and free from nuisances, so as to relieve itself from liability for an injury caused by falling into an excavation left unguarded in the night, by the fact that it was the duty and the right of the county commissioners to build the bridge in building which the excavation was made, and notwithstanding the fact that the county commissioners had jurisdiction 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) and had let the contract to a contractor. Newark v. McDowell, 16 Ohio C. C. 556.

3. Injury collateral to contract work.

Where a municipal corporation contracts to have work done, and the contractor in doing the work creates an obstruction or defect in a street, which causes an injury, the municipal corporation is not liable for the injury where the obstruction or defect causing it is wholly collateral to the contract work, and entirely the result of the negligent or wrongful acts of the contractor or his servants. Wilson v. Wheeling, supra; Joliet v. Seward, 86 Ill. 402, 29 Am. Rep. 35; Ray v. Poplar Bluff, 70 Mo. App. 252; McManus v. New York, 115 N. Y. Supp. 150; Dressell v. Kingston, 32 Hun, 533; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427.

The rule that a person, either natural or artificial, is not liable for the acts or negligence of another unless the relation of master and servant, or principal and agent, exists between them; and that, when an injury is done by a party exercising an independent employment, the party employing him is not responsible to the person injured,—applies with full force to municipal corporations. Painter v. Pittsburgh, 46 Pa. 213; McAllister v. Albany, 18 Or. 426, 23 Pac. 845.

And a municipal corporation is not responsible for an injury occurring to a traveler through an obstruction in a public street, placed there by the negligence of a contractor exercising an independent employment, unless by the terms of the contract with the contractor he is under the management of the city. Erie v. Caulkins, 85 Pa. 247, 27 Am. Rep. 642.

Or unless the officers of the municipality have interfered with the conduct of the work so as to control its methods and become the responsible masters notwithstanding the contract. Eby v. Lebanon County, 166 Pa. 632, 31 Atl. 332.

So, where a city adopted in good faith a reasonable plan for a sidewalk in a street, and the execution of the work was not inherently dangerous, and injury would not necessarily result from laying the sidewalk, and the city employed an independent contractor to do the work, it is not liable for the negligent acts of the contractor. Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373.

Nor does a city sought to be held liable for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street, placed there by an independent contractor, incur any additional liability by reason of taking a bond to indemnify it against any loss or damage resulting from a failure of the contractor to perform his duty. Erie v. Caulkins, supra.

And, when blasting is done in a city, not by the city, but for it and under a contract with a private citizen; and such blasting is done in violation of express directions given by city officers, or without their knowledge,—the city is not responsible for an injury caused by it. Joliet v. Seward, supra.

So, if the negligent act of blocking one half of a roadway with stones and leaving them without a light or proper means to warn travelers at night of the danger was the work of a contractor, over whose act the municipal corporation retained and had no control, the municipal corporation should not be called upon to answer in damages for an injury resulting from the contractor's negligence. Hookey v. Oakdale, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 524.

And, if a public work like a sewer in a street is constructed under an independent contract lawfully entered into by the city, the municipal authorities having no control of the mode of performing the work, the contractor alone, and not the city, will be liable for injuries resulting from an obstruction or nuisance placed in a street in the progress of such work. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

And a person whose horse was frightened by an explosion produced by blasting done in the construction of a sewer, and who was injured thereby, cannot recover of the city for the injury, where the city had no control over the workmen of the contractor who was building the sewer, and the work contracted for was not a nuisance either in its performance or in its result. Herrington v. Lansingburgh, 36 Hun, 600.

Nor is a city liable where a person fell into a excavation in a street, made by a contractor, where the accident was caused entirely by the negligence of the contractor, or of his agents or servants. Painter v. Pittsburgh, supra; Deming v. Terminal R. Co. 169 N. Y. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 521, 61 N. E. 983.

And a city is not liable for an injury to a person, sustained by the negligence of a contractor for the construction of a sewer in not putting up sufficient barriers to warn or guard persons against the danger of attempting to pass down a street in the neighborhood of the excavation; the contractor alone should be held responsible. Barry v. St. Louis, 17 Mo. 121.

The burden rests upon a municipal corporation sought to be held liable for an injury resulting from an obstruction in a street, however, to establish the fact that the injury was caused by the act of an independent contractor. Hookey v. Oakdale, supra.

And if, in the performance of the work of repairs or improvements on a sidewalk, an obstruction is created by a contractor, and the obstruction is unnecessary and wrongful and merely collateral, the city, having knowledge of the obstruction, is under duty to remove the obstacle or, at least, to see that the public is properly notified and guarded against its danger. Birmingham v. Tayloe, 105 Ala. 170, 16 So. 576.

And it has been held that a municipal corporation, by contracting with a person to construct an improvement for it, does not and cannot thereby abdicate its control over the streets of the corporation, or exonerate itself from liability for an injury resulting from the negligence of the contractor in the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

manner of the performance of his contract. Beatrice v. Reid, 41 Neb. 214, 59 N. W. 770.

A city, by contracting with a contractor for the erection of a building, does not necessarily give him license to obstruct the street, and certainly not to leave obstructions therein at night unguarded and unlighted in violation of the ordinances with reference thereto. Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65, affirming 9 Hun, 394.

In the above case Buffalo v. Holloway, 7 N. Y. 493, 57 Am. Dec. 550, supra, VI., e. 1, was distinguished upon the ground that there the contractor was employed by the city to dig up the street itself for the purpose of constructing a sewer, while in this case the obstructions were not made in pursuance of any contract with the city, nor necessarily involved any performance of any such contract, but were made for the convenience of the contractor.

And, where a person was injured while lawfully using a road, by an obstruction placed in the road for the repair and maintenance thereof, which obstruction was neither lighted nor guarded, the obstruction was not due to the contractor's casual or collateral negligence, and, therefore, one for which the municipal corporation is not responsible, but was caused by negligence and misfeasance in doing the very act which the contractor was engaged for, and should have been foreseen and guarded against in the natural course of things. Clements v. Tyron [1905] 2 Ir. Ch. 542.

So, a municipal corporation which employs a contractor to do work not necessarily a nuisance, but which becomes so by reason of the manner in which the contractor performs it, which it accepts in that condition, becomes responsible for the nuisance. Steves v. South Vancouver, 6 B. C. 17.

Where injury is done by an obstruction in a street upon which work is being done for the city by an independent contractor, it is a question for the jury whether the injury results from the city's negligence, or whether it is the result of tortious acts of the contractor's servants. McManus v. New York, 115 N. Y. Supp. 150.

4. Effect of retention of control.

The liability of a city for an injury resulting from obstructions in its streets, caused by making necessary or proper repairs thereof or by constructing public improvements, which obstructions had not been sufficiently guarded, is not affected by the fact that the temporary obstruction was made by contractors who contracted with the city to do the work, where the contractors were directed by officers of the city authorized to give direction to do the work. Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Augusta v. Cone, 91 Ga. 714, 17 S. E. 1005; Beatrice v. Reid, supra; Cincinnati v. Stone, 5 Ohio St. 38.

In such case the contractor becomes, by virtue of the contract, the agent of the corporation; and it is liable for an injury resulting from the negligence of the contractor in the manner of constructing the improvement. Beatrice v. Reid, supra.

So, under a contract made pursuant to a charter provision giving the board of public works full control of the mode of performing any public work by a contractor, and requiring him to reserve in the contract the right finally to determine all questions as to the proper performance thereof, and, in case of an improper performance, to order a reconstruction of the work or relet it to some other party, the city is liable for injuries resulting from negligence or misconduct of the contractor in constructing or permitting an obstruction or nuisance in a street. Harper v. Milwaukee, supra.

And, where the flagstones were piled up in a street by a person under contract with the city, and they were left there for a considerable period of time and afterwards caused an accident, if they remained there in the possession of the city until the contractor for laying them should be ordered by the highway department at some subsequent period to proceed with the work, then the length of time during which they were permitted to encumber the street is evidence of negligence upon the part of the city, which should be left to the jury in an action against the city for the injury. Farley v. Philadelphia, 11 W. N. C. 136.

So, where a municipal corporation having statutory power to enter lands and take without payment gravel for its roads let a contract for grading and graveling a road within its limits which contained no provision as to where the gravel was to be obtained; and the contractor entered adjacent private property and took gravel from a pit thereon in such manner as to undermine a large tree standing close to the roadway, which, by reason thereof, afterwards fell upon and killed a traveler, the taking of the gravel having been superintended by the municipal road inspector,—the city is liable for knowingly maintaining a dangerous nuisance which caused an injury. Stevens v. South Vancouver, supra.

And, where a trench was dug in a street, and had existed for at least two days at a prominent corner near the center of the city where the streets were much traveled; and it was dug under the supervision of an inspector appointed by the commissioner of public works; and the trench, in connection with a heavy rain, caused damage to an abutting owner,—the inspector represents the city, and his negligence is the negligence of the city; and a jury is warranted in finding, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he saw or should have seen the danger. Schumacher v. New York, 166 N. Y. 103, 59 N. E. 773, affirming 40 App. Div. 320, 57 N. Y. Supp. 968.

The liability of a municipal corporation where an independent contractor, in performing his contract with it, makes holes or excavations in a street, or places obstructions therein, by reason of which a traveler is injured, however, depends upon whether 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the municipal authorities had the right and power to interfere so as to prevent it; if so, it is liable. Koontz v. District of Columbia, 24 App. D. C. 59.

And vague testimony that county commissioners directed that certain things should be done and certain changes made, without specifying what the changes were, is not sufficient to fix liability upon a county for an injury caused by the act of a contractor in leaving a heap of dirt upon a pavement unguarded and unlighted during the night, as an interference with and control over the contractor. Eby v. Lebanon County, 166 Pa. 632, 31 Atl. 332.

Nor is a stipulation in a contract between a city and a contractor that the city's engineer shall have power to direct changes in the time and manner of conducting the work such a reservation of power as will make the city liable for an injury occasioned by the negligence of the contractor. Erie v. Caulkins, 85 Pa. 247, 27 Am. Rep. 642.

And the fact that a city had an inspector on the ground watching the progress of the work of a contractor placing a street railroad in a street, and that the inspector pointed out from time to time what he considered to be unsafe or dangerous places, whereupon the contractor would give the matter such attention as seemed to be needed, does not render the city liable for an injury resulting from an excavation caused by the contractor where the city had no control whatever over the manner of doing the work, and the contractor was not bound to adopt the inspector's suggestions. Cox v. Philadelphia, 165 Fed. 559.

So, under a city charter providing that the street commissioners shall have power to order a contract for the making, grading, repairing, and cleaning of streets within their respective wards, and to direct and control the persons employed therein, where the street commissioners made a contract for the grading stipulating what the character, appearance, and extent of the work when completed should be, and containing the clause, "the work to be done under the direction of the street commissioners," the employees of the contractor are not servants of the city so as to make it liable for any damages caused by their negligent manner of doing the work. St. Paul v. Seitz, 3 Minn. 297, 74 Am. Dec. 753.

And, where county commissioners entered into a contract with a firm of contractors to place a stone curb upon a line dividing a park from the pavement of a much-used public street, the fact that the commissioners of the county directed that the dirt should not be thrown upon the grass, in accordance with the terms of a provision in the contract, and furnished boards upon which the dirt might be deposited, does not render the county liable for negligence in heaping the dirt upon the pavement, and leaving it unguarded and unlighted during the night. Eby v. Lebanon County, supra.

Nor does the fact that the expense of an improvement in a street is chargeable upon adjoining lots render the contractor an agent of the lot owners, rather than of the city, so as to relieve the city of liability for an obstruction or nuisance created by him. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

5. Particular contract required by law.

Where the law compels a municipal corporation to give out a contract for a street improvement to the lowest bidder, it takes away from it the responsibility arising from the acts of the person taking the contract. James v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. 528, 65 Am. Dec. 526.

And a person who was injured by falling at night into an excavation made by grading a street of a city under a contract which the city was by law required to make, owing to the failure to put lights or guards about the place, may hold the contractor liable for the injury; but the city is not liable. Ibid.

So, when a city charter requires sewers to be constructed under contracts to be let by the city, the contractor in performing the work is not the agent or servant of the city, and any negligence in performing the work is his negligence, and the city is not liable for injuries caused thereby. O'Hale v. Sacramento, 48 Cal. 212.

And, where an injury resulted from falling over a hydrant in the night because of the absence of sufficient light; and the city had entered into a contract with an electric light company for the lighting of the street, it having no power but that of entering into contracts with persons able to supply the light which, in the exercise of their discretion, the council should think necessary, —the relation between the city and the lighting company was not that of master and servant or principal and agent, but of employer and independent contractor; and the rule of law that, if anyone inflicts injury from any negligence in the execution by a contractor of the work he has undertaken, the contractor alone is responsible, is applicable; the negligence claimed to have existed being the improper management of the lights in the street in question and defective machinery for producing the light. Halifax v. Lordly, 20 Can. S. C. 505.

It has been held, however, that the statutory duty imposed upon a city to keep its streets in good repair is one which the city is required to perform, and it continues although the city is obliged under its charter to enter into an engagement with an independent contractor for grading and paving such streets, through whose fault the injury occurred. Southwell v. Detroit, 74 Mich. 438, 42 N. W. 118.

And that, where a municipal corporation has under its charter the care and control of public streets, and has general authority to make or cause to be made improvements therein, such as sewers or drains, it is liable for injuries to its employees or others, resulting from the negligence of its employees or agents acting under its authority in making such improvements, and having the charge and supervision thereof, though in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the particular instance, in strict conformity to its charter, the work is required to be done by contract, and not directly by the corporation. Welter v. St. Paul, 40 Minn. 400, 12 Am. St. Rep. 752, 42 N. W. 392.

1. By wrongdoer.

A municipality is not relieved from liability for failure to perform its duty to keep its streets reasonably safe and fit for travel by the fact that a street is made unsafe by the act of a third person. Davis v. Adrian, 147 Mich. 300, 110 N. W. 1084; Centerville v. Woods, 57 Ind. 192; Elkhart v. Ritter, 66 Ind. 136; Aurora v. Bitner, 100 Ind. 396; Bromley v. Bodkin, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1245, 77 S. W. 696; Bourget v. Cambridge, 159 Mass. 388, 34 N. E. 455; Caton v. Sedalia, 62 Mo. App. 227; Alliance v. Campbell, 17 Ohio C. C. 595; Huffman v. Bayham Twp. 26 Ont. App. Rep. 514.

Without its license or authority. Centerville v. Woods and Elkhart v. Ritter, supra.

And it is liable for an injury done by an obstruction placed in a street by a third person, regardless of whether it could be deemed dangerous or likely to become dangerous. Whittall v. New York, 64 N. Y. Supp. 250.

And a municipal corporation may be liable for an injury caused by an obstruction placed in its streets by a mere trespasser or wrongdoer. Davis v. Omaha, 47 Neb. 836, 66 N. W. 859; Russell v. Columbia, 74 Mo. 480, 41 Am. Rep. 325; Ironton v. Kelley, 38 Ohio St. 50; Castor v. Uxbridge Twp. 39 U. C. Q. B. 113.

And a road is out of repair when, by the existence of obstructions placed there by wrongdoers, it is rendered unsafe or inconvenient for travel. Castor v. Uxbridge Twp. supra.

The rule that municipal corporations are under duty to keep their streets in safe condition for public travel, and must exercise reasonable diligence to accomplish that end, is equally applicable whether the act or omission complained of is that of the municipality, or of some third person. Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095; Tiers v. New York, 74 Hun. 452, 26 N. Y. Supp. 688; Vincennes v. Spees, 35 Ind. App. 389, 74 N. E. 277.

And it is immaterial on the question of the liability of a city for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street, who placed the obstruction; if it has remained there so long that the corporation is presumed to have had notice, it is bound to remove it and remedy the defect. Ploedterll v. New York, 55 N. Y. 666; Davenport v. Ruckman, 10 Bosw. 20; Scranton v. Catterson, 94 Pa. 202; Merrill v. Portland, 4 Cliff. 138, Fed. Cas. No. 9,470.

And a complaint in an action against a city, alleging negligence in excavating a dangerous hole or trench, and throwing up a dangerous embankment therefrom on the streets, and suffering the trench and embankment to be without protection or notice to travelers, warrants evidence to show either a dangerous obstruction created by the city and left unguarded, or a like obstruction created by a third person and left unguarded by the city after notice of its existence. Pettengill v. Yonkers, supra.

Nor does the fact that a party injured by an obstruction or nuisance in a highway may sustain an action against the person who placed the nuisance upon the highway affect his right to proceed against the municipality for his damages if it was in fault. Morse v. Richmond, 41 Vt. 435, 98 Am. Dec. 600; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. State, 37 Ind. 489; Philadelphia v. Smith, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 147, 16 Atl. 493.

And the fact that an excavation in a street was undertaken for private use and benefit does not discharge the city from the duty of oversight and direction, and the responsibility for proper construction. Wendell v. Troy, 4 Keyes, 267, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 569.

And a city ordinance providing that the mayor, a member of the city council, the city commissioner, any street commissioner, street inspector, or the police of the city, shall be authorized to order any obstruction removed from the streets; and, in case of the person causing such obstructions failing to remove the same, it shall be the duty of such officer to cause it to be removed,—is properly admitted in evidence in behalf of the plaintiff, in an action against the city for an injury resulting from an obstruction in a street. Kane v. Troy, 16 N. Y. S. R. 341, 1 N. Y. Supp. 536.

So, under the provisions of the North Carolina Code that commissioners of towns and cities shall provide for keeping in proper repair the streets and bridges in the town in the manner and to the extent they may deem best, and that they may pass laws for abating or preventing nuisances of any kind and for preserving the health of the citizens, if any person shall unlawfully erect an obstruction or nuisance in the streets of a city, and the town authorities shall permit it to remain an unreasonable length of time, the town and the person erecting the obstruction or nuisance are jointly and severally liable to the traveler for an injury resulting therefrom without fault on his part. Dillon v. Raleigh, 124 N. C. 184, 32 S. E. 548.

Where an obstruction is placed in a street, not by the city or its officers or agents, but by the act of a third party, however, the liability of the city for a resulting injury must be predicated upon its negligence in not causing the removal thereof within a reasonable time after it had notice, or by the exercise of proper care and diligence might have known the condition of the street. Badgley v. St. Louis, 149 Mo. 122, 50 S. W. 817; Royal Center v. Bingaman, 37 Ind. App. 626, 77 N. E. 811; Davis v. Omaha, 47 Neb. 836, 66 N. W. 859; Weed v. Ballston Spa, 76 N. Y. 329; Dorlon v. Brooklyn, 46 Barb. 604. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And its negligence should be alleged. Royal Center v. Bingaman, supra.

Where the unsafe condition of a street occurs through some other agency or instrumentality than that of the city, negligence is not imputable to the city until a sufficient time has elapsed to charge the city officials with notice. Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344.

Nor is a municipal corporation liable for damages to property resulting from the act of a private individual in dumping dirt in a street where it appears that the municipal corporation neither authorized such act before it was done, nor ratified it afterwards. Nyhart v. Taylor, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 635.

But whenever a dangerous obstruction appears in the streets of a city it is its duty to use reasonable diligence to remove it though it was unauthorized. Grand Forks v. Allman, 83 C. C. A. 554, 153 Fed. 532.

g. By abutting owner.

This subject is covered by a note to McKim v. Philadelphia, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 506.

h. By act of railroad occupying street.

This subject is covered by a note to McKim v. Philadelphia, supra.

VII. Ways as to which the duty exists.

a. Generally.

The duty of a municipal corporation to repair highways is not dependent upon the manner in which the highways may have been established; it applies to all existing highways whether established through proceedings by court or municipal authorities, or through dedication. Makepeace v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 360, 50 Atl. 876; Hillyer v. Winsted, 77 Conn. 304, 59 Atl. 40.

When a municipal corporation has actually opened a street or avenue for the public accommodation, and, by its acts, has invited the public to travel over it, the duty to keep it in repair becomes absolute. Hutson v. New York, 5 Sandf. 289.

And to establish the character of a locality where an injury occurred as a part of a public street nothing more is essential than to show that it was in the actual possession of the city and opened and used by the public as a thoroughfare at the time. Garnett v. Slater, 56 Mo. App. 207; Boyd v. Springfield, 62 Mo. App. 456; Golden v. Clinton, 54 Mo. App. 100.

And, if a street on which a sidewalk was constructed, a defect in which caused an injury, was a public street of the city, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the city was in possession and control of it, and built and maintained the sidewalk. Anna v. Boren, 77 Ill. App. 408.

It is not necessary to prove any formal dedication or appropriation of the street.

Boyd v. Springfield and Golden v. Clinton, supra.

And a street may be shown to be a public thoroughfare, for the condition of which the city is responsible, by evidence of dedication, acceptance, and user, as well as by evidence that it has been formally laid out by ordinance. Garnett v. Slater and Golden v. Clinton, supra; Beaudan v. Cape Girardeau, 71 Mo. 392; Phelps v. Mankato, 23 Minn. 276; Sweeney v. Newport, 65 N. H. 86, 18 Atl. 86.

And records of a city showing that a report of the mayor and alderman that common convenience and necessity require the laying out of a certain street was accepted and approved by the board of aldermen, and that the report was accepted by the common council, and the board of aldermen concurred with the common council in accepting the report, show a laying out of the street in accordance with law, and its establishment as a public way, for the care of which the city is responsible. Baker v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 53, 72 N. E. 336.

So, a statute requiring towns and cities to keep public ways in repair, though it mentions only highways, town ways, streets, causeways, and bridges, includes all ways authorized by general or special statutes to be laid out by municipal authority for any kind of public travel, and charges the city or town for injuries occasioned by want of repair therein, to any traveler lawfully using them for the purpose for which they are intended and appropriated. Gould v. Boston, 120 Mass. 300.

And such a statute applies alike to the city and to the town. Drake v. Lowell, 13 Met. 292.

And the term "public highway," used in a statute releasing a city and county from all liability for injuries sustained by reason of its streets or public highways being out of repair, includes all kinds of thoroughfares in which the public has a right of way or passage, whether graded or ungraded, finished or unfinished. Parsons v. San Francisco, 23 Cal. 462.

So, where it is declared by statute that all streets, roads, and alleys in a particular village, which have been worked and improved, and which are used as such, shall be deemed public highways, the character of the streets, roads, and alleys, and whether highways or not, is to be determined, not by the rules of the common law or the general statutes relating to highways, but by inquiring simply whether as a matter of fact any particular street or alley comes within the provision of the statute. Ilickok v. Plattsburgh, 41 Barb. 130.

A city is not liable for accidents on streets, caused by defects or obstructions therein, however, until its officers do something evincing an intention to assume jurisdiction over such streets. Johnson v. St. Joseph, 96 Mo. App. 663, 71 S. W. 106.

And municipal corporations are bound to keep only such streets and parts of streets in repair as may be necessary for the use 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) and convenience of the traveling public. Craig v. Sedalia, 63 Mo. 417.

So, in order to fix liability upon a municipal corporation for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in a street, it must be proved that the place where the injury was sustained was upon a street or sidewalk which had been opened and improved by the town, or which had been used and treated by the town authorities as a public street or sidewalk. Chapman v. Milton, 31 W. Va. 384, 7 S. E. 22.

And that a street, at the time when and the place where an accident occurred, was treated and controlled by the municipality as a public thoroughfare, must be alleged and proved in an action against the municipality to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of an obstruction upon the sidewalk thereof. Parrish v. Huntington, 57 W. Va. 286, 50 S. E. 416.

And a person injured by the breaking of a plank placed across a gully in a public street by the residents of a neighborhood without the authority of the city and at a place where the gully was not a part of the sidewalk or traveled way cannot recover damages from the city for such injury. Fortune v. St. Joseph (Mo.) 1 S. W. 287.

But, where a binding instruction is given for the plaintiff in an action against a municipal corporation for injuries sustained because of an obstruction on a sidewalk, its omission to tell the jury that the plaintiff must prove that the street was controlled and treated by the authorities of the corporation as a public street or thoroughfare is not erroneous, where the evidence upon that point is without conflict, and the fact is clearly established, and not disputed by the evidence of the defendant. Parrish v. Huntington, supra.

The question whether the statutory liability of a town or city has come into existence in case of a public way which has been laid out and at least substantially completed is one of notice, express or implied. Jones v. Collins, 188 Mass. 53, 74 N. E. 295.

b. The question of title, locality, etc.

Where a city owns the fee of land held in trust for the public as a street with a franchise in itself conferred for public purposes, authorizing it to maintain and keep the same in repair and to defray the expenses thereof by assessment upon the adjacent owners or occupants, it is its duty to see that the street is kept in repair. Hutson v. New York, 9 N. Y. 163, 59 Am. Dec. 526.

And, though the fee of a street is in the city, it is held in trust for the use of the public for the purposes of a street; and the city has no power to close it or obstruct it, so as to deprive the public of its use as a highway. Stack v. East St. Louis, 85 Ill. 377, 28 Am. Rep. 619.

So, the liability of a municipal corporation for injury to an individual arising from negligence in the construction of a work authorized by it, and for an injury arising from a defective condition of its streets, is not affected by the fact that the fee of the streets is not in the municipal corporation. Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440; Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76.

And the fact that the fee-simple title of the streets of a city is in the United States does not affect the city's liability for negligence in permitting obstructions or defects in its streets. District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 34 L. ed. 472, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury from an obstruction in a street by the fact that the land upon which the street was located belonged to the state, and not to the city, where the land had been appropriated by the city, graded, paved, and sidewalked by its authority, and was used as a public street in such a manner as to hold out ostensibly to the public that it was such a street, and as to invite them to travel upon it. Sewell v. Cohoes, 75 N. Y. 45, 31 Am. Rep. 418; Taake v. Seattle, 16 Wash. 90, 47 Pac. 220.

And this is so although the city had no right to lay out the street. Taake v. Seattle, supra.

The seashore between high and low water mark, however, is a part of the ocean, which is a public highway for vessels; but it is not a highway for public travel upon foot, or with vehicles, and the city cannot be held liable for causing or permitting a hole so near to high-water mark that a person fell into it while exercising his lawful rights. Murphy v. Brooklyn, 98 N. Y. 642.

So, a city cannot accept a grant from another state to operate a toll road beyond its limits or the limits of its state, or be held for defects in such road if operated by it when it is not authorized to do so by the laws of its own state, although the toll road is made to connect with a city toll bridge which the city has constructed under lawful authority. Becker v. LaCrosse, 99 Wis. 414, 40 L.R.A. 829, 67 Am. St. Rep. 874, 75 N. W. 84.

And an ordinance by a city directing the construction of a highway outside its corporate limits is ultra vires of the city, and does not estop the city from denying, in an action against it for an injury caused by stepping into a hole in the sidewalk, that the walk was a public sidewalk of the city. Stealey v. Kansas City, 179 Mo. 400, 78 S. W. 599.

And a statute giving the city power to cause to be graded all streets, and to construct and reconstruct all sidewalks, within the city limits, gives a pedestrian no right to recover damages for injuries from stepping into a hole in a sidewalk outside of the legal limits of the city. Ibid.

But a complaint in an action against a municipal corporation, charging that the plaintiff had to pass the intersection of two streets in the city, and that he was injured at a bridge over a gutter between one of the streets and the sidewalk on the southeast corner of said streets, sufficiently 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

charges that the injury occurred within the limits of the city. Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 150.

Nor is a city rendered liable for an injury to a person, caused by stepping into a hole in a sidewalk outside of the city limits, by the fact that the city supposed at the time the walk was constructed that the city limits had been legally extended to include the street, when in fact that extension had been declared to be illegal and void prior to the accident. Stealey v. Kansas City, supra.

But a complaint in an action against a city, charging that it had exclusive authority and jurisdiction over its alleys and sidewalks, and negligently permitted one of its said sidewalks on a named side of a named street to get out of repair, sufficiently shows that the sidewalk where the injury occurred is within the city and under its jurisdiction. Columbus v. Strassner, 124 Ind. 482, 25 N. E. 65.

So, a statute providing that it shall be lawful for the municipal authorities of cities, towns, and villages to work, grade, or macadamize all roads, streets, and highways leading to and from such cities, towns, or villages; but this privilege shall not extend to a greater distance than 5 miles from the corporate limits of such city, village, or town, merely confers a license to work, grade, or macadamize thoroughfares leading to or from such cities, towns, or villages, and does not make them responsible for the manner in which the work is done, or for failure to keep any such thoroughfare in good condition or free from obstruction, unless the action is given by statute. Stealey v. Kansas City, supra.

But a defect in a petition in an action for an injury from an obstruction in a street, in failing to allege that the street was within the city, and that it had assumed control over it, is cured by a verdict for the plaintiff, rendered on evidence introduced without objection that the street was within the city limits and maintained by it, and on an instruction that the jury could not find for the plaintiff unless they found the city was negligent in failing to keep the street in a safe condition. Henderson v. Sizemore, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1134, 104 S. W. 722.

And a complaint in an action against a town for personal injuries caused by an obstruction in its streets is not necessarily insufficient because it does not in terms show that the obstruction was within the corporate limits, particularly where it is evident from the whole complaint that it was within such limits. Royal Center v. Bingaman, 37 Ind. App. 626, 77 N. E. 811.

Nor is a municipal corporation liable for an injury caused by an obstruction in a way where it was a mere driveway across private property, and had never been accepted or used by it as a street. Sweet v. Poughkeepsie, 75 App. Div. 274, 78 N. Y. Supp. 60; Joliet v. Verley, 35 Ill. 58, 85 Am. Dec. 342; Clay City v. Abner, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 602, 82 S. W. 276.

And, if individuals build a sidewalk of their own motion outside the limits of the road, they do not thereby render the municipal corporation liable for its defects, though they might render themselves liable; and this is so though the land was taken by the road commissioners, where the taking was illegal. Doyle v. Vinalhaven, 66 Me. 348.

And, where a fence is built across land used as a way by the owner of the surrounding land, and a person attempting to pass and climb the fence is injured thereby, the city will not be held liable for the injury where the right of the city to the use of the street at the locality in question is doubtful, and the owner of the land denies the existence of any highway across his premises. Aurora v. Pulfer, 56 Ill. 270.

But all of the streets of a city are presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, to be public streets, for the safe condition of which the city is responsible; and, if it is a fact that the street in question is not a public street, the objection must be taken by answer, and cannot be raised by a general demurrer. Gallamore v. Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978.

And a town may be liable for an injury resulting to a traveler from falling into a hole in a highway, although the hole is within the location of a railroad which crosses the highway on a level therewith. Pollard v. Woburn, 104 Mass. 84.

And, if a way was a public way by prescription, which the city was bound to keep in proper condition, the fact that it was widened by agreement between the city owning the land on one side and a private owner of land on the other side does not alter its character. Gould v. Boston, 120 Mass. 300.

So, if the traveled portion of a highway is obstructed or dangerous, making it necessary for a traveler to deviate therefrom, and in doing so he uses ordinary care, the municipality will be liable for damages accruing to him from an accident caused by any defect or obstruction in that portion of the highway over which he thus necessarily passes. Larsen v. Sedro-Woolley, 49 Wash. 134, 94 Pac. 938.

And, where the part of a highway prepared for travel becomes impassable by reason of snowdrifts, and a passageway outside and over the gutter of the road is used instead of it, the town is liable for damages sustained by travelers over such outside passageway using ordinary care. Savage v. Bangor, 40 Me. 176, 63 Am. Dec. 658.

Nor can a village wrongfully suffer its highways to remain obstructed, thus forcing the public to adopt and use a way around the obstruction, and knowingly permit this latter way also to become dangerous, and take no measures either to remove the obstruction or to warn or guard the public against impending danger, and then escape liability for an accident on the theory that the accident happened on private premises, by reason of an obstruction placed thereon by the owner of the premises. Finkle v. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Valatie, 114 App. Div. 251, 99 N. Y. Supp. 715.

And, where a railroad company supplied a road or street in lieu of one which it had prepared for the bed of its road, it was the duty of the municipal authorities to see that the substituted highway, including the bridge and approach to it, were kept in such condition as to be reasonably safe for public travel; and, if they failed to do so, and a person, without fault on his part, fell over an unguarded embankment and was injured in consequence of their neglect, the municipal corporation is liable for the injury. Dalton v. Upper Tyrone Twp. 137 Pa. 18, 20 Atl. 637.

But, where municipal authorities lay out a street and direct it to be improved, but the land remains in its natural condition, having a pond upon it, the customary travel being over private property around the edge of the pond, and a person passing through it falls into the pond while passing over the private property, the city cannot be held liable for the injury without proof that, under the circumstances, it was its duty to have prepared the street and thrown it open for travel before the accident; ordinarily, the location of the street being settled, the time when its surface is to be put in proper condition for public travel is necessarily committed by the sovereign authority to the discretion of the municipal agents. Heckler v. St. Louis, 13 Mo. App. 277.

So, in Hickok v. Plattsburgh, 41 Barb. 130, the question whether a cul-de-sac, or a road which is closed at one end and only communicates with the public road or street at the other, can be a highway for the condition of which a municipal corporation is responsible, was discussed with an apparent leaning toward the position that it could be a highway; but the question was not decided.

c. Opening and improvement of ways.

There is no municipal liability as a matter of course as to a way which is neither opened nor improved.

To hold a city liable for an injury caused by a defect in a street or sidewalk, it is not sufficient that it be a public highway or street; it must also be open to the public for use; and the fact that it was so open must be alleged in the complaint. Clark v. North Muskegon, 88 Mich. 308, 50 N. W. 254.

And a city is not to be held liable for an obstruction or defect in a way because it has permitted the public to use a beaten track across a private lot as an ordinary street. Sweet v. Poughkeepsie, 75 App. Div. 274, 78 N. Y. Supp. 60.

And a village proposing to open a street, which had constructed no walk for foot passengers thereon, and had created no condition inviting passage of the roadway, there being nothing in the surroundings from which an invitation by the authorities to attempt passage along the street could be implied, is under no obligation and owes no duty to use precautions for the protection of persons in that locality; and it is not liable where a foot passenger, on a stormy night, attempted to cross this street and fell into a furrow which a contractor had run in connection with the proposed grading. McNish v. Peekskill, 22 App. Div. 631, 48 N. Y. Supp. 210.

Nor is a city under duty to see that a path or driveway made upon private property by the public in walking or driving across the same is safe from an obstruction existing upon private land, but so near to the path or driveway as to constitute a source of possible danger, since in such case there would be no right upon the part of the city to remedy the defect or fence, or guard it from the driveway. Sweet v. Poughkeepsie, supra.

And, a town is not liable for an injury occasioned to a traveler, passing from a public highway to a railroad station through a road opened by the proprietors of the railroad for that purpose but never dedicated to the public, by a block of stone lying within the limits of the highway, as located, obstructing the entrance to the road to the station, if it does not obstruct the roadbed of the highway. Smith v. Wendell, 7 Cush. 498.

And one who lives upon and is acquainted with the condition of a way which has never been formally dedicated to the public, or accepted or treated by the city in which it lies as a public way, but which was constructed by a private corporation upon its own land for its own use and convenience and the use and convenience of tenants occupying its houses upon both sides thereof, and who had seen a sign "private way" at one end thereof, cannot recover of the city for an injury sustained by reason of an obstruction therein while in the use of ordinary care, although the way opens into a public street and has been open to the public travel more than twenty years, without interruption, and the city has not closed up the entrance to the same or in any way given notice that it was dangerous. Durbin v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 398.

So, the duty of a municipal corporation to put a street in order and render it safe for the passage of travelers does not attach to a street at once upon its dedication; if, in its natural condition, it is dangerous, it is not the fault of the city; it is for the city authorities to determine how and to what extent they will improve it. St. Paul v. Seitz, 3 Minn. 297, Gil. 205, 74 Am. Dec. 753.

And a municipal corporation is not liable for an injury sustained by an individual in consequence of its neglect to put one of its public ways in repair. McCutcheon v. Homer, 43 Mich. 483, 38 Am. Rep. 212, 5 N. W. 668.

And an instruction in an action for an injury received from falling into a ditch in a street, assuming that the street had been dedicated to and accepted by the city, and that it was the duty of the city to keep it in a reasonably safe condition for travel by the public, is erroneous where the evidence shows that the city had not accepted or improved the street. Clay City v. Abner, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 602, 82 S. W. 276.

The duty of a city to keep its streets free from obstruction and in a reasonably safe condition for ordinary travel exists with reference to any streets within the limits of the city, in common use by the public, however, whether improved or not. Frankfort v. Coleman, 19 Ind. App. 368, 65 Am. St. Rep. 412, 49 N. E. 474; Murphy v. Indianapolis, 83 Ind. 76; Benton v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118 S. W. 418.

And a municipal corporation is liable for defects and obstructions in a street left in its natural condition, which has been opened to public use. Lamb v. Cedar Rapids, 108 Iowa, 629, 79 N. W. 366.

So, where, by ordinance, a street is ordered to be opened, graded, etc., for public use, the city has taken a step which it is bound to exercise with reasonable diligence, and for the neglect of which it is responsible to the public. Tritz v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 632.

And, where a city has platted a street as a part of the city, and it has been used as a highway, it is liable for injuries received by a traveler thereon where, without fault, he falls into an excavation made by the city in the street, although the city may never have assumed to improve the street, but has allowed it to remain in its natural condition aside from the excavations made therein for gravel to use elsewhere. Rowe v. Ballard, 19 Wash. 1, 52 Pac. 321.

Nor does the liability of a city for injuries received by a traveler on one of its streets from an obstruction therein depend on whether it has changed the natural grade of the street so as to make it conform to the grade established by its ordinances. Meiners v. St. Louis, 130 Mo. 274, 32 S. W. 637.

And a city which allows the rim and cover of a manhole to project an unnecessary and improper distance above the surface of a thoroughfare used as a street is not relieved from liability for an injury resulting therefrom by the fact that the street had never been regularly paved and graded. Schafer v. New York, 12 App. Div. 384, 42 N. Y. Supp. 744.

So, overseers of highways acting under the general authority of the trustees of a village, who are by law commissioners of highways, and without directions as to the specific application of labor under their warrants, may create a liability on the part of the trustees by applying the labor to the improvement of a particular street. Hickok v. Plattsburgh, 41 Barb. 130.

And, where a city grades and fills a public street so as to level it with and include as part thereof the top of a high wall erected by owners of adjoining real estate, and allows it to be used by the traveling public without erecting guards or railings to prevent accidental driving or falling over the wall, its liability to a person who falls over the wall is not affected by the fact that the wall was erected upon private property, the city having adopted it and used it as a part of the street. Aurora v. Colshire, 55 Ind. 484.

A statutory provision that every highway hereafter to be laid out that shall not be opened and worked within a period of six years shall cease to be a road for any purpose whatever requires a highway to be made passable as a highway for public travel; it need not be finished and a first-class road, but it must be sufficient to enable the public to pass over it. Horey v. Haverstraw, 124 N. Y. 273, 26 N. E. 532, reversing 47 Hun, 356.

d. Dedication and acceptance.

A way may become a public street or highway, so as to render the city responsible for obstructions therein, by a dedication on the part of the owner in the manner prescribed by statute, or by prescription; and it is not necessary in such case to make any proof of acceptance. Meiners v. St. Louis, 130 Mo. 274, 32 S. W. 637; McCann v. Bangor, 58 Me. 348.

And, if a private way has been opened from a public way, and has been dedicated to public use and become a public way, the municipal corporation is liable for a defect in the public way between the part wrought for public travel and the entrance of the private way, unless it has cautioned the public against entering such private way. Paine v. Brockton, 138 Mass. 564; Steel v. Huntingdon, 191 Pa. 627, 43 Atl. 398.

So, a way may become a public street, so as to impose upon the city the duty of keeping it free from obstruction, by a common-law dedication; that is, by deed or acts in pais of the owner. Meiners v. St. Louis, supra.

And the act of the owner of lands within the limits of a city, in constructing a street over them and the necessary bridges suitable for public travel, and in throwing them open for public use, will be held to indicate an intention to dedicate the street to public use, in the absence of evidence showing a contrary intention. Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Iowa, 73, 4 Am. Rep. 196.

But in such case it is necessary that a street should not only be dedicated to, but accepted by, a city, before the city can be charged with the duty of keeping it in repair. Winchester v. Carroll, 99 Va. 727, 40 S. E. 37; Manderschid v. Dubuque, supra; Cochran v. Shepherdsville, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1192, 43 S. W. 250; Meiners v. St. Louis, supra; Benton v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118 S. W. 418; Atkinson v. Nevada, 133 Mo. App. 1, 112 S. W. 1022; Imperial v. Wright, 34 Neb. 732, 52 N. W. 374.

While any individual may lay out a thoroughfare through his lands, such a dedication does not impose upon the municipality the duty of improving or keeping it in repair or free from obstruction; there must be an acceptance of the dedication before this duty can arise. Kennedy v. Cumberland, 65 Md. 514, 57 Am. Rep. 346, 9 Atl. 234; Ogle v. Cumberland, 90 Md. 59, 44 Atl. 1015.

land, 65 Md. 514, 57 Am. Rep. 346, 9 Atl. 234; Ogle v. Cumberland, 90 Md. 59, 44 Atl. 1015.

And a city is bound by no obligation in consequence of the action of other persons in dedicating land for public use as a street, though the rights of the public may have attached thereto. Milwaukee v. Davis, 6 Wis. 377.

Nor does the mere dedication of a street to public use by means of a recorded plat alone render the city liable for the negligent failure to keep the street in repair and free from obstruction. It is necessary to show further that the street has been accepted and its use as such invited or sanctioned by the city; but such invitation or sanction may be given by the acts of the city's proper officers as well as by ordinances. Baldwin v. Springfield, 141 Mo. 205, 42 S. W. 717.

And the adoption of an ordinance establishing the grade of a street dedicated by the owner of the soil to public use is insufficient to show an acceptance thereof by the corporation. Atkinson v. Nevada, supra.

Nor is the fact that a municipal corporation has laid drains in a private lane within the corporate limits equivalent to an acceptance of such lane as a public street; and the city does not thereby incur any responsibility for an accident caused by a person falling on the sidewalk of such lane. Tougas v. Montreal, Rap. Jud. Quebec 12 C. S. 532.

Acceptance by a municipal corporation of a street laid out by a private individual on his land, which will render the corporation liable for personal injuries for defects in it, can be shown only by an ordinance, or by repairs directed by it to be made or by ratification of repairs made. Steel v. Huntingdon, 191 Pa. 629, 43 Atl. 398.

So, where an individual dedicates land to a city for a street, to impose the duty upon the city of taking care of it the person dedicating it must have done such acts as would have enabled the city to accept the dedication at the time, and have allowed it to remain in a position to be enabled to accept it from that time on. Morse v. Troy, 38 Hun, 301.

And, when a city, by its public authorities, accepts a dedication made by an owner of land, and assumes control of the land dedicated as a street on behalf of the public, then its responsibility attaches. Milwaukee v. Davis, 6 Wis. 377.

It has been held, however, that the establishment of a street cannot be proven by parol; this can be shown only by record. Beaudan v. Cape Girardeau, 71 Mo. 392.

But the general rule seems to be that a dedication of land as a street is not within the statute of frauds, and need not be by deed or other writing, but may be effectually done by verbal declaration, and may be express or implied, and will be implied from long use by the public of the land claimed to be dedicated. Winchester v. Carroll, 99 Va. 727, 40 S. E. 37; Benton v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118 S. W. 418.

Within this rule, acts of the owner of land implying his assent to its use as a highway and indicating an intention that it be so used when accompanied by user on the part of the public authorizes an inference of prior dedication without regard to the time during which the way has been used. Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Iowa, 73, 4 Am. Rep 196.

And acceptance of a highway by a municipal corporation, to which it has been dedicated by the owner, may be sufficiently shown by public use of the road as a highway, and work done thereon by the proper authorities to repair the same. Ibid.

And to show an acceptance of a street by the public, binding upon the city, it is not necessary to show any formal action of the city council to that effect. Shartle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308, Gil. 284; Dunn v. Oelwein (Iowa) 118 N. W. 764.

Nor is it necessary to prove by record evidence that the board of trustees of a village had formally adopted or recognized a footway as a public way in order to hold the village liable for damages resulting from defects therein, where the avenue including the footway thereon was a public street in fact, and had been long recognized as such by the village through its legally constituted officers or agents. Cronin v. Delevan, 50 Wis. 375, 7 N. W. 249.

And, where an ancient public footway 2 feet wide, lying upon lands of a city and of an individual owner, was, by agreement between the city and such owner, widened to 12 feet, each party contributing a strip of land for that purpose, with mutual covenants that it should be used only for foot passengers; and it was subsequently used by the public and kept in repair by the city,—the city is liable, as for a highway, for a personal injury to a foot passenger occasioned by a defect or obstruction therein. Gould v. Boston, 120 Mass. 300.

And that a city expended money in the repair of a bridge, and assumed and exercised control and supervision over it, and it was upon a public thoroughfare in the city, is evidence tending to show an acceptance and assumption of the bridge by the city. Shartle v. Minneapolis, supra.

So, a dedication and acceptance of a public street may be implied from a general and long-continued use by the public as of right. Spencer v. Arlington, 49 Wash. 121, 94 Pac. 904; Meiners v. St. Louis, 130 Mo. 274, 32 S. W. 637; Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303.

And a city, by working a street dedicated by a landowner to the public use, thereby accepts it, and renders itself liable for an injury resulting from an excavation in it near the traveled way. Greenberg v. Kingston, 2 N. Y. Supp. 511.

And, where a way had been used as a street by the public from the earliest recollection of the oldest inhabitants, and it had been known in the plan of the city under a designated street name, and houses fronting on it had been numbered, water mains had been laid, electric wires hung on poles along its curbing, and it had been guttered, lighted, and cleaned at public expense, and the property owners and city had jointly paved portions of the sidewalk, and it was under police supervision and under the control of the superintendent of streets and within the territorial limits of the city, its dedication and acceptance as a street were established. Winchester v. Carroll, supra.

And an averment in an action against a city for an injury caused by an alleged defective bridge, that the city council used the means necessary to prevent the public from using the bridge, and that the council had taken measures for rebuilding the bridge, constitutes an admission of assumption by the city of the care and control of the bridge in question. Shartle v. Minneapolis, supra.

So, the adoption by a city and the acceptance of an amended charter providing that whenever any street, alley, or lane shall have been opened to, or used as such by, the public for the period of five years, the same shall thereby become a street, alley, or lane for all purposes; and the common council shall have the same authority and jurisdiction over and right and interest in the same as they have by law over the streets, alleys, or lanes laid out by it, constitutes an acceptance of a street of which there had been no formal act of acceptance, but which was dedicated to the public more than twenty years before and opened to public use and was in fact used by the public. Requa v. Rochester, 45 N. Y. 129, 6 Am. Rep. 52.

Nor is any specific length of possession necessary to constitute a valid dedication of a street, so as to impose responsibility upon the city for its condition; the assent of the owner to the public use and the actual acknowledgment by the public for such time that public accommodation and private rights would be materially affected by an interruption of the acknowledgment are sufficient to constitute a dedication. Hill v. Sedalia, 64 Mo. App. 494.

And the user of a way as a city street for a period corresponding with the statutory limitation applicable to real actions in the jurisdiction where the question arises will ordinarily suffice as an acceptance by the city of the street, so as to impose upon it the duty of keeping it in repair. Winchester v. Carroll, supra; Guthrie v. New Haven, 31 Conn. 308; Manderschid v. Dubuque, supra.

And acceptance by the public of a highway, resting on dedication, may be proved in an action against the municipal corporation for an injury resulting from a neglect to repair, by the same character of evidence that is sufficient to establish it in a case in which a citizen is charged with obstructing a highway, or the owner is required to surrender his land under an alleged dedication to the public use. Manderschid v. Dubuque, supra.

So, a city to which lands are dedicated for use as a street is not under duty immediately to work, grade, and put in passable condition the street thus dedicated; but, in doing the work of grading and putting in condition, it should be done with ordinary skill, and ordinary care should be observed to prevent accidents. Milwaukee v. Davis, 6 Wis. 377.

And a municipal corporation possessing reasonable notice of a defect or obstruction in one of its streets is liable for any injury arising therefrom after it is constructed and open for travelers, although the time in which it was allowed by law to build it, after its acceptance had not elapsed. Blaisdell v. Portland, 39 Me. 113.

And a city is liable for death by drowning of a small child in a large hole filled with water, knowingly left open and exposed in one of its unimproved public streets, which street had been accepted by the city as one of its public streets, and was in daily use by a large number of people with the city's knowledge and acquiescence. Newport News v. Scott, 103 Va. 794, 50 S. E. 266.

Nor can a city which has accepted the dedication of a street defend an action against it for an injury resulting from an obstruction therein, on the ground that the person making the grant or dedication was not the owner of the land. Golden v. Clinton, 54 Mo. App. 100.

And, where land is dedicated by the owner to a public use, as for a street, such dedication divests the wife of the owner of her right of dower. Benton v. St. Louis, (Mo.) 118 S. W. 418.

So, a statute declaring that, when buildings or fences have existed more than twenty years, fronting upon any way or street or land appropriated to public use, the bounds of which cannot be made certain by record or monuments, such buildings or fences shall be deemed the true bounds thereof, applies to a street dedicated to a city; and a person injured by a depression or obstruction in the street may establish the limits of the way in the manner referred to in the statute. Hutchings v. Sullivan, 90 Me. 131, 37 Atl. 883.

And, under a statute providing that, where a private way is opened and dedicated to public use, the municipality shall, when public safety demands it, either close the entrances of such way, or by other sufficient means caution the public against entering upon such way; and, if any such way is not closed, or sufficient notice is not given that it is dangerous, the city or town shall be liable in damages arising from defects therein,—if a private way in a city is opened and dedicated to public use the city is not liable for an injury caused to a person by a defect therein if it has posted a conspicuous and legible notice at the point where the person enters the street that the way is private and dangerous, whether the notice is seen or not. Smith v. Lowell, 139 Mass. 336, 1 N. E. 112.

So, a provision in a city charter prohibiting individuals from opening a public way within the limits of the city, except under an order from the common council, does not prevent the creation of a street therein by dedication and acceptance, though such dedication might violate the law; and the city cannot resist an action for an injury caused by a defective or obstructed sidewalk on the plea that the street had not been laid out as a highway by the city authorities in accordance with the city charter. Makepeace v. Waterbury, 74 Conn. 360, 50 Atl. 876.

But a highway already dedicated to the public, which it is the duty of a city to keep in proper condition, cannot be dedicated by the city to a town; the easement being already in the public, there is nothing which the city can dedicate; the transfer of its duty to repair can be made only by contract. Guthrie v. New Haven, 31 Conn. 308.

Whether a sidewalk was constructed apparently for public travel along a thoroughfare in general use by the public for travel, though such thoroughfare had not been formally accepted as a street so as to require the city to exercise reasonable care in keeping the sidewalks safe for public travel, is a question of fact. Dunn v. Oelwein (Iowa) 118 N. W. 764.

e. Improvement, repair, and other acts of recognition as affecting.

1. Generally.

A municipal corporation which suffers the public to treat land as an ordinary street is bound to keep it in a reasonably safe condition. Schafer v. New York, 154 N. Y. 466, 48 N. E. 749; Sewell v. Cohoes, 75 N. Y. 45, 31 Am. Rep. 418; Leavenworth v. Laing, 6 Kan. 274; McCann v. Bangor, 58 Me. 348; Walker v. Point Pleasant, 49 Mo. App. 244; Golden v. Clinton, 54 Mo. App. 100; Hill v. Sedalia, 64 Mo. App. 494, 2 S. W. 1019; White v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 1131; Gallagher v. St. Paul, 28 Fed. 305.

In such case it is chargeable with the same duties as though it was legally laid out; and it is liable for damages by reason of neglect to keep the same in safe condition for travel. Golden v. Clinton; Hill v. Sedalia; Sewell v. Cohoes, supra; Schafer v. New York, 12 App. Div. 384, 42 N. Y. Supp. 744; Taake v. Seattle, 18 Wash. 178, 51 Pac. 362.

And this is so although there has been no official action, resolution, or ordinance opening it as a public street. Gallagher v. St. Paul and Walker v. Point Pleasant, supra; O'Malley v. Lexington, 99 Mo. App. 695, 74 S. W. 890; Taake v. Seattle, supra.

Ancient user is evidence of a public highway and of its limits, and ancient repairs are evidence of the obligation of the municipal corporation to repair. Wiley v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303.

And the city's acceptance need not be shown by dedication or condemnation. O'Malley v. Lexington, supra.

So, making repairs and improvements, and inviting the public to travel upon a way, may be considered as evidence of the adoption of the highway by a municipality; and it may be thereby estopped to deny that the way is a public one and under its control. Spencer v. Arlington, 49 Wash. 121, 94 Pac. 904; Higert v. Green Castle, 43 Ind. 574; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780.

And, where a city or other municipality grades or otherwise improves any portion of a street for the purpose and with the result of inducing public travel thereon, there is a resulting duty to keep such portion of the street in repair, and a consequent liability for failure to do so. Ord v. Nash, 50 Neb. 335, 69 N. W. 964; Treise v. St. Paul, 36 Minn. 526, 32 N. W. 857; Lindholm v. St. Paul, 19 Minn. 245, Gil. 204.

And the continuity or apparent oneness of a way, and the distance from the place of injury to the place of repairs, and the length of time the way has been used, and the locality, and whether there are intersecting roads or streets, are all proper elements to be considered in deciding the question whether or not the way upon which repairs had been made is the same way as the one in which a defect or obstruction caused an injury. Gilpatrick v. Biddeford, 51 Me. 182.

And, evidence of repairs made by municipal authorities subsequent to the injury complained of is proper to go to the jury in an action for damages for injuries for an alleged negligent failure to repair a highway resting upon dedication, as a circumstance tending to show a previous recognition and adoption of the street as a highway. Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Iowa, 73, 4 Am. Rep. 196; Benton v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118 S. W. 418.

And evidence that the former and the present supervisor of roads within a city, who are officers under the control of the common council, had repaired a sidewalk several times, both before and after an alleged injury thereon, is admissible in an action for the injury, upon an issue as to whether or not the street on which the walk was located was a common thoroughfare maintained by the city, though it did not show that the council had expressly directed it; and such evidence is sufficient to authorize the submission of the question to the jury. Sheridan v. Salem, 14 Or. 328, 12 Pac. 925.

And, where a person was injured by a defective street, and, about five months afterwards, the city repaired the street, such subsequent repair is not inadmissible as tending to show that the city recognized the locus as a public street, because of remoteness, the remoteness affecting the force of the evidence, but not its competency. Benton v. St. Louis, supra.

Nor can a city which allows a street to be used continuously for many years as a public highway, and assumes charge of it as such, evidenced by the expenditure of money and labor upon it, under the supervision and direction of the proper village officers, escape liability for an injury caused by a defect therein, on the ground that it 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

has never formally adopted the street by recorded resolution or vote. Cronin v. Delavan, 50 Wis. 375, 7 N. W. 249; Leavenworth v. Laing, supra.

And the fact that a highway was used by the public, and that it was within the limits of a municipal corporation, is sufficient to render the corporation liable for the consequences of an excavation made under the direction of the corporation and left unguarded, whether it was one of the public streets of the city or not. Brusso v. Buffalo, 90 N. Y. 679.

And, if a road apparently, though not in fact, a public highway, is commonly used by the public; and a municipality, in the exercise of its right in improving an intersecting street, leaves the approach from the road in a dangerous condition, the duty of the municipality to the public requires the exercise by it of reasonable care to prevent such accidents as may reasonably be anticipated to happen to those traveling upon the private road with due care and in ignorance of the danger. Dennis v. Elmira Heights, 59 App. Div. 404, 70 N. Y. Supp. 312.

Nor can a municipal corporation which has treated a place as a public street, taking charge of it and regulating it, when an individual is injured in consequence of the negligent manner in which this is done, when it is sued for such injury, throw upon the other party the burden of proof of the irregularity of the proceedings by which the land became a street, or of the authority by which the street was established. New York v. Sheffield, 4 Wall. 189, 18 L. ed. 416.

And, where a city, by ordinance, authorized the construction of an embankment not only for the use of a street railway, but also as a public thoroughfare, it becomes the duty of the city to keep the same in reasonable and good traveling condition; and whether it neglected to perform such duty, in consequence of which a person was injured, is a question of fact for the determination of the jury in an action for the injury. Golden v. Clinton, 54 Mo. App. 100.

So, a statutory rule that the repairing of a way or bridge within six years before a cause of action accrues estops the town to deny the location of the way or bridge on which the accident occurred, applies to a sidewalk. McCann v. Bangor, 58 Me. 348.

And a charter provision of a city that all streets and avenues in the city opened or hereafter to be opened to public use, which shall be used as such for five years continuously, shall be deemed and taken to be public streets and avenues, does not contemplate any official action on the part of the city as being necessary to confer upon the streets and avenues referred to therein the character of public streets and avenues, so as to render the city liable for injuries caused by obstructions or defects therein. Corbett v. Troy, 53 Hun, 228, 6 N. Y. Supp. 381.

Nor does a charter provision of a city requiring all streets which have been opened and graded to be kept open and in repair make the duty of the city to keep open and in repair dependent upon the establishment of what is known as the grade of the street, or upon the final completion of the grading in conformity to such established grade, or upon a formal opening of the street by resolution of the common council. Lindholm v. St. Paul, supra.

And, where it is provided by statute that the fee of streets shown on a city plat shall be vested in the city for the use of the public, a city which, by ordinance, has accepted and improved such a street, when sued for injury resulting from an obstruction or defect in it, cannot escape liability by denying that the locality is a street. May v. Anaconda, 26 Mont. 140, 66 Pac. 759.

Mere use by the public of a portion of a street which has never been prepared for public use by the city, and which the traveling public have not thereby impliedly been invited to use, however, does not cast upon the city the duty of keeping such portion of the street in repair. Ruppenthal v. St. Louis, 190 Mo. 213, 88 S. W. 612; Garnet v. Slater, 56 Mo. App. 207; Downend v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 60, 51 L.R.A. 170, 56 S. W. 902.

There must in addition, be recognition or the exercise of jurisdiction over it. Garnet v. Slater, supra.

And a statute providing that if, in an action for damages for an injury received by reason of a defect in a highway, it appears that the municipality has at any time within six years before such injury made repairs on such way, such municipality shall not deny the location thereof, provides merely that the existence of such a way de jure shall not in that proceeding be denied; but it does not assert that the liability of the party charged to keep it in repair shall not be denied. Rouse v. Somerville, 130 Mass. 361; Gilpatrick v. Biddeford, supra.

And he may deny that the place where the injury occurred is the same way. Gilpatrick v. Biddeford, supra.

And the question whether a town had made repairs on a street within six years, so as to be responsible for personal injury resulting from a defect therein, is properly submitted to the jury in an action for the injury, where it appears that work had been done to facilitate travel on the street within six years prior to the accident, by a servant of the town, who was paid by the town for doing it. Taylor v. Woburn, 130 Mass. 494.

Nor does the fact that people were accustomed to use an embankment along which the tracks of a railway ran in a street longitudinally, as a path, of itself, constitute it a public highway which the city is required to maintain in a safe condition. Kaseman v. Sunbury, 197 Pa. 162, 46 Atl. 1032.

And, where there was a strip of land on one side of a highway as located, and between it and a row of buildings, which was not a part of the highway, the use of this strip by the public for twenty years would 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

not make it a highway, for defects or obstructions in which the town would be liable. Stockwell v. Fitchburg, 110 Mass. 305.

Aside from statutory requirement, the length of time that the user of a highway should continue to raise a presumption of adoption as a highway is usually twenty years. Beaudean v. Cape Girardeau, 71 Mo. 392.

And, where a street permitted to be obstructed, from which an injury resulted, had not been laid out in accordance with law, to hold the city for the injury it must be established that it had been used by the public for twenty years, though, if the public were not cautioned against traveling upon it, the town would be liable for an accident to persons coming out of it, as well as those entering upon it. Taylor v. Woburn, supra.

And it has been held that, where user or prescription is relied upon to establish a public highway for a defect or obstruction in which the municipal corporation is liable, there must be an uninterrupted user by the public for at least twenty years. Kennedy v. Cumberland, 65 Md. 514, 57 Am. Rep. 346, 9 Atl. 234; Taylor v. Woburn, supra.

2. Sufficiency of recognition.

The fact that a way was generally used by a great many people does not make it a public way, and an allegation to that effect, in an action for an injury caused by an alleged defect therein, charges a defect in a private way. Goodin v. Des Moines, 55 Iowa, 67, 7 N. W. 411.

Nor does the fact that other persons use the same route in going to a particular place make it a way in the sense that would impose upon the city the duty of keeping it clear. Baltimore v. Brannan, 14 Md. 227.

And no action against a municipality can be maintained for the death of a pedestrian who was killed by falling into an open space in an embankment erected longitudinally in a public street by a railroad company, either on the ground that in effect the embankment as constructed was a substitute highway, or that the permissive use of it by all persons passing along the street made the city responsible for its proper maintenance. Kaseman v. Sunbury, 197 Pa. 162, 46 Atl. 1032.

So, where a road was not a city street or highway, and no obligation rested upon the city to repair it, the city is not made liable for injuries resulting from its defective condition or obstruction by the fact that a public official of the city exercised some authority with respect thereto, where it appears that the exercise of such authority was not authorized by the city. Chicago v. Hannon, 94 Ill. App. 143.

And the fact that a city has laid drains in a private lane within its territory is not equivalent to an acceptance of such lane as a public street; and the city does not thereby incur any responsibility for an accident caused by a defective sidewalk in such lane. Tougas v. Montreal, Rap. Jud. Quebec 12 C. S. 532.

Nor do leaving an opening from a city street to a strip of land used by the public as a street, but not accepted by the city, and placing a light at the point of opening, constitute an adoption of the alleged street as a public highway which the city is bound to keep in proper condition. Downend v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 60, 51 L.R.A. 170, 56 S. W. 902.

And the fact, that after an injury occurred caused by the defective condition of a bridge over a drain crossing a street, the city appropriated and expended a sum of money in repair of the street, is not admissible in evidence in an action against the city for damages for the injury, in the absence of other acts of acceptance, as tending to show that the city had previously recognized and adopted the street. Kennedy v. Cumberland, 65 Md. 514, 57 Am. Rep. 346, 9 Atl. 234.

So, a city cannot be held to have undertaken to make repairs upon and keep in good condition a driveway to a dumping ground over private lands, not in its possession or under its control, because one of its employees directed a few teamsters to fill up holes upon such land, over which they had chosen to drive for their own convenience. Chicago v. Hannon, supra.

And, where the officers of a municipal corporation, in construction or repairing a public way, disposed of the waste rocks or earth for the benefit of an individual in such a way as to improve a private way belonging to him, the repairs so made upon the private way are made for the owner of it, and not for the municipality; and the municipality is not thereby estopped from denying its location in an action to recover for injuries sustained in consequence of defects in the way. Gilpatrick v. Biddeford, 51 Me. 182.

And, where a county owned a bridge one end of which abutted upon a city; and the city end of the bridge was connected with a public street of the city over 90 feet distant by an approach over private land; and the county paid rent to the private owner for the use of the land; and the city street commissioner had filled in a few loads of gravel at the end of the bridge on the approach, and had rebuilt or repaired the sidewalk thereon at or near the place of the accident in question, but this was done without express direction from the city authorities,—it cannot be held as a matter of law that the city had adopted the approach as one of its highways. Bishop v. Centralia, 49 Wis. 669, 6 N. W. 353.

Nor is a way constructed and kept in repair by a private corporation upon its own land for its own use and convenience and the use and convenience of tenants occupying its houses upon both sides thereof opening into a public street, having a sign "Private way" upon the corner, but left open to public travel for more than twenty 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

years, without interruption, thereby dedicated to the public; and it does not become a public way by prescription so as to render the city liable for injury from an obstruction therein. Durgin v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 398.

So, where a railroad company was allowed in condemnation proceedings to use the lands of a corporation part of which had been used by the public but was not a street; and it was stipulated that the railroad company should provide another road; and the new road passed under the tracks of the railroad and across a ditch, which was occasionally cleaned by the city employees; but there had been no formal acceptance of the same by the city,—the municipality is not liable for an injury caused to a person by falling into a ditch or sewer at the point where it crossed this road. Ogle v. Cumberland, 90 Md. 59, 44 Atl. 1015.

If the authorities of a city, or those having the city market in charge, have indicated a specified way as a way to the market, however, the city would be chargeable with negligence, if any, in permitting the way to be obstructed by nuisances. Baltimore v. Brannan, supra.

And the existence of sewers or water mains, or of a curb line established in a street, or of paving, is evidence which may conclusively show acceptance of a dedication of the ground for street purposes. Benton v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118 S. W. 418.

So, a much-traveled thoroughfare used as a public street for many years in a part of a city compactly built up, relative to which an ordinance was passed fixing its grade and extending it over other lands, is a public street which the city must keep free from obstructions and in a reasonably safe condition, even in the absence of proof of dedication. Meiners v. St. Louis, 130 Mo. 274, 32 S. W. 637.

And the enactment by a city of an ordinance providing for the construction of an embankment in a street, and the manner in which it shall be constructed, constitutes a legislative declaration of the fact that the city was in the actual possession of the street, and that it was a public thoroughfare which it was its duty to keep in proper condition for travel. Golden v. Clinton, 54 Mo. App. 100; Byerly v. Anamosa, 79 Iowa, 204, 44 N. W. 359.

And this is so though it had never accepted the street by special ordinance. Byerly v. Anamosa, supra.

And, where a street was dedicated, and the city so far recognized it as a public street as to change its name by ordinance and lay sewer along it, and suffer and permit it to be used without objection by vehicles of all kinds for a period long enough to establish a highway by prescription, the city is bound to maintain a reasonably safe way along it sufficient to accommodate travel, and is liable to one who, without fault, is injured because of defects therein, while using it for a lawful purpose, though the city had never graded it or otherwise attempted to improve it or prepare it for public travel. Brabon v. Seattle, 29 Wash. 6, 69 Pac. 365.

And, where street lamps and poles of public-service corporations have been in existence for a long time on a strip of land claimed to be embraced in a public street, the city will be held to have acquiesced in such public use of the strip, whether they were so placed in strict accordance with city charter regulations or not. Benton v. St. Louis, supra.

So, a way in which a defective sidewalk caused an injury is a public street for which a city is responsible, where it appears that it had not only been accepted, but had been improved and treated as a public street of the city, and public work had been done on it from year to year, and it was in use as a public street for a long time before the accident, and the sidewalk in question had been there for several years, and the city has assumed jurisdiction to cause it to be repaired and to reconstruct it, though for several blocks in the street there were few houses. Neff v. Cameron, 213 Mo. 350, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 320, 111 S. W. 1139; Johnson v. St. Joseph, 96 Mo. App. 663, 71 S. W. 106; Waxahachie v. Connor, (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 692.

And, where a street had been open to its full width for about forty years, and it was extensively used by the public, and the sidewalk had been laid out and used during all that time, and water mains had been laid through the street, and the village had assumed jurisdiction over it, and curbstones had been placed along the sidewalks at the expense of the village, a finding by a jury, that for its whole width it had been dedicated to and accepted by the public, and that it was legally and lawfully one of the streets of the village, is warranted. Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43.

And an avenue in a city, laid out as such by commissioners appointed for that purpose, and over which the mayor and common council have exercised their power by regulating it, and causing the curb and gutter to be set, defraying the expenses by assessment, is under their jurisdiction and control as a municipal corporation; and the corporation is bound to keep it in repair. Hutton v. New York, 5 Sandf. 289.

So, a city is liable for an injury caused by defects or obstructions in a street where it had cut the weeds and filled holes in it, and thus invited the public to use it, although no order had been made by the city council for the improvement of the street. Henderson v. White, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1525, 49 S. W. 764.

And, where a street had been in public use for twenty years, and men had been employed by the city to clean the walks in case the owners did not do it, and notice was served on the owner of property where an accident occurred to clean the sidewalk, the city will be deemed to have adopted the street as a public street, and assumed authority over it, and recognized its obligation to exercise care in respect to its condition, though it had never been opened by the city or accepted as a public street, and no grade line had ever been established thereon. Stapleton v. Newburgh, 9 App. Div. 39, 41 N. Y. Supp. 96.

And, where a street had been dedicated to public use and accepted by the city as one of its public streets, and was in daily use by numbers of people with the full knowledge and acquiescence of the city, and was lighted at the expense of the city and underlain by a sewer owned, controlled, and maintained by the city, and was under the supervision, management, and control of the city, it was sufficiently open to the public to render the city liable for an injury resulting from leaving a large hole open and exposed in it, although it was not improved with sidewalks. Newport News v. Scott, 103 Va. 794, 50 S. E. 266.

And the facts that people of the neighborhood, or abutting owners on a street, built a sidewalk along the side of it, and from time to time repaired it without ordinance of the city or order from its officers, and constructed a manhole over a sink hole on the land at private expense, and turned local drainage into it, do not relieve the city from liability for defects in the street or sidewalk, or for a dangerous condition arising from combination of the defects and the unguarded sink hole. Benton v. St. Louis, supra.

So, a street in a city which has a well-defined roadway and footpath or sidewalk, and a sewer laid through it, and a water main, and which is lighted by lamps for which the city paid, and which has had work done upon it which the city paid for, and upon which in the neighborhood of one hundred people reside, and which has been used for highway purposes for more than twenty years, is a street for which the city is responsible, and for injuries from obstructions or defects in which the city is liable. McCormick v. Amsterdam, 43 N. Y. S. R. 604, 18 N. Y. Supp. 272.

And a street which has for years been used by the public as such, and graded, ditched, and sidewalked under the immediate supervision of the city street commissioner, and upon which the city has by ordinance granted a railway company authority to lay switch tracks and to construct a culvert, will be deemed a public street of the city, for the condition of which the city is responsible, though no ordinance can be shown directing the commissioner to do the work. Conner v. Nevada, 188 Mo. 148, 107 Am. St. Rep. 314, 86 S. W. 256.

And, where the public had traveled over a way as a public highway for from twelve to fifteen years, and the city had placed and leveled the dirt upon it for years for highway purposes, and a cross walk was constructed across it near the place of injury under the immediate direction of the street commissioner of the town, the town paying therefor, it is for the jury to determine, in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction therein, whether the place was within a public street. Spencer v. Arlington, 49 Wash. 121, 94 Pac. 904.

So, evidence that a city had previously sold improvements on property where a street was situated, and authorized their removal preparatory to opening the street, and had opened the street, is sufficient to go to the jury in an action for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in the sidewalk, on the question whether or nor the city had assumed ownership and control of the property for street purposes. Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76.

And, where the witnesses on both sides speak of the street in question as a street, and ordinances for levying special tax bills for construction of the sidewalk in question are introduced by both sides, and the evidence is uncontroverted, it is sufficient to show that the place is on a public street. Taylor v. Springfield, 61 Mo. App. 263, 1 S. W. 383.

And, where an order laying out a proposed street was made; and the land embraced in it was open, uninclosed ground; and houses were erected adjoining it on both sides; and the owners were notified to build sidewalks in front of their premises, which they did; and the road commissioner was notified by the board of trustees to remove all obstructions in the street and open up the same; and the street was used so far as the houses extended; and the public was accustomed to use the sidewalks,—the jury, in an action against the village for an injury caused by a hole in the sidewalk, is justified in finding for the plaintiff, since the public had a right to assume that the street, so far as the houses extended, was in use by permission of the village as a public street. Seymour v. Salamanca, 137 N. Y. 364, 33 N. E. 304.

So, where the platform of a set of wagon scales situated in the middle of a city market building, to which sidewalks were laid from opposite sides of the street, making the platform accessible to pedestrians from every direction, had been used as a common thoroughfare by people generally both day and night for a great many years with the city's knowledge, it is properly considered a public street, and as such a person walking upon it is entitled to the protection of one using any other public street. Nitz v. Toledo, 22 Ohio C. C. 454, s. c. on subsequent appeal. 23 Ohio C. C. 350.

And in such case the city is not relieved from liability for an injury to a pedestrian, caused by the removal of the scales by the city or with its knowledge, leaving an opening which was left unguarded and unlighted, into which the pedestrian fell, by the fact that the platform was used for market purposes, and originally intended for that use only. Nitz v. Toledo, 22 Ohio C. C. 454.

So, a city which deposits a large water pipe opposite the gate of an abutting owner opening on the street, which causes an injury, is liable for the injury whether the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

street had or had not been established as a public highway, where, with its consent, permission, and knowledge, it had been used for about thirty years by the general public as a driveway or thoroughfare for the use of all kinds of teams, and for about twelve years by the occupants of the abutting property in question for ingress and egress through this gate. May v. Brooklyn, 46 N. Y. S. R. 552, 19 N. Y. Supp. 670, affirming 44 N. Y. S. R. 368, 17 N. Y. Supp. 348.

And the facts that land on which sheds and stalls were erected and used as market stands had been used as a public street or highway for more than fifty years prior to such erection, and at the time of such erection continued to be so used; and that the city, more than fifty years prior to such erection, granted land bounded on such land, describing the same as lately laid out and surveyed by a city surveyor, such grant requiring the grantees to erect a continuation of a slip thereon of a specified width, to be and remain for the free and common passage of the inhabitants of the city in like manner as the other public streets of the city then were or lawfully ought to be; and that the city thereafter directed the slip or street to be repaved, and assessed the expenses thereof upon the owners of land contiguous thereto,—are sufficient evidence, in an action against the corporation for damages caused by obstructing the same, that such slip was in fact and in law a public street or highway, and regularly established as such. St. John v. New York, 3 Bosw. 483.

So a city, which had made a contract with a corporation by which the corporation was bound to keep a certain street in good repair and permit the public to use it, and which had, during a continuous period of thirty years, held out said street as suitable for the accommodation of the public, when a person relying upon such holding out and using the street as a highway sustained an injury by reason of its defective and insufficient condition, is estopped to deny that the street was a highway, for defects and insufficiencies in which it was liable. Gilbert v. Manchester, 55 N. H. 298.

And that a city was informed at a meeting of its council, through the report of its committee, that some slight repairs had been made on a ravine in a street, is admissible, in an action for an injury resulting from an alleged neglect to repair the street, as tending to show a recognition of the street as a city street, and that the corporation was informed of the character of the repair of the street which was claimed to be insufficient. Montgomery v. Gilmer, 33 Ala. 116, 70 Am. Dec. 562.

f. Particular ways and classes of ways.

1. Sidewalks.

(a) Generally.

The rule that a municipal corporation charged with the duty of keeping its streets in repair, and of exercising a general oversight in regard to their condition and safety, is bound to maintain them free from all defects or obstructions which, by the use of ordinary vigilance and care, they can detect and remove, is applicable to sidewalks. Furnell v. St. Paul, 20 Minn. 117, Gil. 101; Manchester v. Hartford, 30 Conn. 118; Giffin v. Lewiston, 6 Idaho, 231, 55 Pac. 545; Bloomington v. Bay, 42 Ill. 503; Pfeifer v. Lake, 37 Ill. App. 367; Mt. Carmel v. Blackburn, 53 Ill. App. 658; Brown v. Chillicothe, 122 Iowa, 640, 98 N. W. 502; Bacon v. Boston, 3 Cush. 174; Bullock v. New York, 99 N. Y. 654, 2 N. E. 1; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43; Wall v. Pittsburg, 205 Pa. 48, 54 Atl. 497; Seward v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 189, 42 Atl. 451; Alexander v. Mt. Sterling, 71 Ill. 366; Frankfort v. Coleman, 19 Ind. App. 368, 65 Am. St. Rep. 412, 49 N. E. 474; James v. Portage, 48 Wis. 677, 5 N. W. 31.

No distinction exists between sidewalks and carriage ways in respect to the duty of a municipal corporation to keep them in repair. Davenport v. Ruckman, 10 Bosw. 20.

And, when a municipal corporation builds a sidewalk, so long as it remains open to the public there is an implied invitation to all travelers to use it; and one is not in the wrong who accepts the invitation in the absence of knowledge of dangers incident to the proper use thereof. Templin v. Boone, 127 Iowa, 91, 102 N. W. 789; Monmouth v. Sullivan, 8 Ill. App. 50.

And there is an implied warranty on the part of the municipality that it is reasonably safe for travelers using due care for their own safety. Monmouth v. Sullivan, supra.

Nor does the fact that a sidewalk was carefully constructed originally absolve the municipal corporation from its duty of exercising continuous oversight to keep it free from defects or obstructions, or from its liability for failure to do so. Muncie v. Hey, 164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250.

And evidence that sidewalks are constructed in the same way in other cities is not admissible in an action against a city to recover for an injury caused by an alleged defective construction of a sidewalk, for the purpose of showing that such a construction was not a defect. George v. Haverhill, 110 Mass. 506; Champaign v. Paterson, 50 Ill. 61.

And, where a town or city attempts to keep up a street by working and repairing it, and voluntarily allows it to remain with dangerous holes or excavations, with knowledge that that part of the street is being used as a walk way generally, the municipality is negligent and liable for a resulting injury. Neal v. Marion, 129 N. C. 345, 40 S. E. 116.

So, if a town from time to time repaired the part of a street where a person was hurt, and the public generally had used it as a footway, with the knowledge of the town authorities, then it was the duty of the town to keep it in a safe condition; and a person injured had the right to walk along it, unless she knew or had reason to believe, that it was unsafe or had been abandoned. Ibid.; Anna v. Boren, 77 Ill. App. 408.

And, where the law imposes upon a city the duty to take charge of sidewalks and exercise control thereof, the law presumes that the city had actual control over a sidewalk a defect in which caused an injury. Shannon v. Tama City, 74 Iowa, 22, 36 N. W. 776.

So, a charter provision of a city that the city shall be liable to anyone for any loss or injury to person or property growing out of any casualty or accident happening to any such person or property on account of any street or public ground therein is broad enough to and does include the sidewalks on the street; and under it a city is liable for an injury to a person, caused by his being precipitated through an open cellar door in a sidewalk. McLean v. Lewiston, 8 Idaho, 472, 69 Pac. 478.

And, where, in its charter, a village is made one separate road district under the direction and supervision of the trustees of the village, free from any interference or control by any other officers or persons, it cannot be claimed that a sidewalk in a street is not a part of the street, and that the trustees have no duty in regard to the sidewalk. Koch v. Edgewater, 18 Hun, 407.

And a sidewalk constructed under the superintendence of the warden of a borough, and accepted, paid for, and maintained by the borough for eight years or more, must ordinarily be regarded as authorized by the municipal authorities. Hoyt v. Danbury, 69 Conn. 341, 37 Atl. 1051.

Nor is it necessary, to hold a city liable for an injury caused by a hole or obstruction in a sidewalk, to show that the municipality either constructed, or ordered the construction of, the walk in question; it is its duty to see that its walks are in a reasonably safe condition for travel irrespective of the construction. Argus v. Sturgis, 86 Mich. 344, 48 N. W. 1085; Hillyer v. Winsted, 77 Conn. 304, 59 Atl. 40; Shannon v. Tama City, supra; Streeter v. Breckenridge, 23 Mo. App. 244; Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 250, 8 S. W. 90.

And, when a city is sued for personal injuries caused by a defect or obstruction in a sidewalk, it is not necessary to prove title to the property in the city; it is sufficient to show that the city has assumed ownership and control of it for street purposes. Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76.

And a city is not relieved from liability for injury sustained on a defective sidewalk by reason of the fact that the sidewalk was constructed by the county and originally platted as part of a public square, where the city recognized the sidewalk by constructing a gutter and placing curbstones along the side thereof, and such sidewalk was in general use by the public. Huntington v. McClurg, 22 Ind. App. 261, 53 N. E. 658.

Nor is it necessary to prove any formal dedication of the street; it is enough to show that it was in the actual possession of the city and public, and was used as a street. Schenck v. Butler, 50 Mo. App. 106; Maus v. Springfield, 101 Mo. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 634, 14 S. W. 630.

And it is not necessary to allege in the complaint that the sidewalk had been accepted by the authorities of the corporation, or to allege the name of the street; a charge that it was a public sidewalk of the town which had been obstructed is sufficient. Rosedale v. Ferguson, 3 Ind. App. 596, 30 N. E. 156.

And an ordinance of a city which shows that the city had taken a sidewalk and street crossing under its cognizance and control is admissible in evidence in an action against the city for damages resulting from a defect therein, as tending to show that it was its duty to keep them in repair. Champaign v. Patterson, supra.

Nor is it necessary, to render a city liable for failure to keep a sidewalk in repair and free from obstruction, that it should have been built under a formal ordinance, or have been so recognized as a walk by the city. O'Malley v. Lexington, 99 Mo. App. 695, 74 S. W. 890.

But the passage of ordinances reciting that the common council of the city deemed it necessary that a particular sidewalk should be constructed, and providing for its construction, amounts to an admission by the city that the public interests require it. Oliver v. Kansas City, 69 Mo. 79.

And an ordinance of the common council of a city directing a sidewalk to be prepared is admissible in evidence in an action against the city for an injury caused by a hole in the sidewalk, as tending to show that the city had recognized and taken charge of that sidewalk. Niven v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 619.

So, an allegation in a complaint in an action against a city for an injury caused by a defective or obstructed sidewalk, that the sidewalk was on the north side of a named street, and that the street was in the city, sufficiently shows that the sidewalk was within the city limits. Gallamore v. Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978.

But failure to allege that a sidewalk upon which an injury occurred in such an action was within the city is not fatal where proof was admitted without objection showing the sidewalk to be within the city limits. Ibid.

So, it is the duty of a city to keep a sidewalk in front of property belonging to it, but in charge of the police commissioners, who were appointed by the governor of the state, in repair; and such duty is not lessened by the fact that the lot is occupied by agents of the state. Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36.

To recover in an action against a city or town for damages for injuries received on account of an obstruction or hole in a sidewalk, however, the person injured must allege and prove that the street or sidewalk upon which the injury occurred was, at the time and place where the injury was sustained, controlled and treated by the town authorities as a public street or sidewalk, and opened as such. Childrey v. Huntington, 34 W. Va. 457, 11 L.R.A. 313, 12 S. E. 536.

And mere use by the public of a way as a footpath of a part of a street which has not been thrown open to public use does not cast upon the city the duty of keeping it free from obstruction and in good repair. Ruppenthal v. St. Louis, 190 Mo. 213, 88 S. W. 612.

And a city, which in improving the condition of a highway, and in grading it, cut off a part of a hill so that the highway passed through a cut from 4 to 7 feet deep, leaving the bed of the highway in a fit condition either for vehicles or pedestrians, is not liable to a person injured who attempted to use the top of the bank at one side of the cut as a sidewalk, and fell into a transverse ditch, and sustained injuries, where the city had done nothing to improve the condition of the top of the bank, and no sidewalk had been laid out or built there, and the surface of the ground was rough and in a condition due to nature and to the work which had been done on the roadway. Stadelmann v. New York, 126 App. Div. 352, 110 N. Y. Supp. 682.

In the above case Jewhurst v. Syracuse, 108 N. Y. 303, 15 N. E. 409, infra, VII., f. 1, (c), was distinguished upon the ground that in that case there was no visible boundary of the city street, and nothing to induce the belief in anyone passing and exercising reasonable care that he was not within the line thereof; while in this case there was not only nothing to indicate that the place where the plaintiff was walking was part of the street, but the presence of the embankment itself was some indication that the place for travel was at the bottom instead of at the top of it.

So, if a sidewalk has been constructed in accordance with the plans of competent engineers, and is in good repair, the possibility of an improved or less dangerous plan of construction is not an element to be considered in deciding the question of the municipality's negligence in its construction. Ince v. Toronto, 27 Ont. App. Rep. 410.

Nor is a city rendered liable for an injury caused by a want of a guard or end rail along an elevated sidewalk by the mere fact that it had permitted the use of the sidewalk by the public for several years, where the same was not within the limits of any recognized city highway. Bishop v. Centuria, 49 Wis. 669, 6 N. W. 353.

And a statute limiting the liability of a municipal corporation for injuries sustained by reason of defective highways to those which have been in use for ten years applies only to public highways in townships; and a city is bound to keep a sidewalk in safe condition for public travel from the time it is built and open for travel. Fuller v. Jackson, 92 Mich. 197, 52 N. W. 1075.

A city which lawfully exercises its governmental discretion to grade and prepare for use only the wagon roadway in part of a street, however, and omits to build sidewalks on it, is not liable for not having done so, where the uneven surface is such as to notify people that they are not invited to use it at the city's expense. Ely v. St. Louis, 181 Mo. 723, 81 S. W. 168.

But where, for a number of years, there has been a general use by foot passengers of a part of the public street lying outside the improved roadway, the city may be deemed to have recognized such use and assumed responsibility for its being made safe, although no artificial sidewalk has been constructed. Atchison v. Mayhood, 69 Kan. 672, 77 Pac. 549; Beardstown v. Smith, 150 Ill. 169, 37 N. E. 211.

So, where a section of a public sidewalk 50 feet in length had been removed, leaving a drop in the walk of some 15 inches on either side of such space; and a pedestrian stepped off the end of the walk and was injured,—the city cannot escape liability therefor on the ground that there was no walk at the place of the accident, and it was not bound to construct any. Belyea v. Port Huron, 136 Mich. 504, 99 N. W. 740.

And, where a street has been in common use for twenty-seven years; and occupants of lots abutting thereon have paid water taxes; and the sidewalk, although constructed only of coal ashes with a plank curbing, is suitable for its purpose,—it is a sidewalk for which the city is responsible though it has never accepted it as a street, or assumed to improve or maintain a sidewalk upon it. Deufel v. Long Island City, 19 App. Div. 620, 46 N. Y. Supp. 355.

So, if a portion of a street intended for the use of foot passengers becomes unsuitable for that purpose; and the public makes constant use of another part of the street between the curb line and the lot line for foot passage,—the portion thus used is a sidewalk within the usual meaning of that term, which the city is bound to keep in repair and free from obstruction. Rea v. Sioux City, 127 Iowa, 615, 103 N. W. 949.

Nor does the keeping up of a sidewalk on one side of a street relieve a town or city from liability to a person injured by falling into a hole negligently allowed to remain in another part of the street, though that part is not a sidewalk, where people generally pass over it on foot with the knowledge of the municipal authorities. Neal v. Marion, 129 N. C. 345, 40 S. E. 116.

And a surface of rock in a street naturally fitted for a sidewalk, which has been used by the public for many years as part of a continuous sidewalk, other portions of which have been constructed by the municipal corporation, which needs the removal of small irregularities upon its surface to make it reasonably safe, which removal the corporation has the power and means to do, is none the less a sidewalk because it is a natural and not an artificial one; and the municipal corporation is liable for injuries resulting from a fall of a passer-by, caused by such irregularities in its surface. Higgins v. Glens Falls, 33 N. Y. S. R. 111, 11 N. Y. Supp. 289, affirmed in 124 N. Y. 666, 27 N. E. 855.

So, where, within the limits of a highway as laid out, there was a smooth, level sidewalk about 4 feet in width and about a quarter of a mile long, separated from the carriage way only by a narrow water course or gutter, and, about on a level with the carriage way and over it, there was a large amount of travel by foot passengers and had been for a number of years, it is a mistake to rule as matter of law that the injury did not happen on a part of the street which the town was bound to keep in repair, though the footway had not been constructed or repaired by the town, and was not laid out by the town in conformity with the statute; it was a question for the jury whether the footpath was not so connected with the wrought part of the road, or with the carriage way, and so used for travel, as to make the town liable for its condition. Weare v. Fitchburg, 110 Mass. 334.

(b) Sidewalks made by citizens.

The duty of a city, under its charter, to supervise and take care of sidewalks and cause them to be kept in good repair and free from obstruction is not dependent upon the fact that such sidewalks were constructed or caused to be constructed by the city. Furnell v. St. Paul, 20 Minn. 117; Flora v. Naney, 136 Ill. 45, 26 N. E. 648; Colby v. Beaver Dam, 34 Wis. 285.

And a municipal corporation which permits a walk to be used for public travel is liable for an injury caused by an obstruction thereof, no matter how the walk came into existence. Saulsbury v. Ithaca, 94 N. Y. 27, 46 Am. Rep. 122; Ponca v. Crawford, 23 Neb. 662, 8 Am. St. Rep. 144, 37 N. W. 609.

Where the charter of a city gives it control over sidewalks in the public streets, when a sidewalk is once laid, no matter by whom,—whether by a landowner or the city,—it becomes the duty of the city to see that it is kept in proper repair and in a safe condition for travel. Fuller v. Jackson, 82 Mich. 480, 46 N. W. 721; Champaign v. McInnis, 26 Ill. App. 338; Saulsbury v. Ithaca, supra; McKnight v. Seattle, 39 Wash. 516, 81 Pac. 998.

And a charter provision that, whenever the street commissioner shall deem it necessary to repair any sidewalk constructed by the city within its limits when it is out of order, the commissioner shall direct the owner or occupant of the lot adjoining the walk to repair it; and, if the repairs are not made within the time and according to the manner prescribed, the commissioner must cause them to be made at the expense of the lot,—applies to all sidewalks which the city has ordered to be built and over which it exercises care and control. Colby v. Beaver Dam, supra.

So, if an individual voluntarily puts down a sidewalk in front of his premises, the municipal corporation may, by acquiescence in the act for a sufficient length of time, and by other acts, accept the sidewalk; and with it the corporation must take the obligation to keep it in repair and free from obstruction. Hiller v. Sharon Springs, 28 Hun, 344; Hutchings v. Sullivan, 90 Me. 131, 37 Atl. 883; Graham v. Albert Lea, 48 Minn. 201, 50 N. W. 1108; Plattsmouth v. Mitchell, 20 Neb. 228, 29 N. W. 593; Ponca v. Crawford, supra.

And such acquiescence or recognition sufficiently appear, where, after the construction of the walk, the city assumes jurisdiction over it and orders repairs to be made; or where the walk is in a public street and in constant use, and in the line of other sidewalks constructed by direction of the city or over which it has control. Plattsmouth v. Mitchell, supra.

And, where a child between seven and eight years old fell through a hole in a platform erected by the owner of a store building on the side of a street, the street having no other sidewalk than the platform on that side, the child was not a trespasser; and contributory negligence cannot be imputed to him in an action by his father against the city for the injuries received. Bradford v. Downs, 126 Pa. 622, 17 Atl. 884.

Nor is it of any consequence that such way or walk was built of earth instead of the usual materials. Graham v. Albert Lea, supra.

So, where landowners construct sidewalks though in the absence of direction by the municipality conforming to regulations prescribed by it, the municipality must use reasonable care to prevent them from becoming dangerous, and cannot escape liability for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in them on the ground that it did not build the walks or direct their construction. Lombar v. East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14, 48 N. W. 947.

And the fact that a sidewalk had been constructed by an abutting owner as a continuation of a city sidewalk does not prevent the city from being liable when a person traveling along the same and having reason to believe that it was a continuation of the city sidewalk and therefore in a safe condition was injured by a failure of the city to cause a proper barrier to be erected to prevent persons from passing by mistake along said sidewalk in the night, and falling into a creek at which it terminated. Kinney v. Tekamah, 30 Neb. 605, 46 N. W. 835.

So, a city which permits a citizen to construct a platform over a gutter in front of his place of business is bound to exercise the same degree of care toward keeping it in a safe condition for pedestrians as if it had itself constructed it, though it is not an insurer of its safe condition. Bell v. Henderson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 24, 34, 74 S. W. 206.

And, where an apron used as a continuation of a sidewalk from the curb to the roadway had been used for so many years that the city was bound by lapse of time to know that it was being used as a part of the sidewalk; and it permitted the apron to remain in place after the expiration of a reasonable time for removing it,—it is wholly immaterial on the question of the liability of the city for an injury caused thereby whether it was placed there in the first instance by the city or by private individuals. Chicago v. Loebel, 228 Ill. 52, 81 N. E. 796, affirming 130 Ill. App. 487.

And evidence that a sidewalk was built by an individual out of material furnished him by the city authorities for that purpose, and with knowledge on their part that he would build the walk in front of his premises; and that from the time it was built it was suffered to remain without repairs until an injury occurred from a defect therein; and afterwards the city authorities put in a new sidewalk at that place,—warrants a finding that the city had exercised authority and control over the street so as to render it liable for the injury. Flora v. Naney, 31 Ill. App. 493, affirmed in 136 Ill. 45, 26 N. E. 645.

If the plaintiff in an action for damages for injuries received on account of a hole in a sidewalk seeks to prove that the city authorized and directed the property owner to construct a sidewalk at the point of injury, the records of the city council are the best evidence as to what its action was, unless no such record was made as required by law; and parol evidence should not be received as to such action when such record books are accessible and can be produced. Childrey v. Huntington, 34 W. Va. 457, 11 L.R.A. 313, 12 S. E. 536.

(c) Walks outside of highway.

A municipal corporation is liable for injuries caused by defects or obstructions in sidewalks constructed on private property, where they have been treated by the municipality as public walks, and permitted to be used as such. Chicago v. Baker, 195 Ill. 54, 62 N. W. 892, affirming 95 Ill. App. 413; Mansfield v. Moore, 124 Ill. 133, 16 N. E. 246, affirming 21 Ill. App. 326; Roodhouse v. Christian, 55 Ill. App. 107, affirmed in 158 Ill. 137, 41 N. E. 748; Harrison v. Ayrshire, 123 Iowa, 528, 99 N. W. 132; Will v. Mendon, 108 Mich. 251, 66 N. W. 58; Chadron v. Glover, 43 Neb. 732, 62 N. W. 62; Badams v. Toronto, 24 Ont. App. Rep. 8.

In such cases the municipality is bound to use the same degree of diligence as it is called upon to exercise in reference to other sidewalks within the corporate limits. Mansfield v. Moore, 124 Ill. 133, 16 N. E. 246.

If a city assumes jurisdiction over a walk by constructing, maintaining, and supervising it, it is responsible for its safe condition, whether the walk is or is not on a public street. Gallamore v. Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978.

And statutes making municipalities liable for injuries caused by defective sidewalks do not require that such walks shall be wholly within the line of the street. If the municipality causes the sidewalk to be built, or assumes control of it, it is its duty to keep it in repair whether the particular place where the injury occurred is wholly within the line of the public street or not. O'Neil v. West Branch, 81 Mich. 544, 45 N. W. 1023.

And a narrow strip of land on the border of a platted block will, for the purpose of an action against the city for injuries caused by an obstruction or defect in the walk thereon, be treated as a part of a street formed adjacent to it in the platting of adjoining property, where it has been so treated by the persons interested, and it appears on the plat in such a form that it might be considered as dedicated to public use. Downend v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 60, 51 L.R.A. 170, 56 S. W. 902.

So, where a traveler stepped into a hole in a sidewalk caused by the breaking off of the end of a plank thereof, and was injured, the city cannot escape liability upon the ground that the hole was not in the walk proper, but in an extension of boards of the walk over a portion of the adjacent lot, where the walk was of uniform construction, and was apparently situated upon land devoted to the use of the public. Deland v. Cameron, 112 Mo. App. 704, 87 S. W. 797.

And, where the place where a walk was laid had been within the apparent boundary of the street for more than thirty years; and for more than ten years the walk had been laid and used by the public as the only thoroughfare for pedestrians; and it connected directly with a crossing leading over to another walk on the opposite side of the street,—the city cannot deny responsibility for the walk thus recognized and permitted to be used by its citizens, though it was laid on what was originally, at least, the end of the lots of abutting owners, a few inches outside of the street line. O'Malley v. Lexington, 99 Mo. App. 695, 74 S. W. 890.

So, where a city council erected an iron fence around a common, placing the same back from the line of the street so as to widen the street; and the city built a sidewalk on the street adjoining the common, running by the fence, which to all appearances was a part of the street, and which was constantly used by the public for more than forty years, not as a part of the common, but as a part of the street,—the jury, in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction thereon, would be justified in finding that the sidewalk in question had become a part of the street by prescription. Veale v. Boston, 135 Mass. 187.

And, where a hotel was set back 6 feet 9 inches from the line of the lot, and the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

sidewalk extended from the hotel 10 feet 10 inches into the street, the portion of the sidewalk within the lot line being constructed or paid for by the proprietor of the hotel, but the whole being open to the public to pass and repass at pleasure, that within the lot line will be deemed a part of the streets of the city, which the city is bound to keep in proper condition. Foxworthy v. Hastings, 25 Neb. 133, 41 N. W. 13..

Where a sidewalk is built by an abutting owner along a street but outside of it, and on his own land, however, the city cannot be held to any liability for a defective condition of the walk outside of the line of the street, founded upon any duty to repair such walk, where it never assumed control over it, and did not own and had no legal right to go upon the land where the injury occurred. Jewhurst v. Syracuse, 108 N. Y. 303, 15 N. E. 409.

And an obstruction left or permitted in a walk built in front of a building by the owner to communicate with the street is not one for which a city is responsible, the walk being a private way. Knowlton v. Pittsfield, 62 N. H. 535; Hebbard v. Berlin, 66 N. H. 623, 32 Atl. 229.

Nor is a municipality liable for injuries occurring upon lands of adjacent owners because of the icy condition of such lands, in the absence of proof that the municipality had exercised authority or supervision over them, merely because there was no fence between such lands and the street. Allison v. Middletown, 27 N. Y. Week. Dig. 21, 10 N. Y. S. R. 421.

And, where a highway was relocated, and between one side of the highway as relocated and a row of buildings, was a strip of land, the use of that strip by the public for twenty years would not make it a highway, for defects and obstructions in which the town would be liable, unless the twenty years were subsequent to the relocation. Stockwell v. Fitchburg, 110 Mass. 305.

So, a strip of land between a schoolhouse and the line of the sidewalk on a street, laid out, graded, and paved uniformly with the sidewalk, in accordance with plans of the architect of the schoolhouse and grounds and with the contract under which the schoolhouse was built, is not within the limits of a highway located and laid out by the city, so as to render the city liable for an injury from an obstruction therein. Sullivan v. Boston, 126 Mass. 540.

And the fact that the space in question was not separated from the sidewalk by a fence is not sufficient to show that it was dedicated generally to public use as a part of the system of highways of the city. Ibid.

And such a space is not a way entering on and uniting with a public highway, within the meaning of a statute requiring municipal corporations to close up such ways or caution the public against entering upon them under penalty of being liable for defects or obstructions therein of they failed to do so. Ibid.

2. Bridges.

Where a canal or stream of water crosses a street it is the duty of the municipal corporation to use reasonable care to furnish and maintain a bridge over it which is reasonably safe for public use. Caddagan v. Chicago, 130 Ill. App. 472; Jordan v. Hannibal, 87 Mo. 673; McDonald v. Ashland, 78 Wis. 251, 47 N. W. 434.

And this is so though it was built by a private citizen with lumber furnished by the town. McDonald v. Ashland, supra.

Bridges within the limits of a corporation are parts of the streets within or upon which they are erected, and are consequently under the control of the municipal authorities in the same manner and to the same extent as are other portions of the streets. Jacksonville v. Drew, 19 Fla. 106, 45 Am. Rep. 5; Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169; Eudora v. Miller, 30 Kan. 494, 2 Pac. 685.

And a city having the power to levy taxes to defray the expenses of lighting the street has also power to furnish lights in its bridges; and it is its duty, in the exercise of such power, to do so in such a manner as to afford protection to those passing, against dangers which may be incident to their use; and it is liable for injuries resulting from a neglect of that duty. Chicago v. Powers, supra.

The rule that a municipal corporation acts judicially in selecting a plan upon which a public improvement is to be constructed, and that no private action will lie for lack of judgment in that respect, has no application to an injury resulting from its negligent construction of a bridge. Jordan v. Hannibal, 87 Mo. 673.

And, where a city constructs a viaduct over a river and railroad tracks for the use of the people and the convenience of public travel, it assumes the duty to maintain it, and is bound to keep it in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the public. Denver v. Baldasari, 15 Colo. App. 157, 61 Pac. 190.

And a city which permits a private bridge erected in a public street by the side of a public bridge to remain as an apparent and continuing invitation to the public generally to travel over it is charged with the duty of keeping it in a reasonably safe condition for such travel. Detwiler v. Lansing, 90 Mich. 484, 55 N. W. 361.

Nor is the liability of a city which maintains a slip crossed by a bridge much narrower than the street, with no protection in the course from the sidewalk to the bridge to prevent persons proceeding in that direction from falling into the slip, for an injury to a person who thus fell, affected by the fact that the slip is a natural channel, or one made before the limits of the city were extended so as to embrace it, the duty to render it safe to the public being the same in either case. Chicago v. Gallagher, 44 Ill. 295.

And a city is not released from its duty and liability, with reference to a bridge situated wholly within its limits, to keep it in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

repair, by the fact that the bridge was in the first instance built by the county,—especially when the circumstances and conditions under which it was built and its size and cost are not shown, or that it was not built prior to the incorporation of the city and while there was no town, village, or other collection of inhabitants in the vicinity. Eudora v. Miller, supra.

So, the duty of a city to keep a bridge situated within its limits, with its approaches, in a safe condition, and its responsibility for the performance thereof, are not affected by the fact that the city contains a population of less than 600 and forms a part of two road districts in the township. Ibid.

But cities, in the construction of bridges across their streets, in providing against such casualties as a cautious and prudent man should foresee and anticipate, must take into consideration the size and nature of the stream, the character and features of the adjoining grounds, the relative position and formation of the abutting land, its liability to overflow, and the probable extent and duration of such overflow. Bradford v. Anniston, 92 Ala. 349, 25 Am. St. Rep. 60, 8 So. 683.

A municipal corporation cannot be held liable, however, for an injury caused by a defect in an approach to a bridge maintained at a railway crossing, which is not a place which the city is bound to keep in repair; and does not become liable therefor by the fact that, knowing of the existence of the defect, it suffered it to remain without notice or warning to the public after it was dangerous. Rouse v. Somerville, 130 Mass. 361.

And, until the city assumes control over a bridge erected in a street without its assent or authority, it is not liable for its not being kept in repair. Joliet v. Verley, 35 Ill. 58, 85 Am. Dec. 342.

Nor can the trustees of a canal, by building a bridge over their canal within the limits of a city, impose upon the city the burden of keeping it in repair; and the city is not under any obligation to make approaches or passageways to a bridge so erected for the convenience of its citizens; its obligation in this respect is the same as that in relation to opening a new street. Ibid.

And the duty of building, maintaining, and operating a suitable drawbridge constituting a part of a public highway over a navigable river is a public, governmental duty; and no liability to an individual for negligence in the construction or operation of the draw attaches to a municipal corporation charged with this duty, unless imposed by statute. Daly v. New Haven, 69 Conn. 644, 38 Atl. 397.

But, where a bridge is erected across a canal within the corporate limits of a city without the authority of the city, if the trustees of the canal do not object the city has authority to make approaches to the bridge and exercise control over them, and where it does so it is under obligation so to exercise authority as not to endanger persons using them. Joliet v. Verley, supra.

So, an approach to a bridge over the tracks of a railroad built pursuant to a statute providing that at the crossing of a highway the crossing shall be by means of a bridge over the railroad, and that the approaches are to be made and kept in repair by the railroad corporation, giving the city no right to interfere with the construction and repair of the approaches; a person having been injured by falling into a hole in a sidewalk within the limits of the approach,—is not a way which the city is bound to keep in repair, and for injuries from defects in which it is liable. Rouse v. Somerville, supra.

And in such case the city has no power to agree with the railroad company to keep such approaches to the bridge in repair. Ibid.

And, in an action against a city for an injury to a person, occurring by reason of its negligence in regard to protecting the sides of an elevated approach to a bridge, the question whether the city had assumed such control of the approach as to make it responsible is an inference of fact to be drawn from all the testimony by the jury, and not a question of law for the court. Manchester v. Ericsson, 105 U. S. 347, 26 L. ed. 1099.

So, where a county purchased of private owners a bridge one end of which abutted upon a city, and the approach of the bridge on the city side was constructed over land not included in any city highway, the county, and not the city, is under obligation to keep the approach to the bridge free from obstruction and in repair, unless the city adopts such approach as one of its highways. Bishop v. Centralia, 49 Wis. 669, 6 N. W. 353.

And a plank walk built upon the approach to a bridge, connecting the sidewalk on the street leading to the bridge with the walk on the side of the bridge for foot passengers, is a sidewalk in fact and in law, and not a part of the approach proper to the bridge, or of the bridge; and, in the absence of a statutory provision making municipalities liable for defective sidewalks, an action will not lie for injuries sustained by reason of defects in such walk. Saunders v. Gun Plains Twp. 76 Mich. 182, 42 N. W. 1088.

3. Crossings.

It is the duty of a city to exercise reasonable diligence to keep its crossings in reasonably safe condition for persons to travel. McLeansboro v. Trammel, 109 Ill. App. 524; Gallagher v. Tipton, 133 Mo. App. 557, 113 S. W. 674.

In the light of the plan adopted by the city. Gallagher v. Tipton, supra.

And a city which has built and maintained a cross walk, and thereby invited people to use it, cannot tear it up and make an excavation in its place and leave the same unguarded by barriers or lights in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the nighttime, and then escape responsibility for a resulting injury on the ground that there was no longer any cross walk there. Alexander v. Big Rapids, 76 Mich. 282, 42 N. W. 1071.

Nor is a municipal corporation at liberty, where a street crossing has been established de facto by public use, merely because no artificial crossing has been constructed, to intersect the crossing which the public have established for themselves with dangerous ditches and pitfalls. Beardstown v. Smith, 150 Ill. 169, 37 N. E. 211.

And a city is under legal obligation to maintain in a reasonably safe condition for pedestrians that section of a highway at a street crossing which lies within the lines of the sidewalk if extended, where it appears from the existence of a beaten footpath at such point that the same is used for public travel, even though the city had constructed a cross walk on the opposite side of the street. Comiskie v. Ypsilanti, 116 Mich. 321, 74 N. W. 487.

And, where a footpath was worn by persons entering a street from another street abutting on, but not crossing, it, between the sidewalk and the wrought part of the street, through a grass plat; and this path has been known and recognized by the city as a part of the regular line of travel,—it is not relieved from liability for an injury resulting from an obstruction therein by the fact that it had not itself prepared the crossing at that place, where it has provided no other means of crossing, and erected no barrier and given no warning. Aston v. Newton, 134 Mass. 507, 45 Am. Rep. 347.

So, where a city is made responsible for injuries occasioned by defects in the carriage way or street proper and in the cross walk, but not for those occasioned by defects in the sidewalks, it is liable for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction at the intersection of two streets a little outside of the line which bounds lots on one street extended across the other, the place being upon the corner and not directly in front of the lot with reference to either street, the sidewalk at that point being regarded as a part of the cross walk. O'Neil v. Detroit, 50 Mich. 133, 15 N. W. 48.

And, while a city is under no obligation to construct a crossing over an alley connecting the walks of the street, if it elects to leave the alley in its natural state it is its duty to keep it free from obstruction; and, if it permits persons to place loose boards there, which become warped and shifted about, rendering it dangerous for persons having occasion to cross the alley, it will be liable to the same extent that it would be had it undertaken to construct a crossing and allowed it to become out of repair. Springfield v. Tomlinson, 79 Ill. App. 399.

So, where a sidewalk of a street crosses another street, and the crossing habitually used by foot passengers is a bridge over a drain, there being no stepping stones or other convenient crossing, such bridge so used is to all intents and purposes part of the sidewalk; and the city is liable for damage sustained by foot passengers on the bridge because of holes or defects therein, to the same extent as if the injury occurred on the sidewalk itself; and, if the injury arose from a defect of the bridge of which the city had notice, it is liable in damages for the injury sustained. Atlanta v. Champe, 66 Ga. 659.

Nor does the fact that a usual street crossing in a city constitutes a covering for a drain deprive a traveler of the right to use it, if the inhabitants of the city and others use it for a crossing; and, if he receives injuries by reason of its unsafe condition, which the city might have obviated, it must respond in damages. Champaign v. Patterson, 50 Ill. 61.

And, where an apron crossing a gutter in a city street was built by the owner of adjoining property without consent of the city, and the city never formally adopted it or made any repairs upon it, but there was evidence that it had existed there and been actually used as a part of the public thoroughfare for a considerable length of time with knowledge of the city and without objection on its part, a presumption arises that the city had adopted the apron as a part of the street crossing, and had become liable for injuries caused by a defective condition thereof of which it had notice; and the continuance of such condition for several weeks would create a presumption of notice. Johnson v. Milwaukee, 46 Wis. 568, 1 N. W. 187.

Nor can a city escape liability for an injury to a pedestrian who fell and broke her arm in consequence of an obstruction in a cross walk upon one of its streets, upon the theory that it does not appear that the cross walk in question was ever built or accepted by the city, where it was in a public way under the charge of the city authorities and had existed there for some years, since in such case presumptively it was constructed by and under the authority of the city; and, even though it was an obstruction in a public highway, the duty to keep it in proper and safe condition devolves upon the city. Walker v. Lockport, 43 How. Pr. 366.

And the neglect of other cities in the construction or management of their crossings is not an excuse or justification for a particular neglect of a particular city; and, in an action against it for damages for injuries alleged to have resulted from a defective street crossing, evidence of the manner in which other cities and towns of similar character and size in the immediate section of the country constructed their crossings is incompetent. Champaign v. Patterson, supra.

A city cannot be held liable, however, for an injury caused by stepping off a cross walk into a gutter at night, on the ground that a guard was necessary, where it appears that the person injured got into the gutter in a way which a guard or railing would not have prevented. Gallagher v. Tipton, supra.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And, where the negligence charged against a city was not in failing to construct a proper crossing, but in maintaining an open ditch across a path in a street, which was used by the public, an instruction with reference to the discretionary power of cities to construct street crossings is properly refused as being inapplicable to the case. Beards-town v. Smith, 150 Ill. 169, 37 N. E. 211.

And a city is not liable for an injury caused by a defective bridge extending from the street to the sidewalk over a drainage ditch not at a regular public crossing or street intersection, which was built solely for the convenience of an owner of abutting land, and was not in general use by the public, and was of no public utility, though, prior to the injury, the city, after taking up the bridge for the purpose of deepening the ditch, had replaced the same, and had subsequently made some repairs upon it. Crawford v. Griffin, 13 Ga. 562, 38 S. E. 988.

But an instruction in an action for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, based on the supposition that the place of injury was not a regular crossing for foot passengers, is properly refused, where the evidence shows that it was in the heart of the city, and was used by the general public as a pass way. San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex. Civ. App.) 78 S. W. 28.

Negligence respecting the construction of a cross walk over a gutter is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury to a pedestrian who stepped off of it at night. Gallagher v. Tipton, 133 Mo. App. 557, 113 S. W. 674.

4. Alleys, tunnels, and passageways in public buildings.

No duty upon the part of cities to keep alleys in good repair or in a safe and reasonable condition for public travel existed at common law. Face v. Ionia, 90 Mich. 104, 51 N. W. 184.

And a public alley, the travel upon which was the same as is customary in the use of alleys, is not a public street or highway, in contemplation of a statute giving a remedy for injuries received upon defective or obstructed streets or highways. Ibid.

A municipal corporation is not bound to the same degree of care over its alleys as over its streets until the alleys by their use in fact become public streets; the care bestowed on each must be measured by the public use, and is proportioned to its character and the public needs. Musick v. Latrobe, 184 Pa. 375, 39 Atl. 226.

And an alley not open for public use, or used in fact as an alley, and which exists only on a recorded plat of a city addition, is not within ordinances prohibiting uncovered excavations near an alley or other public place. Hunter v. Weston, 111 Mo. 176, 17 L.R.A. 633, 19 S. W. 1098.

But an alley retains its character as an alley which the city must keep clear from obstructions, although the lots on both sides thereof are owned by one person, and it is so intersected by a railroad as to make it practically impassable. Osage City v. Larkin, 40 Kan. 206, 2 L.R.A. 56, 10 Am. St. Rep. 186, 19 Pac. 658.

So, where a tunnel under a river constituted a highway of a city, it was the duty of the city to use reasonable efforts to keep it in a safe condition for travel, or, if necessary to prevent injury, to close it until it could be put in a safe condition; and, where the tunnel leaked, and large quantities of ice formed on the footway, which had been chipped up and not removed, and could not be seen until a passenger was in the midst of it, it was the duty of the city to have barred all ingress, or to have given notice of the public danger; and, where a person injured was guilty of no want of care, the city is liable for the injury. Chicago v. Hislop, 61 Ill. 86.

A flight of stairs in a building belonging to a municipal corporation, leading from the outside of the building to a room in it, however, is not a highway or town way within the meaning of a statute giving remedies for death, injury, or damage caused by defects in such a way. McNeil v. Boston, 178 Mass. 326, 59 N. E. 810.

Nor is it a way entering on or uniting with an existing public highway, within the meaning of a statute in regard to causing the entrance of such ways to be closed when the public safety demands, or cautioning the public against entering them when dangerous. Ibid.

And, where a room in the building was used as a polling place by the public, the use of the stairway, like the use of the room, is merely permissive during such time as the public authorities continue to devote the building or the room to that purpose, and may be stopped at any moment, and does not constitute a dedication of the stairs as a way to the public. Ibid.

5. Park paths, bicycle paths, etc.

A municipal corporation is bound to see that a pathway used by the public as such through a public park is kept in reasonably safe condition for pedestrians. Weber v. Harrisburg, 216 Pa. 117, 64 Atl. 905.

And a boulevard 150 feet wide, of which 60 feet is graded, while the remainder is occupied by grass plats and sidewalks, and is under the control of park and boulevard commissioners, who constitute a city agency, is a street, for the defective condition of a sidewalk on which the municipality is liable as much as if the boulevard is under direct control of the common council. Burridge v. Detroit, 117 Mich. 557, 42 L.R.A. 684, 72 Am. St. Rep. 582, 76 N. W. 84.

And the fact that the control of a city boulevard is vested by the statute in the board of commissioners of parks and boulevards rather than the common council does not make the boulevard any the less a city enterprise for which the city is responsible. Ibid.

So, if, in the course of repairing a building, the servants and agents of a city, acting by its authority, negligently suffer adjoining land within its control to be in a dangerous condition without proper notice to persons exposed to the danger, coming there rightfully and using due care, the city is responsible as any private owner would be for an injury sustained by such a person by reason of such negligence, where the place of injury consists of a footpath which had been used by the public for many years and from time to time prepared and cared for by the city, and is within a public common which has long been used by the inhabitants of the city; and it is immaterial whether the title in the land is or is not in the city. Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485.

Where a recovery is sought against a municipal corporation for an injury caused by an obstruction or defect in a highway in a park, however, the existence of the highway must be proved as such. Blair v. Granger, 24 R. I. 17, 51 Atl. 1042.

And, where a city holds a common for the public benefit, and not for its emolument or as a source of revenue, and has constructed and kept in repair footpaths on the common as a part of the common for the comfort and recreation of the public; and such footpaths have never been laid out as highways or town ways, and are not a part of the city's system of highways or streets,—it is not liable under the statute for any defect or want of repair in them. Steele v. Boston, 128 Mass. 583.

Nor are paths marked out, graded, paved, repaired, and kept free from obstruction by a municipal corporation, crossing common ground used by the inhabitants as a place of public resort or recreation, and serving as a means of communication between public streets with which they connect, between posts, such as are usual at the entrance of walks, designed for foot passengers, ways opened and dedicated to the public use within the meaning of a statute providing for recovery of damages for injuries arising from defects or obstructions in the public ways. Oliver v. Worcester, supra.

So, a city which voluntarily constructs a cinder bicycle path along the side of one of its streets must construct and maintain it so that it will be reasonably safe for the ordinary use for which it is intended. Prather v. Spokane, 29 Wash. 549, 59 L.R.A. 346, 92 Am. St. Rep. 923, 70 Pac. 55.

And it cannot escape liability for an injury caused by an obstruction at the entrance of a bicycle path, on the ground that it was not a public highway but a part of one of the parks of the city, where the bicycle path was used by great numbers of people both in the daytime and at night, and that fact was known to the authorities, it being their duty, therefore, to see that the path was reasonably safe for the use for which it was intended. Collett v. New York, 51 App. Div. 394, 64 N. Y. Supp. 693.

Nor is the location of a bicycle path so far a governmental function that a city making it will be relieved on that ground from liability for injuries caused by a location which is unsafe for ordinary travel, for which it is intended. Prather v. Spokane, supra.

And a city which locates a turn in a bicycle path at a street corner within 4 feet of the gutter of the cross street, into which persons using it are liable to ride and be injured, without any barriers, signs, or other means of notifying travelers of the danger, is liable to a traveler who, after dark, in the exercise of ordinary care, goes over the curb and is injured. Ibid.

g. Streets in annexed territory.

When a city procures the annexation of territory traversed by a country road, it becomes a street of the city, and the city becomes chargeable with all the duties with reference thereto that it owes with reference to any of the public streets and alleys of the city. Louisville v. Brewer, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1671, 72 S. W. 9; Frankfort v. Coleman, 19 Ind. App. 368, 65 Am. St. Rep. 412, 49 N. E. 474; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Richards v. New York, 16 Jones & S. 315; Hanley v. Huntington, 37 W. Va. 578, 16 S. E. 807.

Unless it is abandoned as a public road in the manner provided by law. Hanley v. Huntington, supra.

And a formal recognition of the fact by act of the governing board or body of the city is unnecessary. Louisville v. Brewer, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1671, 72 S. W. 9.

And this is so whether the road was originally laid out and opened by the board of county commissioners, or had become a public highway by user. Frankfort v. Coleman, supra.

Nor is the liability of a city for damages for an injury from an obstruction in a street affected by the fact that the defect or obstruction complained of existed at the time of the incorporation of the village. Nelson v. Canisteo, 100 N. Y. 89, 2 N. E. 273.

Approval of a plat of a proposed addition to a city by the governing body, however, does not constitute an acceptance of the streets thereon laid out, or amount to an act of jurisdiction over them, or impose an obligation upon the city to keep them in repair. Downend v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 60, 51 L.R.A. 170, 56 S. W. 902; Johnson v. St. Joseph, 96 Mo. App. 663, 71 S. W. 106.

Although such plat vests the fee of the streets therein described in the city, and the charter of the city provides that it shall be unlawful to make or file any such plat without the approval of the common council. Downend v. Kansas City, supra.

Nor do such formal acceptance and approval of the plat or addition of land, and user by the public of streets in such addition, of themselves impose on the city the obligation to keep the streets in repair; but they are evidence to go to the jury on the question whether the city has assumed jurisdiction of streets so as to impose the obligation to keep them in repair. Johnson v. St. Joseph, supra.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, where a statute annexes a tract or land to a city, and the selectmen of the city are authorized to lay out streets therein, but provides that the city shall not be obliged to complete the streets sooner than it may deem expedient; and, pursuant to this authority, the city laid out various streets over the annexed tract,—in order to render the city liable for an injury caused by an obstruction or defect in one of the streets thus laid out it is not sufficient to prove merely that the way complained of had been so traveled and used as to become a highway de facto; it must appear not only that the way had been laid out, but that the mayor and aldermen, by an official act, had determined upon its completion,—that is, that it should be graded, fitted for travel, and opened for use. Bowman v. Boston, 5 Cush. 1.

And, where an injury was caused by a defect or obstruction in a highway in a town, and afterwards a city was incorporated including a part of the territory of the town, the city is not jointly liable with the town for the injury because the electors who resided in the territory which afterwards formed part of the city participated in the election of the commissioners by whose negligence the town was charged, where, at the time of the accident, the town was duly incorporated, and its limits had not since been changed. Embler v. Wallkill, 132 N. Y. 222, 30 N. E. 404.

Nor is a city liable for injuries sustained by reason of an excavation or ditch crossing a highway in an annexed district, where the duty of keeping in repair the roads, streets, and avenues in the annexed district is not imposed upon the city by law, but exclusively upon the department of parks without any control by the municipal corporation. Ergholt v. New York, 66 How. Pr. 161.

But a statute providing that the commissioners of the department of public parks of a city shall have exclusive power to locate and lay out and construct and maintain all public parks, streets, roads, and avenues, locate all bridges, and tunnels, and shall have exclusive control of the maintenance and construction of all public parks within the territory annexed, and to construct and maintain all bridges, tunnels, sewers, streets, roads, and avenues so laid out, gives to the park commissioners control exclusive of any other officers, and not exclusive of the city; and it does not operate to exempt the city from responsibility for streets in the annexed territory. Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622.

h. Abandonment and closing.

A municipal corporation has power to abandon streets, and thus to exonerate itself from keeping them in repair for public use. Anderson v. Turbeville, 6 Coldw. 150.

And, where it is provided by statute that a highway must be open and worked for six years, a highway, although properly laid out, if open and worked for a part of the distance only as described in the survey, ceases, after the lapse of more than six years, as to the part not open, to be a highway for any purpose. Horey v. Haverstraw, 124 N. Y. 273, 26 N. E. 532.

But a city or village seeking to escape liability for an injury on a street caused by an obstruction or defect thereon, on the plea that the street had been abandoned, must prove such abandonment. Hanley v. Huntington, 37 W. Va. 578, 16 S. E. 807; Horey v. Haverstraw, 124 N. Y. 273, 26 N. E. 532, reversing 47 Hun. 356.

And, where a street is shown to have been legally laid out as a highway, a presumption of its continuance as such arises; and the burden of establishing that a portion of it had ceased to be a highway, so that the city would not be responsible for an injury from an obstruction or defect therein, rests upon the party asserting it. Horey v. Haverstraw, supra.

And, where a street was laid out legally as a highway, it does not follow that, because a portion of it remains a highway, that all of it does. Ibid.

And, where no vote was passed to close a highway or street, and the obstruction or excavation was lawfully placed or made in it, the city or town is liable if it had notice, or might have had notice, of the defect, unless it used reasonable care and diligence to protect the traveling public from the obstruction or excavation. Jones v. Collins, 188 Mass. 53, 74 N. E. 295.

So, where a public way has been closed to public travel by vote of the proper public authorities, it becomes the duty of the municipality to give proper notice thereof if it wishes to put an end to its statutory liability for failure to keep it in proper condition. Ibid.

And, where a city street had been discontinued, but was continually in use by the public, and no other road was opened for travel between the same points, and no notice was posted and nothing done to indicate that the road was not to be used, and the road to be substituted for it was not completed, the city is liable for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in the old way without notice of the obstruction. D'Amico v. Boston, 176 Mass. 599, 58 N. E. 158.

And, though a highway or street has never been established as such, and though the city has the power to close it up, it is bound to use reasonable care in doing so to prevent injury to those who, as is well known to the city, will continue to use it as usual until they are notified that it is closed, by actual notice from the city, or by obstructions placed on or across it. May v. Brooklyn, 46 N. Y. S. R. 552, 19 N. Y. Supp. 670, affirming 44 N. Y. S. R. 368, 17 N. Y. Supp. 348.

Nor can a city absolve itself from the obligation to keep a street in proper condition for travel by merely adopting a public resolution vacating it, where the sidewalks are permitted to remain and be used as they were before the vacation. In such case the city's duty to repair is the same as it 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

is with respect to other walks under its control. Fritz v. Watertown (S. D.) 111 N. W. 630.

So, where a city charter provides that the common council shall designate on the city map all such streets as cannot be put in proper condition for general travel without too great expense, after which the city shall not be liable for accidents or injuries to persons caused by their defective condition; if the city desires to escape responsibility for a street it must comply with the requirements of the charter, and the burden of proof rests with it to show that it has done so. McCormick v. Amsterdam, 43 N. Y. S. R. 804, 18 N. Y. Supp. 272.

Where a public way has been closed to public travel by a vote of the proper public authorities, however, and it gives proper notice thereof, its statutory liability is ended for the time being. Jones v. Collins, supra.

And, where a street is closed under and pursuant to a statute authorizing it for the purpose of separation of the grades of the street and a railroad crossing it, the city can give notice to the public by signs or a barrier that the street has been closed; and, if this is properly done its responsibility for excavations or obstructions in the street is suspended during the time the notice or barrier is maintained, and until the street is reopened to travel. Torphy v. Fall River, 188 Mass. 310, 74 N. E. 465.

So, a statute providing that all highways that have ceased to be traveled or used as highways for six years shall cease to be highways for any purpose applies to a road which for six years is not only not used and traveled, but is impassable for conveyances of any kind, is fenced off, and the public travel by another route, so that its legal character as a highway is destroyed; and the city is not liable for an injury by an obstruction or defect therein. Horey v. Haverstraw, supra.

And the destruction of the legal character of a road as a highway by its being so fenced off is not prevented by the fact that at the beginning the road was rendered impassable, and fenced off by a trespasser. Ibid.

But the power conferred on a city to regulate or abolish streets and alleys does not empower it to authorize an individual to close any part of a public highway and appropriate it to his own use. Kalteyer v. Sullivan, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 488, 46 S. W. 288.

And a city cannot grant a right to use a street for purposes other than that of travel, because it has so used it for more than twenty-one years, when such use had been for only three days in each week and for only one half of each day so used, and, when not being thus used, the street has been used for public travel the same as other streets of the city. Herrick v. Cleveland, 7 Ohio C. C. 470.

Nor can the dissolution of a municipal corporation be inferred from the fact that unauthorized persons repair the roads in the corporate limits; and a municipal corporation sued for an injury happening on a defective bridge cannot defend by proving that the highway commissioners of the township had for two years prior to the date of the accident caused the road upon which the bridge was located to be worked by labor of the township, and township taxes had been levied for that purpose. Mechanicsburg v. Meredith, 54 Ill. 84.

The question whether the statutory liability of a municipal corporation is in existence in the case of a public way, when it has been closed by vote after it has once been opened, is one of notice, express or implied. Jones v. Collins, supra.

VIII. The degree of diligence or care as affecting liability.

a. General rules.

A municipal corporation is not responsible for every accident that may occur on its streets within its corporate limits. Vandalia v. Huss, 41 Ill. App. 517; Centralia v. Krouse, 64 Ill. 19; Streator v. Liebendorfer, 71 Ill. App. 625; Aurora v. Pulfer, 56 Ill. 270; Wilson v. Granby, 47 Conn. 59, 36 Am. Rep. 51; Cammatt v. Haverhill, 197 Mass. 76, 83 N. E. 331; Vicksburg v. Hennessy, 54 Miss. 391, 28 Am. Rep. 354; Hunt v. New York, 109 N. Y. 134, 16 N. E. 320; Kelchner v. Nanticoke, 209 Pa. 412, 58 Atl. 851; Parrish v. Huntington, 57 W. Va. 286, 50 S. E. 416; Van Pelt v. Clarksburg, 42 W. Va. 218, 24 S. E. 878.

The mere existence of obstructions in a street or on a sidewalk is not alone sufficient to charge the municipality with liability for injury to a traveler, caused thereby. White v. New Bern, 146 N. C. 447, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1166, 59 S. E. 992; Kenyon v. Indianapolis, Wilson, Super. Ct. (Ind.) 129; Gosport v. Evans, 112 Ind. 133, 2 Am. St. Rep. 164, 13 N. E. 256; Butler v. Oxford, 186 N. Y. 444, 79 N. E. 712; Hunt v. New York, supra.

And this is so though the obstruction may cause injury. Van Pelt v. Clarksburg, supra; Yeager v. Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484, 21 S. E. 752; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Dayton v. Glaser, 76 Ohio St. 471, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 716, 81 N. E. 991.

Nor is a municipal corporation an insurer against all injury which may result from obstructions or defects in its public streets. Stidham v. Delaware City (Del.) 67 Atl. 175; Anderson v. Wilmington (Del.) 70 Atl. 204; Colbourn v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 443, 56 Atl. 605; Taylor v. Manson (Cal.) 99 Pac. 410; Hennepin v. Coleman, 132 Ill. App. 604; Nokomis v. Farley, 113 Ill. App. 162; Chicago v. Apel, 50 Ill. App. 132; Joliet v. Meaghan, 22 Ill. App. 255; Chicago v. Glanville, 18 Ill. App. 308; Chicago v. Watson, 6 Ill. Rep. 344; Chicago v. McGiven, 78 Ill. 347; Lockport v. Licht, 221 Ill. 35, 77 N. E. 581; Michigan City v. Boeckling, 122 Ind. 39, 23 N. E. 518; Gos- port v. Evans, supra; Franklin v. Harter, 127 Ind. 446, 26 N. E. 882; Monticello v. Kennard, 7 Ind. App. 135, 34 N. E. 454; McQueen v. Elkhart, 14 Ind. App. 671, 43 N. E. 460; Lindsay v. Des Moines, 74 Iowa, 111, 37 N. W. 9; Fugate v. Somerset, 97 Ky. 48, 29 S. W. 970; Elam v. Mt. Sterling (Ky.) 117 S. W. 250; Vicksburg v. Hennessy, 54 Miss. 391, 28 Am. Rep. 354; Carvin v. St. Louis, 151 Mo. 334, 52 S. W. 210; Burnes v. St. Joseph, 91 Mo. App. 489; Reed v. Mexico, 101 Mo. App. 155, 76 S. W. 53; Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520; O'Shaughnessey v. Middleport, 93 App. Div. 93, 86 N. Y. Supp. 944; Gorham v. Cooperstown, 59 N. Y. 660; Butler v. Oxford, 186 N. Y. 444, 79 N. E. 712; Stratton v. New York, 190 N. Y. 294, 83 N. E. 40, reversing 117 App. Div. 887, 103 N. Y. Supp. 358; Sevestre v. New York, 15 Jones & S. 341; Dayton v. Glaser, supra; Dayton v. Taylor, 62 Ohio St. 11, 56 N. E. 480; Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 567; Durbin v. Napoleon, 21 Ohio C. C. 160; Oak Harbor v. Gallagher, 52 Ohio St. 183, 39 N. E. 144; Murphy v. Dayton, 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 354; Burns v. Bradford, 137 Pa. 361, 11 L.R.A. 726, 20 Atl. 997; Canavan v. Oil City, 183 Pa. 611, 38 Atl. 1096; Archer v. Johnson City (Tenn.) 64 S. W. 474; Poole v. Jackson, 93 Tenn. 62, 23 S. W. 57; Galveston v. Dazet (Tex.) 19 S. W. 142; Ringelstein v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 21 S. W. 634; Shelley v. Austin, 74 Tex. 608, 12 S. W. 753; Parrish v. Huntington; Yeager v. Bluefield; and Wilson v. Wheeling,—supra; Cooper v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 458, 72 N. W. 1130.

Nor it is required to employ the utmost care and exertion to the end that the traveler shall be immune from injury or accident. Chicago v. McGiven; Centralia v. Krouse; and Streator v. Liebendorfer,—supra; Struble v. DeWitt (Neb.) 116 N. W. 154.

And municipal corporations are not bound to anticipate every emergency. O'Shaughnessey v. Middleport, supra.

They are not liable where the accident was one that no human foresight could have anticipated. Harrigan v. Brooklyn, 42 N. Y. S. R. 625, 16 N. Y. Supp. 743.

And they are not required to furnish the best possible method of passing around natural obstacles. Vicksburg v. Hennessy, supra.

Reasonable or ordinary care and diligence on the part of the municipal corporation to put and keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition is the requirement. Americus v. Johnson, 2 Ga. App. 378, 58 S. E. 518; Cunningham v. Denver, 23 Colo. 18, 58 Am. St. Rep. 212, 45 Pac. 356; Denver v. Johnson, 8 Colo. App. 384, 46 Pac. 621; Denver v. Moewes, 15 Colo. App. 28, 60 Pac. 986; Colbourn v. Wilmington and Anderson v. Wilmington, supra; Daytona v. Edison, 46 Fla. 463, 34 So. 954, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1000; Rockford v. Hildebrand, 61 Ill. 155; Centralia v. Krouse and Chicago v. McGiven, supra; Mansfield v. Moore, 124 Ill. 133, 16 N. E. 246; Lincoln v. Hein- zel, 134 Ill. 439; Warren v. Wright, 3 Ill. App. 602; Monmouth v. Sullivan, 8 Ill. App. 50; McLeansboro v. Lay, 29 Ill. App. 478; Brownlee v. Alexis, 39 Ill. App. 135; Mt. Vernon v. Brooks, 39 Ill. App. 426; Vandalia v. Ropp, 39 Ill. App. 344; Vandalia v. Huss, 41 Ill. App. 517; Streator v. Liebendorfer, supra; Rock Island v. Drost, 71 Ill. App. 613; Nokomis v. Farley and Hennepin v. Coleman, supra; Murphy v. Indianapolis, 83 Ind. 76; Michigan City v. Boeckling, 122 Ind. 39, 23 N. E. 518; Muncie v. Hey, 164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250; Monticello v. Kennard, supra; Evansville v. Frazier, 24 Ind. App. 628, 56 N. E. 729; Hall v. Manson, 99 Iowa, 698, 34 L.R.A. 207, 68 N. W. 922; Louisville v. Keher, 117 Ky. 841, 79 S. W. 270; Jones v. Collins, 188 Mass. 53, 74 N. E. 295; McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357, 55 Am. Rep. 687, 25 N. W. 313; O'Rourke v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 520, 57 N. W. 738; Moore v. Minneapolis, 19 Minn. 300, Gil. 258; Cleveland v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 279, Gil. 255; Cunningham v. Thief River Falls, 84 Minn. 21, 86 N. W. 763; Nesbitt v. Greenville, 69 Miss. 22, 30 Am. St. Rep. 521, 10 So. 452; Young v. Webb City, 150 Mo. 333, 51 S. W. 709; Smith v. Brunswick, 61 Mo. App. 578; Struble v. De Witt, supra; Anderson v. Albion, 64 Neb. 280, 89 N. W. 794; Pettingill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095; Butler v. Oxford, 186 N. Y. 444, 79 N. E. 712; Hume v. New York, 47 N. Y. 639; Bradner v. Warwick, 91 App. Div. 408, 86 N. Y. Supp. 935; O'Shaughnessey v. Middleport, supra; Van Gorder v. Seneca Falls, 104 N. Y. Supp. 299; Meares v. Wilmington, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532; Dayton v. Taylor; Walker v. Springfield; and Oak Harbor v. Kallagher,—supra; Norman v. Teel, 12 Okla. 69, 69 Pac. 791; Kelchner v. Nanticoke, 209 Pa. 412, 58 Atl. 851; Rick v. Wilkes-Barre, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 399; Johnston v. Charleston, 3 S. C. 232, 16 Am. Rep. 721; Poole v. Jackson and Shelley v. Austin, supra; Dallas v. Moore, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 74 S. W. 95; Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373; Moore v. Richmond, 85 Va. 538, 8 S. E. 387.

After the unsafe condition thereof is known, or sought to be known, to it, or to its officers having authority to act. Dayton v. Edson, supra.

And this is so though a sidewalk where an injury took place may not have been reasonably safe. Warren v. Wright, supra.

A municipal corporation is not rendered liable by the fact that a sidewalk was not in ordinarily safe repair and condition, where it exercised ordinary care for the purpose of keeping the same in safe repair and condition, and the unsafe condition thereof could not have been known to it by the exercise of reasonable care. Streator v. O'Brien, 103 Ill. App. 85.

And it is not the duty of a city to use ordinary care to keep its pavements safe for the use of pedestrians; the duty goes 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

no further than to use ordinary care to keep its pavements in a reasonably safe condition for use. Midway v. Lloyd, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2448, 74 S. W. 195; Rock Island v. Gingles, 217 Ill. 185, 75 N. E. 468; Salem v. Webster, 192 Ill. 369, 61 N. E. 323; Dallas v. Moore, supra.

But an instruction in an action against a city for an injury alleged to have been caused by a defective street, that the law imposes upon municipalities the duty of ordinary care in maintaining their streets in safe condition for ordinary travel, is not erroneous on the ground that the law merely requires the exercise of reasonable care in such case, there being no distinction between "ordinary care" and "reasonable care." Taylor v. Ballard, 24 Wash. 191, 64 Pac. 143.

And, where a person stepped into a hole in a sidewalk and was injured, the town may not complain, in such an action, that the jury are told that the town is charged with the duty of keeping its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition, instead of being told that its duty is to use reasonable care to keep them in such condition, the distinction being too fine for practical use. Witt v. Latimer (Iowa) 117 N. W. 680.

And error in instructing the jury in such an action, for an injury to a person who stepped into a hole in a sidewalk, that the city must keep its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition, instead of requiring the use of reasonable care to keep them in a reasonably safe condition, is not ground for reversal where the sidewalk was old and much out of repair, and the city had notice of its condition. Beardstown v. Clark, 204 Ill. 524, 68 N. E. 378, affirming 104 Ill. App. 568.

Nor is an instruction, in an action against a city for an injury caused by a horse stepping into a hole in the floor of a viaduct, that it was the city's duty to keep the viaduct in a reasonably safe condition, erroneous where the jury was told in another instruction that the city was bound to use only reasonable care to keep its streets in a safe condition. Denver v. Baldasari, 15 Colo. App. 157, 61 Pac. 190.

And an instruction that a town is not an insurer against all accidents on its streets, but is responsible only when it fails to use ordinary care to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition, and the resulting injury is not due to want of ordinary care of the person injured, is not open to the objection of suggesting the inference that the town is an insurer against some accidents. Witt v. Latimer, supra.

But it is "ordinary care" which a person traveling on the streets must use to avoid accident and not "due care." The two terms are not equivalent, and an instruction requiring due care is improper. San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex. Civ. App.) 78 S. W. 28.

So, the rule has been held to be that the duty of a city to keep its streets in a safe condition for public travel is absolute; and it is bound to exercise reasonable diligence and care to accomplish that end. Turner v.

Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344; Kirk v. Homer, 77 Hun, 459, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1009; Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757.

But this rule has been qualified by some of the courts holding that the duty to make a street reasonably safe in its original construction is absolute; but the duty to discover and repair defects afterwards occurring, not by acts of the municipality, is one involving only ordinary and reasonable care and diligence. Peake v. Superior, 106 Wis. 403, 82 N. W. 306; Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 10 N. W. 162.

And it has been held that the absolute liability of municipal corporations for injuries from defects and obstructions in their streets does not refer to the cause of action; the cause of action must exist before the absolute liability arises; such cause of action raises the liability. Van Pelt v. Clarksburg, 42 W. Va. 218, 24 S. E. 878; Yeager v. Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484, 21 S. E. 752.

And that the rule that cities and towns are absolutely liable for injuries by reason of the streets being out of repair means absolutely liable when the basis or cause of the liability exists, the liability being absolute in the sense that no want of notice or other excuse for the defect in the street will exonerate the municipality; but the idea of absoluteness does not refer at all to the cause of liability, but only to the liability when it exists. Yeager v. Bluefield, supra.

So, a statutory provision that a city or town shall not be liable for defects in streets unless the defects could have been remedied by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence upon the part of the city or town does not change the rule of law as to what constitutes reasonable care and diligence. Blessington v. Boston, 153 Mass. 409, 26 N. E. 1113.

Gross negligence upon the part of a municipal corporation with reference to keeping in repair its streets and crossings, however, is not necessary to a recovery for an injury caused thereby. Want of reasonable care on the part of the officers of the city with reference thereto warrants a recovery. Olney v. Riley, 39 Ill. App. 401.

And an instruction in an action against a city for an injury from an obstruction in a street, that, if the city knew of the condition of the street, or, by the exercise of ordinary care or caution, could have known thereof, in time to have had reasonable opportunity to repair the defect, or have had reasonable opportunity to cause the same, if any, to have been repaired in time to have prevented the accident in question, but failed and neglected to do so, then the plaintiff should recover, is not subject to the objection that it makes the city an insurer of the safety of its streets and sidewalks. Smart v. Kansas City, 208 Mo. 162, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 565, 123 Am. St. Rep. 415, 105 S. W. 709.

And the fact that the grade of a street increased the likelihood of pedestrians falling does not lessen the city's responsibility for 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the condition of its streets, but imposes upon it the duty of exerting vigilance commensurate with the danger, and requires it to exercise care to prevent dangerous accumulations of ice from any cause upon its street. Kopper v. Yonkers, 110 App. Div. 747, 97 N. Y. Supp. 425, affirmed in 188 N. Y. 592, 81 N. E. 1168.

b. Necessity of negligence to liability.

A municipal corporation is liable only when injuries are incurred without fault of the person injured, and because of negligence on its part. Lindsay v. Des Moines, 74 Iowa, 111, 37 N. W. 9; Colbourn v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 443, 56 Atl. 605; Daytona v. Edson, 46 Fla. 463, 34 So. 954, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1000; Monmouth v. Sullivan, 8 Ill. App. 50; Aurora v. Brown, 12 Ill. App. 122, affirmed in 109 Ill. 165; Ryan v. Chicago, 79 Ill. App. 28; Cammett v. Haverhill, 197 Mass. 76, 83 N. E. 337; Weed v. Ballston Spa, 76 N. Y. 329; Gorham v. Cooperstown, 59 N. Y. 660; McGinity v. New York, 5 Duer, 674; Heiss v. Lancaster, 203 Pa. 260, 32 Atl. 201; Holbert v. Philadelphia, 221 Pa. 266, 70 Atl. 746; Ringelstein v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 21 S. W. 634.

Or upon the part of its servants or agents. Gorham v. Cooperstown and Ryan v. Chicago, supra.

Its liability to persons injured by reason of obstructions or defects in a street is based on negligence. Anderson v. Wilmington (Del.) 70 Atl. 204; Columbus v. Ogletree, 96 Ga. 177, 22 S. E. 709; Denver v. Saulcey, 5 Colo. App. 420, 38 Pac. 1098; Chicago v. Watson, 6 Ill. App. 344; Rushville v. Poe, 85 Ind. 83; Gottsberger v. New York, 9 Misc. 349, 29 N. Y. Supp. 592; Hunt v. New York, 109 N. Y. 134, 16 N. E. 320; Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646; Cooper v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 458, 72 N. W. 1130.

That is upon the fact that it has omitted to exercise due care under the circumstances in the maintenance or reparation of its streets. Hunt v. New York, supra; Bloomington v. Read, 2 Ill. App. 542.

The corporation must in some way be in fault in connection with the obstruction or defect. Kenyon v. Indianapolis, Wilson, Super. Ct. (Ind.) 129.

It must have done or omitted to do something which, in the exercise of ordinary care, it should not have done or omitted to do. Herndon v. Salt Lake City and Columbus v. Ogletree, supra.

There must have been substantial negligence or wrong on its part in regard to its action or nonaction, such as a reasonably prudent man would not allow to exist when applied to his own affairs. Aurora v. Brown, supra.

And a person injured by an obstruction or defect in a street cannot recover of the city therefor if the city's negligence does not contribute to the injury. Wilson v. Atlanta, 63 Ga. 291; Montgomery v. Gilmer, 33 Ala. 116, 70 Am. Dec. 562.

The rule that, before negligence can be imputed to any party, a duty, the breach of which duty constitutes the tort in question, must be shown, applies to actions for personal injuries resulting from defective sidewalks. Fritz v. Watertown (S. D.) 111 N. W. 630.

And it is essential to establish facts which show negligence on the part of the corporation, and a mere general allegation that the corporation negligently suffered the street or sidewalk to remain out of repair, without alleging knowledge of the defect, the time it was permitted to remain out of repair, or other facts showing negligence on the part of the municipality, is not sufficient. Daytona v. Edson, supra.

And, under a statutory provision requiring a complaint to contain a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action, an allegation in a complaint in an action against a city, that the city placed a sidewalk in an unsafe, dangerous, and defective condition, and permitted it to remain in such condition, is improper as constituting but the statement of the bare legal conclusion of the pleader. Pullen v. Butte (Mont.) 99 Pac. 290.

But a complaint in an action against a city for injuries sustained by falling over loose boards with projecting nails in them, placed in a public alley, is sufficient in the absence of a motion to make it definite and certain, and especially after verdict, if the negligence is charged in general terms. Mehan v. St. Louis (Mo.) 116 S. W. 514.

And a complaint in an action against a city, alleging that the plaintiff, solely by reason of the negligence of the city in stretching and maintaining a rope across a street, was forced, in order to avoid the rope, to run his bicycle which he was riding against a wagon standing in the street, whereby, without negligence on his part, he was injured, sufficiently charges that the alleged negligence was the cause of the injury complained of. Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 90 Minn. 158, 95 N. W. 908.

Nor is a municipal corporation liable for injuries not traceable to any negligence upon its part, or upon the part of the person injured, but which are relatively to them the result of accident. Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785, 48 S. E. 318; Johnson v. Haverhill, 35 N. H. 74; Sutphen v. North Hempstead, 80 Hun, 409, 30 N. Y. Supp. 128.

And, if the consequences to a person injured by an obstruction or defect in a street would, under all the circumstances, have been the same had the city not been negligent, he cannot recover for the injury though he is in no default. Wilson v. Atlanta, supra.

So, a person seeking to recover of a city for an injury alleged to have been caused by a defective or obstructed sidewalk has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence the negligence charged. Tucker v. Salt Lake City, 10 Utah, 173, 37 Pac. 261; Streator v. Liebendorfer, 71 Ill. App. 625; Franklin v. Harter, 127 Ind. 446, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

26 N. E. 882; Murphy v. Worcester, 159 Mass. 546, 34 N. E. 1080; Murphy v. Dayton, 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 354; Richmond v. Leaker, 99 Va. 1, 37 S. E. 348; Gibson v. Huntington, 38 W. Va. 177, 22 L.R.A. 561, 45 Am. St. Rep. 853, 18 S. E. 447; Pumorlo v. Merrill, 125 Wis. 102, 103 N. W. 464.

The burden of proof rests with the plaintiff, in an action against a city for an injury caused by stepping into an opening in a sidewalk, to establish by a preponderance of the evidence the affirmative of every issue involved in the case, except as to the question of contributory negligence of the plaintiff. Pumorlo v. Merrill, supra.

And, if the jury, by its determination, finds that the facts are not sufficient to sustain the charge of negligence, the court cannot disturb the verdict even though it is of a different opinion. Gibson v. Huntington, supra.

But an obstruction placed in a street is presumed to have been wrongfully placed and permitted to remain there. Senhenn v. Evansville, 140 Ind. 675, 40 N. E. 69.

And the burden rests with the city to show an excuse for the maintenance of the obstruction. Ibid.

And it will be presumed that a city is chargeable with the defective condition of a walk in a public street in the city in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Smith v. Des Moines, 84 Iowa, 685, 51 N. W. 77.

But the mere fact that a person was injured by a defective street or sidewalk is not evidence of itself that the city was negligent in keeping its sidewalks in repair. Coffey v. Carthage, 186 Mo. 573, 85 S. W. 532; Carvin v. St. Louis, 151 Mo. 334, 52 S. W. 210; Denver v. Saulcey, 5 Colo. App. 420, 38 Pac. 1098; Grossenbach v. Milwaukee, 65 Wis. 31, 56 Am. Rep. 614, 26 N. W. 182.

Nor is the fact of the existence of a private cesspool within the limits of a public way decisive of negligence upon the part of the municipal corporation. Hoey v. Natick, 153 Mass. 528, 27 N. E. 595.

And a complaint in an action against a municipal corporation, charging that the municipality, while grading a street, caused the digging of a hole which it negligently permitted to remain in the street for ten days uncovered and unguarded; and that, while walking along the street, the plaintiff, without negligence on her part, stepped into the hole and was injured,—is insufficient in failing to show that the injury was caused by some specific act of negligence or omission of duty on the part of the municipality. Rushville v. Poe, 85 Ind. 83.

So, a municipal corporation is required to guard against only such dangers in its streets as can or ought to be anticipated or foreseen in the exercise of reasonable prudence and care. Spencer v. Mayfield (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 23; Cammatt v. Haverhill, 199 Mass. 76, 83 N. E. 337; Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520; Galveston v. Dazet (Tex.) 19 S. W. 142.

And to render it liable for an injury it must appear that it was the duty of the city to have removed the obstruction or repaired the defect which occasioned the injury; and that the person complaining was at the time in the exercise of ordinary care. Tritz v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 632; Craig v. Sedalia, 63 Mo. 417.

And a municipal corporation is not answerable for an action of nature by which dirt or sand is washed from a higher to a lower level and deposited in ditches or drains in its streets, by reason of which injury is caused. It is only where this occurs by reason of some neglect on the part of the municipal authorities, or, having occurred, is negligently allowed to continue, that a liability occurs. Beach v. Scranton, 5 Lack. Leg. News, 251.

So, liability attaches only where there has been a failure to remedy such defects in its street as may be detected and removed by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence; mere knowledge on the part of a few private citizens of a latent defect in a sidewalk is not sufficient to charge the city with notice. Kenyon v. Indianapolis, Wilson, Super. Ct. (Ind.) 129.

The ground of action against a municipal corporation for injury resulting from defects or obstructions in its streets is either positive misfeasance on the part of the corporation, its officers, or servants, or of others under its authority, in doing acts which cause the streets to be out of repair, or neglect of the corporation to put the streets in repair, or to remove obstructions therefrom; or to remedy causes of danger occasioned by the wrongful acts of third persons. Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780.

And a municipal corporation is not liable in damages for personal injuries caused by an obstruction of a street, in the absence of a showing that it negligently caused such obstruction, or that, not having caused the obstruction, it had actual notice of its existence and failed to remove it within a reasonable time, or that, in the absence of actual notice, such obstruction continued for such length of time prior to the injury that notice was fairly to be inferred. Groveport v. Bradfield, 2 Ohio C. C. 145.

And, under a charter provision that no liability shall attach unless the injury occurred after the defect had been called to the attention of the city council, or after the same had existed for such an unreasonable length of time as to raise a presumption of knowledge of such defect on the part of the city council, the city is not liable for injuries suffered by reason of a defect in a sidewalk unless it was guilty of negligence. Montgomery v. Comer (Ala.) 46 So. 761.

A municipal corporation is liable, however, for such injuries as are the result of its negligence or default, or negligence or default of its duly authorized agents, in the performance of a duty imposed upon it by law. Stidham v. Delaware City (Del.) 67 Atl. 175; Vandalia v. Huss, 41 Ill. App. 517; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

McLaughlin v. Corry, 77 Pa. 113, 18 Am. Rep. 432; Burns v. Bradford, 137 Pa. 361, 11 L.R.A. 726, 20 Atl. 997.

And, if city authorities are negligent in allowing a dangerous obstruction to exist in a public highway which they could have removed, and a person is injured thereby without fault on his part, the city is liable for the damages suffered. McLaughlin v. Corry, supra.

And a municipal corporation is expected to use reasonable care and prudence in detecting and remedying any defect that may be fairly anticipated will be dangerous and liable to cause accident. Stratton v. New York, 190 N. Y. 294, 83 N. E. 40, reversing 117 App. Div. 887, 103 N. Y. Supp. 358; Seward v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 189, 42 Atl. 451.

Nor can a municipal corporation shield itself from liability for the nonperformance of its duty to keep its highways in a reasonably safe condition for travel thereon, by the plea that the defects in its highways are of such a character that ordinarily careful and circumspect persons might think that accidents would not be liable to happen by reason of such defects to persons traveling with ordinary care. Draper v. Ironton, 42 Wis. 696.

And the existence of obstructions in a street is such evidence of negligence upon the part of the city as requires of the authorities explanation in order to escape liability. New York v. Sheffield, 4 Wall. 189, 18 L. ed. 416.

Before the enactment of Mass. Stat. 1877, chap. 234, towns were liable if a defect in a street which caused an injury had existed for twenty-four hours, without regard to the question whether the town was negligent in permitting or not removing the defect. Flanders v. Norwood, 141 Mass. 17, 5 N. E. 256.

But, under that act, a town is liable only for an injury caused by a defect in a street which might have been remedied, or for an injury which might have been prevented by reasonable care and diligence upon the part of the town. Ibid.

c. What constitutes reasonable diligence.

What constitutes reasonable diligence upon the part of a municipal corporation to remove a dangerous obstruction from its streets depends upon the facts of each case. Grand Forks v. Allman, 83 C. C. A. 554, 153 Fed. 532.

And whether or not the streets and roads of a municipal corporation are in a reasonably safe condition for travel in ordinary modes with ordinary care is a practical question, to be determined in each case by its particular circumstances. Van Pelt v. Clarksburg, 42 W. Va. 218, 24 S. E. 878; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Yeager v. Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484, 21 S. E. 752; Parrish v. Huntington, 57 W. Va. 288, 50 S. E. 416.

The care and diligence required of a mu-municipal corporation in keeping its streets free from dangerous obstructions are reasonable care and diligence, proportioned to the danger or mischief liable to ensue from the omission of such care and diligence. Colbourn v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 443, 56 Atl. 605; Carswell v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 360, 43 Atl. 169; Bieber v. St. Paul, 87 Minn. 35, 91 N. W. 20.

And ordinary diligence upon the part of a city is that care which every prudent municipality takes to put its streets in safe order and to keep them so. Wilson v. Atlanta, 63 Ga. 291; Peake v. Superior, 106 Wis. 403, 82 N. W. 306.

The same rule of diligence is exacted from a city with reference to excavations or obstructions in streets that is expected from private persons in the control of any business involving a like danger to others. Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 567; Kent v. Wilmington, 7 Houst. (Del.) 397, 32 Atl. 464; McDonough v. Virginia City, 6 Nev. 90.

Cities are under the duty to exercise such care in respect to the safety of their streets as persons of ordinary prudence would have used under the same or similar circumstances, and no more. Kaiser v. St. Louis, 185 Mo. 366, 84 S. W. 19; Carswell v. Wilmington, supra; Rhyner v. Menasha, 107 Wis. 201, 83 N. W. 303.

And not such care and prudence as are exercised by the masses of mankind in their daily affairs. Rhyner v. Menasha, supra.

The degree of diligence required is such and no more as a good business man would have shown under like circumstances. Kent v. Wilmington, supra.

The words "ordinary care," with reference to the duty of a municipal corporation in keeping its streets free from obstructions or defects, means such prudence and care as an ordinarily careful person would use under the same or like circumstances; and the reasonable diligence required of public officers of a city having charge of its public streets and walks means such diligence as like officers with like responsibility usually and ordinarily employ in the discharge of their duties. Pumorlo v. Merrill, 125 Wis. 102, 103 N. W. 464.

And it has been held that the negligence of a municipal corporation which will make it liable for an injury from a dangerous condition of a highway must be such as would have made it liable to an indictment. Beardsley v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 529, 47 Am. Rep. 677; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532.

So, what constitutes reasonable diligence upon the part of a city to remove a dangerous obstruction from its streets depends especially upon the fact whether the existence and dangerous character of the obstruction was known, or in the exercise of reasonable supervision and diligence should have been known, by the city, in time to have caused its removal before it produced the injury complained of. Grand Forks v. Allman, 83 C. C. A. 554, 153 Fed. 532.

Municipal corporations must use such reasonable care to protect travelers in their streets from danger and accident, however, as is adapted to the time, place, and circumstances under which the duty is to be performed. Burnham v. Boston, 10 Allen, 293.

It is the duty of a city, by the exercise of all the ordinary means in its power, to keep its sidewalks free from obstruction and in a convenient and safe condition for public use. Newport v. Miller, 93 Ky. 22, 18 S. W. 835; Sevestre v. New York, 15 Jones & S. 341.

And it is bound to exercise active vigilance to prevent and remove obstacles of a dangerous character from its streets. Kunz v. Troy, 16 N. Y. S. R. 459, 1 N. Y. Supp. 596.

The duty of keeping a highway in a safe condition for public travel involves the duty of a reasonable supervision of the highway. Cusick v. Norwich, 40 Conn. 375.

And a municipal corporation is under a continuing duty to remove defects from its sidewalks, and to guard against causes which are likely to produce defects therein or obstructions thereon. Muncie v. Hey, 164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250.

And it is the duty of a municipal corporation charged with the repair of streets and sidewalks not only to put them in repair when it has actual notice of defects, but to exercise reasonable care and diligence to know whether or not they are in proper condition; and, where injury is caused by a defect, evidence of neglect of this duty by the corporation where the performance would have led to knowledge of the defect is competent to charge the corporation with liability. Gude v. Mankato, 30 Minn. 256, 15 N. W. 175.

But no inflexible rule can be laid down with reference to the frequency of inspection of sidewalks which will constitute reasonable diligence; and a request, in an action against a city for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk, for an instruction that inspection of the sidewalks once in two weeks by the street commissioner, followed by repairs found necessary, is reasonable diligence, is properly refused. Kellogg v. Janesville, 34 Minn. 132, 24 N. W. 359.

The duty is an imperative one, involving the duty of providing all that is necessary to that end, including not only the necessary ordinance regulating their construction, but a full complement of officers and employees, as well as the necessary funds for that purpose. Lombar v. East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14, 48 N. W. 947.

And the duty of a municipality to exercise for the public good the powers conferred on it by its charter to prevent nuisances, and to protect persons and property, is not discharged by merely passing ordinances; a vigorous effort to enforce them must be made, and it must prevent the nuisances, if it can do so by ordinary and reasonable care and diligence. Taylor v. Cumberland, 64 Md. 68, 54 Am. Rep. 759, 20 Atl. 1027; Hagerstown v. Klotz, 93 Md. 437, 54 L.R.A. 940, 86 Am. St. Rep. 437, 49 Atl. 836.

And a city does not perform its whole duty in respect to keeping its streets in safe condition for travel by instructing its subordinates to ascertain the facts and report; dangerous conditions must be remedied. Goodfellow v. New York, 100 N. Y. 15, 2 N. E. 462.

The liability of a municipal corporation for an injury occasioned by a neglect to keep its streets in repair or free from obstruction is the same whether the neglect was wilful or otherwise. Erie v. Schwingle, 22 Pa. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 87.

And it is no excuse for an obstruction in a street that the city improperly allowed other unnecessary and dangerous obstacles to remain therein. Newport v. Miller, supra.

But, while ordinary care upon the part of a municipal corporation to keep its street crossings in good repair is required in all cases, the fact that the crossing in question was on a street in a remote part of the city and but little used may be considered by the jury in determining whether ordinary care was exercised. Bunker Hill v. Pearson, 46 Ill. App. 47.

d. Reasonable diligence, how determined.

Whether a municipal corporation has used ordinary and reasonable care in the construction of its roads, and in keeping them free from obstructions, is a question of fact for a jury. Hall v. Lowell, 10 Cush. 260; Denver v. Dunsmore, 7 Colo. 328, 3 Pac. 705; Larson v. Grand Forks, 3 Dak. 307, 19 N. W. 414; Americus v. Johnson, 2 Ga. App. 378, 58 S. E. 518; Nesbitt v. Greenville, 69 Miss. 22, 30 Am. St. Rep. 521, 10 So. 452; Sauthof v. Granger, 19 R. I. 606, 35 Atl. 300; Richmond v. Pemberton, 108 Va. 220, 61 S. E. 787; Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 419, 75 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 34.

And so, also, is the question whether a municipal corporation has taken proper precautions to guard the traveling public against danger from obstructions in its streets. Jones v. Collins, 188 Mass. 53, 74 N. E. 295; Baker v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 53, 72 N. E. 336; Hyde v. Boston, 186 Mass. 115, 71 N. E. 118.

And the opinion of a witness on the question of what is ordinary care is inadmissible as a usurpation of the functions of the jury; and a witness in an action against a city for an injury cannot be asked if a person exercising ordinary care could not have seen the hole in the sidewalk and avoided stepping into it. Roanoke v. Shull, supra.

So, whether city authorities have been guilty of negligence in failing to exercise reasonable care and diligence in preventing obstructions or defects in its streets, depending upon considerations with reference to which evidence is given on both sides, is a question of fact for the jury in an action for a resulting injury, and not a question for the court. Philbrick v. Niles, 25 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Fed. 265; Aurora v. Cox, 43 Neb. 727, 62 N. W. 66; McDowell v. Auburn, 126 App. Div. 173, 110 N. Y. Supp. 941.

And so is the question whether a municipality, acting through its officials, failed to exercise such reasonable care and diligence in not ascertaining the existence of a nuisance or obstruction in a street, and in not removing it prior to an injury sustained therefrom. Fritsch v. Allegheny, 91 Pa. 226; Wedderburn v. Detroit, 144 Mich. 684, 108 N. W. 102; Craig v. Sedalia, 63 Mo. 417; Johnson v. Fargo, 15 N. D. 525, 108 N. W. 243.

So, where a nuisance existed in a street, and an injury resulted therefrom, the question in an action for an injury, as to whether or not the city had made a vigorous effort to enforce its ordinances designed to prevent such nuisance, is one of fact for the jury. Taylor v. Cumberland, 64 Md. 68, 54 Am. Rep. 759, 20 Atl. 1027.

And, where a city grants a right to use its streets for particular purposes, the dangerous condition of obstructions caused by such use, and the knowledge of the city, are questions of fact for the jury. Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561.

The law does not prescribe specifically what shall be done to protect travelers from an obstruction in a highway, but it does prescribe generally that highways shall be kept reasonably safe and convenient for travelers at all times, thus leaving the method of discharging the duty with the city or town authorities, subject to the judgment of a jury in case an accident happens as to whether the method adopted or the thing done was a sufficient discharge of its statutory liability; and the judgment of the jury, unless so clearly wrong that fair-minded men could not honestly differ upon the question, shall prevail. Sauthof v. Granger, 19 R. I. 606, 35 Atl. 300.

IX. The degree of perfection required.

a. General rules.

A reasonably safe condition is the rule of perfection required of municipal corporations in the maintenance of streets; and a municipal corporation is bound by law to use ordinary care and diligence to keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for public use in the ordinary modes of travel. Norman v. Teel, 12 Okla. 69, 69 Pac. 791; McLemore v. West End (Ala.) 48 So. 663; Taylor v. Manson (Cal. App.) 99 Pac. 410; Thunborg v. Pueblo (Colo.) 101 Pac. 399; Atlanta v. Buchanan, 76 Ga. 585; Mansfield v. Moore, 124 Ill. 133, 16 N. E. 246; Chicago v. McGiven, 78 Ill. 347; Rockford v. Russell, 9 Ill. App. 229; Bloomington v. Read, 2 Ill. App. 542; Vandalia v. Ropp, 39 Ill. App. 344; Brownlee v. Alexis, 39 Ill. App. 135; Powell v. Bowen, 92 Ill. App. 453; Michigan City v. Boeckling, 122 Ind. 39, 23 N. E. 518; McQueen v. Elkhart, 14 Ind. App. 671, 43 N. E. 460; Evansville v. Frazer, 24 Ind. App. 628, 56 N. E. 729; Emporia v. Schmidling, 33 Kan. 485, 6 Pac. 893; Atchison v. Acheson, 9 Kan. App. 33, 57 Pac. 248; Grider v. Jefferson Realty Co. (Ky.) 116 S. W. 691; Louisville v. Johnson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 685, 69 S. W. 803; Stinson v. Gardiner, 42 Me. 248, 66 Am. Dec. 281; Magaha v. Hagerstown, 95 Md. 62, 93 Am. St. Rep. 317, 51 Atl. 832; Vicksburg v. Hennessy, 54 Miss. 391, 28 Am. Rep. 354; Nesbitt v. Greenville, 69 Miss. 22, 30 Am. St. Rep. 521, 10 So. 452; Carthage v. Garner, 209 Mo. 688, 108 S. W. 521; Holloway v. Kansas City, 184 Mo. 19, 82 S. W. 89; Beaudean v. Cape Girardeau, 71 Mo. 393; Buckley v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 16, 56 S. W. 319; Smith v. St. Joseph, 45 Mo. 449; Brennan v. St. Louis, 92 Mo. 482, 2 S. W. 481; Bowie v. Kansas City, 51 Mo. 454; Tritz v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 632; Loewer v. Sedalia, 77 Mo. 431; Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96; Burnes v. St. Joseph, 91 Mo. App. 489; Kling v. Kansas City, 27 Mo. App. 231; Anderson v. Albion, 64 Neb. 280, 89 N. W. 794; Smith v. New York, 17 App. Div. 438, 45 N. Y. Supp. 239; Wallace v. New York, 18 How. Pr. 169; Garrett v. Buffalo, 26 N. Y. Week. Dig. 257, 7 N. Y. S. R. 96; Dayton v. Glaser, 76 Ohio St. 471, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 916, 81 N. E. 991; Monroeville v. Wehl, 13 Ohio C. C. 689; Holbert v. Philadelphia, 221 Pa. 260, 70 Atl. 746; Canavan v. Oil City, 183 Pa. 611, 38 Atl. 1096; Tucker v. Salt Lake City, 10 Utah, 173, 37 Pac. 261; Van Pelt v. Clarksburg, 42 W. Va. 218, 24 S. E. 878; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Baltimore v. Maryland, 166 Fed. 641.

And, if it fails to do so, it is liable for injuries sustained by reason of such negligence, provided the party injured exercises ordinary care to avoid the injury. Norman v. Teel, 12 Okla. 69, 69 Pac. 791; Rockford v. Russell and Evansville v. Frazer, supra; Jansen v. Atchison, 16 Kan. 358; Carthage v. Garner, 209 Mo. 688, 108 S. W. 521; Tucker v. Salt Lake City, supra.

It must guard against such dangers as can or ought to be anticipated, or foreseen, in the exercise of reasonable care and prudence. Smith v. New York, supra.

And no distinction exists between sidewalks and carriage ways, in respect to the duty of a municipal corporation to keep its streets free from obstruction and in proper repair. Davenport v. Ruckman, 10 Bosw. 20, 16 Abb. Pr. 341, affirmed in 37 N. Y. 568.

And an incorporated town is bound to exercise ordinary care and diligence in constructing and maintaining its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition, the same as an incorporated city. Beazan v. Mason City, 58 Iowa, 233, 12 N. W. 279.

Nor will any usage or custom justify an encroachment on a public highway, or the presence therein of an obstruction which renders it unsafe for the use to which it is dedicated. McNeerney v. Reading, 150 Pa. 611, 25 Atl. 57.

And the fact that an obstruction on a sidewalk had existed for a long period of time does not render it sacred in the eyes 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

of the law; the long period of its existence is of no significance except as it speaks to the point of notice and knowledge of its existence. Fischer v. St. Louis, 189 Mo. 567, 107 Am. St. Rep. 380, 88 S. W. 82.

And a complaint plainly and directly averring that the place where the plaintiff was injured was a public street in the city, and he was at the time a traveler thereon, sufficiently charges the duty of the municipality to keep its public streets in a reasonably safe condition for travel. Laporte v. Osborn (Ind. App.) 86 N. E. 995.

It is not the duty of a municipal corporation, however, to make its streets absolutely perfect. Smith v. New York, 17 App. Div. 438, 45 N. Y. Supp. 239; Taylor v. Manson (Cal. App.) 99 Pac. 410; Denver v. Moewes, 15 Colo. App. 28, 60 Pac. 986; Rockford v. Hildebrand, 61 Ill. 155; Hennepin v. Coleman, 132 Ill. App. 604; Bloomington v. Read, 2 Ill. App. 542; Aurora v. Brown, 12 Ill. App. 122, affirmed in 109 Ill. 165; Chicago v. Glanville, 18 Ill. App. 308; Rock Island v. Drost, 71 Ill. App. 613; Hall v. Manson, 99 Iowa, 585, 58 N. W. 881; Emporia v. Schmidling, 33 Kan. 485, 6 Pac. 893; Magaha v. Hagerstown, 95 Md. 62, 93 Am. St. Rep. 317, 51 Atl. 832; St. Louis v. Kansas City, 110 Mo. App. 653, 85 S. W. 630; Smith v. Brunswick, 61 Mo. App. 578; Wallis v. Westport, 82 Mo. App. 522; Struble v. DeWitt (Neb.) 116 N. W. 154; Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309; Heiss v. Lancaster, 203 Pa. 260, 52 Atl. 201; Kawiecka v. Superior (Wis.) 118 N. W. 192.

They are required to use only proper and reasonable care to keep their streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition. Mansfield v. Moore, 124 Ill. 133, 16 N. E. 246; Lincoln v. Heinzl, 134 Ill. App. 439; Joliet v. Walker, 7 Ill. App. 267; Aurora v. Brown, supra; Lyon v. Logansport (Ind. App.) 32 N. E. 582; Alexander v. New Castle, 115 Ind. 51, 17 N. E. 200; Scurlock v. Boone (Iowa) 120 N. W. 313; Covington v. Manwaring, 113 Ky. 592, 68 S. W. 625; Midway v. Lloyd, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2448, 74 S. W. 195; Fugate v. Somerset, 97 Ky. 48, 29 S. W. 970; Shippy v. Au Sable, 65 Mich. 495, 32 N. W. 741; McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357, 55 Am. Rep. 687, 25 N. W. 313; Wallis v. Westport, 82 Mo. App. 522; St. Louis v. Kansas City, 110 Mo. App. 653, 85 S. W. 630; Kawiecka v. Superior (Wis.) 118 N. W. 192.

And they can be held responsible only for failure to exercise ordinary care and prudence in that regard. Mansfield v. Moore, supra.

And what is a reasonably safe condition must depend upon circumstances. Magaha v. Hagerstown, supra.

They are not answerable for injuries resulting from defects that reasonable care and diligence on the part of the city authorities could not have discovered and remedied. Emporia v. Schmidling, supra.

And, where a city builds a sidewalk elevated above the ground on posts, leaving openings underneath, or permits the owners of lots abutting on a street to excavate areas under the sidewalk, it does not become an insurer of the strength and sufficiency of the sidewalk above such openings and areas. Its undertaking is to use reasonable care and diligence reasonably with reference to the risk and danger in placing and maintaining a sufficient plank or other cover over such openings and areas; and it is responsible only in case of a failure to use such care and diligence. Atchison v. Jansen, 21 Kan. 560.

Nor can a recovery be had against a municipal corporation for an injury resulting from a defect or obstruction in a street where it was of such a trifling character that it was not naturally dangerous, and must almost inevitably occur in many of the streets. Gastel v. New York (N. Y.) 86 N. E. 833; Gottsberger v. New York, 9 Misc. 349, 29 N. Y. Supp. 592.

And no recovery can be had where it appears that the obstruction was made for a highly useful public purpose, and had fulfilled this purpose for years. Gottsberger v. New York, supra.

And a municipality is not liable in damages for injuries resulting from extraordinary accidents which would not be anticipated or foreseen or guarded against in the exercise of reasonable care and prudence. Nieholls v. New York, 128 App. Div. 532, 112 N. Y. Supp. 795; Kieffer v. Hummelstown, 151 Pa. 304, 17 L.R.A. 217, 24 Atl. 1060.

The specific duty resting upon municipal corporations with regard to the streets under their control is that they shall exercise reasonable care to see that they are safe for lawful use by any member of the public for any of the purposes for which a public street is designed. Denver v. Johnson, 8 Colo. App. 384, 46 Pac. 621; Murphy v. Dayton, 7 Ohio N. P. 227.

And a municipal corporation is not liable for injuries caused by a defective or obstructed sidewalk, unless the sidewalk was in such a condition as to endanger persons of ordinary health and strength in using it. Taylor v. Manson (Cal. App.) 99 Pac. 410.

So, a statute requiring cities and towns to keep their ways safe and convenient for travelers means reasonably, and not absolutely, safe. Morgan v. Lewiston, 91 Me. 566, 40 Atl. 545; Moriarty v. Lewiston, 98 Me. 482, 57 Atl. 790.

And the question of liability of a town under such an act is not whether in a given case the town used ordinary care and diligence in the construction and repair of the way, but whether, as a result, the way as constructed and maintained was in fact reasonably safe and convenient for travelers. Moriarty v. Lewiston, supra.

But an instruction in an action for an injury from a defect or obstruction in a street, which speaks of the duty of the village "to keep in repair the sidewalks," is not erroneous because not qualified by the word "reasonable," where other instructions show the duty to be to keep the walks "in reasonably safe" condition or state of repair. Mansfield v. Moore, 124 Ill. 133, 16 N. E. 246, affirming 21 Ill. App. 326.

And error in charging the jury, in an action against a city, that it is the duty of the defendant to keep the streets in question in good order and condition, its duty being to keep them in a reasonably safe condition for travel in ordinary modes, is cured by another instruction expressly telling the jury that the city is not liable if the street complained of was at the time of the accident in a reasonably safe condition for travel in ordinary modes with ordinary care. Denver v. Moewes, 15 Colo. App. 28, 60 Pac. 986.

But, while a charge to the effect that a walk must not be in an unreasonably dangerous condition means the same as that it must be kept in a reasonably safe condition, the language cannot be commended, though its use does not constitute error. Lindsay v. Des Moines, 74 Iowa, 111, 37 N. W. 9.

It is no defense, however, in an action against a city under Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 24, § 22, requiring that highways shall be kept safe and convenient for travelers, to recover for an injury caused by a defect in a highway, that the city or town used ordinary care in repairing the way, if in fact it was not reasonably safe and convenient. George v. Haverhill, 110 Mass. 500.

And, in order to hold a municipal corporation responsible on the ground of implied notice of a defect in a road, there should be such a condition of things as fairly to indicate that there may be at any time danger in using the road. Miller v. North Adams, 182 Mass. 569, 66 N. E. 197.

But, in order to impose liability upon a city, it is not necessary that its streets or sidewalks should have been unreasonably dangerous; and an instruction to that effect is erroneous. Anderson v. Albion, 64 Neb. 280, 89 N. W. 794.

b. As affected by locality and uses.

In determining what obstructions or other inconvenience will render a highway defective so as to make the town liable if an injury is thereby occasioned, the location of the street, the amount of travel to be accommodated, and such other circumstances as may bear upon the question of reasonable safety in that place, must all be considered; the way must be safe and convenient in view of such casualties as might reasonably be expected to happen to travelers. Moriarty v. Lewiston, 98 Me. 482, 57 Atl. 790; Smith v. New York, 17 App. Div. 438, 45 N. Y. Supp. 239.

And regard must be had to the questions whether the street is newly opened, or had been in existence for some time, whether the municipality is small and poor, or populous and wealthy, and whether the street is a frequented thoroughfare or a remote passageway. Americus v. Johnson, 2 Ga. App. 378, 58 S. E. 518.

The rule of responsibility of a municipality for the condition of its streets is the removal or abatement of obstruction so as to render the highway, street, or sidewalk at all times safe and convenient, regard being had to its locality and uses. Providence v. Clapp, 17 How. 161, 15 L. ed. 72; Larmon v. District of Columbia, 5 Mackey, 330; Stinson v. Gardiner, 42 Me. 248, 66 Am. Dec. 281.

And the jury, in an action for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in a sidewalk, may consider, on the question of whether the sidewalk was in a defective condition, the nature of the alleged defect, the amount of travel over the place where the accident occurred, its nearness to the business portion of the town, and such other circumstances as tend to throw light upon the questions at issue. Welsh v. Amesbury, 170 Mass. 437, 49 N. E. 735; Rockford v. Hollenbeck, 34 Ill. App. 40.

Greater diligence on the part of the city is required in looking after the condition of a sidewalk where the street is much traveled than where it is little used. Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96.

And a condition of a sidewalk which might constitute negligence when permitted in cities and larger towns might be sufficient in villages and small country towns. Foraker v. Sandy Lake, 130 Pa. 123, 18 Atl. 609.

And, where an injury results from an obstruction in a street, and action is brought against the municipality therefor, whether it was a much-used street or a little-used street are facts which, together with all the other facts and circumstances in evidence, should be submitted to the jury, to be considered by them in determining whether the street was reasonably safe for public travel. Hennepin v. Coleman, 132 Ill. App. 604.

And where, in the suburbs of a city, where the population is sparse, and the municipal authorities, in view of public future growth, believe that a street 80 feet wide would become necessary, but are of the opinion that for the time being a roadway 30 feet wide in the 80-foot street is all that the public good requires, their action in passing an ordinance for the improvement to that extent only is an act in their governmental capacity, and does not impose liability upon the municipality to an individual as for neglect of duty. Ely v. St. Louis, 181 Mo. 723, 81 S. W. 168.

But the law requires that reasonable care shall be given to streets and sidewalks, and makes no distinction between localities except as circumstances affect the question of what is reasonable; and it is not the law that sparsely settled or small communities must have better or more carefully guarded walks or ways than large cities. Moore v. Kalamazoo, 109 Mich. 176, 66 N. W. 1089.

And the duty of municipal corporations to exercise ordinary care and prudence in keeping sidewalks in their limits in a reasonably safe condition is not lessened or changed by the fact that the sidewalk in question is located in the suburbs of the city, and, for that reason, was not so much in use as the sidewalks in the more frequented streets. Flora v. Naney, 136 Ill. 45, 26 N. E. 645; Decatur v. Besten, 169 Ill. 340, 48 N. E. 186; Normal v. Bright, 223 Ill. 99, 79 N. E. 90.

A municipal corporation is required to exercise reasonable care and diligence in keeping its streets in a safe condition for travel and free from obstruction, even though the street may not be one frequently used by the public. South Omaha v. Powell, 50 Neb. 798, 70 N. W. 391; Mt. Morris v. Kanode, 98 Ill. App. 373; Wall v. Pittsburgh, 205 Pa. 48, 54 Atl. 497.

And it may not entirely or substantially ignore its outside walks, and give them little or no attention. If there is travel enough to justify the building of a sidewalk, then the city cannot allow it to go into decay or become dangerous. Rockford v. Hollenbeck, supra.

And it is not saved from liability for a defect in a sidewalk consisting of a step of a few inches in height from an old sidewalk to a new one, which caused an injury, because the municipal corporation contains a population of only 500 or 600 people. Graham v. Oxford, 105 Iowa, 705, 75 N. W. 473.

And it has been held that the size of a city and the extent and number of its streets are not relevant evidence on the question of its negligence in a suit against it for an injury resulting from a defect in a street. Barr v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. 550, 16 S. W. 483.

So, a municipal corporation is bound only to keep its streets in such a condition as to make them safe for ordinary travel in the usual mode. Norwalk v. Jacobs, 29 Ohio C. C. 123; Jansen v. Atchison, 16 Kan. 358.

It is not chargeable with negligence when an accident which, according to common experience, was not likely to occur, happens to a traveler by reason of a defect in a sidewalk. Beekman v. New York, 18 Misc. 509, 41 N. Y. Supp. 990.

And in curbing and guttering a street it is sufficient if the city so does it that no damage would occur from an ordinary rain,—such a one as is to be expected and anticipated in the climate of the place where the city is situated. Haney v. Kansas City, 94 Mo. 334, 7 S. W. 417.

And where, pursuant to a contract, contractors erected a temporary bridge over an excavation under a sidewalk and a portion of the street necessary to construct a vault, authorized by the permit of the city, and there was a parade on the street, and a large number of people gathered upon the bridge while the parade was passing, and a portion of the bridge collapsed, throwing a number of people into the excavation, the city will not be held liable for the injury where there is nothing to show that such an unusual crowd could have been anticipated, or that the city could have done any more than it did to prevent the accident. Coolidge v. New York, 99 App. Div. 175, 90 N. Y. Supp. 1078, affirmed in 185 N. Y. 529, 77 N. E. 1192.

But, where an elevated sidewalk approaching a street bridge, and which was virtually a part thereof, gave way under an unusual strain to which it was subjected by a crowd, it cannot be said as a matter of law, in an action for the injury occasioned thereby, that the city was not required to construct the same with a view to such a contingency, where such crowds frequently assemble in the streets. Leggett v. Watertown, 55 App. Div. 321, 66 N. Y. Supp. 910.

So, a city need not keep its streets in a condition to be safe for extraordinary emergencies, conditions, or circumstances, such as riding behind a runaway horse or a horse beyond the control of his driver. Norwalk v. Jacobs, 29 Ohio C. C. 123; Alexander v. New Castle, 115 Ind. 51, 17 N. E. 200; Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574; Hungerman v. Wheeling, 46 W. Va. 761, 34 S. E. 778.

Nor is it required to have them in such condition as to secure the safety of reckless drivers. Walker v. Vicksburg, 71 Miss. 899, 15 So. 132.

But it is incumbent upon a municipal corporation to maintain its highways in a condition of reasonable safety for the driving of spirited as well as docile animals. Akers v. New York, 14 Misc. 524, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1099.

And it is required to keep its streets in such a condition that even skittish horses may be employed without danger. Pittston v. Hart, 89 Pa. 389.

A borough or township is not liable for injuries to a person on a public road, unless it is shown that the ordinary needs of public travel conducted in the ordinary way had not been anticipated and provided for, and that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the neglect of duty on the part of the borough or township officers. Kieffer v. Hummelstown, 151 Pa. 304, 17 L.R.A. 217, 24 Atl. 1060.

Where the use of a highway is one that reasonable care and prudence could never have anticipated, there is no duty on the municipality at all with reference to it; and it makes no difference that the injury in such case is the result of defects in the highway for which the municipal corporation would be responsible in case of injury to individuals in the lawful and proper use of it. Wilson v. Granby, 47 Conn. 59, 36 Am. Rep. 51.

But a city which fails to perform its duty to take such care of its streets as is reasonably necessary for the security of travelers, in consequence of which an injury occurs, cannot escape liability therefor on the ground that an accident and injury of that particular kind could not be foreseen. Byerly v. Anamosa, 79 Iowa, 204, 44 N. W. 359.

So, a municipal corporation vested by law with the control of the streets and sidewalks of the city is under duty to keep them in such condition that they may be safely traveled at all hours. Reinhard v. New York, 2 Daly, 243; Griberd v. Jefferson Realty Co. (Ky.) 116 S. W. 691; Ball v. Independence, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

41 Mo. App. 469; Davis v. Omaha, 47 Neb. 836, 66 N. W. 859.

By night as well as by day. Massey v. Columbus, 75 Ga. 658; Blume v. New Orleans, 104 La. 345, 29 So. 106; Harrell v. Macon, 1 Ga. App. 413, 58 S. E. 124; Milledgeville v. Cooley, 55 Ga. 17; Rome v. Dodd, 58 Ga. 238; Montgomery v. Wright, 72 Ala. 411, 47 Am. Rep. 422; Seward v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 189, 42 Atl. 451; Gosport v. Evans, 112 Ind. 133, 2 Am. St. Rep. 164, 13 N. E. 256; Haniford v. Kansas City, 103 Mo. 172, 15 S. W. 753; Flynn v. Neosho, 114 Mo. 567, 21 S. W. 903; Maus v. Springfield, 101 Mo. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 634, 14 S. W. 630; Holloway v. Kansas City, 184 Mo. 19, 82 S. W. 89; Ball v. Independence, 41 Mo. App. 469; McCarroll v. Kansas City, 64 Mo. App. 283; Culverson v. Maryville, 67 Mo. App. 343; Reed v. Mexico, 101 Mo. App. 155, 76 S. W. 55; Plainview v. Mendelson, 65 Neb. 85, 90 N. W. 956; Ord v. Nash, 50 Neb. 335, 69 N. W. 964; Ironton v. Kelley, 38 Ohio St. 50; Monroeville v. Wehl, 13 Ohio C. C. 689; Wall v. Pittsburg, 205 Pa. 48, 54 Atl. 497; Canavan v. Oil City, 183 Pa. 611, 38 Atl. 1096; Musselman v. Hatfield, 202 Pa. 489, 52 Atl. 15; McKim v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 243, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 506, 66 Atl. 340; Archer v. Johnson City (Tenn.) 64 S. W. 474; Parrish v. Huntington, 57 W. Va. 286, 50 S. E. 416; Yeager v. Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484, 21 S. E. 752; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Merrill v. Portland, 4 Cliff. 138, Fed. Cas. No. 9,470; Baltimore v. Maryland, 166 Fed. 641.

And, in the case of failure to do so, it is liable for damages resulting therefrom. Milledgeville v. Cooley, 55 Ga. 17; Rome v. Dodd, 58 Ga. 238.

It is not sufficient that public streets and sidewalks are kept by a municipality in such a condition as to be reasonably safe in daylight or under strong light; their condition must be such that they will be reasonably safe in all conditions of light in which the public are entitled or required to travel upon or use them. Larmon v. District of Columbia, 5 Mackey, 330.

And an instruction that the town was bound at all times to have its highways in a reasonably safe condition for customary travel is proper in an action against the town for injury caused by a defective highway, when accompanied with a proper explanation of the phrase "reasonably safe," and a proper qualification of the expression "at all times," limiting it to all times when the circumstances were such as to admit of the highways being in the reasonably safe condition required. Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520.

And an instruction, in an action against a city for injuries to a driver in a collision with a fire hydrant, that the city is bound to use reasonable care to keep its streets in a safe condition for ordinary travel includes travel by night as well as by day. Thumborg v. Pueblo (Colo.) 101 Pac. 399.

But the obligation resting upon a municipi-pal corporation to keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for travel does not impose upon it the duty of insuring those who travel such streets in the darkness of the night from the danger of collision with objects necessarily and properly in the streets, such as ditches and gutters, constructed for the purpose of draining the streets, and curbstones properly connected therewith, and hitching posts properly located in the public streets, or fire plugs or hydrants properly located therein. Mitchell v. Tell City (Ind. App.) 81 N. E. 594.

Nor is a municipal corporation bound to provide a safe, or any, way by which the streets may be entered from private property; and a person who attempts to enter a street by a private way passing from private property into the street, and in doing so falls into an excavation made for the purpose of lowering the grade of the street, is not entitled to recover of the city for his injury. Goodwin v. Des Moines, 55 Iowa, 67, 7 N. W. 411.

But a city the authorities of which make an excavation in a street so as to cause an abrupt descent from a public alley to the street, and render egress from the alley inconvenient and dangerous, is bound to remedy the evil, since the power conferred upon it to superintend the streets imposes a duty to exercise the power in necessary cases. Requa v. Rochester, 45 N. Y. 129, 6 Am. Rep. 52.

So, while the sidewalks of a city must be kept in reasonably safe repair for the use of pedestrians, the city is not bound to keep them fit for the use of vehicles, and, if drivers of vehicles use them for the passage of their wagons, they must do so at their peril. Webster v. Vanceburg (Ky.) 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 752, 113 S. W. 140.

And this rule is not affected by the fact that the sidewalk was used by the person injured, as the only practical way for wagons to reach his destination. Ibid.

And the fact that a sidewalk had been used by the acquiescence of the city for many years for the passage of vehicles does not affect the freedom from liability of the city for an injury to a person who drives a vehicle upon the sidewalk. Ibid.

But streets are required to be kept in such a state of repair that a person using ordinary care in passing over them at a place other than a street crossing may be reasonably secure from injury arising from their defective condition, of which the authorities had notice. Durbin v. Napoleon, 21 Ohio C. C. 160; Knightstown v. Musgrove, 116 Ind. 121, 9 Am. St. Rep. 827, 18 N. E. 452.

So, a municipal corporation is bound to keep only such streets and such parts of streets in good repair as are necessary for the convenience and use of the traveling public. Henderson v. Sandefur, 11 Bush, 550.

It is not liable for injuries to horses and carriages, resulting from a failure to improve a street which was not needed. Ibid.

And it must be permitted to exercise its discretion as to whether the public interests 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

require the improvement of the streets in uninhabited or sparsely settled portions of it, and its decision is final. Ibid.

Whether a particular use of a highway is an unreasonable use and a nuisance is a question of fact to be submitted to a jury. Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649.

So, whether or not a street or sidewalk was in a reasonably safe condition is an issue of fact for the jury to pass on, and not a question for the opinion of a witness. Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96.

And whether the streets of a municipality were in a reasonably safe condition for travel by night as well as by day is a question for the jury in an action for an injury received thereon. Culverson v. Maryville, 67 Mo. App. 343.

c. With reference to whole width of street.

1. The roadway.

The position has been taken by a number of the cases that the rule that towns are not obliged to keep the whole of a highway from one boundary to the other free from obstruction and fit for the use of travelers does not apply to the streets of a village; and that the increased traffic upon the streets of a village renders it necessary that such streets be kept free from obstruction throughout their whole extent; and, if an injury occurs from a neglect of this duty, the village is liable for damages resulting therefrom. Wright v. Saunders, 65 Barb. 214; Montgomery v. Wright, 72 Ala. 411, 47 Am. Rep. 422; Maysville v. Guilfoyle, 110 Ky. 670, 62 S. W. 493; Norwalk v. Jacobs, 29 Ohio C. C. 123.

Under this rule, it is the duty of a city to keep its streets in reasonably safe condition for travel, not alone in the center of the street, but from curb to curb. Odon v. Dobbs, 25 Ind. App. 522, 58 N. E. 562; Thuis v. Vincennes (Ind. App.) 73 N. E. 141; McLemore v. West End (Ala.) 48 So. 663; Wilmette v. Brachle, 110 Ill. App. 356, affirmed in 209 Ill. 621, 71 N. E. 41; Glasgow v. Gillenwaters, 113 Ky. 140, 67 S. W. 381; Kossman v. St. Louis, 153 Mo. 293, 54 S. W. 513.

All parts of all highways and streets need not be kept in like repair and alike smooth and free from obstruction; but all parts of all highways must be kept in such a condition as shall be deemed reasonably safe and convenient having reference to the character of the way and the amount of travel over it. Street v. Holyoke, 105 Mass. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 500.

And a traveler has the right to rely on the performance of this duty, and to pass along any part of a street in the day or night in the faith that he will find no obstructions therein. Wright v. Saunders, supra.

This rule has been limited by many of the cases, however, by applying it to streets opened for travel their whole width, the rule is modified being that a city opening and undertaking to put the whole width of a street in condition for travel, and inviting the public to use the whole width, must exercise ordinary care to maintain the whole width in a condition reasonably safe and free from obstruction. Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646; Pueblo v. Smith, 3 Colo. App. 386, 33 Pac. 685; Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757; Crystal v. Des Moines, 65 Iowa, 502, 22 N. W. 646; Smith v. Hayti, 130 Mo. App. 321, 109 S. W. 817; Saylor v. Montesano, 11 Wash. 328, 39 Pac. 653.

In Smith v. Hayti, supra, Ruppenthal v. St. Louis, 190 Mo. 213, 88 S. W. 612, supra, VII., e, 1, was distinguished upon the ground that that decision dealt with an accident which occurred in a portion of a street never graded or otherwise improved or thrown open for the use of the public by the municipality.

And, where no part of a street is appropriated to sidewalks for the use of pedestrians, and vehicles are habitually driven by the public over every part of it, the public has the right to use every part of the street. Burnes v. St. Joseph, 91 Mo. App. 489.

So, the rule has been stated to be that, where a street is open to travel for its whole width between the ditches, it is the duty of the city to keep it in repair and free from obstruction for the entire breadth thereof between such ditches. Stafford v. Oskaloosa, 64 Iowa, 251, 20 N. W. 174.

Within these rules, a city cannot say, after an injury is sustained in consequence of an obstruction in a portion of a street, that part of such street was intended to be used, and part was not. Pueblo v. Smith, supra.

And it cannot excuse itself for leaving an unguarded excavation in a street, by showing that there was, as a matter of fact, no travel on it. Crystal v. Des Moines, supra.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury resulting from a mound of frozen mud in a street by the fact that it was about 2 feet outside of the beaten track ordinarily followed by vehicles passing along the street. Stafford v. Oskaloosa, supra.

And whether a hydrant left projecting 11 feet 4 inches into the street from the property line rendered the street dangerous to those traveling with vehicles over it, either by day or night, is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury by a collision therewith. Burnes v. St. Joseph, supra.

So, where a city opens a street, it is not relieved from liability as a matter of law for injuries by obstructions in it because there is sufficient width for ordinary travel, in good repair, on either side of the place of the accident in question. Taubman v. Lexington, 25 Mo. App. 218.

But while, in the closely built-up portion of a town or city, the duty of the authorities to keep the entire street or sidewalk in a safe condition is settled where all portions of it are being constantly used by day and by night, in regard to country roads, though within the territorial limits of a city, it is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

enough if a sufficient portion of the middle of the highway is kept in smooth condition, and safe and convenient for travel. Monongahela City v. Fischer, 111 Pa. 9, 56 Am. Rep. 241, 2 Atl. 87.

And cities and villages are not required to keep the entire width of streets and highways in sparsely settled portions of their territory, or in the outskirts, in suitable and safe condition and repair for the passage of teams and vehicles. Rankin v. Smith, 63 Ill. App. 522; Birch v. Charleston Light, Heat & P. Co. 113 Ill. App. 229; Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646.

They are or' required to improve and make passable such portion of a street as is reasonably necessary for the needs of the public. Herndon v. Salt Lake City, supra; Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303.

And an instruction, in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street, that a city is bound to use all reasonable care to keep its streets in a safe condition for travel, and, if it fails to do so, it is liable for injuries sustained in consequence thereof if the party injured exercises reasonable care; but the city is not an insurer of the safety of its streets,—properly presents the question whether the city was required to keep the entire width of a street in repair. Meisner v. Dillon, 29 Mont. 116, 74 Pac. 130.

So a city opening, working, and undertaking to put into condition only a part of a street is required to maintain only that part in a reasonably safe condition. Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646; Rhyner v. Menasha, 97 Wis. 523, 73 N. W. 41; Hannibal v. Campbell, 30 C. C. A. 63, 57 U. S. App. 484, 86 Fed. 297.

And, where a city had prepared only a part of a street for public travel, and an accident occurred at a place outside of such part, it was the duty of the person injured to pursue the traveled part of the street; and, if he departed therefrom negligently or heedlessly or for his own convenience, he assumed the risk and could not recover. Herndon v. Salt Lake City, supra.

And a city has the power to establish a public street 80 feet wide, and then by ordinance to determine that an improvement 30 feet wide therein is for the time being, owing to the sparse settlement, sufficient for the public needs; and it cannot be required to grade and improve more of the street than, in the exercise of its legislative capacity, it deems to be necessary. Ely v. St. Louis, 181 Mo. 723, 81 S. W. 168; Hannibal v. Campbell, supra.

And an injury to a traveler occasioned by his driving off the usual traveled portion and falling over the bank of a creek 30 feet from the graveled road creates no liability on the part of the city though the point of the accident may have touched the outer boundary of the highway as laid out. Hannibal v. Campbell, supra.

Nor is a city bound, as matter of law, to keep not only the traveled track of a street in good and safe condition, but also to keep a space of a carriage width on each side of such traveled track free from posts, stones, or other objects large enough to upset vehicles running over them. Wellington v. Gregson, 31 Kan. 99, 47 Am. Rep. 482, 1 Pac. 253.

And a city which partially graded the roadway of a street in an outlying district so that the bed of the highway at the point in question was from 4 to 7 feet below the top of the adjoining bank, and it never constructed any sidewalks along the top of the bank, which was rough and in a state of nature, is not negligent in failing to improve the top of the bank, and not liable for injuries to a person who attempted to use the bank on one side of the cut as a sidewalk on a dark night, and fell into a transverse ditch, and was injured. Stadelmann v. New York, 126 App. Div. 352, 110 N. Y. Supp. 682.

So, where only a part of a street has been prepared for public travel, and that part is of sufficient width and reasonably safe within that width to permit a traveler to pass over it, and the traveler departs from the traveled part without cause, and receives an injury, he cannot complain that the street was not worked to a wider extent on the ground that others at other times may have required more space in passing over it. Herndon v. Salt Lake City, supra.

And a city will not be held liable for an injury on a country road within the territorial limits of a city, resulting from the absence of railings at the end of a culvert over a stream, where the culvert itself and the roadway on the approaches were both in good repair. Monongahela City v. Fischer, supra.

So, a city has power to designate portions of the streets of the city to be used by horsemen and vehicles, and to reserve other portions of the streets for the use of pedestrians and where horsemen and vehicles may not go, and to prepare such portions of the streets for such uses respectively; and no greater duty is cast upon the city than that it shall maintain the respective portions of the streets in reasonably safe condition for the purpose for which such portions of streets are respectively devoted. Kohlhof v. Chicago, 192 Ill. 249, 85 Am. St. Rep. 335, 61 N. E. 446.

And the general proposition that the public is entitled to the free use of any portion of a public street must be accepted with the qualification that a municipal corporation may devote portions thereof to other purposes useful and convenient to the public. Teague v. Bloomington, 40 Ind. App. 68, 81 N. E. 103.

Mere partial obstruction of a part of a street when in fact such obstruction does not interfere with the public use does not create a nuisance. Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649.

But, while a city, in opening a street for travel, possesses primarily the discretion to determine whether it will prepare the whole width of the street for travel or merely a part of it, in the business portions of a city, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

or where the travel and convenience of the public require it, the whole width of the street must generally be made passable and kept in a reasonably safe condition, while in the outlying portions it may determine what portions of the street it will prepare for travel. Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646; Beach v. Scranton, 5 Lack. Leg. News, 25.

And, where a city opens for travel only a portion of the full width of a street, whether or not it opens a sufficient part may be a question of fact for the jury. Herndon v. Salt Lake City, supra.

And the complaint in an action against a city for a personal injury caused by a defective street because of the failure of the city to prepare a sufficient part of the street for public travel should allege such fact as a ground or negligence. Ibid.

And, where a city opened and prepared for public travel only a part of a street, and an accident occurred upon the part of the street not so prepared, the jury, in an action for the injury, should be instructed with regard to the duty of the city in opening and preparing its streets, and when and for what purpose barriers are required. Ibid.

So, whether, in any given case, the public needs are such as to require the whole width of a street to be kept in safe condition, is generally a question of fact for a jury, in an action for an injury received from an obstruction outside the traveled track. Wellington v. Gregson, 31 Kan. 99, 47 Am. Rep. 482, 1 Pac. 253; Bryant v. Biddeford, 39 Me. 193.

And, a witness cannot be permitted to testify directly that the portion of a street prepared for travel was sufficient for public travel, in an action against the city for damages for an injury caused by an obstruction or defect in the street, since this is a mere conclusion of the witness; the reasonable sufficiency of the street being the ultimate fact to be found by the jury. Herndon v. Salt Lake City, supra.

So, where the statute requires the roadway of a street to be kept in a reasonably safe condition, whether such way requires the use of the entire width of the street must depend entirely upon the necessities of travel in any given case; and of this the authorities of a township or city must take notice at their peril. Sebert v. Alpena, 78 Mich. 165, 43 N. W. 1098.

But a city charter charging the municipality with the duty of repairing and keeping in order the streets imposes upon it the duty to keep the streets in proper order for their entire width, including the sidewalks. Mobile v. Shaw, 149 Ala. 599, 43 So. 94.

And the rule that a city is required to use ordinary care to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for travel, and that whether the streets are in such a condition is a question of fact to be determined in each case by the particular circumstances, applies to a street the whole width of which has been opened and worked for public travel. Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646.

And, while a city is not necessarily required to open or put all its streets in condition for public travel, or all parts of such streets in such condition, when it does open and undertake to put a street in condition for public travel as a whole or a part thereof, it must keep such street or such part thereof as it does undertake to open and put in such condition in its entirety reasonably safe for travel; and, where a street is paved from curb to curb, it must be kept in such reasonably safe condition from curb to curb. Kossman v. St. Louis, 153 Mo. 293, 54 S. W. 513.

And, where a city opens a bridge for public travel as a part of a street, it must keep it as a whole in a reasonably safe condition for such use; and it will be liable for injuries caused by the defective condition of one side though the other side is safe for travel. Walker v. Kansas City, 99 Mo. 647, 12 S. W. 894.

And whether a street is maintained in a reasonably safe condition for travel throughout its entire width, where the whole width is opened, or over that portion which is opened and prepared for travel, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury, in an action against the city for an injury resulting from an obstruction therein, from the facts in the case. Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646; Meisner v. Dillon, 29 Mont. 116, 74 Pac. 130.

So, while a town or municipal corporation is not bound to work the whole width of a road where the travel does not require it, yet it has the right to control the whole width; and, if it suffers objects to remain deposited on the margin which, by their frightful appearance, make the whole road unsafe, it is liable for such accidents by fright as are the natural result of its neglect. Morse v. Richmond, 41 Vt. 435, 98 Am. Dec. 600.

And, if a hole is so near to the traveled path, although outside of it, that, combined with the ordinary accidents of travel, it is liable to result in injuries to passers-by while driving, riding bicycles, or walking, the municipality is liable for resulting injuries. Birch v. Charleston Light, Heat & P. Co. 113 Ill. App. 229.

So, a person traveling along a street who does not know and has no reason to believe that it is out of repair has the right to assume that the municipality has performed its duty to keep at least a portion thereof devoted to travel in a reasonably safe condition; and, where the municipality has exercised its discretion and determined to devote less than the full located width of the street to travel, the portion lying between such part and the remainder should in some way be so indicated as to make it apparent to a person using the street. Ibid.

Nor does a statutory provision that bridges are parts of the public highways and must not be less than 16 feet wide relieve a municipal corporation from responsibility of keeping a bridge in suitable condition for crossing for a greater width than 16 feet, convenience and safety being the essential conditions of a well-maintained highway; and, where the bridge is in a highway in a city where there is much traffic, and it was built more than 16 feet wide, the exigencies of travel seeming to require it, it must be kept in good condition for its whole width so as to be in proper shape for crossing upon any part of it. Rusch v. Davenport, 6 Iowa, 443.

2. The sidewalk.

There is no traveled way of a proper sidewalk in a city less than its width, outside of which a city will not be liable for obstructions; and a traveler must be safeguarded in crossing such sidewalk the same as traveling lengthwise thereon. Powers v. St. Joseph, 91 Mo. App. 55.

And the duty of a city to keep its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for travel applies to the whole sidewalk. Goins v. Moberly, 127 Mo. 116, 29 S. W. 985; Roe v. Kansas City, 100 Mo. 190, 13 S. W. 404; Denver v. Stein, 25 Colo. 125, 53 Pac. 283; Atlanta v. Milam, 95 Ga. 135, 22 S. E. 43; Springfield v. Burns, 51 Ill. App. 595; Bacon v. Boston, 3 Cush. 174; Tucker v. Salt Lake City, 10 Utah, 173, 37 Pac. 261.

In Roe v. Kansas City, supra, it was said that Tritz v. Kansas City, infra, should be no longer followed; and that it was overruled by Walker v. Kansas City, 99 Mo. 647, 12 S. W. 894, supra, IX., c. 1.

It is not confined to keeping in a safe condition a special part only of the sidewalk, which happens to be most generally used. Atlanta v. Milam, supra.

And, where the entire space between the curb and the lot line in a street is expressly set aside for sidewalk purposes by ordinance, it is incumbent upon the city to keep that entire space in a reasonably safe condition for pedestrians who may have occasion to use it. Coffey v. Carthage, 186 Mo. 573, 85 S. W. 532.

And the fact that a water plug constituting an obstruction is placed in the portion of the sidewalk leading to a house, and not in the main sidewalk, does not prevent a recovery for an injury caused by it under the sidewalk system of the city of Washington, under which the sidewalks extend from the curb line bounding the carriage way of the street to the building line of the houses, and portions of the sidewalks adjacent to houses and known as parking are withdrawn from general use by the public as sidewalks, and committed to the immediate care and custody of the adjacent owners or occupants, the paths to the houses being a part of the sidewalks of the city. Dotey v. District of Columbia, 25 App. D. C. 232.

It has been held, however, where necessity for street improvement exists, a sidewalk may be in a condition which relieves the city from liability, although it is not safe throughout its entire width. Chicago v. Sutton, 136 Ill. App. 221.

And that a city is bound to keep only so much of its sidewalk in good condition and repair as is necessary to render it reasonably safe for travel. Tritz v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 632.

And the designation of a portion of a street as a sidewalk for the use of footmen, and the preparation of the same for such use, do not deprive those who may desire to move goods or articles of personal property from a building abutting on the street to or from vehicles in the roadway of the street at the edge of the sidewalk; but loading or unloading goods or articles is not an ordinary use, to accommodate which the city is charged with the duty of constructing and maintaining the walk. Kohlhof v. Chicago, 192 Ill. 249, 85 Am. St. Rep. 335, 61 N. E. 446.

3. Use of sides of street.

(a) Generally.

While it is the duty of a municipal corporation to use reasonable care to keep its streets in a safe condition, it has the right to devote the sides thereof to other useful purposes provided it leaves an unobstructed way of ample width for travelers. Teague v. Bloomington, 40 Ind. App. 68, 81 N. E. 103; Dougherty v. Horseheads, 159 N. Y. 154, 53 N. E. 799.

And a city which has rightly set apart and improved a part of a street for a boulevard is not bound to use due care to keep such part free from obvious obstructions which are necessarily incident to its use as a boulevard, although they may endanger the safety of travelers thereon. McDonald v. St. Paul, 82 Minn. 308, 83 Am. St. Rep. 428, 84 N. W. 1022.

And it is not the duty of a city to keep its streets entirely clear from lamp-posts, telephone poles, water hydrants, hitching posts, etc., so that runaway teams may have a clear way on the street from sidewalk to sidewalk. Bureau Junction v. Long, 56 Ill. App. 458.

A city has the right to determine the width of its streets which shall be devoted to lawful public uses, and a part may be devoted to sidewalk, part to lawn and shade trees, a part to necessary poles, part to drainage, gutters, etc., a part to vehicles and street cars; and it is not an unlawful use in itself to devote a part designated for drainage to poles supporting electric street lights. Norwalk v. Jacobs, 29 Ohio C. C. 123.

And, in the absence of municipal regulation lot owners, abutting upon a street may, for purposes of necessity, ornament, or convenience, partially obstruct the highway in a reasonable manner so as not to prevent the use of the highway by the public, and the municipal authorities may, by ordinance or otherwise, regulate the manner of this public using and ornamentation with a reasonable discretion, which will depend upon the circumstances. Com. ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Beaver, 171 Pa. 542, 33 Atl. 112, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And that inequalities in the surface of the part of the highway between the sidewalk and the carriage way are of common occurrence in other towns and cities may be shown in an action for damages for an injury occurring from an obstruction in that part of the street, as bearing upon the question of ordinary care; but evidence that such inequalities are not deemed to be a portion of the highway required to be reduced to a level and to be kept in repair the use of foot passengers is inadmissible. Raymond v. Lowell, 6 Cush. 524, 53 Am. Dec. 57.

But it is the duty of a municipal corporation to keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for travel, and this duty is not fully discharged by making the traveled part of the street safe; if there are dangerous places near the usually traveled part, although outside of it, it is the city's duty to use ordinary care to protect from injury a person lawfully using the street in a reasonably prudent manner. Elwood v. Addison, 26 Ind. App. 28, 59 N. E. 47.

And a city has no right to maintain, or permit others to maintain, on its boulevards, and especially on those at the street corners, anything in the nature of a pitfall, or trap, or snare, or like obstruction, whereby a traveler may be injured. McDonald v. St. Paul, supra.

(b) Objects outside traveled track.

(1) General rules.

If an obstruction or excavation is permitted in a street, which renders it unsafe or dangerous to persons or vehicles, it is a nuisance which renders the corporation liable, whether it lies immediately in or on the street, or so near it as to produce danger to a traveler. Niblett v. Nashville, 12 Heisk. 684, 27 Am. Rep. 755; Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303.

The duty of a city or town to keep its streets and sidewalks, etc., safe for foot passengers and vehicles is not met by keeping simply the bed of the highway or the surface of the sidewalk in proper condition; such duty is violated if a dangerous obstruction or excavation is permitted so close to the margin of the sidewalk or highway as to make the use of it dangerous. Biggs v. Huntington, 32 W. Va. 55, 9 S. E. 51; Zettler v. Atlanta, 66 Ga. 195; Willey v. Portsmouth, supra; Oklahoma City v. Meyers, 4 Okla. 686, 46 Pac. 552; Niblett v. Nashville, supra.

And, whenever it is discovered by the officers of a city that a structure exists on the side of one of its streets in so unsafe a condition as to endanger persons using the street, it becomes the duty of the city either to remove, or to secure, it. Grogan v. Broadway Foundry Co. 87 Mo. 321.

And, where a road is so dangerous by reason of its proximity to a precipice, or from any other cause, that common prudence requires extra precaution in order to insure safety to travelers, the municipal authorities are bound to use such precaution. Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am. Rep. 733.

Nor can a city relieve itself of its duty to remove or secure a structure existing on the side of one of its streets in so unsafe a condition as to endanger the safety of persons using the street, by an ordinance providing that the mayor shall require the owner of such structures to have the same secured or removed within a fixed time, and, on his failure to do so, the city shall perform the duty. Grogan v. Broadway Foundry Co. supra.

So, if a person, in the exercise of ordinary care, fell from a sidewalk into an excavation permitted to remain open at the side of a street, and received an injury; and if it was negligence upon the part of the city to allow such excavation to remain so near the sidewalk as to render it dangerous,—she can recover of the city for her injury, though the sidewalk itself was not in a broken condition, or out of repair, or imperfect in construction. Lincoln v. Beckman, 23 Neb. 677, 37 N. W. 593.

And where, in an action against a city for an injury caused by falling into an excavation negligently permitted by the city to be made in close proximity to a street, instructions are given with reference to a dangerous excavation in close proximity to a sidewalk, it is not error to instruct generally as to the duty of the city in the care and management of its streets and sidewalks. Oklahoma City v. Meyers, supra.

Where the obstruction or defect from which an injury resulted was wholly outside of the traveled sidewalk used by the public for travel, and not connected therewith so as to endanger such public traveling thereon, however, there can be no recovery against the city notwithstanding the same was within the lines of the original survey of the street or highway and in a private walk leading from such traveled track or sidewalk to a private building or private place of business. Fitzgerald v. Berlin, 64 Wis. 203, 24 N. W. 879.

And, where the traveled path of a road was from 20 to 30 feet wide, and, in the ditch and 3 feet from the outer edge of the traveled path and about 5 or 6 feet from the fence, a hole had been dug, and there was nothing between the hole and the fence but an elevated sidewalk, and there was some snow upon the sides of the road but none in the traveled track, a person who drove in the ditch in the night on the snow with a sleigh and was injured by the hole cannot recover if he diverged from the traveled road without necessity, but merely for the purpose of having the benefit of the snow, or if the horse took that direction from a natural instinct, or from inability to see the road. Rice v. Montpelier, 19 Vt. 470.

Nor is a municipal corporation liable as for misfeasance in extending the bounds of one of its streets by widening it and thereby bringing an existing nuisance within the 20 T.R.A. (N.S.)

street limits. McCutcheon v. Homer, 43 Mich. 483, 38 Am. Rep. 212, 5 N. W. 668.

But, while a municipal corporation will not be responsible if a traveler voluntarily diverges from the traveled path and injury results, if he is forced into the ditch by accident, and injury is caused by reason of an obstruction in the ditch, the municipality will be liable. Cassedy v. Stockbridge, 21 Vt. 391.

Whether alleged obstructions or defects in a highway render it unsafe although not in the traveled part of it is a question for the consideration of the jury in an action for an injury alleged to have resulted from such obstructions or defects. Bryant v. Biddeford, 39 Me. 193.

(2) Park strips.

Grass plots and shade trees on the sides of streets serve a useful purpose consistent with the object for which streets are made; and their maintenance and protection, by reasonable means, from encroachments of travel, are within the rights of a municipal corporation. Dougherty v. Horseheads, 159 N. Y. 154, 53 N. E. 799; Bellevue v. Genoway, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 304.

And, while they may be obstructions in a street, yet, when ample width is left to answer the demands of travel, they are such obstructions as serve a useful purpose, and are not inconsistent with the object for which streets are made and maintained. Teague v. Bloomington, 40 Ind. App. 68, 81 N. E. 103.

And shade trees growing in a street or highway do not constitute a nuisance for which the municipality is liable, unless they amount to an obstruction to the traveling public. Everett v. Council Bluffs, 46 Iowa, 66; Com. ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Beaver, 171 Pa. 542, 33 Atl. 112.

The right partially to obstruct a street is not limited to a case of strict necessity, but may be exercised for purposes of convenience or ornamentation, provided it does not unreasonably interfere with public travel. Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649.

So, a municipal corporation may, under reasonable regulations and conditions, permit private driveways to be built from the lands of abutting owners to the driveway of the street, and, when they pass near trees or grass plots, may protect the latter and confine travel to the driveways by curbing or other suitable barrier. Dougherty v. Horseheads, supra.

And a large stone placed in a street not in the driveway, which takes the place of curbing in order to keep people off the grass and away from the trees, though an obstruction to the street, is a lawful one the same as a fence, hydrant, or telegraph pole; and the municipal corporation is not liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Dougherty v. Horseheads, 159 N. Y. 154, 54 N. E. 799, affirming 73 Hun, 443, 26 N. Y. Supp. 642.

And, where a person was injured by driving against a stone placed at the intersection of two streets to prevent driving over the curb and park, an ordinance of the city authorizing the parking and curbing of the street is admissible in evidence in an action against the city for the injury received, as bearing upon the issue whether or not the city was negligent. Herries v. Waterloo, 114 Iowa, 374, 86 N. W. 306.

Nor is a city liable for an injury to a pedestrian tripped by a wire stretched across a grass plat adjoining the sidewalk, where, in adopting plans for the improvement of the street, the construction of a sidewalk was provided for, and that adjacent property on the side of the street should remain a grass plat, and the wire erected for the purpose of protecting it was in plain view to pedestrians, and the point where the injury occurred was lighted by electric lights, and persons using the sidewalks could not be injured so long as they remained thereon. Teague v. Bloomington, supra.

Nor is a city liable for personal injuries caused by a pedestrian stumbling and falling over a railing that an abutting owner had placed along the edge of a sidewalk outside the space of the constructed sidewalk, but within the space of the sidewalk area between the sidewalk and the street, where the sidewalk itself was unobstructed and was of sufficient width to accommodate the travelers in the locality in which it was constructed. Oliver v. Denver, 13 Colo. App. 345, 57 Pac. 729.

And the mere existence of a division fence between a bridle path and the walk in one of the public parks of a city gives no cause of action to one who is injured by coming in contact with it, the fence not being out of repair, or negligently constructed, or insufficient for the purposes for which it was erected; the fence being a precautionary measure to prevent equestrians from going upon the walk reserved for pedestrians, and the person injured being an equestrian, and being by mistake not upon the bridle path, but upon the walk reserved for pedestrians, which ran parallel with it. Platt v. New York, 8 Misc. 409, 28 N. Y. Supp. 672.

While a park strip between a sidewalk and a roadway is designed for ornamental purposes, and it is not expected that persons will ordinarily travel upon it, however, it is a part of the highway; and it cannot be said that under no circumstances do travelers have a right to pass upon or over it. Larsen v. Sedro-Woolley, 49 Wash. 134, 94 Pac. 938.

And a street should be kept in such a condition that foot passengers may be able to cross at any place with a reasonable degree of safety using proper care themselves; and it is the duty of cities and towns to keep that part of the street which lies between the carriage way and the sidewalk in such repair that foot passengers may cross any part thereof with a reasonable degree of safety, using such care and caution as are adapted to the nature of the case. Raymond 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Lowell, 6 Cush. 524, 53 Am. Dec. 57; Glasgow v. Gillenwaters, 113 Ky. 140, 67 S. W. 381.

Nor do the facts that safe and convenient crossings are maintained by a city at suitable distances, and that there was a crossing near by, relieve the city of the duty to keep in repair that part of the highway forming the dividing line between the carriage way and the sidewalk, so that it can be safely used by foot passengers for crossing the street, or relieve it from liability for an injury resulting from such failure. Raymond v. Lowell, supra.

And, where a person was thrown to the ground and injured by a wire stretched along a boulevard at a street corner, placed there for the support of a tree, and fastened to a stake at a point 22 inches north of the cross walk and 3 feet 2 inches inside of the curb, the question of the negligence of the city and of the person who was injured is rightfully submitted, as one of fact, to the jury. McDonald v. St. Paul, 82 Minn. 308, 83 Am. St. Rep. 428, 84 N. W. 1022.

So, if a city, in repairing a pavement, places obstructions in and across the same, thereby preventing a traveler from using the same, the traveler has the right, in order to get around the obstruction, to leave the pavement, and is entitled to recover of the city where, in doing so, she steps into a hole, over which the grass has grown so as to cover it, and is injured without negligence on her part. Frankfort v. Chinn, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 257, 89 S. W. 188.

But, if a foot passenger upon a street, instead of availing himself of a crossing especially prepared, chooses to cross at another place, he must take care and see the actual state of the space between the sidewalk and the street; he has no right to assume that the way from the sidewalk to the street is smooth and even, but must exercise caution and prudence adapted to the nature of the case. Raymond v. Lowell, supra.

And everyone must take notice that trees for ornamentation, comfort, and health, and other useful things, are placed in the space left between the curbing of the street and the sidewalk; and he who travels therein must expect to encounter them; and he is not entitled to compensation if he is injured thereby. Fockler v. Kansas City, 94 Mo. App. 464, 68 S. W. 363.

In the above case it was said that Tritz v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 632, supra, IX., c. 2, has been overruled and is no longer authority.

A traveler in a street has no reason to expect to find a pile of stones in the space left between the curbing of the sidewalk and the sidewalk, however, a pile of stones having no place on the street; and, if he falls upon one while he is in the exercise of proper care, the city is liable for the injury which he sustains thereby. Fockler v. Kansas City, supra.

And the question whether, under all the circumstances, a city should have left an open drain ditch in 12 feet of land beside a street reserved for parking purposes, without guard or barricade, is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. Parker v. Bedford (Iowa) 117 N. W. 955.

But, where an order for widening a street to make a boulevard had been made, and houses had been moved back, and the city had done a part of the work of grading, and the surface was left rough with a few large stones upon it, and the only portion of the street which was designed to be used by travelers was the portion wrought for vehicles and the adjacent sidewalks; and a person living in one of the houses that had been moved back passed over this land to reach the sidewalk with a view to travel along the street, when her foot struck a board which stood a little above the surface between the sidewalk and the widened portion and was injured,—this board cannot be regarded as a defect for which the city is liable. Lynch v. Boston, 186 Mass. 148, 71 N. E. 301.

The burden of proof rests with the plaintiff, in an action against a city for an injury caused by falling into a ditch in a space reserved beside a street for parking purposes, to establish the negligence of the city in failing to maintain its streets in a reasonably safe condition for public travel. Parker v. Bedford, supra.

(3) Obstructions, excavations, etc., outside the right of way.

A city is not bound to fence a highway merely to prevent travelers from straying out of the highway, where there is no unsafe place immediately contiguous to the way. Sparhawk v. Salem, 1 Allen, 30, 79 Am. Dec. 700; Daily v. Worcester, 131 Mass. 452; Hudson v. Marlborough, 154 Mass. 218, 28 N. E. 147; Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646.

And this is so although there is a dangerous place a short distance away from the highway, which they might reach by so straying. Daily v. Worcester, supra; Scannal v. Cambridge, 163 Mass. 91, 39 N. E. 790; Barnes v. Chicopee, 138 Mass. 67, 52 Am. Rep. 259; McIlugh v. St. Paul, 67 Minn. 441, 70 N. W. 5.

And the fact that a pavement is continuous from a sidewalk on a street over the adjacent lands to the place of danger is not of itself an implied invitation to a person on the sidewalk to go on the adjacent lands, which will render the city liable for a resulting injury. Kelley v. Columbus, 41 Ohio St. 263.

To render a municipal corporation liable for an injury from an obstruction or defect in proximity to a highway, it must substantially adjoin the highway; if, in order to reach the place of danger, the party injured must become an intruder or trespasser upon the premises of another, there is no breach of duty upon the part of the municipality from which the liability to respond in damages can result. Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Unless a dangerous precipice or pitfall which occasions an injury to a traveler is so near to the usual traveled highway as to endanger his safety while traveling on the used highway, no liability therefor upon the part of the city arises. Hannibal v. Campbell, 30 C. C. A. 63, 57 U. S. App. 484, 86 Fed. 297; Kelley v. Columbus, 41 Ohio St. 263; St. John v. Campbell, 26 Can. S. C. 1.

And where a roadway was in first-rate condition for its entire width of 30 feet, and was bounded on each side by a curb 8 inches in height and separated from an embankment by 10 feet of sidewalk, it cannot be maintained that there was any lack of vigilance demanded from the city in failing to fence this embankment; and the city cannot be held liable for an injury resulting to a person whose horse was frightened at a bicycle and became uncontrollable, and left the road, passed over the gutter and curb, and along the sidewalk, and went over the embankment. Hubbell v. Yonkers, 104 N. Y. 434, 58 Am. Rep. 522, 10 N. E. 858.

And, where an injury occurred to a passenger from the backing of a wagon across a road against boulders against the edge of an embankment 6 or 7 feet high, no recovery against the municipal corporation can be had where the edge of the embankment was about 18 feet from the traveled way, and the traveled way itself was in proper condition, and the boulders formed a guard against the edge of the bank. Waterhouse v. Calef, 21 R. I. 470, 44 Atl. 591.

Nor does a charter provision of a city, giving it power through its common council to compel or cause the making and repairing of railings at exposed places in the streets, render the city liable for an injury from falling over an embankment near a roadway, which was bounded by a curb 8 inches in height and separated from the embankment by 10 feet of sidewalk, since the "exposed places" must mean dangerous places, and the place in question was not dangerous. Hubbell v. Yonkers, supra.

In the above case Macauley v. New York, 67 N. Y. 602, infra, XII., v, 5, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the injury resulted from a cause which might be held to be the neglect of the city to perform its duty, while in this case it cannot be seen that there was any duty to fence the embankment, or that a failure to fence it could be construed as negligence.

Nor can a street built on sloping land, so that it is necessary to leave an excavation on one side and an embankment upon the other, but which is wide enough for three carriages to be driven abreast, and is smooth and level, but which has no railing along the embankment, be regarded as unsafe or out of repair, so as to render the municipality liable for an injury caused by driving over the embankment. Knowlton v. Augusta, 84 Me. 572, 24 Atl. 1039.

So, a city is not liable for an injury to a child by the caving in of a sand pit situated by the side of a road, in which the child was playing, unless the situation of the sand pit was in such close proximity to the street, and the condition of the pit as to its extent and all the surroundings were such as to require the authorities of the city, in the exercise of reasonable judgment, to anticipate that children might be allured to the pit from the street to play there, to such an extent as to endanger their lives. Talty v. Atlantic, 92 Iowa, 135, 60 N. W. 516.

And, where a traveler at night in a place not lighted in any manner walked off a platform adjoining a highway at a point unguarded by a railing, between a building in front of which a platform was constructed and a bridge maintained by the village, the person injured cannot recover unless the point at which he fell was near the bridge and within the line of the highway. Warner v. Randolph, 18 App. Div. 458, 45 N. Y. Supp. 1112.

So, where a sewer emptying into the ocean was so constructed that at high tide the sewage was driven back up the sewer, and, because of the pressure, forced out of the trunk, thereby creating cavities which at times filled with water, liability for an injury caused by a hole filled with water thus created cannot be imposed upon the city, where the hole or excavation was neither adjacent to a highway, nor so close to it as to make the highway dangerous, but was from 50 to 60 feet away from it, and separated from it by an embankment faced by a wall and surmounted by a fence. Murphy v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 575, 23 N. E. 887.

And a city owes no duty to the general public, aside from that of a sanitary character, with respect to water forming a pond on private property within the limits of a city but not near or in dangerous proximity to a public highway, street, or alley, other than such as devolves on private owners of property similarly situated, even though the city may have created the pond. Omaha v. Bowman, 52 Neb. 293, 40 L.R.A. 531, 66 Am. St. Rep. 506, 72 N. W. 316.

If an obstruction or excavation is made so near the line of a public street that one lawfully passing along the street may accidentally fall into it or be injured by it, however, it is the duty of the city to secure the erection of barriers as a protection against such accidents; and, if the city fails to do so, and a person falls into the excavation or runs into the obstruction and sustains injuries, it will be liable for such neglect. South Omaha v. Cunningham, 31 Neb. 316, 47 N. W. 930; Denver v. Johnson, 8 Colo. App. 384, 46 Pac. 621; Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757; Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Iowa, 75, 4 Am. Rep. 196; Wiggin v. St. Louis, 135 Mo. 558, 37 S. W. 528; Oklahoma City v. Meyers, 4 Okla. 686, 46 Pac. 552; Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 431; Niblett v. Nashville, 12 Heisk. 684, 27 Am. Rep. 755; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369.

While a municipal corporation is not responsible for the acts of private owners upon their own premises, and is not generally bound to guard against travelers wandering on adjoining lands along a highway, if, by reason of the condition of the adjoining premises, the way itself is rendered unsafe, and the public authorities may reasonably protect travelers from the danger, it is their duty to do so. Newcastle v. Grubbs, supra.

And a city is liable for a failure to guard the boundary of a street under circumstances which render the roadway dangerous on account of such failure, though the injuries were received outside of the legal limits of the highway but at a spot which was apparently within such limits and which was rendered dangerous by an obstruction or excavation, no steps having been taken to guard travelers from running against or into what seemed to be the highway. Jewhurst v. Syracuse, 108 N. Y. 303, 15 N. E. 409.

And a street about 2 rods wide in a village, the surface of which is in all respects in good condition, and has been repaired from time to time by the town authorities, but which at a certain point has a cellar beside it about 4 feet deep, the line of the wall of which extends within the line of the street, over which cellar no building has existed for a period of about eight years, and no guard or railing has been erected or maintained along the excavation, is not in such a condition of repair as to be safe and convenient for travelers with teams, horses, and carriages, within the meaning of the Maine statute on that subject. Nichols v. Brunswick, 3 Cliff. 81, Fed. Cas. No. 10,238.

And, where a person driving through a street in the night, following the highway, brought his wagon in contact with a stump standing 6 inches outside of the highway line, but with no mark to indicate the line of the street, and he was thrown out and injured, evidence, in an action against the city for the injury, that the streets in the vicinity were largely used, and that this stump had remained exposed for a long time, and that there was no light near enough to show the stump, is sufficient to support a judgment for the plaintiff, finding the city guilty of negligence. Sweet v. Poughkeepsie, 97 App. Div. 82, 89 N. Y. Supp. 618.

So, trespass on the case lies against a municipal corporation for nonfeasance in permitting a large ditch, gully, or chasm to remain at one end of a public street, into which a person's horse fell and sustained injuries from which it died. Tallahassee v. Fortune, 3 Fla. 19, 52 Am. Dec. 358.

And a city which deposited and permitted others to deposit refuse material in a river at a point where a street terminated, so that the deposit appeared to be a prolongation and part of the street, the same being dangerous to anyone stepping thereon, may be guilty of such negligence in the premises as to render it liable to anyone injured by stepping on the deposit. Ray v. St. Paul, 40 Minn. 458, 42 N. W. 297.

And, where a person was driving on a road in a city park, and his horse became frightened by a locomotive and turned and upset the carriage, and, there being no barrier on the road, fell with the carriage into the river and was drowned, the circumstances are evidence of the negligence of the city in not putting up a barrier. Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am. Rep. 733.

And, where an elevated sidewalk adjoined the steps and platform to a building fronting thereon, and they were built together so that the platform and steps were adapted to the use of the sidewalk as a thoroughfare and constituted an adjunct thereto, any danger from their insecure condition should be treated as arising from a defective or unsafe condition of the walk itself, for which the municipality would be liable. Leggett v. Watertown, 55 App. Div. 321, 66 N. Y. Supp. 910.

So, a municipal corporation is liable for injuries happening to a person from the defective condition of a part of a sidewalk constructed, by it extending beyond the true line of the street over adjacent private property so as ostensibly to form a portion of the highway, such defect being caused through the owner of the property having placed on such part of the sidewalk a grating covering an area, and having allowed it, to the knowledge of the municipality, to fall into disrepair so close to the highway as to render travel unsafe. Badams v. Toronto, 24 Ont. App. Rep. 8.

But, if a traveler unnecessarily and for his own convenience deviates designedly from a highway, and in so doing meets with an accident from an obstruction not in the highway, the city cannot be held responsible, no matter how near the highway the obstruction may be. Biggs v. Huntington, 32 W. Va. 55, 9 S. E. 51; Taylor v. Mt. Vernon, 58 Hun, 384, 12 N. Y. Supp. 25, affirmed in 129 N. Y. 651, 29 N. E. 1032.

And, where a woman walking in the dark along a village street in a thickly settled part started to cross the road to go across the fields, when she fell into a hole dug some time before by children within 5 feet of one side of the road, the hole cannot be regarded as a defect in the way which the village authorities were bound to remedy if they did not suppose that the needs of public travel required it; and she cannot maintain an action against them for her injury. Keyes v. Marcellus, 50 Mich. 441, 45 Am. Rep. 52, 15 N. W. 542.

Under a statute like that of Massachusetts with reference to defects in a highway, however, a municipal corporation is not liable for an injury occasioned by falling upon a defect in a sidewalk of a way which had been located and laid out by it so as to run through the sidewalk in a line parallel with the curbstone and 5 feet from it, leaving a part of the sidewalk outside of the way, where the accident happened outside the location of the way, although there was no monument on the sidewalk indicating the line of location and the whole sidewalk was used by travelers. Stone v. Attleborough, 140 Mass. 328, 4 N. E. 570.

And a structure or erection on private property wholly outside the limits of a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

street or highway does not constitute an insufficiency of the highway, within the meaning of a statute making cities liable for insufficiency of highways, even though it is maintained or used in such a way as to interfere with the safety of persons traveling over the highway. Hubbell v. Viroqua, 67 Wis. 343, 58 Am. Rep. 866, 30 N. W. 847.

So Sykes v. Pawlet, 43 Vt. 446, 5 Am. Rep. 295, holds that, to entitle a person injured by an obstruction or defect alleged to be in a public street, it should appear that the defect complained of was within the limits of the street as located and established.

The question whether a dangerous place in a road leading into or from one of the public streets of a municipal corporation was so near a public street as to be dangerous to persons traveling thereon, is a question of fact for the jury. Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Iowa, 73, 4 Am. Rep. 196.

(4) Obstructions in proximity to sidewalks.

It is negligence upon the part of a city, for which it is liable, to leave a dangerous obstruction or excavation in a public thoroughfare, close to a much-used walk, without guards, barriers, lights, or danger signals. Olathe v. Mizee, 48 Kan. 435 30 Am. St. Rep. 308, 29 Pac. 754; Chicago v. Hesing, 83 Ill. 204, 25 Am. Rep. 378; Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757; Halpin v. Kansas City, 76 Mo. 355.

And an unguarded and unlighted excavation in close proximity to a cross walk may constitute negligence of a municipality, although the cross walk itself is not defective. Hall v. Manson, 99 Iowa, 698, 34 L.R.A. 207, 68 N. W. 922.

And, while a deep area way along the line of the sidewalk on a busy and much-frequented street in a large city is not necessarily an unlawful encroachment, and a nuisance per se, its presence when insufficiently guarded is a source of danger to persons on the street; and, where it has so existed for a long period of time, the officers of the municipality are chargeable with knowledge of the danger. Donnelly v. Rochester, 166 N. Y. 315, 59 N. E. 989.

So, while a hole in a street close to the sidewalk, 2 feet long and 15 inches wide, apparently caused by the washing of surface water escaping from the street, is not as matter of law such a defect as would make the city absolutely liable for a personal injury caused thereby, where there is a conflict as to the period of its existence the court should submit as part of the special verdict the question as to whether the city authorities ought, under all the circumstances, reasonably to have anticipated that an accident might happen and injury be sustained by travelers in the street therefrom. Rhyner v. Menasha, 107 Wis. 201, 83 N. W. 303.

Nor is the liability of a municipal corporation for injuries sustained by a traveler while crossing a street, by stepping upon an upturned nail in a board at the edge of the sidewalk, affected by the fact that such board was not attached to and did not constitute a part of the walk, where it was so near the traveled portion of the walk or street as to endanger travel thereon. Pittenger v. Hamilton, 85 Wis. 356, 55 N. W. 423.

But where, under the corner of the sidewalk at two intersecting streets, there was a hole inside of the curbstone opening into a catch basin, and in front of this on the main surface of the street was an iron plate or lid extending toward the center of the street and sloping from the outer edge to the hole, and the catch basin was full of snow, and water stood in the street to the level of the sidewalk, and in the dark a pedestrian mistook the water for a continuation of the concrete of the sidewalk and stepped off the corner and slipped on the iron plate and fell, receiving injuries, the presence of the snow and water in receptive form, in connection with the darkness, the plate, and the hole, does not constitute a defect in the street for which the city is liable. Spillane v. Fitchburg, 177 Mass. 87, 83 Am. St. Rep. 262, 58 N. E. 176.

And, where there was comparatively little traffic on a cross street in a city, and the sidewalk was laid out by the city authorities 7 feet wide, the outside line being within 4½ inches of a block, and the whole space was brick as though the sidewalk extended to the block, excepting in front of a basement window about 9 feet wide, where there was a depression in the brick wall 8½ inches in width from the window and 6½ inches in depth, this depression was not a defect in the highway in a legal sense; and the city is not liable for injury to a person who fell into it while walking along the sidewalk in the daytime. Witham v. Portland, 72 Me. 539.

d. What obstructions or defects impose liability.

1. Generally.

Ordinarily any object in, upon, or near, the traveled path of a highway, which would necessarily obstruct or hinder one in the use thereof for the purpose of traveling thereon, or which, from its nature and position, would be likely to produce that result, constitutes a defect in the highway, for an injury resulting from which the town is liable. Hewison v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 136, 91 Am. Dec. 718; Swart v. District of Columbia, 17 App. D. C. 407; Simon v. Atlanta, 67 Ga. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 739.

And a municipal corporation is bound to repair any defect in a sidewalk which endangers the safety of travelers. Colby v. Beaver Dam, 34 Wis. 285.

And this is so whether the obstruction is carelessly permitted to be placed in or upon it, or whether it is produced by the operation of natural causes, or by the act of public officers or private individuals. Swart v. District of Columbia, supra.

So, the duty devolving upon cities and villages to keep their streets and sidewalks reasonably safe and fit for travel applies to defects in construction as well as neglect to repair. Plainview v. Mendelson, 65 Neb. 85, 90 N. W. 956.

And a road or street may be put out of repair, so as to render the municipal corporation liable for resulting injury, by the deposit of obstructions therein which impede or hinder travel or make it dangerous, as well as by partial destruction of the road-bed itself, producing the like effect. Fritsch v. Allegheny, 91 Pa. 226.

Nor is the insufficiency or want of repair of streets and highways, for which municipal corporations are made liable by statute, restricted so as to include only inadequacy of original construction and subsequent deterioration; it also includes such obstacles and defects as render the use of the highway dangerous to one exercising ordinary care, provided the municipality has notice of the defect and opportunity to remove it. Morrison v. Eau Claire, 115 Wis. 538, 95 Am. St. Rep. 955, 92 N. W. 280.

A statute imposing a liability upon municipalities for damages caused by reason of defective highways applies to highways which are defective because unsafe for public travel; and there is no distinction between a defect in the highway itself and an obstacle upon it. Whitney v. Ticonderoga, 53 Hun. 214, 6 N. Y. Supp. 844, affirmed in 127 N. Y. 40, 27 N. E. 403.

And a statute providing that all highways are to be kept in repair and amended from time to time that the same may be safe and convenient for travelers applies as well to obstructions placed upon, as to defects inherent in the structure of, a road. Davis v. Bangor, 42 Me. 522.

So, a statutory provision that any person or persons sustaining bodily injury upon any of the public highways or streets in the state by reason of neglect to keep such public highways or streets in good repair and in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel may recover of the township, village, city, or corporation his just damages, makes a city not only liable for injuries occurring through neglect to keep the streets in repair, but also for such as occur by reason of neglect of the city to keep its streets in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel. Joslyn v. Detroit, 74 Mich. 458, 42 N. W. 50.

And a statute providing that the several towns in the state shall be liable to any person for damages to person or property by reason of defective highways or bridges in such town in cases which the commissioner or commissioners of highways of said towns are now by law liable therefor, instead of such commissioners of highways, uses the term "defective highways" in reference to their condition for public travel upon them; and the impairment of a highway for public use may be no less such by an obstruction placed in it than by a physical disturbance or injury to the bed of the roadway. Whitney v. Ticonderoga, 127 N. Y. 40, 27 N. E. 403.

But a street is not out of repair, within the meaning of a statute making a municipality liable for an injury due to a street's being out of repair, by allowing things which are no part of the highway to stand in it temporarily; the want of repair must relate to the way itself, and not to things disconnected with it. Agnew v. Corunna, 55 Mich. 428, 54 Am. Rep. 383, 21 N. W. 873.

So, any unauthorized obstruction which unnecessarily impedes or incommodes the lawful use of a highway without authority of law is a public nuisance. Richmond v. Smith, 101 Va. 161, 43 S. E. 345; Simon v. Atlanta, supra; Ely v. Campbell, 59 How. Pr. 333.

And the duty of a city to keep its streets open and free from nuisances applies to all obstructions except those which the city is specifically empowered to authorize. Heath v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co. 61 Iowa, 11, 15 N. W. 573.

Nor is it necessary that an obstruction in a street should endanger all modes of public travel in order to be a defect for which the city is liable; it is enough that it makes any mode dangerous which the public have a right to use. Powers v. Boston, 154 Mass. 60, 27 N. E. 995.

It is only against defects or obstructions in streets of sufficient gravity to justify a careful and prudent man in anticipating danger from their existence, however, that the municipality is bound to guard. Ibbeken v. New York, 94 N. Y. Supp. 568; Hamilton v. Buffalo, 173 N. Y. 72, 65 N. E. 944, affirming 55 App. Div. 423, 66 N. Y. Supp. 990; Gottsberger v. New York, 9 Misc. 349, 29 N. Y. Supp. 592; Beltz v. Yonkers, 148 N. Y. 67, 42 N. E. 401; Denver v. Hubbard, 29 Colo. 529, 69 Pac. 508; Rhyner v. Menasha, 107 Wis. 201, 83 N. W. 303.

Cities are not required to keep their sidewalks free from irregularities and trifling defects. McQueen v. Elkhart, 14 Ind. App. 671, 43 N. E. 460; Hamilton v. Buffalo, supra.

The duty of a city or town to see that all its streets open for travel, including sidewalks as well as carriage ways, are kept in repair and free from obstruction, is performed when the way designated and evidently intended for travel is without obstruction, or such structural defects as would endanger the safety of travelers in the exercise by themselves of ordinary care. Oliver v. Denver, 13 Colo. App. 345, 57 Pac. 729.

And, where an injury is alleged to have been occasioned by a defect or obstruction in a street, the inquiry should be, not Was there some defect or obstruction in the street? but, Was the street, in the condition in which it is proven to have been, with the defect or obstruction, in a reasonably safe condition for travel in the ordinary modes at the time the accident happened; and was the accident the natural and probable result of the use of the street in that condition, and one that should have been foreseen by those charged with the duty of maintaining the street? Dayton v. Glaser, 76 Ohio St. 471, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 916, 81 N. E. 991.

Nor would the mere fact that an obstruction was permitted to remain in a street for several weeks make the city liable for a resulting injury, unless the street was not reasonably safe on account thereof. Badgley v. St. Louis, 149 Mo. 122, 50 S. W. 817.

And nothing is an obstruction, within the meaning of a statute subjecting towns to liability for injuries resulting from obstructions, insufficiencies, or want of repairs in their highways, which the town was not bound to have removed at the time of the injury in question under the circumstances of that particular case; and nothing is an insufficiency which the town was not reasonably, having reference to such circumstances, bound then to have improved; and nothing a want of repairs which it was not bound to have mended. Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520.

So, a statutory provision that no contract involving the expenditure of money can be entered into by a municipal corporation unless the clerk shall certify that the money required by the contract is in the treasury to the credit of the fund is intended for the protection of taxpayers by checking municipal extravagances and the incurring of indebtedness, and is not intended to attach liability to a city for negligence where the city would not otherwise be liable; and the mere fact that there was no money in the treasury to pay the costs of a sewer at the time of making the contract would not make the city liable, even though there was negligence in its construction. Elster v. Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82, 30 N. E. 274.

As a general rule, a city is liable for injuries resulting from the dangerous condition of a street or sidewalk, only when that condition constitutes a nuisance. Schweickhardt v. St. Louis, 2 Mo. App. 571; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532.

And it is not every obstruction in a highway that constitutes a nuisance per se; it is any unreasonable obstruction that is a public nuisance. Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649; Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166.

So, everything which renders a highway unsafe does not make it defective, within the meaning of a statute imposing liability upon a town for injury resulting from a defective bridge or road. Hewison v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 136, 91 Am. Dec. 718.

And, where an injury results from a defect in a sidewalk which might, indeed, result in an accident, but which is not of such dimensions or character as to make an accident probable, it does not justify the submission to the jury, in an action for the injury, of the question of the city's negligence. Henry v. New York, 119 App. Div. 432, 104 N. Y. Supp. 440.

And a city is not liable for an injury to a person, received from falling over a pile of pipes in a street, where the pile of pipes did not offer a dangerous obstruction to travel. Henderson v. Burke, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1781, 44 S. W. 422.

So, objects along a highway which have no necessary connection with the roadbed or the public travel thereon, and which may expose a person to danger, not as a traveler, but independent of the highway, do not ordinarily render the road defective so as to make the town liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Hewison v. New Haven, supra.

A municipal corporation is liable for an injury resulting from work in a street amounting to a nuisance, however, though the work may have been done with care and the structure erected in an apparently proper manner; since its erection was itself unlawful, no amount of care or labor bestowed can legalize the illegal appropriation of the street or highway. Wendell v. Troy, 39 Barb. 329, affirmed in 4 Abb. App. Dec. 563.

And it is no answer to a charge of nuisance in a street that, even with the obstruction, there was room for pedestrians, nor that the obstruction itself was not a fixture; if it is permanently, or even habitually, in the highway, it is a nuisance. Warden v. New York, 123 App. Div. 733, 108 N. Y. Supp. 305.

So, any unauthorized permanent erection or structure which is a material encroachment upon a public street or highway and impedes or interferes with travel is a nuisance per se, and may be abated as such though ample space is left for passage by the public. Savage v. Salem, 23 Or. 381, 24 L.R.A. 787, 37 Am. St. Rep. 688, 31 Pac. 832.

And a structure 64 feet long, 12 feet wide, and 6 feet high, erected in a street, although not erected for an indefinite period, is sufficiently permanent in its nature to be a nuisance per se as distinguished from the class of temporary obstructions made necessary by the necessities of business. Richmond v. Smith, 101 Va. 161, 43 S. E. 345.

To render a municipal corporation liable for injury occasioned by obstructions or defects in its streets or sidewalks, however, they must have been of such a nature that they were in themselves dangerous and could not be readily detected, or such that a person exercising ordinary prudence could not have avoided danger of injury in passing them. Quincy v. Barker, 81 Ill. 300, 25 Am. Rep. 278; Aurora v. Pulfer, 56 Ill. 270.

And a complaint in an action against a municipal corporation in an action for damages for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street, if otherwise sufficient, is not rendered insufficient by the absence of an averment showing that there was no reasonable necessity for so encumbering the street, since the existence of such necessity would constitute matter to be set up by way of defense. Royal Center v. Bingaman, 37 Ind. App. 626, 77 N. E. 811, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. Obstructions authorized by law.

Persons injured by accidents from an authorized public work have no legal remedy. Jones v. Waltham, 4 Cush. 299, 50 Am. Dec. 783.

And that a structure in a highway which renders it unsafe and inconvenient for travelers was authorized by the legislature is a good defense in an action against the city for an injury resulting therefrom. Bedford v. Coggeshall, 19 R. I. 313, 36 Atl. 89.

But a building or other structure of a like nature, erected upon a street without the sanction of the legislature, is a nuisance; and local corporate authority of a place cannot give a valid permission to thus occupy streets without express power to this end, conferred upon them by charter or statute. Ely v. Campbell, 59 How. Pr. 333.

And, while a water company has the right to construct in a city such works as the law-making power has authorized, such a company cannot put a structural obstruction in the public highway; and, if it does, and the attention of the city is called to it, followed by neglect to remove it, the city will be liable for an injury caused by the obstruction, in the absence of concurrent negligence by the person injured. Scranton v. Catterson, 94 Pa. 202.

And a city ordinance prohibiting street obstructions is admissible in evidence in an action for damages resulting from such an obstruction, for the purpose of showing structures like those causing the injury to be unlawful, and charging the city with a duty in reference to an improper use of its streets. Farrell v. Dubuque, 129 Iowa, 447, 105 N. W. 696.

3. Obstructions for general public convenience.

As a general rule slight obstruction of a street or highway for the sake of general convenience and business does not render a municipal corporation liable for a resulting injury. Tiesler v. Norwich, 73 Conn. 199, 47 Atl. 161.

And, where obstructions placed in a street constitute a necessary incident to the use of the street for purposes authorized by law, or where they are intended for the protection of the general traveling public, they do not constitute a nuisance. Seibert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 188 Mo. 657, 70 L.R.A. 72, 87 S. W. 995; Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590.

The right of the public to use a street is subject to such reasonable and necessary limitations as the city may impose upon it; and, as long as an obstruction placed upon a street is temporary and reasonable in its character, and is intended for the public safety and convenience, its existence furnishes no cause for complaint. Simon v. Atlanta, 67 Ga. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 739.

A municipal corporation has the power to authorize the appropriation of its streets to all such uses as are conducive to the public good, and do not interfere with the unrestricted use of such streets as highways. Burnes v. St. Joseph, 91 Mo. App. 489.

While it is the duty of a municipal corporation to use reasonable care to keep its streets in a safe condition to drive upon, it has the right to devote parts thereof to other useful public purposes provided it leaves an unobstructed driveway of ample width for the passage of teams. Dougherty v. Horseheads, 159 N. Y. 154, 53 N. E. 799; Teague v. Bloomington, 40 Ind. App. 68, 81 N. E. 103.

Thus, the construction of a sewer or drain in a public street under authority of the municipal corporation is a lawful act, and the corporation is liable only for fault or negligence in the construction of the same, whereby injuries are sustained. Wendell v. Troy, 4 Keyes, 267, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 569; Burnes v. St. Joseph, supra; Elster v. Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82, 30 N. E. 274.

But a municipal corporation is not exempted from the duty of exercising due care in opening and constructing a sewer in a public street, by the fact that it was acting under legislative authority. Koontz v. District of Columbia, 24 App. D. C. 59.

And the construction of waterworks by a city in its streets is not per se a nuisance; and, where the work is provided for by its act of incorporation, neither the city nor its contractor can be held liable in damages for an injury or death resulting from the construction of waterworks, unless it can be shown that such injury or death was caused by some act of negligence of the contractor or his servants, or some breach of duty by the city, and that no contributory negligence of the person injured existed. Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166.

Nor is a cut in a street for the purpose of putting in water pipes, made pursuant to lawful authority, a nuisance per se. Sevestre v. New York, 15 Jones & S. 341; Burnes v. St. Joseph, supra.

And a person who falls into a ditch in a street and is injured thereby cannot recover of the city for his injury, where the ditch was not a temporary excavation or obstruction in the street, but one constructed to drain the streets, and which was a necessary part of the street; there being nothing to show that the ditch was improperly constructed. Mitchell v. Tell City (Ind. App.) 81 N. E. 594.

And water tanks erected by an individual by the authority and permission of a city, at places designated and selected by the city's agent and under his supervision, cannot be held to be public nuisances per se if they were erected and maintained for public, and not for private, purposes. Savage v. Salem, 23 Or. 381, 24 L.R.A. 787, 37 Am. St. Rep. 688, 31 Pac. 832.

So, a municipal corporation may authorize the erection in its streets of telephone, telegraph, electric-light, or electric street-railway poles. Burnes v. St. Joseph, supra; Bellevue v. Genoway, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 304.

And objects like water hydrants, hitching posts, telegraph poles, awning posts, or 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

building stones may be placed in, or exist in, a public street, and cannot be held to constitute a nuisance; they are in some respects incidental to the proper use of the street as a highway. Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 411, 55 L.R.A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, 61 N. E. 699; Bellevue v. Genoway and Burnes v. St. Joseph, supra.

And an iron monument or column 4 inches in diameter, with a rim projecting $\frac{1}{8}$ of an inch, projecting at the time of the accident in question from the ground $1\frac{1}{8}$ inches on one side and $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches on the other, which was covered up except when the wind or water took the sand away, placed at the intersection of two streets where there was little travel, used by the city as the basis from which to start in surveying lots, and placed in the center of the intersection of streets at intervals of every two blocks, is not such a defect in a street as to fix on the municipal corporation liability on the ground of negligence for an injury to a person whose carriage wheel caught upon such a monument throwing out the driver. Galveston v. Dazet (Tex.) 19 S. W. 142.

So, a good fire department is both necessary and useful to a city, and its efficiency is promoted by parades and practice, and temporarily to obstruct passage of the streets by stretching ropes across them during a parade or practice of the fire department furnishes no ground for damages against the city. Simon v. Atlanta, supra.

And a judge has authority to order ropes stretched across a street during the hours while his court is sitting, to prevent travel in front of the courthouse, where the noise of passing vehicles obstructs the proper administration of justice therein. Belvin v. Richmond, 85 Va. 574, 1 L.R.A. 807, 8 S. E. 378.

And a city is not liable for damages sustained by a traveler in such case, where the city had no agency in the matter, and had entered its protest against the obstruction without effect; since in such case the city was powerless to remove the rope, and bound by the orders of the court until reversed by some competent tribunal. Ibid.

But, while a city has a right to make such excavations in its streets from time to time as, in its judgment, may be necessary and proper to lay down culverts, sewers, and such other subservice conduits as the business, health, convenience, and comfort of the citizens may require, in so doing it must use all reasonable care and take every reasonable precaution to prevent injuries to travelers in its streets. Carswell v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 360, 43 Atl. 169.

And, though a structure in a street is not in and of itself a nuisance, and is placed there to be used by the public as a part of a street, it is the duty of the city permitting it to remain and to be so used to see that it is in a safe condition for the public to use it as a part of a street; and this is so though the structure is not in the most-traveled portion of the street. Estelle v. Lake Crystal, 27 Minn. 243, 6 N. W. 775.

And, if a structure in a street is of itself a nuisance, dangerous to those using the street, it is the duty of the city having notice to remove it. Ibid.

So, there is no necessity for placing a stand pipe or water tower in a street, a stand pipe being but a part of the machinery and appliance with which water is forced into the pipes throughout the city, and when so placed it is an unlawful use of the street, for injuries resulting from which the city is liable. Barrows v. Sycamore, 150 Ill. 588, 25 L.R.A. 535, 41 Am. St. Rep. 400, 37 N. E. 1096.

And a city was guilty of negligence for which it is liable, where it caused to be dug along a street a trench or ditch for the purpose of laying water pipe, and negligently suffered it to remain open for an unreasonable length of time, and caused a large volume of water to be turned into it, which had the effect of loosening the sides of the bank, rendering the ground of the street liable to cave in, so that a child standing on the street by the side of the trench fell in and was injured by the sudden caving of the ground. Aurora v. Seidelman, 34 Ill. App. 285.

4. Obstructions for private or individual convenience.

This subject is covered by a subject note to McKim v. Philadelphia, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 506.

5. Obstructions for improvement or repair.

(a) Generally.

The temporary obstruction of a public street for the purpose of improvement, if a reasonable necessity exists therefor, is not unlawful; and the municipal authorities are not answerable in damages for permitting it. Frazier v. Butler, 172 Pa. 407, 51 Am. St. Rep. 739, 33 Atl. 691; Kimball v. Bath, 38 Me. 219, 61 Am. Dec. 243; Stephens v. Macon, 83 Mo. 345; Lincoln v. Calvert, 39 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115; Halstead v. Warsaw, 43 App. Div. 39, 59 N. Y. Supp. 518; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; McDonald v. Dickenson, 24 Ont. App. Rep. 31.

Municipal corporations are not only authorized, but required, by law, to repair their public ways, including streets and sidewalks, so that they may be safe and convenient for those who may have occasion to pass and repass upon them, and to do so effectually it may be necessary to break up and remodel both the bed of the street and the sidewalk; and at such times the public is necessarily subjected to some degree of inconvenience, and for such necessary interruption of travel and inconvenience to the public they are not liable. Kimball v. Bath, supra; Morton v. Frankfort, 55 Me. 46; Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245, 9 Am. St. Rep. 691, 17 N. E. 538.

This is the rule of ELAM v. MT. STERLING, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

A legal distinction exists between a hole or pit occasioned by the subsidence of the soil or decay of materials of which a street or sidewalk is composed, and an excavation which is a necessary part of an improvement. Schweickhardt v. St. Louis, 2 Mo. App. 571.

And the obligation of a municipal corporation to keep its streets in repair is necessarily suspended while they are actually undergoing such alterations as for the time render them impassable or dangerous. James v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. 528, 65 Am. Dec. 526; South Omaha v. Burke, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 309, 91 N. W. 562; Lincoln v. Calvert, 39 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115; Guthrie v. Swan, 5 Okla. 779, 51 Pac. 562; Williams v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 447.

Provided the dangerous condition is not maintained for an unreasonable time. Lincoln v. Calvert, supra.

Thus, if a municipal corporation found it necessary to lay water mains in a street, and a person was injured by a pile or ridge of stones which obstructed the street on account thereof, the city is not liable for the injury where the whole work was done by the employees of the city in a proper manner and with reasonable care and diligence. Baltimore v. Holmes, 39 Md. 243.

And the act of a city of piling bricks along the side of its streets for the purpose of repairing the streets, while the repairs are in progress, does not create a nuisance. Pinnix v. Durham, 130 N. C. 360, 41 S. E. 932.

So, the work of laying water pipes in a city necessarily involves the digging up of the street and the use of its surface to some extent for the deposit of dirt from the trench, and as a place of temporary storage of water pipes and other materials and implements; and the leaving of a pipe on a sidewalk at such a place, parallel with the curbing and 3 inches from the gutter at a point in the street which was not arranged for travelers so to walk as to come in contact with it, is not negligence for which the city is liable. Downey v. Boston, 184 Mass. 20, 67 N. E. 638.

And, when the use of a steam-rolling machine is necessary in the lawful construction or repair of a macadamized roadway upon a highway open for public travel, such use is lawful; and it is not negligence per se to permit the machine to stand on the highway at rest over Sunday when a reasonably necessary incident of such use; and no liability attaches where the machine is left in as favorable a location as possible with a view to avoid accidents. Keeley v. Shanley, 140 Pa. 213, 31 Atl. 305, 306.

And, while an abutting owner may plant trees in a street in front of his premises, and may acquire an interest in them which the law will protect as against a trespasser, such trees are subject to the right of the public; and where, in making the street conform to an established grade, or in constructing a sidewalk, it becomes necessary to remove the trees or injure them, the owner is not entitled to relief. Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373.

And, where the statutes confer upon municipalities the authority to grade their streets, the city is not liable for consequential damages if the work of grading is performed with ordinary skill and prudence; it is only liable if the work is done in a negligent manner. Walters v. Marshalltown (Iowa) 120 N. W. 146.

Whether or not a city which raised a street in grading it, without leaving culverts therein, is liable to a landowner for damages caused by a resulting overflow of his land, depends upon whether, in view of the topography of the neighborhood and the existing improvements and the character of the stream, the city was guilty of any want of ordinary skill and prudence in so grading the street without culverts or other waterways. Ibid.

But the duty of a city to improve or repair its streets and keep them in repair is coupled with the duty to protect the public against accidents while the streets are out of repair, or while they are being repaired; and they must be kept in a safe condition or the public must be protected from accident in some proper way while they are unsafe. Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 10 N. W. 162; Milwaukee v. Davis, 6 Wis. 377; Birmingham v. Tayloe, 105 Ala. 170, 16 So. 576; Kimball v. Bath; Morton v. Frankfort; Pratt v. Weymouth; and Stephens v. Macon,—supra; Ahlfeldt v. Mexico, 129 Mo. App. 193, 108 S. W. 122; Ray v. Poplar Bluff, 70 Mo. App. 252; Lincoln v. Calvert, supra; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095; O'Hara v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 443, 57 N. Y. Supp. 367; Grant v. Brooklyn, 41 Barb. 381; Oklahoma City v. Welsh, 3 Okla. 288, 41 Pac. 598; Wilson v. Wheeling, supra; Hill v. Tottenham Urban Dist. Council, 79 L. T. N. S. 495; Clements v. Tyrone [1905] 2 Ir. Ch. 542.

Streets are intended for the public use, and, while municipal authorities are entitled to their use to improve and repair them, they must exercise that use in a way to insure the safety of travelers so far as compatible with the temporary interference of those intrusted with their care; and, when work upon a street is suspended for the day, if there is any obstruction to its unrestricted use, that obstruction should be guarded so that it will not be a menace to a traveler. Halstead v. Warsaw, 43 App. Div. 39, 59 N. Y. Supp. 518; Buffalo v. Holloway, 7 N. Y. 493, 57 Am. Dec. 550; O'Hara v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 443, 57 N. Y. Supp. 367.

And it is the duty of the municipality to see that the street or walk is made reasonably safe for night travel; and it cannot escape liability for neglect of this duty by attempting to shift upon others the responsibility for such neglect. Ray v. Poplar Bluff, supra; Kimball v. Bath, 38 Me. 219, 61 Am. Dec. 243.

And, where streets are rendered dangerous 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

or impassable while undergoing repairs, and the town neglects to adopt such reasonably precautionary measures for the safety of citizens and travelers, it is equally as culpable and as liable as it is when its ways are permitted to become unsafe for want of repairs. Kimball v. Bath, supra.

It must exercise reasonable care to protect the public from the consequences of the unsafe condition of the street. Lincoln v. Calvert, 39 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115; Ahlfeldt v. Mexico, supra.

So, a statutory duty imposed upon cities to keep their streets which are open to public travel in good repair for that purpose makes it necessary that, while grading and paving a street under a charter power, it shall be closed to public travel so far as it is rendered unfit or unsafe for that purpose. Southwell v. Detroit, 74 Mich. 438, 42 N. W. 118.

And, when a town concludes that repairs to a street can be made without interrupting the travel, and proceeds to repair without making known that the way is not in a condition to be used, or that there is danger in using it, it is liable for injuries resulting therefrom, although it may not have been guilty of any other neglect than that of permitting the way to be out of repair. Jacobs v. Bangor, 16 Me. 187, 33 Am. Dec. 652.

So, while a city may temporarily place obstructions in a street for the purpose of making repairs, this is permitted only as a matter of necessity and for a reasonable time. Fugate v. Somerset, 97 Ky. 48, 29 S. W. 970; Frost v. Portland, 11 Me. 271; Lincoln v. Calvert, supra.

And of this necessity the persons making the repairs are not the exclusive judges; they act at their peril. Frost v. Portland, supra.

And, if more time is taken than is reasonably necessary, it is a violation of the statutory duty; and any person who is specially injured thereby, in either his person or property, is entitled to indemnification from the city. Williams v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 447.

The "temporary" obstruction of a street, for which an abutting owner is not entitled to damages, while a public improvement is being constructed therein, is the opposite of "permanent," and means a period of time commensurate with the reasonable prosecution of the work. Lefkovitz v. Chicago, 238 Ill. 23, 87 N. E. 58.

And a city putting an improvement in a street is, in the absence of anything to show the character of the work, presumed to be engaged in a lawful undertaking and acting with reasonable despatch; and it will be presumed that the obstruction will not be maintained for an unreasonable length of time. Ibid.

And whether the time occupied by the city in grading and improving a street was reasonable or not is a question for a jury in an action for an injury resulting from its unsafe condition. Lincoln v. Calvert, supra.

And, while a city and its contractors for the construction or repair of streets have the right to use a steam roller with due care, and have the right temporarily to leave the roller properly guarded in some appropriate place on the street, after the use of the roller has ceased they may not indefinitely leave it on the streets as a place of storage, with the curtains flapping in the wind, after it has frightened horses and teams and proper officials have had notice of that fact and a reasonable time in which to remove it; and in such case the city is liable for resulting injuries. Elgin v. Thompson, 98 Ill. App. 358.

So, it is the duty of a municipal corporation vested by law with authority over the streets, while dangerous works, such as sewers, etc.; are being constructed across a street, to have proper precautionary measures taken to prevent accidents to passers during such construction, whether the same is being done by the corporation through its own servants or by contract, or by subcontractors under a primary contractor. Savannah v. Waldner, 49 Ga. 316; St. Paul v. Seitz, 3 Minn. 297, 74 Am. Dec. 753.

And it is liable for damages caused by such work being left unguarded. St. Paul v. Seitz, supra.

This duty is not founded upon the principle of respondet superior, but is deducible from the authority in the corporation over the streets, and the obligation flowing therefrom to protect the public against nuisances or dangerous obstructions in the highways. Savannah v. Waldner, supra.

So, a city making repairs or improvements in a street is protected from liability only for such obstructions or unsafe conditions as are reasonably necessary for the purpose of performing the work. Lincoln v. Calvert, 39 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115.

And, when a city undertakes to improve a street, it is liable for such dangers as are incident to and consequent upon the nature of the work itself. St. Paul v. Seitz, supra.

And a municipal corporation which directs a material change in a highway is bound to maintain such a supervision of the work as will protect the public from any danger likely to arise from it. Canfield v. East Stroudsburg, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 649.

So, while a city has the right to construct sewers in its streets, yet in doing so it has no right to leave piles of dirt upon the streets in such a condition that it would be unsafe and dangerous for wagons to pass. Chicago v. Brophy, 79 Ill. 277.

And, if a city piles or permits pipes to be piled in a street in such a manner and for such time as to offer a dangerous obstruction to persons passing, the city is guilty of negligence which will render it liable to a person injured thereby without contributory negligence on his part. Henderson v. Burke, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1781, 44 S. W. 422.

And, where the evidence in a case tended to show that lumber had been placed in a street by direction of the city council, and one of the councilmen knew of the obstruction, and the repairs for the purpose of which the lumber was placed there had been completed for some time before the injury in question, the question, in an action by a person who was injured because his horse had become unmanageable and ran against the pile of lumber, whether the street was so obstructed as to render it dangerous, and whether the person injured was himself guilty of contributory negligence, is one for the jury. Fugate v. Somerset, supra.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury resulting from a pile of stones in a street by the fact that it was the city's right and duty to repair a bridge, and the stones were necessary and were placed there for that purpose, where the material could have been placed out of sight and in a safe place within a reasonable and convenient distance of the bridge. Patterson v. Austin, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 201, 39 S. W. 976.

And, where a city, in causing a sewer to be constructed in a street, knowingly permitted earth to be placed in the street unnecessarily, or to remain for an unnecessary length of time so as to obstruct the proper flow of water in the gutters, the obstruction was a public nuisance; and the city is liable to an adjoining owner for injury done to his property by an overflow of water caused by such obstruction. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

Whether a temporary obstruction of a public street for the purpose of improvement is reasonably necessary is a question of fact for the determination of a jury, in an action against a municipal corporation for an injury resulting from such an obstruction. Frazier v. Butler, 172 Pa. 407, 51 Am. St. Rep. 739, 33 Atl. 691.

And, where a city closes a street to improve it, the question whether or not it has exercised ordinary care to provide adequate and proper danger signals to warn unsuspecting travelers of danger ahead is a question for the jury. Ahlfeldt v. Mexico, 129 Mo. App. 193, 108 S. W. 122; Stephens v. Macon, 83 Mo. 345; Baker v. Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447, 69 N. W. 740.

(b) Barriers, lights, etc.

Municipal authorities which, in the repair of their streets, place an obstruction in them, are under the duty to give appropriate warning of the same. Carlisle v. Brisbane, 113 Pa. 544, 57 Am. Rep. 483, 6 Atl. 372; Alexander v. Big Rapids, 76 Mich. 282, 42 N. W. 1071; Joslyn v. Detroit, 74 Mich. 458, 42 N. W. 50; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Baltimore v. Maryland, 166 Fed. 641.

And a municipal corporation is liable for injury to an individual through unskillfulness or negligence of persons employed by the city authorities in constructing or repairing street improvements, as, where one is injured by falling into an excavation in a street negligently left unguarded by persons so employed. Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 347.

The danger from an opening in a public street made by a municipal corporation undertaking to construct a sewer arises from the very nature of the improvement; and, if it can be averted only by special precautions, such as placing guards or lighting the street, the corporation which has authorized the work is bound to take these precautions. Storrs v. Utica, 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095; Grant v. Brooklyn, 41 Barb. 381; O'Hara v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 443, 57 N. Y. Supp. 387; Chicago v. Brophy, 79 Ill. 277; Streeter v. Marshalltown, 123 Iowa, 449, 99 N. W. 114; Moon v. Middletown, 14 Ohio C. C. 498; Guthrie v. Swan, 5 Okla. 779, 51 Pac. 562.

And even more than these should they prove insufficient to prevent disaster. Grant v. Brooklyn, supra.

And, if necessary to prevent accidents, it should, by some barrier, close the street against the public so that no harm may happen if the work should be delayed. Pettengill v. Yonkers, supra.

So, while a city has the right to make an excavation across a street for sewer purposes, when the place is left at night it is bound to erect barriers to make it reasonably safe and convenient for travelers. Prentiss v. Boston, 112 Mass. 43; Kimball v. Bath, 38 Me. 219, 61 Am. Dec. 243; Lincoln v. Calvert, 30 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115; Buffalo v. Holloway, 7 N. Y. 493, 57 Am. Dec. 550.

And a city is liable for an injury to a person, sustained by falling into a sewer or other excavation in one of the streets of the city in the process of construction, left open and unguarded. Springfield v. Le Claire, 49 Ill. 476; Americus v. Chapman, 94 Ga. 711, 20 S. E. 3; Buffalo v. Holloway and Moon v. Middletown, supra.

And, where a city causes an excavation to be made in a street, it is under the duty to take proper precautions to prevent the removal of the lights or barriers, or ascertain the fact and replace them speedily if they are removed; and, where an excavation was made for laying water pipes, and a person going from the sidewalk toward a street car after dark fell into it and was injured, the defendant, in an action for the injury, is not entitled to an instruction that, where barriers have been placed by a city along and about a trench dug in its streets to guard it against travelers falling into the trench, and have been removed by a stranger during the night, and during that night, and before the city has any knowledge or notice of such removal, a traveler on the street falls into the trench and is injured, he cannot maintain an action against the city. Fox v. Chelsea, 171 Mass. 297, 50 N. E. 622.

So, the question whether an opening into a sewer in a public street was properly and reasonably guarded and lighted is properly left to the jury, in an action for an injury from falling into it, where a lighted lantern had been left there, and there was evidence tending to show that the lantern did not contain oil enough so that it could be kept lighted; and that persons had tried to light it and keep it lighted, but failed. Baker v. Grand Rapids, 111 Mich. 447, 69 N. W. 740.

And a municipal corporation which, in opening a sewer in a street, threw the earth upon the sidewalk, and left it there during the night without any signal light or barrier or protection around or near it to warn or turn passengers away from the danger, is guilty of negligence rendering it liable to a person who, while passing along the sidewalk at night, fell into the hole and was injured in consequence of the obstruction. Grant v. Brooklyn, supra.

So, although a municipal corporation has legal authority to make a ditch or excavation for laying a water main, in pursuing the work it is required to use reasonable precautions for the security of the public, such as barriers, lights, or otherwise; and for breach of such duty, where a person, in the exercise of ordinary care, is injured through the neglect of such reasonable precautions, an action will lie for the injury. Lemont v. Rood, 18 Ill. App. 245.

And when, in grading a street, a deep cut is made below the sidewalk, it is the duty of the city, by barricades or otherwise, to guard all prudent persons against unnecessary danger therefrom; and it is liable for an injury resulting from a failure to perform this duty. Covington v. Bryant, 7 Bush, 248.

And, where a municipal corporation made an excavation in a street and placed lights thereon at a curve in the street, and an automobile ran into the excavation, evidence, in an action against the city for the injury, tending to show that to a person approaching there appeared to be a row of lights on one side of the roadway and one light on the other, and that the driver of the car, misled by such appearance, ran between the two and so into the excavation, raises a question for the jury whether the municipality or its servants exercised proper care in placing the lights, or in reasonably safeguarding the place in other ways. Baltimore v. Maryland, supra.

So, where a pile of stone was placed in a street for construction purposes, by a person engaged in constructing the street, and no light or guard was placed upon it to prevent injury to travelers, the city is liable to a person who drove against the pile and was injured, where the work was under the direction of a servant of the city, and the evidence tends to show that the pile of stone had been there a long time, being diminished by use as the work progressed. Bauer v. Rochester, 35 N. Y. S. R. 959, 12 N. Y. Supp. 418.

And where, at the time of an accident, the work of improving a sidewalk along a street had been in progress for a considerable time; and the portion of the sidewalk for which material was being used had been in course of construction for three days; and the material was piled on the street for use in such construction, and was left at night unguarded and without lights or signals of any kind to warn the traveling public of its existence; and the place was in the very center of the business district of the city; and a passenger drove his carriage against the pile of materials and was injured,—the question of notice, as well as that of negligence on its part, is one of fact for a jury. Jones v. Ogden City, 32 Utah, 221, 89 Pac. 1006.

Nor is a city saved from liability for an injury caused by falling into an opening in a sewer in a street by the fact that the hole or opening was in accordance with a general plan adopted by the city through no error of judgment, unless, if the plan was such that the condition of the street necessarily resulting therefrom was dangerous, reasonable precautions were employed to protect persons using the street in a lawful manner and with due care, against injury. Chicago v. Seben, 62 Ill. App. 248, affirmed in 165 Ill. 371, 56 Am. St. Rep. 245, 46 N. E. 244.

And a person injured by driving or falling into an excavation in a public street of a city, which was left at night without being sufficiently lighted or guarded, may recover against the city for the injury, although the excavation was made by a company engaged in constructing the public waterworks of the city. Butler v. Bangor, 67 Me. 387.

Nor does the fact that it is the duty of a contractor doing the work on a public street under his contract to maintain warning lights at the excavation he has made relieve the municipality from liability for an accident resulting from the negligent omission to maintain such lights. Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095.

And a city responsible under its charter for constructing sewers and their connections is liable for injury to one falling into a trench for a sewer connection, negligently left uncovered, though the work was done by a licensed plumber, who alone had notice of the defect. Monje v. Grand Rapids, 122 Mich. 645, 81 N. W. 574.

The ordinary care which a municipal corporation must exercise to keep its streets free from obstruction and defects, however, does not require that a watch be kept during the night over an excavation, unless there are circumstances peculiar to the particular case making it necessary; it is generally sufficient that proper signals or secure guards are placed about the excavation on quitting work, and no liability attaches if a wrongdoer removes the signals during the night. Dooley v. Sullivan, 112 Ind. 451, 2 Am. St. Rep. 209, 14 N. E. 566.

And a man injured by a trench in a street, made in the course of the construction of a sewer across it, the earth being piled on the sides of the trench to be used in refilling when the work was done, is not entitled to recover of the city for the injury, where there was no unnecessary delay in the construction of the work and no want of due care in its performance, because no guards or barriers were placed around the trench and piles of earth as a means of protecting those passing or driving along the street, where it is not shown that this could have been made effective while the work was in actual progress. Swart v. District of Columbia, 17 App. D. C. 407.

So, if a traction company chargeable with repairs of a street is in charge of the street and repairs thereon, the city is not liable for an accident caused by a hole or excavation in the street while the work is in progress; but, if the traction company has finished its work and left the street in a dangerous condition, and if that condition has existed long enough to charge the city with notice, it is liable in damages. Aiken v. Philadelphia, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 502.

And, under a charter provision requiring a city to have inserted in contracts for street improvement a stipulation that the contractor should put up and maintain such barriers as will effectually prevent the happening of any accident, when a sufficient barrier has been put up, the absolute liability, if there is any, ceases, and the city is bound to use only common care and diligence in maintaining it; and, if such sufficient barrier is afterwards removed or thrown down by a stranger, or from any cause without the knowledge or fault of the city authorities, and they have no actual notice that it is so removed or thrown down, and a sufficient time has not elapsed under the circumstances to raise a presumption that they had notice thereof before the accident, the city is not liable. Klatt v. Milwaukee, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 53 Wis. 196, 10 N. W. 162.

Where a city closes a street to improve it, the standard or test of sufficiency of danger signals to warn or notify unsuspecting travelers of danger therefrom is the question. What would an ordinarily prudent person do under like circumstances toward notifying the wayfarer of impending danger; and what is an ordinarily prudent man to understand by the display of certain signals in a thoroughfare at night? Ahlfeldt v. Mexico, 129 Mo. App. 193, 108 S. W. 122.

(c) By abutting owner.

Where an improvement like the making or repair of a sidewalk is made by an abutting owner, the absolute liability of the municipal corporation for injuries resulting from obstructions caused or excavations made by him may be suspended during the progress of the work. Bowen v. Huntington, 35 W. Va. 682, 14 S. E. 217.

And, if an excavation is made in a street by an abutting owner or a contractor, the city is liable only for lack of ordinary or reasonable care; it is not an insurer; the same rule of diligence is exacted from it that is expected from private owners in the control of any business involving a like danger to others. Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint. 567.

Thus, a town is not liable for an injury to a person who, without negligence, fell into an unguarded excavation in a sidewalk in the nighttime, where the excavation was made by the owner of a lot abutting on the street, in accordance with an ordinance requiring him to improve the sidewalk, and the work was left on the night of the injury, by the lot owner using due care and diligence, with a danger signal placed near the excavation, which was disregarded by the person injured. Dooley v. Sullivan, 112 Ind. 451, 2 Am. St. Rep. 209, 14 N. E. 566.

And, under a statute authorizing the board of trustees of any incorporated town to compel abutting lot owners to improve the sidewalk, acts of a lot owner who improves a sidewalk under an ordinance adopted in pursuance of the statute cannot be deemed the acts of the town in such a sense as to charge it with his negligence; in order to charge the corporation evidence of the negligence of the lot owner must be supplemented by evidence that the town authorities were negligent, or that the work directed to be done was intrinsically dangerous. Ibid.

So, a person owning land crossed by a street has the right to use the space under the street the same as any other part of his property, so long as he does no injury to the street as such. McCarthy v. Syracuse, 46 N. Y. 194.

It is the duty of a municipality, however, when paving of a sidewalk is being done or excavations to connect with sewers are being made by the owners of adjoining lots, to superintend the work, and to see to it that the obstruction in the street, caused by the collection of material used in the work, is properly lighted at night, and is surrounded by sufficient barriers to protect persons along the way from encountering it. Lewis v. Atlanta, 77 Ga. 756, 4 Am. St. Rep. 108; Masterton v. Mt. Vernon, 58 N. Y. 391.

And, if due care in the performance of such duty is omitted, the city is responsible; but it is not responsible for the negligence of the servants of the lot owner in the performance of their work; it is responsible only for its own negligence in the care of the street. Masterton v. Mt. Vernon, supra.

Where general power is confided to a public officer to grant as a favor, and not as a right, the privilege of tearing out the pavement of a street and digging a trench therein, there goes with the power, by implication of law, the right to attach to the grant reasonable conditions for the protection of the public, though the statute is silent on the subject. Schumacher v. New York, 166 N. Y. 103, 59 N. E. 773, affirming 40 App. Div. 320, 57 N. Y. Supp. 968.

And when, under authority of municipal legislation, considerable change is made in the grade of a driveway or street, rendering necessary considerable change in the sidewalks, involving peril to the passing public, the municipal authorities are required to exercise close supervision of the conduct of property owners to prevent injury to the traveling public. Frazier v. Butler, 172 Pa. 407, 51 Am. St. Rep. 739, 33 Atl. 691.

And, where a pavement is made by an abutting owner in conformity with the grade established by the city, to escape liability for an injury received by a party walking along the sidewalk in the nighttime without notice of an excavation therein, the work of improvement must not have been conducted negligently by the lot owner while the work was progressing; and the excavation, when the work was completed, must not have been left in such a condition as to cause injury to pedestrians passing along the pavement in the nighttime without notice of its condition. Bowen v. Huntington, supra.

6. Particular obstructions and classes of obstructions.

(a) Poles, posts, stumps, trees, etc.

The erection of a liberty pole in a street, unless forbidden by the authorities, is the exercise of a lawful license incident to citizenship, and does not constitute the creation of a nuisance. Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649.

And a liberty pole erected in a street 60 feet wide, about 8 feet from the curbstone and 4 feet from the gutter, does not create a nuisance per se; and, where it fell in a strong gale, and a person was injured by a piece of it, the city is not liable where it was well secured and to all appearances strong and sound. Ibid.

And whether a liberty pole erected in a street was in such a place and maintained for so long a time under all the circumstances as to have created reasonable apprehension of danger is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury caused by its fall. Ibid.

Nor is a town liable to a traveler injured by the negligence of persons employed by the selectmen in failure to remove a flagstaff which stood near the highway and which had become dangerous to travelers. Wakefield v. Newport, 60 N. W. 374, s. c. on subsequent appeal, 62 N. H. 624.

So, whether or not a telephone pole placed in a public street by a telephone company is dangerous or a public nuisance is a question to be submitted to the jury, in an action against the city for an injury resulting therefrom, under proper instructions by the court; and, in deciding the question the jury should consider the situation of the pole, and how it was placed, and whether it was in fact situated in such a position that it was really dangerous. Norwalk v. Jacobs, 27 Ohio C. C. 691.

A city has no power to grant permission to erect a telegraph or telephone pole which constitutes a dangerous obstruction to the use of the street by the public, so as to debar recovery by an injured party either against the city or against the party erecting the pole. Wolfe v. Erie Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 33 Fed. 320.

And a telegraph or telephone pole placed in the traveled portion of a street is an illegal obstruction in the highway, making the highway out of repair; and, where the municipal corporation neglects to remove it, it is liable in damages for an injury caused thereby. Atkinson v. Chatham, 26 Ont. App. Rep. 521, affirming 29 Ont. Rep. 518; Castor v. Uxbridge, 39 U. C. Q. B. 113; Norwalk v. Jacobs, supra.

And a telephone pole in a city highway which is 60 feet wide, placed near the angle formed by a sharp turn in the street, planted 12 feet from the center line, and so far from the sidewalk that there is a beaten track for carriages between the two, is an obstruction upon the highway rendering it not in good or reasonable repair; and, the city having notice and knowledge of the obstruction and of its dangerous character, is liable in damages, in the absence of contributory negligence, to a person injured who is driving for pleasure before daylight, and his horses run away and the driver loses control when approaching the pole, and in making the turn the sleigh is brought in contact with it. Atkinson v. Chatham, 29 Ont. Rep. 518.

But to allow a telegraph pole to be erected in the street of a village or city is lawful; and, where such a pole stood between the sidewalk and the traveled part of the street, where such poles are usually placed, and the distance from the sidewalk was not unusual or shown to be improper, and there was no evidence that the pole was not properly set or properly maintained where it was, the village is not liable for an injury to a traveler resulting from a collision of his horse with the pole. Gaudin v. Carthage, 36 N. Y. S. R. 308, 12 N. Y. Supp. 796.

And, to entitle a person whose horse shied at a car and ran against a telegraph pole to recover against the village for the injury, he is bound to show that the village was negligent in permitting the pole in question to remain where it had been placed by those who constructed the telegraph line, that such negligence was the proximate cause of his injury, and that he was free from any negligence which contributed to the injury. Ibid.

So, a municipal corporation permitting the maintenance by an electric railway company of a trolley pole in a street in such a manner as to constitute a dangerous obstruction to public travel is liable to a traveler injured thereby. McKim v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 243, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 506, 66 Atl. 340.

And the fact that there is ample space for travel between the curb and a trolley pole set in the middle of a street does not render the pole any the less a dangerous obstruction to travel after dark when no light is maintained near it. Ibid.

But the act of a city in permitting the erection of an electric light pole in a street so as to leave a space of from 4 to 5 inches between it and the curb, so that a horse hitched to the post could get his foot fast between the post and the curb only by raising his foot clear over the curbstone and putting it into the space between the curb and the pole on the opposite or further side, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

is not negligence upon the part of the city; and no recovery can be had against it for an injury to a horse, thus caused. Ryther v. Austin, 72 Minn. 24, 74 N. W. 1017.

So, the act of a city in knowingly suffering a post 8 by 8 inches, firmly imbedded in the ground and projecting above the surface 27 inches, to remain in a public and traveled street, is negligence per se. Pueblo v. Smith, 3 Colo. App. 386, 33 Pac. 685.

And a stake driven for the purpose of grading a sidewalk, standing about 4 inches above the surface of the walk, which was weather worn so as not to attract attention, and which was allowed to remain after the completion of the walk, and upon which a passenger stepped and was injured, constituted a defect in the way, rendering the city responsible for the injury. Jones v. Deering, 94 Me. 165, 47 Atl. 140.

And, where a woman, in passing over a public crossing, fell over a stake which was 2 inches square and protruded above the ground about 6 inches, which stake had been set by the city surveyor to show the line of a sewer, the contractor for which had finished his work and left the street several days prior to the accident, but, under his contract with the city, was prohibited from moving the stake until authorized to do so, the question of the negligence of the city in an action against it for damages for the injury is for the jury; and a judgment for the plaintiff will be sustained. Rowland v. Philadelphia, 202 Pa. 50, 51 Atl. 589.

So, a city is liable to an action by a person injured by driving against a post which was near the true line of the highway and within the limits of the general course and direction of travel, and where travelers were accustomed to pass; and there was nothing which reasonably indicated or gave notice to a traveler that the post was not within the way intended for public travel, and it rendered traveling dangerous, and had been suffered to remain an unreasonable time. Cogswell v. Lexington, 4 Cush. 307.

And, where, on two intersecting streets, there was a row of trees outside the sidewalk on each street, and there was a post about 6 by 8 inches and 18 inches high, which was weather beaten, in a line with the trees on one street, and just inside of the line of trees on the other in the corner made by the two streets, the usually traveled track of vehicles turning the corner being close to the post, it is a question for the jury, in an action for an injury caused by the post, whether it was negligence for the city to allow it to remain there. Phelps v. Mankato, 23 Minn. 276.

So, a municipal corporation which, as a highway and lighting authority, had erected a post in the center of a footpath, near which was placed a lamp intended to be lighted at night, which post injured a person who ran against it when the light was not lighted, is liable to such person for the injury. Lamley v. East Retford Corp. 55 J. P. 133.

And whether a grade stake 14 inches high, standing about 2 feet inside of the location of a highway of a suburban town, outside of the wrought roadway, near or opposite a regular stopping place of an electric car line, is a defect in the highway for which the town is liable, is a question of fact for the jury. Stanford v. Hyde Park, 185 Mass. 253, 70 N. E. 51.

The question whether a post in a highway is or is not a defect in the way, however, is one of fact for the jury in an action against a town for an injury caused thereby, where the evidence is conflicting as to the situation of the post in relation to travel. Taylor v. Woburn, 130 Mass. 494.

And the existence of a post or other object large enough to upset a buggy or wagon running over it, within a carriage width of the traveled track of a street, is not necessarily as matter of law such an obstruction as renders the city liable for injuries occasioned thereby; it may or may not be an obstruction, depending upon a variety of circumstances, it being a question of fact for a jury. Wellington v. Gregson, 31 Kan. 99, 47 Am. Rep. 482, 1 Pac. 253.

And the right of an owner of land abutting upon a street is so to use the portion of the highway in front of his premises for loading and unloading his goods as to enjoy the highway reasonably in common with other members of the public entitled to its use,—and he cannot set up an individual interest in the right to use the highway, which he enjoys in common with other members of the public, against the reasonable use by the municipality with statutory authority given to it to obstruct the highway by lamp-posts thought to be necessary, provided the local authority does not use its power so as to commit a nuisance. W. H. Chaplin & Co. v. Westminster [1901] 2 Ch. 329.

So, a peg between a sidewalk and the curbing in a street is a defect or obstruction in the sidewalk if it is near enough to it for a person passing along the sidewalk with reasonable care to stumble against it. Rea v. Sioux City, 127 Iowa, 615, 103 N. W. 949.

A hitching post properly located in a street, however, cannot be held to be an unlawful obstruction. Weinstein v. Terre Haute, 147 Ind. 556, 46 N. E. 1004.

But a hitching post in a highway, in or so near to the roadway, as to make travel thereon in carriages unsafe, is a defect for which a city is liable to one who, while traveling in the exercise of due care, is injured through the collision of his carriage with it. Arey v. Newton, 148 Mass. 598, 12 Am. St. Rep. 604, 20 N. E. 327.

And whether a hitching post is so placed as to be an obstruction to a street is a question of fact in each case. Weinstein v. Terre Haute, supra.

A hitching post in a street 50 feet in width, located $6\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the line of the street and within $6\frac{1}{2}$ feet of the property line, the post being $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches square and $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet high, and there being two traveled tracks along the street, is not so situated as to be an unlawful obstruction. Ibid.

And, where a road was 40 feet wide and level and smooth and straight, and it had sidewalks 7 feet wide, not protected by curbstones, railings, posts, or trees, nor indicated by ditches, three hitching posts put up by the owner of abutting land considerable distances apart between the sidewalk and the carriage path, about where trees or railings or a ditch might have been properly placed, is not a defect in the street, and does not render the roadway defective. Macomber v. Taunton, 100 Mass. 255.

So, the maintenance for about six years, by a city, of a strip of wood nailed to two electric-light poles standing along the outer edge of a sidewalk around the courthouse square, which did not impede travel along the sidewalk or along the street, nor interfere with those passing from one side of the street to the other at the regular and usual crossings, but which was used as a hitching rack, and was a convenience to persons coming to the courthouse on business, was not negligence upon the part of the city which will charge it with an injury received by a man who was blind and unattended, and who attempted to cross the street at a place other than the regular crossing provided for the public. Foy v. Winston, 135 N. C. 439, 47 S. E. 466.

But, where a pedestrian stumbled at night over a hitching post in the sidewalk and was injured; and there is evidence tending to show that the post, although located in a place where it could be properly placed, was not of the ordinary size, was bent, and its condition dangerous, and, although located at a point where most pedestrians did not cross the street, was still where they had a right to cross if they used proper care to avoid obstacles to be expected along the curb,—it is a question for the jury whether the post, in the condition it was then in, was reasonable or safe. District of Columbia v. Duryee, 29 App. D. C. 327, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 675.

Nor does a city guarantee the absolute safety of hitching posts set by it; all that is necessary is the exercise of ordinary care in setting such posts as would be reasonably sufficient for the purpose intended, under all ordinary circumstances. Rockford v. Tripp, 83 Ill. 247, 25 Am. Rep. 381.

And, where a team was hitched to a hitching post set in a street by the municipal corporation, and the team became frightened by another horse running away and broke the post and ran, and, after going about 900 feet, struck and injured a pedestrian, the injury is too remote, and is not the proximate consequence of the defect in the hitching post; and the city is not liable for the injury. Ibid.

So, whether a stump in the traveled way of a street in a city constituted a defect which the city ought to have removed is properly submitted to the jury in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. Lamb v. Cedar Rapids, 108 Iowa, 629, 79 N. W. 386.

And a highway in an old and thickly settled district over which there is much traffic is out of repair, within the meaning of a statute requiring municipalities to keep their highways in repair, when a large stump is allowed to stand in the highway just at the edge of the traveled way. Foley v. East Flamborough Twp. 26 Ont. App. Rep. 43.

And that a stump situated within the curbing of a street was left there by the occupant of abutting property for the purpose of making a hitching post of it is no excuse to the city in an action against it by a person injured by the stump, for negligence in permitting it to remain there. Newport v. Miller, 93 Ky. 22, 18 S. W. 835.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury caused by colliding with a stump standing so near the traveled part of a street as to make travel by it in the night dangerous, on the theory that the stump, if a defect or obstruction at all, was one pertaining to the construction of the road, and not covered by the statute, as distinguished from a neglect to repair; since the statute applies to defects in construction as well as to neglect in repair. Sebert v. Alpena, 78 Mich. 165, 43 N. W. 1098.

So, permitting a large stump to be taken out of a sidewalk and rolled into the street several feet outside of the curb, and allowing it to lie there ten days or two weeks without a light or anything to warn travelers at night of its position, is gross neglect of duty on the part of the borough authorities, rendering the borough liable for damages for a resulting injury. Trego v. Honeybrook, 160 Pa. 76, 28 Atl. 639.

And whether a stump which was 3 or 4 inches within the curbing of a street and but 2 feet high and 22 inches in diameter, which a person stumbled on in a dark night when the nearest lamp was 130 feet distant, was an obstruction rendering the public use of the sidewalk inconvenient and unsafe, is a question for the jury in an action for the injury. Newport v. Miller, supra.

A conductor of a street car, who, while attempting to pass around a superintendent standing on the running board of an open car, came in contact with a shade tree and was injured, cannot recover against the city for the injury, however, where the nearest part of the tree was 38½ inches from the nearest rail of the railway, and 31 inches from the sill or side of the car, and 18¼ inches from the outside of the running board. Hall v. Wakefield, 184 Mass. 147, 68 N. E. 15.

But, though a tree standing in a street belonged to the abutting owner and was not a nuisance, if it was blown down by the wind and became a nuisance on the sidewalk after its fall, it was the duty of the city, and not of the abutting owner, to remove it; and a person injured in consequence of its presence on the sidewalk must proceed against the city, and not against the owner, for damages. Blackwell v. Hill, 76 Mo. App. 46.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(b) Rubbish, refuse, etc.

The duty of repairing and maintaining highways includes the performance of any act which is reasonably necessary to put and keep them in a condition suitable for travel thereon; and this includes the removal of dirt, rubbish, and ashes from the streets and from receptacles on or near the streets. Connor v. Manchester, 73 N. H. 233, 60 Atl. 436.

And a person who, while driving along a street at night, was injured by being thrown from his carriage, which came in contact with rubbish obstructing the street, of which he was not properly warned by lights, can hold the city responsible for damages. King v. Cleveland, 28 Fed. 835, affirmed in 132 U. S. 295, 33 L. ed. 334, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90.

And evidence that, as a person was slowly driving up to the curb in a street to permit passengers to alight, he was upset and seriously injured by a pile of rubbish in the street; and that it was after dark and he did not observe the obstruction; and that the street was a frequented one and the pile of rubbish had been there for three weeks, —is sufficient to justify the jury, in an action for the injury, in finding the city guilty of negligence. Kane v. Troy, 16 N. Y. S. R. 341, 1 N. Y. Supp. 536.

So, where water washed over a street because of the insufficiency of a culvert intended to carry off water coming from adjacent land, and deposited brickbats and rubbish on the surface of the street, and made a ditch or depression in it; and the rubbish which thus obstructed the street was permitted to remain for such a length of time that its presence must have come to the knowledge of the officers of the city who were charged with the duty of keeping the street in repair,—the negligence of the city was such as to render it liable in damages for injuries to a horse, caused by stepping upon a brickbat thus deposited in the street. Hazard v. Council Bluffs, 87 Iowa, 51, 53 N. W. 1083.

And evidence that the curbing of a sidewalk had been removed, and the bricks were loose and some of them set up edgewise; that dirt had worked out from under the bricks, and the loose bricks were not on a level with the bricks that were in place; that there was a drop of 3 or 4 inches, and loose bricks extended from the property line to the end of the walk, and some of the loose ones were on top of others, and the sidewalk was rough and uneven, and some of the bricks were gone, and the street lamp was not lighted at the time of the accident in question,—shows an actionable defect in the sidewalk, rendering the city liable to a pedestrian who stepped upon a brick, which turned under her foot, and threw her to the ground and injured her. Terre Haute v. Constans, 26 Ind. App. 421, 59 N. E. 1078.

So, a municipal corporation which negligently piled a large quantity of earth several feet high upon a public street, and negligently placed beside the pile a large open pipe into which a child fell and was injured without negligence on its part, is liable for the injury. Hunton v. Peekskill, 119 App. Div. 500, 104 N. Y. Supp. 220.

And proof that a city permitted a pile of dirt or sand about 3 feet high along a sidewalk which the city was paving to be left at night without taking reasonable, and proper precautions to light the street so as to enable persons traveling thereon to observe the obstruction; and that a traveler drove against it and was injured,—is sufficient to warrant a finding of the jury, in an action for the injury, that the city was negligent. Norfolk v. Johnakin, 94 Va. 285, 26 S. E. 830.

So, a city is liable for injuries to a horse caused by glass negligently left on the street, over which the horse was driven, when the city had actual or constructive notice that the glass was there. El Paso v. Dolan (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 869.

And, while the mere presence in a street of a piece of glass by which a person's foot was cut might not be sufficient to establish the negligence of the city, it will be held liable for the injury where the piece of glass was not the only obstruction in the street, but at the place where the glass was lying there were piles of other refuse containing broken glass, etc. Galveston v. Reagan (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 48.

And, where a woman fell and was injured by stepping on a clinker in a cinder sidewalk, the cinders for which had been taken from a foundry without sifting, the fact that there was a large number of clinkers of large size furnishes evidence to go to the jury, in an action for the injury, on the question of the city's negligence. Latonia v. Hall, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 721, 103 S. W. 354.

So, if a municipal corporation has, for a long time, permitted one of its sidewalks to be littered with vegetable refuse and peels or rinds from fruit so as to make travel over it dangerous, it will be held liable to a party who, in using it without fault or neglect on his part, steps on some of this refuse, or some of these peels or rinds, and falls and is injured. Archer v. Johnson City (Tenn.) 64 S. W. 474.

And, where a horse died at the intersection of two much-traveled streets in a city, it was the duty of the city to exercise reasonable care and diligence in the removal of the animal after it had actual notice that it was lying in the street, or after the lapse of such a space of time that it should have had knowledge thereof, when actual notice may be presumed, and, in case of its failure to remove it, it was liable for resulting injuries. Chicago v. Hoy, 75 Ill. 530.

And, where the carcass of a dead horse had been permitted to lie in one of the streets of a city for about twenty-four hours, and this frightened the horse of a traveler, which became unmanageable and ran away and inflicted injuries upon the traveler, the question whether the city was guilty of negligence in not removing the nuisance was one for the jury, in an action against the city for the injury. Fritsch v. Allegheny, 91 Pa. 226.

Where small heaps of ashes between 5 and 6 inches in height were deposited in a street, however, and, owing to the loose material of which they were composed, they would not ordinarily constitute an impediment or obstruction in the street, but would soon be scattered; but they became hardened by the falling of rain and sleet, and took permanent form,—the inquiry as to the negligence of the municipal authorities in permitting such heaps of ashes to remain in the street should be limited to the period during which alone they could properly be considered as impediments, which is only after they had, by storm and frost, been changed from a harmless heap of soft material into a solid mound in the road; and where a woman, without contributory negligence on her part, stepped on it and fell and was injured, the municipality is not responsible for the injury, unless the municipal authorities were negligent in not discovering and removing the ashes between the time they were transformed into a solid mound by freezing and the happening of the injury. Kelchner v. Nanticoke, 209 Pa. 412, 58 Atl. 851.

So, the failure of a city to keep its streets free from mud, so that they become slippery on account thereof, does not constitute actionable negligence. O'Reilly v. Syracuse, 49 App. Div. 538, 63 N. Y. Supp. 520; Yeager v. Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484, 21 S. E. 752.

And a municipality is not liable to a traveler upon a street who may slip and fall and sustain injury, simply because $1\frac{1}{2}$ or 2 inches of mud are permitted to accumulate upon an asphalt pavement and remain there, when spread evenly over its entire surface. O'Reilly v. Syracuse, supra.

But whether a frozen mound of mud in a street was an obstruction which interfered with the safety of travel on the street is a question of fact. Stafford v. Oskaloosa, 64 Iowa, 251, 20 N. W. 174.

And, where a cross walk upon a city street has been rendered uneven and slippery because frozen earth, rocks, sleet, snow, and ice have been heaped up into a ridge, the defect in the highway is such as to render the city liable for injuries received by a person from slipping and falling upon it. Piper v. Spokane, 22 Wash. 147, 60 Pac. 138.

So, where a sidewalk is covered with dirt liable to be converted into slippery mud by rain, it is a question for the jury whether, at the time of an injury alleged to have occurred thereon, the condition of the walk was not reasonably safe for persons passing over it with the exercise of ordinary care, and whether the city had, or could by ordinary diligence have had, knowledge of its condition in time to have it repaired. Milledge v. Kansas City, 100 Mo. App. 490, 73 S. W. 892.

And whether, cleaning a street and piling mud and dirt in the center thereof at a time when it was liable to be frozen solid before it could be removed, and allowing it to remain as a dangerous obstruction to the streets for many days after being so frozen, was an exercise of reasonable care and diligence in keeping a street free from obstructions, are matters of fact to be determined upon a consideration and construction of the evidence by the jury, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. Champaign v. Jones, 132 Ill. 304, 23 N. E. 1125.

(c) Storage of vehicles, lumber, etc.

A street may be rendered unsafe by the improper placing of vehicles therein, and its continued use for that purpose, as well as by being obstructed in any other way. Radichel v. Kendall, 121 Wis. 580, 99 N. W. 348.

And the customary use of a street for the purpose of storing vehicles when not in use, so that the draft poles thereof are liable to be located across a pathway customarily used by pedestrians, may render the street unsafe for public use, so as to charge the municipality with the consequences. Ibid. Ladoga v. Linn, 9 Ind. App. 15, 36 N. E. 159.

And the habitual storing of a wagon in a city street by a private individual, although under a license from the city, is a nuisance where the granting of such license is prohibited by law; and the city is liable for a resulting injury. Cohen v. New York, 113 N. Y. 532, 4 L.R.A. 406, 10 Am. St. Rep. 506, 21 N. E. 700.

So, while a disabled vehicle left by the owner in a street does not become a nuisance until the expiration of a reasonable time for its removal, after the expiration of such time it is both an obstruction and a nuisance, rendering the city liable for injuries resulting therefrom, under a statute requiring cities to keep their streets open, in repair, and free from nuisances, and making them liable to persons injured by a violation of such duty. Cutter v. Des Moines, 137 Iowa, 643, 113 N. W. 1081.

And a city is not relieved from liability for an injury resulting from permitting a street to be used as a storage place for vehicles when not in use, by the fact that the customary leaving of vehicles in the street was for the convenience of the owners thereof while their horses were being cared for temporarily in a nearby barn, if the vehicles were so left to such an extent as to render the street unfit for public travel. Radichel v. Kendall, supra.

So, to hold a municipal corporation liable for an injury caused by a collision with a vehicle left standing in a street, it is sufficient to show that it had allowed the street to be customarily used as a storage place for vehicles when temporarily out of use, to such an extent as to render it unsafe for public use, and that the leaving of the vehicle in question which caused the accident was a mere continuance of such custom; it is not essential to show that the particular vehicle had been customarily left in the particular way and at the particular place as at the time of the accident. Ibid.

And evidence of the customary obstruction of streets other than the street in question, by leaving vehicles therein, is inadmissible in an action against a city for an injury resulting from the obstruction of a street by leaving vehicles in it when not in use; but the admission of such evidence is not a ground for reversal where the court directed the jury to disregard it. Ibid.

But while, in a large city like New York, it may be negligence amounting to nuisance to permit a wagon to stand permanently upon the side of a street, the act of a village of about 4,000 inhabitants, of permitting two lumber wagons to stand in front of a wagon shop upon the side of a street 3 rods wide, notwithstanding the fact that there was a by-law of the village under which it could have compelled their removal, does not constitute negligence making the village liable to one who was injured through his horse becoming frightened at the wagon while passing in the night. Studeor v. Gouverneur, 15 App. Div. 229, 44 N. Y. Supp. 122.

And a carriage of a visitor at the house of a friend, left standing in the street, is not a nuisance per se; but it might become one. Norristown v. Moyer, 67 Pa. 355.

So, a sleigh standing for ten or fifteen minutes in a street for the purpose of unloading goods would not constitute an obstruction of the street. Sikes v. Manchester, 59 Iowa, 65, 12 N. W. 755.

And it is not clear that a village street would, in law, be obstructed, so as to hold the village liable for an injury resulting therefrom, by the fact that one third or one half of it was occupied during the greater portion of the day by the vehicles of farmers while their teams were feeding at an adjoining stable. Ibid.

Nor does a wagon loaded with ornamental or other trees, standing negligently in a street with the horse attached and under the care of a driver, constitute a defect or want of repair in the street for which the city would be liable for damages, where the city is given no power of removal. Davis v. Bangor, 42 Me. 522.

So, where a plow beam projected over a pavement, and injury resulted therefrom, the jury, in an action for the injury, should be permitted to decide the fact as to whether the extent to which the plow beam projected over the pavement, under all the circumstances, did or did not leave the street at the time and place of injury reasonably safe for pedestrians using it with ordinary care. Midway v. Lloyd, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2448, 74 S. W. 195.

And the piling of lumber and keeping it within the limits of a street is a nuisance and a wrong as against the public, and all suffering private injuries in consequence thereof; and the municipal corporation, having power to prevent or remove the nuisance, is equally liable with the creator of it for any injury that may result therefrom. Smith v. Davis, 22 App. D. C. 298.

And, where a pile of lumber was unlawfully placed in a street and allowed to remain there, and the city was negligent in failing to remove it from the street, the fact that it was carefully and safely piled is immaterial on the question of the city's liability for an injury resulting therefrom, where the fact that it was there was a concurring proximate cause of the injury. Gonzales v. Galveston, 84 Tex. 3, 31 Am. St. Rep. 17, 19 S. W. 284; Smith v. Davis, supra.

And evidence that certain lumber was lying in a street, which projected over the edge of the sidewalk; and that a person fell over it and was injured; and that the lumber had been lying in the street for about a week in front of a building which was being repaired; and that, on the night of the injury, the street was not lighted,—is sufficient to support a verdict in favor of the person injured, against the city for the injury. Hazzard v. Savannah, 77 Ga. 54.

So, slipping and falling off from a slippery walk, though properly constructed, is not one of those accidents the occurrence of which is so rare, unexpected, and unforeseen as to shut off a municipal corporation's responsibility for negligently leaving dangerous material in such proximity as to cause injury from such accidents. And a person who accidentally slipped on a street crossing and fell among or upon timbers which had been negligently left along the side of or so near the crossing as to be dangerous is entitled to recover of the city for the injury, provided the injury would not have happened but for the presence of the timbers in such proximity to the crossing, though the crossing itself was properly constructed. Fairgrieve v. Moberly, 39 Mo. App. 31.

(d) Machines, tools, etc.

A machine under the active charge of individuals is not to be treated as a defect in a highway if injury results from its operation, and not merely from its presence there. Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245, 9 Am. St. Rep. 691, 17 N. E. 538.

And, where a steam roller is placed in a street for the purpose of repairing the street, which is a duty enjoined upon the municipality; and, in the legitimate and proper use of such machine with reasonable notice to the public of such use, an injury is occasioned to one of the public,—the municipality is not liable for such injury. District of Columbia v. Moulton, 182 U. S. 576, 45 L. ed. 1237, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840, reversing 15 App. D. C. 363.

So, where a steam roller was lawfully in use in the construction of a macadamized roadway 18 feet wide in the middle of a highway 60 feet wide; and it was left standing over Sunday on the edge of the already macadamized part of the road, leaving a clear space of about 30 feet at one side; and it was covered with canvas tied at the sides or corners, with no watchman in charge of it; and it was reasonably impracticable to move the machine from the hard road, and the spot on which it stood was the safest one on that section of the road where it could have been placed,—negligence is not imputable to the owner in leaving it there; and he is not liable for an accident occurring in broad daylight through the fright of a horse at the sight of the machine. Keeley v. Shanley, 140 Pa. 213, 21 Atl. 305, 306.

And a statute requiring persons using steam machinery upon highways to take certain precautions and perform certain duties upon the approach in either direction of anyone traveling in a vehicle or with horses applies to the operation of the machine, and does not regulate the duties of the owner when his machine is at rest at night or on Sunday. Ibid.

Nor does leaving a steam roller close to the curb on a street where it is in use, for two days after it is broken, without any change in its appearance to enhance the danger of frightening animals, except by putting over it the usual canvas cover to protect it from the weather, present a case of negligence for the jury, where a horse becomes frightened by its presence in the street and an injury results. District of Columbia v. Moulton, supra.

So, where a derrick standing in a highway and defectively supported falls when in use and injures a passer-by, it being the act of the workmen who employ the machine in lifting weights for which it is not properly constructed that causes it to fall and contributes to the injury, the derrick cannot be considered as a defect in the highway, by reason of which a town is subjected to statutory liability for injury. Pratt v. Weymouth, supra.

But a derrick within or upon the margin of a highway, or derrick ropes extending over and across the highway, may be an obstruction or defect, or an insufficiency, of the highway, if the ropes or derrick are improperly or insufficiently placed or fastened. Hardy v. Keene, 52 N. H. 370.

The above case was distinguished in Pratt v. Weymouth, supra, upon the ground that the rule in New Hampshire is different from that established in Massachusetts.

And, where a derrick stood in a street in close proximity to a schoolhouse, and was attractive to the school children, who were in the habit of playing upon it, a reference to the derrick by the court, in an action against the city for an injury caused by the falling of the derrick, as "said obstruction," is not erroneous. Denver v. Murray, 18 Colo. App. 142, 70 Pac. 440.

And, when such derrick was left standing there for at least a year, and it fell injuring a child, the fact that the derrick was tied to a stump by a rope, which was liable at any time to be severed accidentally or heedlessly by the children playing upon it, does not palliate the negligence of the city in failing to have it removed; and an instruction. in an action for the injury, that it was immaterial whether or not it was tied, is not erroneous. Ibid.

So, a gravel heater left standing unused for a week in the gutter of a street of a city with its handle raised and tied to the smoke stack with a rotten and unsafe wire may be found to be a defect in the highway for which the city is liable to a traveler who is injured by the handle falling upon him as he is crossing the street in the exercise of due care. Griffin v. Boston, 182 Mass. 409, 65 N. E. 811.

And a road scraper used for working highways, left in the street, is an obstruction to the highway, for an injury from which the municipal corporation is liable, under a statute providing that the several towns of the state shall be liable for all damages to persons or property by reason of defective highways. Whitney v. Ticonderoga, 127 N. Y. 40, 27 N. E. 403, affirming 53 Hun, 214, 62 N. Y. Supp. 844.

And, where a complaint in an action against a city charged that the defendant's highway commissioner carelessly placed and left a road scraper in a highway; and that the plaintiff's cart, in which he was traveling in the night, ran against the same; and that he was thrown out and injured,—an answer admitting that the scraper was the property of the town, and alleging that the commissioner of highways used due and proper diligence and care in placing and leaving the scraper to prevent accident or injury to passengers with horses and vehicles, constitutes an admission that the scraper was under the control of, and was left in the highway by, the town's commissioner of highways. Whitney v. Ticonderoga, 127 N. Y. 40, 27 N. E. 403.

So, a tool chest habitually in the highway, placed there by a contractor engaged in repairing certain sewers under contract with the city at a point which the parties had stipulated should be free from obstruction except under special permission, which permission was not given, constitutes a public nuisance. Warden v. New York, 123 App. Div. 733, 108 N. Y. Supp. 306.

And the jury, in an action against the city for an injury caused by the cover of the box, has no right to consider whether, in the performance of the contract, it was reasonably necessary to have the tool box upon the sidewalk; and it has no right to consider whether the placing of the tool box there was an incident reasonably necessary to the performance of the contract. Ibid.

So, a municipal corporation is liable in damages to a person who, while walking after dark along one of its sidewalks at a much-frequented place, collided with the handles of a large tool box which had been left on the sidewalk, and received personal injuries from such collision, there having been no warning or safeguard to notify him of the obstruction. Birmingham v. Tayloe, 105 Ala. 170, 16 So. 576.

And the fact that there was room between the tool box and the opposite limit of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

sidewalk to admit of safe travel by one using the part of the sidewalk thus left open does not per se excuse the obstruction of the other portion of the sidewalk, which was equally as much used by the public for travel, and which it was entitled to use. Ibid.

(e) Markets and other business or individual enterprises.

Streets and sidewalks are intended for purposes of travel, and are not designed or intended for the display or disposition of merchandise. Straub v. St. Louis, 175 Mo. 413, 75 S. W. 100.

And an appropriation by a city of a public street or sidewalk by the erection of sheds thereon and the occupation of the same for vending meats and vegetables and other articles usually sold in public markets, so as substantially to prevent access to or egress from adjoining buildings fronting on the street, and depriving the occupants thereof of the capacity to transact their customary and lawful business therein, is unauthorized by law; and the city is liable for damages directly resulting therefrom. St. John v. New York, 3 Bosw. 483.

And the power to build or repair markets, given by a statutory provision that the mayor and council of a city might cause public markets to be erected and kept over the waters of rivers bounding the city adjoining to any of the docks and wharves of the city, provided they did not interfere with the flow of waters, is entirely subservient to the rights conferred upon the public by the dedication and opening of a street by a corporation over its own land; and the occupation of such a street, and obstructing the use and enjoyment thereof for the reparation of a market adjoining it, are unlawful and a breach of the implied contract between the public and the city. Ibid.

So, a charter provision of a city authorizing the common council to regulate traffic and sales in the streets and public ways of the city, and another provision that the common council shall not have power to authorize the placing or continuing of any obstruction upon any street or sidewalk except the temporary occupation thereof during the erection or repair of a building on a lot opposite the same, both relating to the same subject, are to be construed together; and the latter so far restrains and limits the former as to prevent the common council from exercising the power to give to individuals the right to occupy the streets of the city for the purpose of selling produce thereon. People ex rel. O'Reilly v. New York, 59 How. Pr. 277.

And a milk stand built on a highway by an adjoining proprietor and projecting slightly over the traveled way is such an obstruction to the highway as constitutes want of repair; and, where such an obstruction existed for three years, and the municipal corporation having jurisdiction over the road took no steps to have it removed, it is liable in damages for an accident caused by it. Huffman v. Bayham Twp. 26 Ont. App. Rep. 514.

And booths for use by a fair, maintained in a public street for twelve consecutive days and used for exhibitions calculated to attract large crowds of thoughtless and indiscreet persons, constitute a nuisance in the street. Richmond v. Smith, 101 Va. 161, 43 S. E. 345.

Nor has a person occupying abutting premises any right to obstruct a sidewalk with an old counter offered for sale; and, where the city officials permitted such counter to remain there for ten days, it must be presumed that they had notice of its being there; and, where it fell over and injured a boy who jumped or climbed upon it, the city is liable for the injury. Straub v. St. Louis, supra.

But, where a counter was placed upon a sidewalk, leaning back against a building, by the voluntary negligence of a third person; and it was so placed that it would be expected only to be dangerous from the act of an intermeddler; and a child tipped the counter over by intermeddling with it or playing upon it,—the omission of the duty imputable to the city in not causing the removal of the counter was neither gross, culpable, nor voluntary, to the degree necessary to attach liability for the injury and excuse the child for intermeddling with the counter. Kunz v. Troy. 36 Hun. 615.

And, in estimating the degree of carelessness with which the city is chargeable in such a case, the character of the obstruction sought to be considered is with reference to the proper uses of the street as a thoroughfare of travel and not as a place of recreation for children; and the question is, What was the degree of carelessness in leaving it upon the sidewalk in reference to ordinary uses of the street? Chicago v. Starr, 42 Ill. 174, 89 Am. Dec. 422.

So, a municipal corporation is not liable for an injury to a child caused by heavy window screens which the owner of a building abutting upon a street was in the habit of leaning unfastened against the front of his building, which fell upon the child on the sidewalk. McLoughlin v. Philadelphia, 142 Pa. 80, 21 Atl. 754.

And, where a highway ran along the shore of a lake, the owners of a boat had the right to take the boat to the edge of the lake in the highway for the purpose of launching it, and the boat did not become a nuisance until it unnecessarily impeded or incommoded travel upon the street, the owners having failed to launch it with reasonable promptness; and officers of the village were not required to interfere until, to their knowledge, the delay of the owners to launch the same had become unreasonable; and after that such officers would only be required to launch the boat with reasonable care, promptness, and expedition, and the village would not be liable for a resulting injury unless, after the boat had become a nuisance to the knowledge of its officers, it failed to abate it with reasonable diligence. Cairncross v. Pewaukee, 86 Wis. 181, 50 N. W. 648.

But the fact that a path traversed by the public through a public park skirts the bank of a river where boats are moored does not justify or excuse the city in permitting the mooring of boats by means of a dangerous obstruction across the footway. Weber v. Harrisburg, 216 Pa. 117, 64 Atl. 905.

And a complaint against a village, which alleges that it negligently authorized and permitted a street to be obstructed by a steamboat placed across the street so that nearly the entire width of the street was rendered impassable for twenty hours, whereby teams were liable to become frightened; and that thereby plaintiff's horse and wagon were injured without fault on his part,—is sufficient, on demurrer, in an action for the damages. Cairncross v. Pewaukee, 78 Wis. 66, 10 L.R.A. 473, 47 N. W. 13.

So, authority to locate a voting booth in the traveled part of a highway is not conferred upon public officers by a statute directing them to designate a polling place in a public, orderly, and convenient portion of the precinct, and, if no such place can be found within the precinct, then in an adjoining one; and the location in a public highway pursuant to such authority may constitute a defect therein which will require the municipal corporation to exercise reasonable diligence to protect the public travel. Haberlil v. Boston, 190 Mass. 358, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 571, 76 N. E. 907.

And a municipal corporation which permits an organization of citizens to take charge of a street for the purpose of giving a public show therein becomes, in legal effect, the creator of the nuisance erected by such organization therein, and is liable as such for injuries thereby caused to travelers. Wheeler v. Ft. Dodge, 131 Iowa, 566, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 146, 108 N. W. 1057.

(f) Stones and other similar articles.

Where a heap of stones was left by the side of a road without light, by the negligence of persons employed to repair the roads, the municipality is liable as such for the negligence of its servants, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. Foreman v. Canterbury, L. R. 6 Q. B. 214.

And a person injured on a loose flagstone in a street, although knowing of the defect, while using such reasonable care as the conditions demanded, is entitled to recover of the city for the injury, provided the city had actual or constructive knowledge of the dangerous condition. Green v. Newark, 5 Penn. (Del.) 316, 62 Atl. 792.

And a petition charging that a city having more than 1,000 and less than 5,000 inhabitants constructed a cross walk at one of the principal and most frequently traveled intersections, that said cross walk was constructed of brick and stone, and that some of the stones were placed so that they projected to a height of 2 inches above the general surface,—states a cause of action in this respect; and a verdict founded upon evidence sufficient to establish such allegation is supported by the evidence. Aurora v. Cox, 43 Neb. 727, 62 N. W. 66.

Nor does the act of a city of permitting a stone 2 or 2½ feet wide 2 feet long and about a foot high to remain on a sidewalk in such a position that it took about 2½ or 3 feet of the sidewalk, which was about 10 feet wide, for from three to five years prior to an accident, constitute the exercise of due care. Davis v. Austin, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 54 S. W. 927.

And evidence tending to show that a person stumbled and fell over a stone in a sidewalk, projecting from 4 to 6 inches above the level of the pavement, placed there to mark the lines of the street at the corner; and that it constituted a dangerous obstruction to the sidewalk; and the city had known of this dangerous condition for years; and that there were no peculiar conditions at that corner requiring the stone to project as it did above the grade of the street,—is sufficient to sustain a finding of negligence upon the part of the city in leaving the stone in question in that condition. Richmond v. Pemberton, 108 Va. 220, 61 S. E. 787.

And a person injured by an obstruction in a street, who charges, in an action against the city therefor, that it had negligently and carelessly placed and maintained blocks in the street, and that they constituted a dangerous obstruction therein, and that it allowed them to remain for a long time with full knowledge, and that they rendered the street dangerous to persons traveling thereon, need not, in order to recover, show, also, that the blocks were not necessary and useful for the purpose of crossing the street. Alexandria v. Liebler, 162 Ind. 438, 70 N. E. 512.

So when there is evidence that a person stumbled over a flagstone near the middle of the sidewalk on a wide street and was injured, and that the flagstone was an isolated one, and the earth had evidently washed away from the stone during a considerable period, and some of the evidence shows that the stone stood up above the dirt about 3½ inches, and some that it stood as high as 7 inches, the question whether the walk was or was not reasonably safe is properly submitted to the jury. Williams v. Brooklyn, 33 App. Div. 539, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1007.

And, if a stone which caused an injury had been in the highway for a period of two or three weeks in various positions, and it was liable to be carried out by children or pushed out by passing vehicles, there is a question for the jury, in an action for the injury, whether the stone was large enough to constitute a dangerous menace to persons lawfully using the highway, and whether its presence loose in the street for that period of time was not enough to give notice to the city. Orser v. New York, 127 App. Div. 336, 111 N. Y. Supp. 670.

A pile of stones on a sidewalk 12 feet wide, which took up from 3 to 5 feet of the width, leaving from 7 to 9 feet clear of obstruction for people to travel over, piled up so that the outside of the pile was a perpendicular wall about 5 feet high, placed there for building purposes and not left an unreasonable or unnecessary length of time, however, was not an obstruction to the sidewalk, for an injury from which the city will be held liable. Hesselbach v. St. Louis, 179 Mo. 505, 78 S. W. 1009.

And a number of cobblestones from the size of a goose egg to 6 inches in diameter, left lying in a street, do not constitute a failure to repair the street, within the meaning of a statute, providing that, if any horse shall receive any injury or damage by reason of neglect of any city to keep in repair any public street, the city whose duty it is to keep such street in repair shall be liable for the just damages. McCool v. Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 41, 55 Am. Rep. 655, 24 N. W. 631.

And, where no sidewalk had been laid on a street, and it was sometimes muddy and impassable, and third persons, without the authority of the city, placed, where the sidewalk would naturally be, pieces of flagging stone 1½ feet apart to allow persons to step from one to another, and a person, in stepping from one to another, fell and was injured, the city, though having knowledge of the arrangement, is not liable therefor, where the arrangement of the stepping stones was not dangerous, and they presented the appearance of stepping stones, so that one approaching them would know what they were, and the person injured had herself on several occasions used them and passed in safety having knowledge of their character. Bullock v. New York, 19 Jones & S. 36.

So, that a pavement may have become uneven from use, or that bricks therein may have become loose or displaced by the action of the elements, so that persons are liable to stumble or be otherwise inconvenienced in passing, does not necessarily involve the municipality in liability for a resulting injury, so long as the defect can be readily discovered and easily avoided by persons exercising due care, or provided the defect be of such a nature as not of itself to be dangerous to persons using the walk. Gosport v. Evans, 112 Ind. 133, 2 Am. St. Rep. 164, 13 N. E. 256.

And where, at the intersection of two streets, the city had placed a stone in the neighborhood of 2 feet from the sidewalk for the alleged purpose of preventing people from driving upon or injuring the sidewalk, and a person drove against and was tipped over by the stone, and was injured, the questions, in an action for the injury, whether placing the stone at the street crossing was actionable negligence, and whether the person injured was in the exercise of ordinary care, are questions of fact for the jury. Pontiac v. Grandy, 108 Ill. App. 466.

So, a charge, in an action against a city for damages, that a large stone was allowed to remain unguarded and unprotected along a sidewalk, at the edge thereof, will not bear the construction that the stone was in or upon the sidewalk so as to be an obstruction. Vincennes v. Spees, 35 Ind. App. 389, 74 N. E. 277.

And a person who drove against a stone placed beside the traveled track of a street, and was injured thereby, cannot recover of the city for the injury, if the placing of the stone was a part of the plan for improving the street by putting in a drain and protecting the end of it and the traveling public from injury or accident by thus placing the stone. Davis v. Jackson, 61 Mich. 530, 28 N. W. 528.

But, whether the act of a city, of leaving for a long time upon a sidewalk which was traveled by a large number of persons a flagstone 3½ inches thick, over which a person stumbled and was injured, was negligence upon the part of the city rendering it liable for the injury, is a question of fact for a jury. Wedderburn v. Detroit, 144 Mich. 684, 108 N. W. 102.

And so is the question whether or not the act of agents of a city, of placing and leaving a pile of bricks upon a sidewalk in the city, constitutes negligence upon the part of the city. Yearneau v. Salt Lake City, 6 Utah, 398, 24 Pac. 254.

And evidence that a brick sidewalk in front of a lot on which a house was being built had been torn up except about 2 feet near the building; that between that strip and the gutter the ground had been dug out 8 or 10 inches deep; that brick were lying around loose; that it had been in that condition for a month; and that, on the night a pedestrian was injured, it was dark and there were no lights.—affords sufficient support for a finding of the jury, in an action for the injury, that the city was negligent in permitting a defective condition of the sidewalk to continue after it knew, or might by reasonable precaution have known, of that dangerous condition. Norton v. Kramer, 180 Mo. 536, 79 S. W. 699.

So, a finding that a city was negligent in permitting an obstruction in a street to continue is justified where a large boulder remained in a city street for many months, and constituted a dangerous obstruction. May v. Anaconda, 26 Mont. 140, 66 Pac. 759.

And evidence in an action against a city for damages for personal injuries, showing that stones at a street crossing at which the plaintiff was injured were in a slanting position and projecting one above another, and had been permitted to remain so for several months, warrants a submission of the question of the city's negligence to the jury. Chilton v. Carbondale, 160 Pa. 463, 28 Atl. 833.

And where, while a street was being paved, a stone about 4 feet long, 2 feet wide, and 8 inches thick was placed temporarily on an intersecting street to aid passengers passing along the street being paved to step down upon the pavement to cross to the other street, which stone was not laid flat but blocked up with something under it; and the blocking was improperly done, so that it became loose and tipped when stepped upon; and a traveler fell and was injured; and the stone had been in this condition such a period of time that the city officials had notice, or would have had notice had they properly attended to their duties,—it is a proper case for submission to the jury in an action for the injury. Joliet v. Fuchs, 132 Ill. App. 407.

A horse block or stepping-stone of ordinary size, however, placed on the edge of a sidewalk to facilitate access to and egress from carriages in a street, is not an obstruction to the walk which would render the municipality liable for injuries caused by a traveler falling over it. Wolf v. District of Columbia, 21 App. D. C. 464, 69 L.R.A. 83, affirmed in 196 U. S. 152, 49 L. ed. 426, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 967; Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 411, 55 L.R.A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, 61 N. E. 699; Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804, 6 N. E. 273.

And a statutory provision that no portion of the public street shall be occupied by any private person or for any private purpose whatever does not make such a stepping-stone an unlawful obstruction. Wolf v. District of Columbia, 196 U. S. 152, 49 L. ed. 426, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 967.

And the fact that other persons had been injured by falling over a stepping-stone does not of itself establish that it was improperly placed in the location it occupied, or that it was necessarily of such a dangerous character as to require the interposition of the city authorities to remove it. Dubois v. Kingston, supra.

Nor is the duty of municipal corporations to maintain such portions of their streets and sidewalks as are designed for the use of vehicles and pedestrians in a condition of reasonable safety for such use violated by permitting a carriage block of usual size within that portion of the street by the curb which, according to common knowledge, is devoted to carriage blocks, lamps, hitching posts, and shade trees; and which was not occupying any portion of the street designed for the use of passing pedestrians. Cincinnati v. Fleischer, 63 Ohio St. 229, 58 N. E. 568.

And, before a town can be charged with negligence for not removing a carriage block placed near the outer edge of the sidewalk by the owner of the adjoining premises for his own accommodation, it must appear that the block, by reason of its size and location, or because of its surroundings, unreasonably obstructs or endangers public travel. Tiesler v. Norwich, 73 Conn. 199, 47 Atl. 161.

But the character of a stepping-stone in front of a house, consisting of part of a millstone, extending therefrom over into the sidewalk 2½ feet, which was flush with the plane of the walk at the gate but 5 inches above the plane of the walk at the point of the farthest projection into the footway, presents a case in which the question of negligence upon the part of the city in permitting it to remain is properly sent to the jury in an action for injury thereby caused. Fischer v. St. Louis, 189 Mo. 567, 107 Am. St. Rep. 380, 88 S. W. 82.

So, a city has a right to mark its street lines with corner stones; but it has no right to place and leave these stones in such a position and condition as to keep the street from being reasonably safe for travel. Richmond v. Pemberton, 108 Va. 220, 61 S. E. 787.

And hub stones are useful, if not necessary, appliances to keep trucks in proper places, and prevent them from sliding into places where they may receive and do damage, and they are not per se nuisances, nor do their presence evidence an unreasonable or unwarranted use of the sidewalk. Jordan v. New York, 26 Misc. 53, 55 N. Y. Supp. 716; Bureau Junction v. Long, 56 Ill. App. 458.

And, where a hub stone about 18 inches high was used to protect trucks from going beyond the end of a bridge and falling into a gutter, and there was a clear passageway of over 8 feet for trucks to pass in and out, and a truck 7 feet wide was driven through the passage way and the horses swerved a little and the wheel struck the hub stone throwing the driver and injuring him, the accident was one of that causal, unexpected character that does not by its mere occurrence prove negligence upon the part of the municipality, or its officials; and no liability exists therefor upon the part of the municipality. Jordan v. New York, supra.

So, the question whether a highway obstructed by a stick of wood was "obstructed, insufficient, or out of repair," within the meaning of those terms as used in a statute giving to a traveler a remedy against a town, is for the jury, in an action against the town for an injury resulting from such an obstruction, under proper instruction from the court as to the meaning of the terms. Johnson v. Haverhill, 35 N. H. 74.

And, where a stick of timber 6 or 8 inches in length, 4 inches in width, and 8 inches in thickness was left in a street, from the side of which it projected, and was permitted to remain there some seven or eight months; and two of the trustees of the village had ample opportunity to see it nearly every day during that period of time; and it constituted an obstruction liable to interfere with and obstruct public travel upon the street,—it is a question for the jury, in an action against the village for the injury resulting therefrom, to say whether or not the omission of the village to remove it constituted actionable negligence. Murphy v. Seneca Falls, 57 App. Div. 438, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1013.

But a 2 by 4 scantling lying flat on the surface of a part of a street designed for vehicles and horsemen cannot be said to render the street dangerous for vehicles or horsemen; and permitting it to lie there is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

not actionable negligence. Brown v. Chicago, 135 Ill. App. 126.

And failure or omission upon the part of a city to remove boards or other temporary aids crossing an unpaved street, placed there by citizens for convenience in muddy weather, is not negligence. McConway v. Philadelphia, 209 Pa. 236, 58 Atl. 358.

And, where a piece of board was placed upon a sidewalk, presumably by the city, to facilitate passage and enable persons passing to keep out of the mud, and a person passing over it was injured, not by stumbling against it, but by its slipping and throwing her over, the question whether this was a negligent maintenance of the walk is one of fact for the jury. Schively v. Jenkintown, 180 Pa. 196, 36 Atl. 754.

Nor do 2 inch planks laid lengthwise upon a sidewalk to permit teams to be driven into a vacant lot, the ends of which are raised about 2 inches above the level of the sidewalk, which were permitted to remain there for three years, render the sidewalk not reasonably safe, within the meaning of a statute making it the duty of municipal corporations to keep cross walks in a reasonably safe condition for public travel. Yotter v. Detroit, 107 Mich. 4, 64 N. W. 743.

But, where a city was engaged through its water commissioners in laying a water pipe across a river under the sidewalk of a bridge, and, in order to accomplish the work, a number of holes were cut through the planks of the sidewalk, and when night came they were covered by placing a plank over each hole, and no light or warning signal was placed upon the bridge, and a person was injured by falling over one of them, it is a question for the jury, in an action for the injury, whether the city was negligent in leaving the sidewalk near the bridge in the night in that condition without lights or signals. Fordham v. Gouverneur, 160 N. Y. 541, 55 N. E. 290.

(g) Unevenness, inequalities.

A mound of earth about 8 inches in height, allowed to remain at the filling over a trench dug across a street to lay a pipe, is not so serious or unusual an obstruction as to indicate negligence upon the part of the municipal corporation. Messenger v. Bridgetown, 31 Can. S. C. 379, affirmed in 33 N. S. 291.

And a depression in the surface of a street, not more than 1½ inches deep at any point, into which a person stepped in alighting from a street car at a crossing and was injured, is not an actionable defect in the street, though it is at a point where a multitude of people are constantly getting on and off the cars. Burroughs v. Milwaukee, 110 Wis. 478, 86 N. W. 159.

Nor is a municipal corporation negligent in permitting a slight rut to exist in a dirt road, caused by the wheels of heavy wagons slipping off the paving adjoining street-car tracks laid therein upon a grade 5 or 6 inches higher than the dirt way, so as to render it liable for the injury caused to one falling because of such rut, in attempting to alight from a street car. Clifton v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 102, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1266, 118 Am. St. Rep. 906, 66 Atl. 159, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 537.

And an excavation made by a municipal corporation in a highway for the purpose of laying a small pipe, which, when filled in, left a projection in the highway from 4 to 5 feet in width, and from 8 to 9 inches above the surface, and upon which a horse stumbled and fell, injuring the driver, is not a negligent construction, and not a more serious obstruction than usual in roads. Messenger v. Bridgetown, 33 N. S. 291.

So, where a street had been paved with asphalt, and it had been worn and much broken in many places so that there were many holes from 1 to 4 inches in depth, some of them extending over 3 or 4 square feet of its surface; and it had been for a long time in this condition and was much traveled daily, and no other accident had resulted from its use, the street may properly be regarded as in a reasonably safe condition; and the accident resulting therefrom will not be deemed the natural or probable result of using the street in that condition. Dayton v. Glaser, 76 Ohio St. 471, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 916, 81 N. E. 991.

Where a street is in constant use in a crowded part of a city, however, it is for the jury to say whether a considerable depression in the pavement thereof creates a condition from which a prudent person would anticipate an injury to one using the street with care. Smith v. New York, 17 App. Div. 438, 45 N. Y. Supp. 239.

And where a lamp-post set in the sidewalk near the curb in a city street was removed, and the concrete was cut away, and afterwards the hole was filled with earth, which subsequently settled, leaving an uneven surface; and this condition existed over a year, when it caused an injury,—the question of the city's negligence in permitting it is one for the jury. Gallagher v. Watertown, 197 Mass. 467, 83 N. E. 1104.

(h) Slopes or grades.

In a city, upon ground which is not level, it is impracticable to bring all streets and walks to a dead level; and such a slight ascent as 1 inch or so to a foot in a cross walk or gutter crossing a street must of necessity sometimes exist; and such an ascent in the cross walk or gutter does not constitute a defect for which the city is liable. Baker v. Madison, 56 Wis. 374, 14 N. W. 289; De Pere v. Hibbard, 104 Wis. 666, 80 N. W. 933.

And a decline of about $3\frac{1}{4}$ inches in a distance of $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet in a plank sidewalk in a city of about 800 inhabitants is not such a defect as will render the city liable for personal injuries alleged to have been caused in part thereby. Schroth v. Prescott, 63 Wis. 652, 24 N. W. 405.

Nor does a decline or slope in a sidewalk, not exceeding 3 inches in 4 feet, with a lateral pitch of $\frac{1}{4}$ of an inch to the foot, in connection with an accumulation of snow not unusual or extraordinary, or so rough, lumpy, and uneven as to render the walk unsafe for pedestrians in the exercise of ordinary care, constitute an actionable defect as a matter of law. Koepeke v. Milwaukee, 112 Wis. 475, 88 N. W. 238.

And two connecting sidewalks in a city, one a few inches lower than the other, which are joined by a cement apron which has a face of 14 inches, and which at its upper edge rises to the level of the higher walk $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches, does not constitute a defect which will make a city liable for an injury to a pedestrian by falling on account of the difference in the levels, in stepping from the higher to the lower walk. McIntyre v. Kalamazoo (Mich.) 117 N. W. 729.

So, a cross walk on one of the principal streets of a city, which at the point where it leaves the sidewalk is $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet above the street, and descends to the street at a distance of only 8 feet from the sidewalk, making a descent of $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet in the distance of 8 feet; which cross walk is about 5 feet 4 inches wide, while the sidewalk from which it starts is 14 feet 9 inches wide; and the cross walk is out of range with the avenue with which it connects and has no rail or other protection to prevent a traveler from falling therefrom or to guide him along it, cannot be said, as a matter of law, to be insufficient and dangerous; and whether it is so is a question for the determination of a jury. Whitney v. Milwaukee, 67 Wis. 639, 16 N. W. 12.

And where a city changed the grade of a sidewalk so that the new one should be somewhat higher than the old, and a portion of the new walk was laid, and to connect the new with the old walk the city constructed a piece of wooden walk built upon an incline from the new and higher grade to the lower, the declivity being a slope of from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches to the foot, and, in laying the planks, the upper edge of each was raised to answer the purpose of cleats, the question as to whether or not the walk was dangerous in its construction is one of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury to a person who fell upon it. Ransom v. Belvidere, 87 Ill. App. 167.

So, the mere inclination of a stone apron leading from a sidewalk to a cross walk upon a principal street of a city, amounting to a fall of 1 inch in 10, though combined with a slight lateral inclination, is not an actionable defect in the sidewalk. DePere v. Hibbard, supra.

And a slope or grade in a sidewalk or crossing of two feet from one side of the street to the other on account of the general topography of the street is not negligence for which the city can be held liable. Fairgrieve v. Moberly, 39 Mo. App. 31.

Nor is a city liable for injuries alleged to have been caused to a pedestrian by slipping in daylight upon a concrete incline 5 or 6 feet long, sloping from the top of the curb to the pavement a perpendicular height of about 6 inches, where it could not be reasonably apprehended that the incline would be dangerous, or that one using reasonable care would be more apt to slip and fall upon the incline than he would be to slip and fall in making the abrupt descent which otherwise would have been left between the sidewalk and the gutter, and especially where there was no evidence of accidents during the time the incline had been in use, except in a few cases which were fairly attributable to other causes than those incident to the construction complained of. Stratton v. New York, 190 N. Y. 294, 83 N. E. 40, reversing 117 App. Div. 887, 103 N. Y. Supp. 358.

And, where a driveway was constructed by the owner of premises abutting on a street by lowering the walk between 4 and 5 inches and on one side of the driveway placing a flagstone so as to be on a level with the sidewalk at one end and so as to slope to the bed of the driveway, making a descent of 4 inches in 2 feet; and a person slipped and fell on one of these stones,—there can be no recovery against the city therefor if it merely suffered the landowner to construct the driveway at a negligent or improper grade without affirmatively consenting thereto; but a recovery might be had if the city actually granted a permit to the owner to construct the driveway in that manner. Garrett v. Buffalo, 26 N. Y. Week. Dig. 257, 7 N. Y. S. R. 96.

And in such case, in the absence of evidence upon the subject, it will be presumed that the driveway was constructed with the consent of the city. Ibid.

So, where a street ran along a hillside and an intersecting street ran up and down the hill, the grade thereof conforming to the hillside; and a sleigh passing along the hillside street and turning into the intersecting one slid down the grade and struck the edge of an open gutter, causing an injury, the city is not liable therefor in the absence of proof that the gutter was improperly constructed or out of repair, and that the trustees of the municipal corporation had omitted any rule of prudence by which the accident could have been prevented. Lavasseur v. Haverstraw, 45 N. Y. S. R. 6, 18 N. Y. Supp. 237.

And where, owing to a difference of level, a street where asphalted was made some 7 inches higher than the ground adjoining, and was given a gradual slope toward adjoining property, and an accident was caused by this difference of level, there was no misfeasance on the part of the city; and it is not liable for the accident. St. John v. Campbell, 26 Can. S. C. 1.

A sidewalk a section of which about 6 feet in length sloped or pitched so that the upper portion was about 18 inches higher than the lower, which was partially, if not wholly, covered with ice at the time the accident happened thereon, however, was negligently and improperly constructed, so as to render the city liable for the injury, if, when it was built, the contour of the ground on which it was laid, or the surrounding conditions, did not render an incline necessary. White v. Trinidad, 10 Colo. App. 327, 52 Pac. 214.

And where a walk sloped 5 feet in 40, and had no cleats or handrail; and it was not constructed according to any plan adopted by the city, but built as a temporary expedient to be used until the street was brought to a grade,—it is a question for the jury, in an action for an injury thereon, whether the city was negligent in constructing and permitting the walk to remain in that condition. Ford v. Des Moines, 106 Iowa, 94, 75 N. W. 630.

And, where a gutter had been filled with concrete to enable an occupant of a store to draw his wagon out of the street, the construction extending from the top of the curb arching a little and sloping 18 inches from the curb to the pavement of the street, and this obstruction had existed for over six years, and a person slipped and fell upon it and was injured, the questions whether it constituted a dangerous obstruction, and whether the city was negligent in permitting it to remain, are questions of fact to be submitted to the jury, in an action for the injury. Stratton v. New York, 117 App. Div. 887, 103 N. Y. Supp. 358, reversed in 190 N. Y. 294, 83 N. E. 40.

So, where a city lowered the grade of an avenue at a street crossing, but left the sidewalk on one side at the original grade, making a steep incline across the street to the opposite sidewalk; and a pathway was formed leading down the incline; and a traveler, while passing along the pathway, slipped and fell, and was injured,—the negligent failure of the city to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition contributed to the injury and rendered the city liable. Muncie v. Spence, 33 Ind. App. 599, 61 N. E. 907.

Nor is a city which constructs a sidewalk with a grade which is too steep relieved from liability for injuries to a person, sustained by falling upon it, by the fact that the icy condition of the walk, for which the city was not responsible, contributed to the accident. Ford v. Des Moines, supra.

Where a city builds a walk with a steep grade, and an injury happens thereon, it is a question for the jury, in an action for the injury, whether danger from snow should have been provided for when the sloping walk was built. Ibid.

(4) Hydrants and other appliances pertaining to municipal waterworks.

A hydrant answers a useful and necessary purpose, and it is required to be placed somewhere in the street. Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574.

And municipal corporations have the power and right to construct and maintain them in their streets. Oklahoma City v. Reed, 17 Okla. 518, 87 Pac. 645.

And a city is not liable for an injury to a pedestrian caused by falling over a hydrant placed by a city in a sidewalk, where the hydrant was properly constructed and placed in the usual and proper part of the sidewalk; and was, at the time of the injury, in such a condition as to afford ample, safe, and convenient passage along the sidewalk for pedestrians. Bellevue v. Genoway, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 304.

Nor can placing a hydrant in the curb of a street be said to be a negligent act. Ring v. Cohoes, supra.

And, where placing a water box upon a sidewalk is a legitimate use of the highway by the city in the construction and maintenance of its waterworks, although the top of the box may project a few inches above the surface of the flagging, and though persons using the sidewalk may possibly be injured by carelessly stepping upon or stumbling over it, it does not necessarily become an unlawful obstruction endangering public travel, which would render the city liable for an injury resulting therefrom. North v. New Britain, 78 Conn. 145, 61 Atl. 68.

So, fire plugs are a public necessity, and the municipality is the sole authority to determine as to their location; and a person who falls over one and is injured cannot recover of the municipality for his injury, where it was placed in the usual position and was of ordinary construction and not defective. Horner v. Philadelphia, 194 Pa. 542, 45 Atl. 330.

And street sprinkling is a public purpose for which a city may authorize the erection of water tanks in its streets without being liable as for authorizing nuisances. Savage v. Salem, 23 Or. 381, 24 L.R.A. 787, 37 Am. St. Rep. 688, 31 Pac. 832.

And a municipal corporation is not guilty of maintaining a nuisance where it does no more than maintain a pump in one of its streets; and it is immaterial whether the pump was put in by the corporation or by an individual. Lostutter v. Aurora, 126 Ind. 436, 12 L.R.A. 259, 26 N. E. 184.

But hydrants should not be placed in such a position as to obstruct the streets and be an object dangerous to pedestrians who are traveling upon the sidewalks in accordance with the usual mode of travel. Oklahoma City v. Reed, supra.

And, where a fire plug was maintained by a city very near the beaten roadway of a street at a point where vehicles could not pass each other without one of them turning out of the beaten way; and it was permitted to become concealed by growing weeds and vegetation, the city having knowledge of its condition, it was guilty of negligence rendering it liable for injuries to a person caused by his vehicle coming into collision with the fire plug without any negligence on his part, while driving along the street. Thunborg v. Pueblo, 18 Colo. App. 80, 70 Pac. 148.

So, where a water box is properly placed, and does not constitute an obstruction to the street; and afterwards the city lowers the grade of the street, causing it to become an obstruction,—this is an inexcusable neglect, rendering the city liable for a resulting injury. Scranton v. Catterson, 94 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Pa. 202; Wilkins v. Rutland, 61 Vt. 336, 17 Atl. 735.

And, where a water company, with permission of the city, placed a stop box in a sidewalk, placing it flush with the surface of the sidewalk as required by a city ordinance; and the sidewalk was afterwards removed so that the box projected above the surface of the ground; and a person tripped upon it and was injured,—it was the duty of the city, and not of the water company, to replace the sidewalk; and the water company cannot be held liable for the injury. Mahoney v. Helena, 96 Fed. 790.

And whether a valve box attached to an underground water-service pipe placed in a street in violation of an ordinance, which resulted in a personal injury, was such an obstruction as to render the city liable, is a question for the jury in an action for the injury. Rock Island v. Larkin, 136 Ill. App. 579.

So, whether a water shut-off box in the middle of a sidewalk much used for foot travel, projecting on one side 1½ inches above the surrounding gravel, was liable to cause travelers, while in the exercise of due care, to stumble and fall, or to turn or sprain an ankle; and whether the city exercised care in suffering the box and sidewalk to remain in that condition,—are questions for the jury in an action for an injury resulting from such box; and it cannot be ruled as a matter of law that the box does not constitute a defect in the highway. Redford v. Woburn, 176 Mass. 520, 57 N. E. 1008.

And where, on a sidewalk, was a row of flagging several feet in width, but covering only a portion of the sidewalk, the distance between the flagging and the curb line being about 2 feet; and in this space stood a water pipe, which was originally flush with the surface of the earth, but after a change of grade of the walk the pipe was left projecting 4 inches above the surface; and this condition existed for nine months; and a person got his foot under the projecting cap of the pipe and fell, receiving injuries,—the question whether or not the walk was reasonably safe is properly submitted to a jury. Archer v. Mt. Vernon, 57 App. Div. 32, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1040.

And whether a water box situated in a sidewalk, which had sunk so as to create a hole or depression several inches deep, constituted an obstruction in the line of travel for which the city was liable, is a question of fact for a jury. Reynolds v. Philadelphia, 221 Pa. 51, 70 Atl. 125.

So, where a water box was placed by a water company at the outer edge of a sidewalk as it then existed; and the city afterwards widened the sidewalk by the construction of a cement addition thereto; and in widening the sidewalk the water box was left more than 2 feet inward from the curb and at a point where people were constantly passing and repassing; and a hole was left in the sidewalk above the rim of the water box, and a person was injured thereby,—the city is primarily liable for the injury if it did not exercise reasonable or ordinary care. Denver v. Magivney (Colo.) 96 Pac. 1002.

And, where a municipal corporation allows one of its sidewalks which is about 10 feet in width to become obstructed by two stop boxes or water boxes placed thereon, standing in the walk 3 feet from the side thereof next to the gutter and projecting above the surface of the sidewalk, one of them 2¾ inches, and the other 1¾ inches, and a few inches apart, each box having a cap thereon larger than the box itself and slightly extending over it, they constitute such an obstruction as to render the walk not in a reasonably safe condition for the traveling public, making the corporation liable in damages to a person sustaining injury by reason thereof. Parrish v. Huntington, 57 W. Va. 286, 50 S. E. 416.

And a foot passenger upon a sidewalk, who struck his foot against a water cock, connected with the water pipes leading from the mains under the bed of the street into private premises, which projected some 3 or 4 inches above the level of the pavement, and was thrown down and injured, is entitled to recover therefor in an action against the city, provided he was using such care in the use of the street as would ordinarily be used under similar circumstances. Baltimore v. Walker, 98 Md. 637, 57 Atl. 4.

Nor is a municipal corporation exempt from liability for an injury to a person whose carriage came in collision with an iron water plug projecting above the ground more than 1 foot in a city street, where there was no light or signal at or near the water plug to disclose its situation, and it was a dangerous obstruction well known to the city, which permitted it to remain. Petersburg v. Todd, 2 Va. Dec. 301, 24 S. E. 232.

And, where a hydrant was so arranged that the wheel of a carriage of a person attempting to pass the hydrant close to the curbing would be likely to come in collision with a projecting nut thereon; and such a collision might result in a serious accident; and the nut was so small and the projection so slight that the danger might escape the attention of a traveler until the moment of contact,—a determination that the hydrant thus placed was dangerous to public travel, and, by reason thereof, the way was defective, is not erroneous as a matter of law. St. Germain v. Fall River, 177 Mass. 550, 59 N. E. 447.

Nor is the erection of a water tank in the center of a street, occupying one half of the width thereof, and the erection and operation of a steam engine in connection therewith, even for the purpose of supplying a city and the residents thereof with water, one of the uses of a street as such, for which it may be appropriately used under a dedication thereof as a street; and the city is liable for injuries resulting from such use. Morrison v. Hinkson, 87 Ill. 589, 29 Am. Rep. 77.

And, where an iron water shut-off 12 inches high and 3 or 4 inches in diameter protruded above the portion of a street where a sidewalk laid out over an existing highway was to be constructed; and the contractor was working under a permit from the superintendent of streets called a permit to close; but the street was not closed to travel by a vote of the proper authorities,—it is a question of fact for the jury whether reasonable care and diligence had been exercised to protect the traveling public so as to save the city from liability under the highway act. Jones v. Collins, 188 Mass. 53, 74 N. E. 295.

And, where a sluiceway or drain was built to carry off the water accumulating at a street corner; and this had been obstructed by a water company by placing in the middle of it an 8-inch pipe; and the city allowed this to exist for upwards of five years with knowledge of the fact that, by reason thereof, this corner was flooded and the cross walk concealed frequently every year, and, when covered, a condition existed which imperiled the safety of travelers upon the street,—this constituted a want of reasonable care on the part of the village authorities, rendering it liable for a resulting injury. Lloyd v. Walton, 57 App. Div. 288, 67 N. Y. Supp. 929.

So, where water tanks when erected in a street were not nuisances per se, and could not be abated as such, the question whether they afterwards became in fact nuisances is one of fact for a jury. Savage v. Salem, 23 Or. 381, 24 L.R.A. 787, 37 Am. St. Rep. 688, 31 Pac. 832.

(f) Cellar ways, stairways, and other projections.

Stairways on street sides, leading downwards to the basements and cellars of buildings on abutting lots, or upwards to the entrances of such buildings, which do not encroach upon the sidewalk, are lawful. Fitzgerald v. Berlin, 51 Wis. 81, 37 Am. Rep. 814, 7 N. W. 836.

They are not nuisances per se if properly constructed, in good repair, and afford a safe sidewalk for public use. Fehlauer v. St. Louis, 178 Mo. 635, 77 S. W. 843.

Nor is a violation of an ordinance requiring cellar ways in sidewalks to be constructed even with the sidewalk the basis of a cause of action of a pedestrian who sues a city and an abutting property owner for injuries received by tripping against such a cellar way elevated above the level of the walk, but is simply evidence tending to show that the cellar way was not constructed as required by law. Perrigo v. St. Louis, 185 Mo. 274, 84 S. W. 30.

But the existence of stairways on the street sides, leading downwards to the basements and cellars of buildings on abutting lots, or upwards to the entrances of such buildings, imposes upon the municipality in which they are situated the duty of providing proper safeguards for the prevention of accidents, by reason of their proximity to the sidewalks, to persons traveling thereon with ordinary care. Fitzgerald v. Berlin, supra.

And whether a cellar door set in a stone base in a granitoid sidewalk, and extending nearly 6 feet from the building outwardly, and being 4 inches above the sidewalk at the building and 2½ inches at the other end, is a dangerous obstruction to travelers on the sidewalk, is a question of fact to be determined by a jury. Perrigo v. St. Louis, supra.

And an ordinance regulating the construction and safeguarding of cellar ways in sidewalks is admissible in evidence in an action based on the city's negligence in allowing a cellar way to remain open and unguarded, as a declaration of the city concerning a matter involved in the action. McLeod v. Spokane, 26 Wash. 346, 67 Pac. 74.

But, if the act of a city in allowing a cellar way in a sidewalk to exist for a long time was negligence, then the existence of other cellar ways in the city would be no justification or defense; and evidence that there was a large number of such cellar ways in the city is not competent in an action against the city for injuries received by falling into the open cellar way in a sidewalk. Ibid.

So, whether trapdoors in a sidewalk, projecting above the surface and surroundings, are of such a character as to make them unsafe to pedestrians, is a question of fact, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. Smith v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 481, 74 Pac. 674.

And so is the question whether an opening in a sidewalk in front of a house and lot, leading into the cellar of the house, covered by a door which is set on and fastened to a stone base or flagging which extends out from the wall of the house 6 or 7 feet into and across the sidewalk, and which projects above the surface of the sidewalk 3 or 4 inches, is a dangerous obstruction to travel on the sidewalk. Perrigo v. St. Louis, supra.

And, where a sidewalk is 15½ feet wide, 10 feet of the sidewalk from the street edge consisting of granite slabs and the remaining 5½ feet being an iron frame with circular glass insertions to give light to the basement under the sidewalk, which consists of two flat doors shutting together in the center and opening upward and outward, and having four hinges which project between 1½ and 2 inches above the level of the sidewalk, a rightangle being made between the hinge and the main part of the bulkhead extending upward from the level of the sidewalk, the question whether the projecting hinges constitute defects in the sidewalk, which the city, in the exercise of reasonable care, should have remedied, is properly submitted to the jury in an action for an injury resulting to a traveler from stumbling thereon. Lamb v. Worcester, 177 Mass. 82, 58 N. E. 474.

But the existence of hinges on a trapdoor a little more than an inch above the level of the sidewalk in a city, affixed by the owner of abutting premises for convenience of access to his cellar, and against which a traveler aware of their existence tripped and injured himself, does not constitute such a want of repair as to render the municipal corporation liable for the negligence. Ewing v. Toronto, 29 Ont. Rep. 197.

Nor is it actionable negligence upon the part of a municipality to permit the existence of trapdoors in a sidewalk, against which a person stumbled and fell, where the doors were elevated at most but 2 inches above the surface of the walk, and they were placed in close proximity to the front of the building, and between their outer edges and the curb there was an unobstructed passage of nearly 9 feet, and this condition of things had existed for upwards of five years, and was one common to the business quarters of every large city. Tubising v. Buffalo, 51 App. Div. 14, 64 N. Y. Supp. 399.

So, the projection of a movable grating of a culvert from 1 to 2 inches above the level of the edge of the sidewalk against which it rests is not a defect which shows such a want of ordinary care on the part of the city as will make it responsible for an injury occasioned by stumbling over the grating. Raymond v. Lowell, 6 Cush. 524, 53 Am. Dec. 57.

And, where an injury was caused by a carriage wheel being caught in a grating constructed between the rails of a street railway to carry off water into a catch basin; and the evidence in an action against the city for the injury tended to show that, if the grating had been in the position in which it was originally placed, such an accident could not have happened, and that it had settled a little so as to be below the bottom of the rail,—it is a question for the jury whether the condition of the grating and the rail rendered the street manifestly unsafe. Cammett v. Haverhill, 197 Mass. 76, 83 N. E. 331.

So, steps projecting into a highway not more than 3 feet under a statutory authorization do not constitute a nuisance or an illegal obstruction in the highway. Cushing v. Boston, 124 Mass. 434.

And such steps are not made a nuisance or an illegal obstruction in the highway by the fact that the treads of the steps project beyond the risers ¾ of an inch, and that there is no railing or guard, there being no evidence that this is an improper or unusual method of construction. Ibid.

And a special statute declaring that no doorsteps hereafter erected in any street, lane, or alley in a town shall project into such street, lane, or alley more than 1-12 part of the width, and in no case more than 3 feet, implies authority to occupy the street to the extent indicated, and affords justification to an abutter who may use the privilege; and a structure within these limits does not constitute a defect against which safeguards should be erected or special care taken to protect travelers. Cushing v. Boston, 122 Mass. 173.

But charter authority to make such rules and regulations for the erection and maintenance of balustrades and other projections upon the roofs or sides of buildings as safety of the public requires, and to make all salutary and needful by-laws, is intended to deal with those parts of a building which may project near or over the line of a highway, and which, if not properly constructed and maintained, may endanger the safety of the public, and is not intended to deal with additions to, or parts of, a building which may occupy the highway itself or obstruct travel thereon, thus constituting a nuisance in the highway, and does not give a city power by ordinance to make rules and regulations with reference to the erection and maintenance of doorsteps within the actual limits of the highway. Cushing v. Boston, 128 Mass. 330, 35 Am. Rep. 383.

Nor can a municipal corporation absolve itself from liability for an injury to a pedestrian, caused by the steps of an abutting house encroaching upon a sidewalk in such a way as to constitute a nuisance, by the fact that they had existed for twenty-five years or more. White v. New Bern, 146 N. C. 447, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1166, 59 S. E. 992.

So, an iron covering of a manhole constituting a part of the surface of a street situated just outside the sidewalk at the corner formed by the intersection of the cross walk with the sidewalk, need not be kept as smooth and present as perfect a surface as a sidewalk; and a pedestrian about to cross such a point in the street must take notice of the uneven surface and declivities, and use such care as the situation would suggest to an ordinarily prudent person. Lincoln v. Detroit, 101 Mich. 245, 59 N. W. 617.

In the above case Keyes v. Marcellus, 50 Mich. 441, 45 Am. Rep. 52, 15 N. W. 542, supra, IX., c. 3, (b), (3); was distinguished upon the ground that the street considered in that case in which the defect existed was little more than a country highway; and it was held that it accommodated the public travel conveniently and safely.

But whether leaving a manhole with a cover projecting several inches above the surface of the ground, nearly in the middle of a street, is an obstruction to travel, is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. Schafer v. New York, 154 N. Y. 466, 48 N. E. 749.

And so is the question of the liability of a city for an injury resulting from stumbling over the top of a sewer manhole, where the sewer was built under an earthen sidewalk, and the top of the manhole stood above the surface 6 inches, 5 inches, or 3 or 4 inches, by various estimates. Corr v. New York, 121 App. Div. 578, 106 N. Y. Supp. 280.

And, where an alleged defect in a street consisted of two bolts each $\frac{3}{4}$ inches in diameter, standing vertically $1\frac{1}{2}$ or $1\frac{3}{4}$ inches in height above a perforated iron plate, which formed the cover to a sewer, the bolts being used to hold the sewer plate in place; and an injury was caused by a traveler striking his foot against one of them and falling upon the other; and there was a conflict in the evidence, in an action for the injury, as to the description and common use of the highway, and as to whether or not the sewer plate was in a proper place,—the question whether it was so situated and of such a character that a traveler using due care might be exposed to injury by stepping against it was properly submitted to the jury. Dowd v. Chicopee, 116 Mass. 93.

So, a city which places a manhole in the middle of one of its public streets so that it projects above the surface of the street 6 or 7 inches, in consequence of which a traveler's horse, while being driven along the street at night, strikes his foot against the manhole and is permanently injured, is liable therefor. Montgomery v. Reese, 146 Ala. 410, 40 So. 760.

And whether an iron box 4 inches square, constituting part of the usual apparatus of a gas company for distributing gas, set in a sidewalk in a city by the gas company, a few inches from the curbstone and only 1 or 2 feet distant from the junction of a cross walk with the sidewalk, in such a manner that its rim projects an inch above the level of the sidewalk, and left uncovered and empty to the depth of 3 inches, is a defect in the way, for an injury to a traveler resulting from which the city will be held liable, is a question of fact for a jury. Loan v. Boston, 106 Mass. 450.

And an instruction, in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street, that, if the city neglected its duty by allowing the covering and lid of a coal hole to remain for a long time in an unsafe condition for travel in the street on account of the covering and lid extending above the level of the sidewalk, the jury should find whether the extension was or was not such an obstruction as would render the street unsafe and dangerous to pedestrians, is proper, and not subject to the objection that it ignores the distance which the covering and lid of the coal hole extended above the surface of the sidewalk. Smart v. Kansas City, 208 Mo. 162, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 565, 123 Am. St. Rep. 415, 105 S. W. 709.

(k) Railways in streets.

The duty of a city to keep its streets and alleys open and free from all nuisances does not prevent the carrying out of specific authority to permit and authorize the laying down of tracks for railways and street railways on its streets, alleys, and public places. Heath v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co. 61 Iowa, 11, 15 N. W. 573.

And a municipal corporation may authorize the use of a street by a company engaged in transporting passengers in cars drawn by horses, and, in licensing such a use of its streets, it violates no duty, such use of the streets not being dangerous in itself; and the city is not liable for the negligence of its licensees. Michigan City v. Boeckling, 122 Ind. 39, 23 N. E. 518.

And a village having authority over the laying of railroad tracks, water and gas pipes, and the erection of lamp-posts, telegraph and electric-light poles in its streets, is guilty of no wrong in permitting an electric railway to place its tracks in one of its streets. Lockport v. Licht, 221 Ill. 35, 77 N. E. 581.

And a complaint in an action for injuries sustained in driving upon a street obstructed with snow and ice, averring that the accident was caused because of turning from one street into another, which was necessary to pass around a street car standing upon its track in the latter street; and that in so doing his horse was frightened by the sudden starting of the car and drew his buggy over the ice and overturned it,—does not charge that the street car was an obstruction in the street, since, in the absence of any further averment on the subject, it will be assumed that the car had merely stopped to take on or discharge a passenger, and therefore it was not necessary to drive around it. McDonald v. Toledo, 63 Fed. 60.

But, while it is a legitimate use of a street to allow a steam-railroad track to be laid and operated upon it where there is legislative authority therefor, under legislative authority merely authorizing tracks to be laid in the streets, it is not competent for a municipality to grant the exclusive use of a street to a railroad company. Ligare v. Chicago, 139 Ill. 46, 32 Am. St. Rep. 179, 28 N. E. 934; Stack v. East St. Louis, 85 Ill. 377, 28 Am. Rep. 619.

And it is not material to the liability of a city for granting the exclusive use of a street to a railroad company, so as to exclude the public from using it as a street, that the public is not expressly deprived of the use of the street upon which the railroad tracks are laid; the result and effect of the grant will control in that regard. Ligare v. Chicago, supra.

And an issue as to whether a street was rightfully obstructed by a railroad train should be submitted to the jury in an action involving that issue, if the circumstances attending the blockade are such that reasonable persons might entertain different views as to whether the action of the railroad company was justifiable or not. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Prescott, 23 L.R.A. 654, 8 C. C. A. 109, 19 U. S. App. 291, 59 Fed. 239.

So, in the absence of express statutory authority, a city has no power to permit the use of steam motors upon its streets, either upon ordinary railroads or street railways, and the granting of such authority or permission constitutes negligence, which will render the city liable for damages caused thereby. Stanley v. Davenport, 54 Iowa, 463, 37 Am. Rep. 216, 2 N. W. 1064, 6 N. W. 706.

And where a private corporation to which has been granted the right to operate by electricity a street railway uses an appliance which is a constant menace to the public in the use of the street, however, and the city has notice thereof, but neglects to abate it, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

—the city is liable for injuries caused by such dangerous appliance to a person traveling upon the street. Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561.

And, where a railroad company dug a ditch across a street, and prepared no means of crossing it, and no warning was placed at or near the ditch, and the street was not lighted, and an injury resulted from a person driving into the ditch, the railroad company and the city are joint tort feors, and both are responsible in damages. White v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 1131.

So, the fact that iron rails for the use of street cars projected 3 or 4 inches above the plank surface of a street justifies the conclusion by a jury that the city had not discharged the duty imposed upon it by law of keeping its streets free from obstruction. Michigan City v. Boeckling, supra; Danville v. Makemson, 32 Ill. App. 112; Prevost v. Montreal, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 15 C. S. 39.

And a municipal corporation is liable for an injury suffered by the occupant of a carriage, caused by a loose rail in a street railway track crossing the street catching the wheel of the carriage, of which condition the municipality had due notice. Natchez v. Shields, 74 Miss. 871, 21 So. 797.

And permitting a street-railway side track which has been disconnected from the main track and has fallen into total disuse to remain in an unpaved street in such a way as to constitute a dangerous hidden obstruction in wet weather is negligence per se on the part of the city. Cutcher v. Detroit, 139 Mich. 186, 102 N. W. 629.

So, evidence that a city authorized a railroad company to lay tracks in one of its streets upon condition that the work should be done in conformity to the ordinances and under direction of the superintendent of city works; and the railroad company employed a contractor to construct its tracks; and the contractor left railroad ties in the gutter at a street corner between the cross walk and the curb, projecting 1 inch or 1½ inches above the curb; and that this caused an injury to a person who stumbled over it in the night, there being no light on the corner where the obstruction was placed; and that one of the police officers had been thrown by the same tie two nights previously,—is sufficient to charge both the railroad company and the city with negligence. Higgins v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co. 54 App. Div. 69, 66 N. Y. Supp. 334.

And evidence that a person was driving along a street in which there was a car track; and that one wheel of his wagon sunk into a hole or depression between the rails, throwing him from his wagon and injuring him; and that the depression had existed for several weeks or months prior thereto; and that there was a considerable furrow or hole alongside the rail, the cobblestones of the pavement having sunk several inches below the surrounding surface,—is sufficient to support a verdict of damages for personal injuries, against the city.

Eckert v. New York, 59 App. Div. 611, 69 N. Y. Supp. 124.

And it is for the jury, in an action for a personal injury, to say whether a guard rail, which is not a necessary part of a street railway, or which is improperly or insufficiently laid, or which has been loosened from its original position and fastenings, is a defect in the street, within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute which imposes upon towns the duty of keeping its highways in repair. Hawks v. Northampton, 116 Mass. 420.

A safety gate at a point where a railroad crosses a public street, however, is in no sense a private use of the street, but is clearly a police protection against injuries to persons passing along the street in consequence of the passage of railway trains over the same; and such a gate cannot be said to be a nuisance in the street. Seibert v. Missouri P. R. Co. 188 Mo. 657, 70 L.R.A. 72, 87 S. W. 995.

And a municipal corporation is not liable to persons injured by falling into a cattle guard lawfully constructed near a highway crossed by a railroad, where it maintained proper barriers up to the railroad, and as far as it could do so without impeding passing trains. Jones v. Waltham, 4 Cush. 299, 50 Am. Dec. 783.

Where a railroad crosses a street, and a safety gate is maintained at the point of crossing, whether the operating machinery shall be placed between the curb lines of the street or on the sidewalk which constitutes a part of the street is a question resting largely within the discretion of the municipal authorities; and the courts will not interfere therewith or condemn municipal action in respect to the place where such machinery is located, unless the presence on the street of such machinery or appliances necessarily interferes with the use of the street as a public highway. Seibert v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra.

And where, in such case, there are 39 feet of clear, unobstructed space left in the highway between the boxes and protections of the machinery of the safety gate, it cannot be said that the machinery appliances and protections necessarily interfere with the use of the street as a public highway. Ibid.

And where a railroad company, at a point where its road crossed a street, maintained, under authority of the city government, crossing gates to prevent vehicles from driving on the railway track when a train was approaching, the machinery to operate which was in boxes built on either side of the street 2 feet from the curb, standing about 4 feet inside of the driveway, which was about 50 feet wide, which machinery was protected by guard rails about 2 feet 6 inches in height, the guard rails were lawful structures in the street, and the foreman of a fire engine, who was injured by them in driving to a fire, is not entitled to recover for his injuries. Klein v. Missouri P. R. Co. 114 Mo. App. 89, 89 S. W. 75. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(1) Embankments.

If an embankment in a street was so constructed and maintained as to render travel on the street passing over it dangerous and hazardous; and, by reason thereof, a person received injuries,—the city is liable therefor if the embankment was placed there by authority conferred by the ordinances of the city. Golden v. Clinton, 54 Mo. App. 190; Gibson v. Huntington, 38 W. Va. 177, 22 L.R.A. 561, 45 Am. St. Rep. 853, 18 S. E. 447.

And, where an embankment on the side of a road, though created by nature, is maintained by the city as a barrier to prevent travelers from driving into a creek, it is a ministerial duty of the corporation, neither governmental nor discretionary, to see that it is not dangerous to anyone using the road or any part thereof; and, if it is allowed to become dangerous, the city can be held liable for a resulting injury. Gibson v. Huntington, supra.

And an embankment made across one of the principal thoroughfares of a large city, and left there for a long time without guards, constitutes a nuisance for which the city is liable. Cleveland v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 279, Gil. 255.

So, where there was a depression in a street, and the authorities raised one half of the street over the depression, and left the other half of the street on its natural level, leaving an embankment between the two levels of some 6 feet in height, the side of the embankment being precipitous and rough, and the embankment being without railing or barrier to prevent travelers from being precipitated over it, it was unsafe as a matter of law. Prideaux v. Mineral Point, 43 Wis. 513, 28 Am. Rep. 558.

And a street crossed by a railway track which is somewhat above the level of the street, placed upon an embankment, in making which the material was obtained from two parallel ditches excavated on each side of the embankment where it extended across the street, the ditches being in the neighborhood of a foot deep and about 6 feet wide on either side of the grade, is defective, so that the city may be held liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Cunningham v. Thief River Falls, 84 Minn. 21, 86 N. W. 763.

So, it is the duty of a city, when grading its streets and cutting through an elevation so as to leave an embankment beside the street, to build and finish the slopes thereof so that they will be in a reasonably and ordinarily safe condition as to such persons as may be lawfully in the street, and so that they will not unnecessarily endanger the lives and limbs of passers upon the sidewalk. Nichols v. St. Paul, 44 Minn. 494, 47 N. W. 168.

And, where a municipal corporation, in improving the grade of a street, dug it down, leaving the sidewalk elevated from 3 to 6 feet above the surface of the street, creating a precipitous descent, the edge of which was somewhat ragged; and a traveler on the street in the night started to cross the street and fell down the descent and was injured,—the case is one where a recovery against the municipal corporation may be sustained. Bennett v. Sing Sing, 38 N. Y. S. R. 347, 14 N. Y. Supp. 463.

And, where a city, in grading a street near a school attended by small children, left for several months a precipitous bluff 30 or 40 feet high, which, from caving in and other causes, became dangerous; and the authorities of the city knew of the danger and neglected to repair it; and one of the school children eight years old, while playing in the street, was killed by the falling of a part of the bluff,—the city is liable in damages for the death, though the bluff was left in a reasonably safe condition at the time of the grading. Vicksburg v. McLain, 67 Miss. 4, 6 So. 774.

The existence of a well-paved street 40 feet wide with a rise on either side of 12 to 18 inches, against which a horse being driven along the street shied and caused an injury, however, does not show such negligence upon the part of the city as to require the court, in an action for the injury, to leave the question to a jury. Johnston v. Philadelphia, 139 Pa. 646, 21 Atl. 316.

And, where horses were frightened and ran away, and ran over an embankment in a street, the real questions in an action against the city for the injury are, Was the street, considering the width of the embankment, the height thereof, the slope of the descent to the portion not elevated, the condition thereof for smoothness and ease of carriage, reasonably safe for travel? and, If it was not, was the damage to the plaintiff reasonably caused by its unsafe condition, or by the running away of his horses unaffected by the city's negligence? Wilson v. Atlanta, 60 Ga. 473.

(m) Gutters and drains.

Ditches or gutters on the sides of highways designed for drainage and convenient for that purpose, with walks in the nature of bridges across them for the use of pedestrians, leaving unimpeded the traveled portion of the road, cannot be considered as defects or obstructions in the highway, for which a municipality is liable. Loberg v. Amherst, 87 Wis. 634, 41 Am. St. Rep. 69, 58 N. W. 1048.

And a municipality is not liable for personal injuries caused by a fall into an uncovered gutter at a street crossing, where it appears that the gutter was reasonably safe, and that the open gutter is a common approved method of construction at crossings in cities and boroughs. Bruch v. Philadelphia, 181 Pa. 588, 37 Atl. 818.

So, the maintenance at a street crossing of a gutter 8 inches wide and 6 inches deep is not negligence upon the part of the municipality. Wright v. Lancaster, 203 Pa. 276, 52 Atl. 245.

And, where the roadway or traveled part of a highway running through a small incorporated village is about 8 feet wide, well graded and in good condition, with a grass plot 6 or 7 feet wide between the edge of the roadway and a ditch running parallel therewith, made for the purpose of carrying off water, the village is not liable for injuries sustained by a traveler driving upon a dark night into a hole in such ditch caused by a drain discharging water into it. King v. Ft. Ann, 180 N. Y. 496, 73 N. E. 481.

So, a shallow gutter across a sidewalk, made to carry off the water from the conductor on the front of an abutting building, so constructed that the row of bricks on one side of the gutter is from three quarters to an inch higher than a corresponding course on the other side, is not a defect which will render the city liable for an accident caused thereby. Haggerty v. Lewiston, 95 Me. 374, 50 Atl. 55.

And a gutter, or waterway, or side ditch to drain water from a hillside along a turnpike, which is necessary in order to pass water across the road, which wagons have worn to some extent, creating a chuck hole about 18 inches deep through the ice, upon which a wagon broke, throwing the driver and injuring him, does not constitute such a defect in the road as will render the town liable for the damages for the injury. Van Pelt v. Clarksburg, 42 W. Va. 218, 24 S. E. 878.

Nor is a city bound to cover its crossings at all places if it does not see fit to do so; this, like other city improvements, it may do or not as the municipal authorities see proper; and the absence of a cover at a crossing is not of itself negligence in the corporation. Heiss v. Lancaster, 203 Pa. 260, 52 Atl. 201.

And a drain running along the side, or on the outer edge, of a street, where it serves the purposes of a gutter or ordinary roadside ditch, which is covered with plank and used as a sidewalk, does not become a culvert, for which the city is liable under a statute providing for such liability. Kowalka v. St. Joseph, 73 Mich. 322, 41 N. W. 416.

And where, on a declivity in a city, several streets intersect each other and are paved and worked in accordance with an established grade, which is not defective, the mere fact that a cross walk and stone gutter 8 feet wide parallel with it, otherwise properly constructed, and not out of repair, crosses a side street upon an angle a little less than a right angle, and the middle of the gutter for a space of about 30 feet in the middle of such street has a depression of from 5 to 6 inches, and outside of that space a depression of from 8 to 9 inches, does not constitute such a defect as to render the city liable. Baker v. Madison, 56 Wis. 374, 14 N. W. 289.

So, a small aperture in the curbing of a sidewalk 4 inches wide and some 3 inches deep, and not on the sidewalk or on a cross walk, made for the purpose of carrying away water from the street, is a prudent exercise of power by the city to make its streets dry for the use of the public; and it does not constitute negligence on its part, rendering it liable for an injury caused by a person stepping into the opening. Harrigan v. Brooklyn, 67 Hun, 85, 22 N. Y. Supp. 39, affirmed in 143 N. Y. 661, 39 N. E. 21.

And an artificial opening for the purpose of drainage, made through snow or ice, but not extending below the surface of the soil in a street, whether made by the public authorities, or by someone for whose acts the city can be found liable, does not render the street dangerous in the sense that it constitutes either a defect in the roadway or an obstacle to travel, for which the city should be held responsible in damages. Hadden v. Somerville, 197 Mass. 480, 83 N. E. 1105.

Nor does the mere fact of the incorporation of an aqueduct company, and the assent of the selectmen of a town that such company might dig up and open a highway for the purpose of constructing an aqueduct under the authority of a statutory provision, discharge the town from liability for an injury occasioned by reason thereof. Merrill v. Wilbraham, 11 Gray, 154.

Failure properly to cover a culvert laid across a street by authority of a municipal corporation, however, is negligence for which the corporation is liable, in the absence of contributory negligence on the part of a person injured in consequence thereof. O'Gorman v. Morris, 26 Minn. 267, 3 N. W. 349.

And, where injuries were caused by a trench in a street which had been filled by the city after removing a culvert, the question whether or not the trench had been properly filled was one for the jury under the evidence. Heberling v. Warrensburg, 133 Mo. App. 544, 113 S. W. 673.

And the fact that a city filled a trench in one of its streets the same way that it filled all such holes in streets does not relieve it from liability for an injury occasioned thereby; the manner in which the city ordinarily fill such holes not being a standard of safety. Ibid.

So, a grating covering a cesspool in a street, having between one of the outside bars and the rim a space wide enough to permit a horse's foot to pass through, is a defect in the street, for injuries resulting from which the city is liable. Buck v. Biddeford, 82 Me. 433, 19 Atl. 912.

And, where a heavy iron plate was used for the cover of a gutter, and the stone upon which it rested had been broken or worn away so that it did not set level, and, when a wagon passed over one end of it, the other end was thrown up and fell upon the foot of a pedestrian and injured him, the negligence of the city in maintaining the plate in a dangerous condition was the efficient cause of the injury. Louisville v. Johnson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 685, 69 S. W. 803.

And, where a municipal corporation had full power to repair or otherwise deal with a drain, and neglected to repair it, whereby a dangerous hole was formed, which was left open and unfenced, this constituted a nuisance in the highway, for which the municipality was liable to an indictment, and also liable to a suit by any person who sustained a direct and particular damage from its breach of duty. Bathurst v. Macpherson, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 256.

So, evidence tending to show that the rock in a basket gutter carved in the natural rock for the passage of surface water had so broken out on one side as to form a perpendicular wall 8 inches high; and that a person driving his horses into the street from an intersecting one was thrown from his wagon and injured because one wheel sank into the depression next to the solid wall, while the opposite wheel mounted an elevation,—is sufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff in an action against the city for the injury. Stone v. Troy, 38 N. Y. S. R. 44, 14 N. Y. Supp. 616.

And evidence that it was necessary to have an opening which caused an injury, for the purpose of disposing of surface water and of cleaning out a drain and keeping it open, is inadmissible in an action for the injury, since it is a matter of common knowledge that surface water can be disposed of by gratings and other small openings which would be harmless. Stone v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 644, 74 Pac. 808.

So, if a city, in raising the grade of a street by putting in insufficient drains, caused water that would not have otherwise flowed upon abutting land to flow there, it is liable for the injury caused; but, to warrant a recovery, the injury must be shown to have been caused by the casting of the waters from the city's drains onto the abutting land, and such casting of the water to have been the direct and natural result of the negligent construction of the drains or streets; and an instruction in an action for the injury to that effect is not objectionable as permitting a recovery without any showing of negligence or mismanagement by the city. Mayrant v. Columbia (S. C.) 64 S. E. 416.

Nor is the liability of a municipal corporation, in the limits of which a street obstructs a stream of water by providing too small a culvert to pass it, for the nuisance, affected by the fact that it did not originally construct the street. Its maintenance of the obstruction after the city limits were extended to include the locality is sufficient to create the liability. Martin v. St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 117 S. W. 94.

And the fact that the outlet of the culvert was outside the city limits does not affect the liability of the city for the nuisance caused by the overflow, the liability being based on the maintenance of the embankment within the city limits with an insufficient outlet. Ibid.

But evidence as to the quantity of earth and cost of work which would be required to fill in a lot to the level of the street pavement, so that surface water flowing upon the lot from land above would pass into the street, is incompetent in an action against the city for flooding the lot by raising the grade of the street and by insufficient drains, where it is obvious that filling the entire lot would be unnecessary. Mayrant v. Columbia, supra.

So, proof of the existence of an open ditch about 300 feet long, between 3 and 4 feet in width, and from 18 to 30 inches deep, within the limits of a street of a village, into which a horse fell and was injured, is sufficient to sustain a finding of negligence upon the part of the village. Bradner v. Warwick, 91 App. Div. 408, 86 N. Y. Supp. 935.

And, where a ditch was dug through a sidewalk by an abutting owner in front of his premises to let water off his lot while repairing the sidewalk, pursuant to directions by the city; and the ditch was left open over night without any warning; and a pedestrian fell in and was injured,—he may introduce in evidence, in an action against the city for the injury, a city ordinance regulating such excavations, and providing for proper guards against accidents on account thereof, as tending to show the degree of negligence upon the part of the city. Flater v. Fey, 70 Mich. 644, 38 N. W. 656.

So, a city which has provided gutters, culverts, and sewers for the surface drainage of streets is bound to the use of reasonable diligence to discover and remedy defects therein. Schumacher v. New York, 166 N. Y. 103, 59 N. E. 773, affirming 40 App. Div. 320, 57 N. Y. Supp. 968.

And, where a street commissioner of a village found a gutter full of ice and snow and water running over the walk, and cleaned out the gutter, but did not remove the obstruction which prevented the water from running into the sewer; and the place was not guarded, and no lights were placed there; and, on the evening of the same day, a traveler upon the street stepped into the gutter and was injured,—a finding of negligence upon the part of the city is warranted. Bly v. Whitehall, 120 N. Y. 506, 24 N. E. 943.

Nor is a city excused from liability for failure to use reasonable diligence to discover and remedy defects in gutters, culverts, and sewers for the surface drainage of streets because a storm which created an obstruction was heavy and unexpected, since its care should include preparation, after notice of the obstruction, express or implied, for such storms as may be reasonably foreseen, and which, judging from experience, are liable to happen at any time. Schumacher v. New York, supra.

Whether it was necessary to have or permit a drain in a street is a question for the jury, in an action for an injury to a pedestrian who stepped into a drain from a cross walk, and not a subject for testimony. Gallagher v. Tipton, 133 Mo. App. 557, 113 S. W. 674.

(n) Holes and openings.

(1) Generally.

An excavation in a street, made by a city for a proper purpose, is not of itself a nuisance, and does not become such unless it is allowed to remain open for an unreasonable length of time. Garnetz v. Carroll, 136 Iowa, 569, 114 N. W. 57.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And excavations and piles of earth in the streets, necessary in making the ordinary improvements of a city, such as sewers, laying of water and gas pipes, and the like, made with ordinary care, are not unlawful obstructions of the streets, for injuries resulting from which the city is liable. Swart v. District of Columbia, 17 App. D. C. 407.

So, a city is not an insurer of the safety of its streets, and, if an unprotected excavation is left in a street without the fault of the city, it is not responsible unless it had actual or implied notice thereof, and failed to use due diligence in obviating and removing the danger. Holitz v. Kansas City, 68 Kan. 157, 74 Pac. 594.

Nor can a municipal corporation be held to be guilty of negligence in regard to a hole or depression in the pavement of a street where the defect was not one from which a reasonable man would have apprehended danger. Belling v. Hamilton, 3 Ont. L. Rep. 318; Vandeskie v. New York, 89 App. Div. 625, 85 N. Y. Supp. 836; Beltz v. Yonkers, 148 N. Y. 67, 42 N. E. 401; Morroney v. New York, 49 Misc. 307, 97 N. Y. Supp. 642, affirmed in 117 App. Div. 843, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1135.

And, where a street was unimproved, and had an unfrequented path on each side; and a person who had contracted to improve the street had run a furrow with a plow along what was intended to be a sidewalk on one side of the street; and, on the evening of that day, a person attempted to cross from one path to the other during a violent storm and fell into the furrow and was injured,—the accident was one which no human foresight could have anticipated; and the city was not liable therefor. McNish v. Peckskill, 91 Hun, 324, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1022.

And a trench, dug in a street for the purpose of supplying heat to the city library building, which is partly filled, part of which, on account of inability to obtain material, is left open awaiting the arrival of such material, is not of itself a nuisance, so that the city will be held liable in damages to one who drives into the ditch and is injured. Garnetz v. Carroll, supra.

The duty of a municipality is to keep its streets free from obstructions of every kind, however; and there is no difference in principle between a dangerous obstruction in the street, resulting from a hole or excavation, and an equally dangerous obstruction resulting from matter thereon which is liable to cause one to slip and to be injured. O'Dwyer v. Northern Market Co. 24 App. D. C. 81.

And a city has no right to permit or make a dangerous excavation in one of its streets, or allow the same to be made in a dangerous manner, unless it causes such care to be used that others exercising ordinary care will not be injured thereby. Joliet v. Seward, 99 Ill. 267; Cleveland v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 279, Gil. 255; Nitz v. Toledo, 22 Ohio C. C. 454.

And a city which permits an unguarded pit or excavation crossing a street to exist to the peril of travelers disregards one of its plainest duties, and is guilty of negligence. Birmingham v. Lewis, 92 Ala. 352, 9 So. 243; Montgomery v. Bradley (Ala.) 48 So. 809; Pierce v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 306, 43 Atl. 162; Tallahassee v. Fortune, 3 Fla. 19, 52 Am. Dec. 358; Case v. Waverly, 36 Iowa, 545; Baltimore v. Holmes, 39 Md. 243; Baltimore v. Pendleton, 15 Md. 12; Muncy v. Bevier, 124 Mo. App. 10, 101 S. W. 157; Davenport v. Ruckman, 10 Bosw. 20, 16 Abb. Pr. 341, affirmed in 37 N. Y. 568; Uhrichsville v. Fisher, 45 Ohio L. J. 229; Hysell v. Central City (W. Va.) 61 S. E. 43.

And if it is left in the street or highway after the city has knowledge of its existence, or, by the exercise of reasonable care, should have knowledge of its existence, the city is liable for an injury resulting to a person in the exercise of ordinary care. Pierce v. Wilmington; Case v. Waverly; Cleveland v. St. Paul; Muncy v. Bevier; and Nitz v. Toledo,—supra.

And an allegation in a complaint that a deep, dangerous trench or ditch was excavated in and across the traveled part of a street, and was suffered to remain in an open and exposed condition, is sufficiently specific in description of the defect charged to have caused the injury. Sherman v. Oneonta, 49 N. Y. S. R. 267, 21 N. Y. Supp. 137.

And it warrants the admission of evidence that a ditch or trench dug in the street by a water company for the purpose of laying its pipes had been left 2 feet below the regular grade of the street, and that a ridge of earth about 2 feet above the regular grade had been left along either side of such trench, such evidence not being objectionable as proving a mound to have been the cause of the injury, when the complaint alleged the existence of an unguarded trench. Ibid.

So, where the authorities of a city had power to forbid an excavation in a street, and knew of its existence and did not forbid it, they will be deemed to have permitted it. Sterling v. Thomas, 60 Ill. 264.

And, where an open trench with an embankment or heap of dirt from the excavation is created by the water board of a city, and allowed to exist for two months upon the traveled part of one of the city streets; and the hole is left entirely unguarded by any barrier and unprotected by light; and a person is injured thereby,—the city is liable for the injury because it permitted the street to be used after notice of its dangerous condition. Pettengill v. Yonkers, 25 N. Y. Week. Dig. 451, 4 N. Y. S. R. 830.

And, where a railroad company dug a ditch across a street, and prepared no means of crossing it, and no warning was placed at the ditch, and the street was not lighted, and a stranger who knew nothing of the ditch drove into it in the night, and an injury resulted, the question of the negligence of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

city in permitting the condition is one of fact for the jury. White v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 1131.

So, digging post holes in a street is a public nuisance although it is done in a part of the street not used or susceptible of use by the public by reason of natural obstructions. Wright v. Saunders, 65 Barb. 214.

And, where a person was hurt by falling into a gully or ditch in a public alley between the sidewalk and the street, the question whether the gully or ditch, in the place where it was, was such an excavation as to render the thoroughfare unsafe for travel by day or night, is one of fact for a jury under proper instructions. Harrell v. Macon, 1 Ga. App. 413, 58 S. E. 124.

So, a municipal corporation which temporarily swings from its place as a portion of a street a bridge, thus creating a perilous chasm in the street, is under the duty to adopt such measures as are sufficient to give reasonable notice thereof, or such barriers as will afford reasonable protection to persons traveling in the usual manner. Chicago v. McDonald, 57 Ill. App. 250.

And a city is liable in damages for an injury caused by holes in the planking of a roadway over railroad tracks or a ditch, where the defect in the planking had been permitted to remain unheeded for a long time before the accident, and there was abundant time when by reasonably frequent examinations, it ought to have been known and remedied. Chicago v. McCabe, 93 Ill. App. 288; Odon v. Dobbs, 25 Ind. App. 522, 58 N. E. 562.

So, a hole 6 feet long, 2 feet wide, and 2 feet deep, which had been in a street for seven or eight months, and was concealed by water, creates a dangerous condition of the street, within the meaning of the rule that a city is bound to use reasonable care to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the traveling public. Purcell v. Chicago, 231 Ill. 164, 83 N. E. 137.

And the question whether a municipal corporation has exercised a reasonable degree of care in respect to an unpaved and in a measure unimproved public street by permitting the existence therein for a month or more of a rut from 8 to 18 inches in depth, 2 to 3 feet in length, and 7 to 10 inches in width, is one for the jury to determine, in an action for an injury caused thereby. Brush v. New York, 59 App. Div. 12, 69 N. Y. Supp. 51.

So, evidence that a hole in a street, into which a person stepped and was injured, was near the sidewalk line, and about 3 feet long, 4 to 6 inches wide, and 8 inches deep, and at the time of the accident was filled with slush caused by melted snow, and had existed for some three months prior to the accident, justifies a finding, in an action for the injury, that the city was negligent. Finnegan v. Sioux City, 112 Iowa, 232, 83 N. W. 907.

And the existence in a paved roadway of a street in a city of a hole 7 inches deep is sufficient to authorize a finding of negligence on the part of the city which will render it liable for personal injuries sustained by a person stepping into the hole in the night. Miller v. New York, 104 App. Div. 33, 93 N. Y. Supp. 227.

So, while a city has full power to alter the grade of a street to improve and to modify it in its discretion, the city authorities have no right to dig pits in the public streets, and are bound, as all other persons are, to use ordinary care and diligence in their operations. Milwaukee v. Davis, 6 Wis. 377.

And the act of a municipal corporation of making a hole in a highway in order to ascertain whether repairs were required there, and omitting to replace the materials, or fill up the hole, or place a light there, by reason of which a person crossing the road fell across the materials and into the hole, gives the person injured a cause of action, within the meaning of a statute limiting the right of the plaintiff to sue on a cause of action after three months have expired. Pearson v. York County, 41 U. C. Q. B. 378.

And, where a city permitted a trench to be dug in a street adjacent to a building, the basement of which extended under the sidewalk, and during a heavy rain water accumulated in the trench and percolated through the wall into the basement and injured goods therein, if the city knew the danger to be apprehended from an unusual rainfall in case the culvert or gutter should become obstructed, and if it knew, or should have known, that the culvert was closed, and yet took no care to prevent injury to neighboring property, it was liable for damages naturally resulting from its neglect. Schumacher v. New York, 166 N. Y. 103, 59 N. E. 773, affirming 40 App. Div. 320, 57 N. Y. Supp. 968.

But a statement of witnesses, in an action against a city, that there was a hole, washout, or depression at the place in question extending into the beaten path, does not justify the submission to the jury of the issue whether the defect consisted of a depression, hole, or washout in the highway, extending into the ordinary traveled path. Collins v. Watervliet, 114 N. Y. Supp. 346.

So, whether it was negligence upon the part of a municipal corporation to construct a bridge of a width less than the traveled portion of the street, thus leaving an uncovered hole in the street, is a question of fact for a jury. Shelley v. Austin, 74 Tex. 608, 12 S. W. 753.

And the rule is the same where a traveler's horse was injured by falling into an open trench in a public street, with reference to the question of negligence upon the part of the municipal corporation in permitting the existence of the trench. Wood v. Bridgeport, 143 Pa. 167, 22 Atl. 752.

And, where an independent contractor working under the supervision of a city inspector cut an opening in an asphalt pavement on a street, and, during a suspension of the work, put in a temporary filling, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which washed out during a heavy rain, and a person was injured by driving into the opening, the city cannot escape liability on the claim that the accident was due solely to the rain, since it was its duty to anticipate and provide for the natural effect of rain on earth excavated and replaced, and to foresee that if rain gathered upon the street it would naturally tend to soak into this opening, where the rest of the street was asphalted. Newman v. New York, 57 Misc. 636, 108 N. Y. Supp. 676.

An ordinance providing that anyone who shall dig, or cause to be dug, any excavation on or adjoining any highway, street, alley, or sidewalk within the limits of the city, and shall leave the same unfenced or not securely covered, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, however, does not apply to the municipal corporation itself; and a violation of the ordinance would not, as against the city, constitute negligence per se so as to hold it liable to a person injured by stepping into a ditch in the nighttime in a public street within the corporate limits of the city. Browne v. Bachman, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 430, 72 S. W. 622.

And specifications given to a contractor by a city, showing how the work of laying a sidewalk should be done, and the written report of the engineer showing the excavation necessary to be made, are not competent evidence of the depth of the excavation, in an action against the city for an injury caused by it. Moon v. Middletown, 14 Ohio C. C. 498.

(2) For sewer purposes.

A city is liable for injuries received by a person falling into an open street sewer, where its officers had actual knowledge of the displacement of the cover thereof, and failed securely to cover it. Barr v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. 550, 16 S. W. 483.

And a municipal corporation which, in constructing a sewer in a public street, left a manhole uncovered for several weeks, and near it a pile of sand, with knowledge that children were accustomed to play in the sand, is liable to a child of tender years, who, while at play in the sand, fell into the manhole and was injured. South Bend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 54 L.R.A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200, 60 N. E. 271.

And, where the work of constructing a manhole in a street is done under the supervision and authority of the city, the city is responsible for the way in which it is done. Kankakee v. Linden, 38 Ill. App. 657.

And a manhole situated just outside the sidewalk, and at the corner formed by the intersection of two cross walks with the sidewalk, in a city, should be kept reasonably safe by it, having reference to the probable use which the public will make of it; and, where the cover is permitted to remain in such a condition that, when stepped upon, it will drop down and let the traveler fall in, the city is liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Lincoln v. Detroit, 101 Mich. 245, 59 N. W. 617.

So, it is gross negligence upon the part of a city to permit an excavation for a sewer over 70 feet long and about 8 feet deep to remain protected only at the head of the excavation. Crowther v. Yonkers, 39 N. Y. S. R. 748, 15 N. Y. Supp. 588.

And a hole about 5 feet square and 10 or 12 feet deep in a street between the tracks of an electric railway, which had been there a considerable time and was used in taking out earth from an underground sewer then being constructed, which hole was left unguarded, and there was nothing on the surface of the street to indicate its existence except a small quantity of dirt not far away, warrants the jury, in an action for an injury occasioned by a person falling into the hole, in finding the existence of a defective condition of the street. Block v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 526, 72 N. E. 77.

And a deep trench dug across the tracks of a street railway company for the purpose of laying a drain under a permit from the city, which has been in existence for four or five days and is left unguarded in a portion of the street, open to travel, and filled with soft mud, and looking like the rest of the street when wet and muddy, cannot be held, as matter of law, not to be a defect in the street. Hyde v. Boston, 186 Mass. 115, 71 N. E. 118.

So, although a city exercised care in re-filling a sewer ditch, if a dangerous hole was caused by the sinking of the street over the sewer pipe, and the city knew of the existence of the hole in time to repair the same by reasonable diligence, and failed to do so, it is chargeable with negligence. Dallas v. Muncton, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 112, 83 S. W. 431.

And a hole about 2 feet deep in a street, caused by a flow of surface water on the roadway to a sewer basin, produced by the particular manner in which the sewer basin was constructed and the situation in which it was placed, which hole or depression had existed in the same condition for six weeks previous to the accident in question, warrants the jury in finding, in an action brought by a person who drove into the depression and was injured, that the defect was one for which the municipality was responsible. Lehmann v. Brooklyn, 30 App. Div. 305, 51 N. Y. Supp. 524.

(o) Defects and obstructions in sidewalks and crossings.

(1) Breaks, excavations, and depressions.

While a sidewalk need not be continuous throughout the whole length of a street, when one is built or suffered to remain on a part of a street only, the ends or termini must be so graduated to the natural level of the street as to permit pedestrians safely to pass to and from it without being obliged to climb down over obstructions. Ponca v. Crawford, 23 Neb. 662, 8 Am. St. Rep. 144, 37 N. W. 609; Plainview v. Mendelson, 65 Neb. 85, 90 N. W. 956.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And, where a cement walk was so built that from the top of it to the dirt and stone below at the end of it, directly in line with the sidewalk and in the public street, there was a perpendicular descent or drop of about 2 feet, it is a question for the jury, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom, whether the city was guilty of negligence in permitting the existence of such a condition. Chicago v. Carlson, 138 Ill. App. 582.

So, an excavation in a sidewalk is a defect in the sense that there is a want of something necessary to make a complete sidewalk; and an instruction, in an action for damages by one who fell into the excavation, referring to it as a defect or excavation, is not prejudicial error. Kansas City v. Birmingham, 45 Kan. 212, 25 Pac. 569.

And an excavation in a sidewalk, in a populous city, of such dimensions and in such a part of it that foot passengers, if they fall into it, may suffer great harm, left at night without guard, protection, or light, is a nuisance for which the city is liable. Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 567; Denver v. Solomon, 2 Colo. App. 534, 31 Pac. 507; Wallace v. New York, 18 How. Pr. 169.

And which the city authorities may summarily abate, though it was created by an independent wrongdoer. Walker v. Springfield, supra.

And the act of municipal authorities in leaving open a ditch 3 feet deep and 2½ feet wide and 4 feet long, at a point where the ditch crosses a part of the sidewalk, is negligence imposing liability for a resulting injury. Russell v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 720, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823, 21 S. E. 550.

And, where the platform of a set of wagon scales situated in the middle of a city market building had sidewalks laid from opposite sides of the street in the center of which the building stands, to which steps were constructed leading from the platform of the market building to the scales on each side, making the platform accessible to pedestrians from every direction; and it had been used as a common thoroughfare by people generally for a great many years; and the scales were removed by the city or with its knowledge, and the hole or excavation caused thereby was left unguarded and unlighted,—the city is liable for injuries to pedestrians who without knowledge of the danger are injured thereby. Nitz v. Toledo, 22 Ohio C. C. 454.

So, where the owner of a lot abutting on a street, in erecting a building thereon, makes an excavation abutting upon the sidewalk; and the town authorities have knowledge of the excavation; and a traveler, without fault on his part, falls into it and is injured; and the hole is unguarded and no danger signals are displayed, the person injured can sue either the city or the lot owner. Brown v. Louisburg, 126 N. C. 701, 78 Am. St. Rep. 677, 36 S. E. 166.

And the trial court, in an action against a municipal corporation for an injury in a street, may properly assume that an excavation several feet deep in the line of the sidewalk is a defect in the walk unless properly guarded. McGrath v. Bloomer, 73 Wis. 29, 40 N. W. 585.

And an unguarded opening 4 feet 9 inches in width, extending from the building line into the street 5 feet 6 inches, into which persons passing along the sidewalk or to or from the building in the night might accidentally fall without fault on their part, in a much frequented street, is a public nuisance; and neither lapse of time, nor the existence of like nuisances elsewhere with the consent of the municipality, will legalize it. McNerney v. Reading, 150 Pa. 611, 25 Atl. 57.

And, where a person fell into a trench across a footwalk which was in fact a wash-out caused by a flood which occurred about six weeks before the accident, the footwalk not being a sidewalk constructed in the ordinary manner, but an embankment of cinder and other material unguarded by railing or fence; and it was claimed by the city that the locality was protected by two red lights placed at each end of the opening, while the person injured testified that the red lights were not in place at the time of the accident, and several witnesses contradicted him, but they were not shown to have been present at the place of the accident,—the question of the contributory negligence of the person injured, and of the negligence of the city, is one for the jury; and a verdict and judgment in favor of the person injured will be sustained. Strahl v. Philadelphia, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 301.

And, if a gas company, with the knowledge and consent of the city in which it does business, has discharged steam into a city sewer under a sidewalk, it is the city's duty to notify the company to stop the flow of steam while the sidewalk is being repaired, if the steam comes through the sidewalk so as to conceal the opening made therein, and also to warn pedestrians of the danger; and, if it fails to do so, it is primarily liable to a pedestrian injured by falling into the hole. Bowling Green v. Bowling Green Gaslight Co. (Ky.) 112 S. W. 917.

The mere fact of the existence of an excavation in a sidewalk which the city had a right to permit to be made and the work upon which was progressing with proper haste, however, does not show a want of care upon the part of the city for which it can be held liable because of a resulting injury. Cohn v. Kansas City, 108 Mo. 393, 18 S. W. 973.

And, where lot owners on a street in a sparsely settled part of a city were directed to construct a sidewalk, and all but one complied, and the ends of the walk opposite the open space were a few inches above the ground, but there was no more danger in walking over it than over walks constructed with a break so that travelers are compelled to step up and down, is not so defective as to render the city liable for an injury caused thereby. Shietart v. Detroit, 108 Mich. 309, 66 N. W. 221.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, a rut made by a push cart in soft snow or slush which had frozen on a sidewalk and then had been covered by 1 or 2 inches of fresh snow is a condition incident to city pavements in variable winter weather; and failure to repair such a defect is not negligence which would render the city liable to one who caught his heel in the rut and fell and was injured. Gardner v. Philadelphia, 221 Pa. 247, 70 Atl. 721.

And a depression 4 feet long, 11 inches wide, and 3½ inches deep, near the curb in a city sidewalk 15 feet wide, which has existed for several years, is not such a defect as will render the city liable to a pedestrian who in the daytime falls or slips into such depression. Schall v. New York, 88 App. Div. 64, 84 N. Y. Supp. 737.

Nor is a scoop-shaped depression in the bricks in a sidewalk, about 1½ inches deep, about the width of 12 bricks, and extending about 3½ feet, a defect for which the city would be responsible under the Massachusetts statute. Isaacson v. Boston, 195 Mass. 114, 80 N. E. 809.

And a city is not liable for an injury resulting from an uncovered depression in the center of a sidewalk made up of two courses of flagstones, due to the edges of the flags where they were united being broken and the parts removed, the depression being about 2½ inches deep and about 2 feet 2 inches in length, and 7½ inches in width, the defect being of such a character that a reasonably prudent man would not anticipate danger to travelers from it. Beltz v. Yonkers, 148 N. Y. 67, 42 N. E. 401.

So, where a city rebuilt a portion of a sidewalk by nailing planks on the upper sides of the walk, and permitted other parts to remain unchanged, so that there was a difference of level of 2 inches at the ends of the plank nailed on the walk, over which a person fell and was injured, the defect was too slight to justify a recovery as for injuries resulting from defects in streets. Kawiecka v. Superior (Wis.) 118 N. W. 192.

But, where a walk was constructed of hexagonal cement blocks, and one of them 6 inches from the step of a store had become depressed by the operation of frost, and had fallen below the general surface of the walk at its outer side an inch and a quarter and at the inner side to a less extent; and this condition had existed for a sufficient length of time to establish notice to the city, and was upon a sidewalk extensively traveled and below a raised step at the entrance of a store over which patrons of both sexes were accustomed to pass,—the depression might constitute such a defect as to render the municipality liable for damages to a person injured thereby. Bieber v. St. Paul, 87 Minn. 35, 91 N. W. 20.

And a charge of a depression in a sidewalk, of 3 feet in width and 3 inches in depth, which caused a fall, and of knowledge of the defect upon the part of the municipality, and duty to repair and neglect to perform it, prima facie shows an actionable defect. Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, 20 So. 424.

And, where there was a depression in a sidewalk of 3 or 4 inches where the cemented portion of the sidewalk joined the dirt walk, it is a question for the jury whether or not the sidewalk was in a reasonably safe condition for those exercising due care. Taylor v. Manson (Cal. App.) 99 Pac. 410.

So, a person who fell from stepping into a depression in a sidewalk, about 6 inches deep below the average surface of the walk, where two flags joined and separated in the depression, which depression was concealed by snow and slush at the time of the accident, is entitled to recover of the municipality for her injury where it had notice of the depression. Kellow v. Scranton, 195 Pa. 134, 45 Atl. 676.

And, where a flag sidewalk for a considerable distance was broken and defective, and there were depressions and holes, and at the point of injury one set of the flags across the sidewalk were higher than the adjoining set, and the person injured slipped on a piece of ice, and her foot was caused to go into a hole, and she was thrown down, she is entitled to go to the jury in an action for the injury, on the question of the negligence of the city. Mayhood v. New York, 119 App. Div. 100, 103 N. Y. Supp. 856.

(2) Holes.

The duty of a city to use ordinary diligence in maintaining a sidewalk in a reasonably safe condition for persons to use the same comprehends the duty of exercising ordinary care to keep the sidewalk free from such holes as might reasonably be deemed liable to cause injury to persons while walking along the walk. San Antonio v. Wildestein (Tex. Civ. App.) 100 S. W. 231; West v. Eau Claire, 89 Wis. 31, 61 N. W. 313.

And whether a hole in a sidewalk is or is not a defect is a question for the determination of a jury under proper instructions from the court. Schroth v. Prescott, 63 Wis. 652, 24 N. W. 405; Ottawa v. Stricklin, 45 Ill. App. 288.

One whose heel was caught in a hole in a sidewalk cannot recover of the city for the injury received if the hole was such as not to have led the officers of the city, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, to have anticipated danger to a pedestrian passing over such walk. Carson v. Dresden, 113 N. Y. Supp. 959.

And danger is not reasonably to be anticipated from the presence of a hole in a flagstone sidewalk, between 3 and 4 inches deep, 12 inches long, and about 6 inches wide, which condition has existed between six and fourteen years; and the city is not liable for an injury to a pedestrian from stepping into such a hole. Powers v. New York, 121 App. Div. 433, 106 N. Y. Supp. 166.

Nor is a hole in a sidewalk, 3 or 4 inches deep and about 2 feet long and 18 inches wide, apparently caused by the breaking off and sinking of one corner of a flagstone, such a defect as to charge the municipality 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

with negligence, where it appears that the sidewalk had for a long time been in a disturbed condition caused partly by adjoining excavations for a subway over which the city had no control and partly by the construction of an adjoining building. Henry v. New York, 119 App. Div. 432, 104 N. Y. Supp. 440.

And a hole in a stone sidewalk, from 1½ to 2 feet in area and from 1½ to 3 inches deep below the level of the walk, the sides of which are not abrupt, which was caused by the breaking out of the top cement and the wearing of the grouting beneath, is not a defect which renders the walk not reasonably safe, within the meaning of a statute imposing upon municipalities the duty to keep their sidewalks reasonably safe. Jackson v. Lansing, 121 Mich. 279, 80 N. W. 8.

A city is liable for an injury caused by a hole in a city sidewalk, however, where the dangerous condition had existed for a long time before the accident, and the municipal authorities had full notice thereof, but made no apparent effort to have the same repaired. Valparaiso v. Donovan, 28 Neb. 406, 44 N. W. 449; Wahoe v. Reeder, 27 Neb. 770, 43 N. W. 1145; Bloomington v. Mueller, 71 Ill. App. 268; Streator v. Hamilton, 61 Ill. App. 509.

And holes in a board sidewalk, occasioned by pieces broken or decayed and removed therefrom, although but a few inches in depth, may, in legal contemplation, be such defects as to render the city liable for injuries resulting therefrom. Lawrence v. Davis, 8 Kan. App. 225, 55 Pac. 492; Marvin v. New Bedford, 158 Mass. 464, 33 N. E. 605.

And, where a hole in a sidewalk into which a person fell on a dark night was from 18 inches to 2 feet long, 5 or 6 inches wide, and about 4 inches deep, and had existed for six weeks or two months, it is a question for the jury, in an action for the injury, whether the city was guilty of negligence in omitting to repair or cause it to be repaired. O'Brien v. Syracuse, 31 App. Div. 328, 52 N. Y. Supp. 322.

And the same rule applies to one about 20 inches long and of an irregular width averaging about 3 inches. Denver v. Hyatt, 28 Colo. 129, 64 Pac. 403.

So, a hole or aperture in a sidewalk into which the toe of a pedestrian's shoe may pass sufficiently far to hold the foot fast, requiring force to remove it, is not such a minor defect that reasonably prudent men will not differ as to whether accidents should have been reasonably anticipated from its continuance; and the question of the negligence of the city in permitting it is one for the jury in an action for a resulting injury. Morroney v. New York, 49 Misc. 307, 97 N. Y. Supp. 642, affirmed in 117 App. Div. 843, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1135, which was affirmed in 190 N. Y. 560, 83 N. E. 1128; Crites v. New Richmond, 98 Wis. 55, 73 N. W. 322.

And evidence tending to show that a hole in a street, into which a woman fell and was injured, was in the edge of the traveled part of the road; that it was 18 inches deep and 2 feet wide; and that a board walk had formerly covered the hole, but had gradually become out of repair; and that the borough had received written notice of the existence of the hole, and had allowed it to continue for a long time without light or guard; and that an electric light of a defective character near the hole was not burning at the time of the accident; and that the night was dark,—is sufficient to go to the jury, in an action for the injury, on the question of the negligence of the municipal corporation. Nudd v. Lansdowne, 190 Pa. 89, 42 Atl. 474.

And the rule is the same where a person was injured by stepping into a hole in a sidewalk, caused by a plank being broken several days before; and there were several churches and a schoolhouse on the street; and it was much traveled by those attending the churches and the school, as well as by those living in the street; and the planks of the walk were raised 10 or 12 inches from the ground; and a driveway crossed the walk; and the plank was broken by a loaded wagon. Laurie v. Ballard, 25 Wash. 127, 64 Pac. 906.

So, a hole in a sidewalk, about 10 inches in width and between 3 and 4 feet in length and about 1 foot in depth, is a dangerous defect, failure to repair which is negligence upon the part of the city. Chicago v. Crooker, 2 Ill. App. 279.

And, where planks were missing in a sidewalk, and boards broken, and stringers not in place, and pieces not nailed, and young men in passing had been tripped up by it, and an aged man, who was conducting his little granddaughter along the walk, stepped into a hole in the sidewalk in an attempt to prevent the little granddaughter from falling, which caused him to fall, the city is liable for the injuries received by him. Gueble v. Lafayette, 121 La. 909, 46 So. 917.

So, a person suing a city for an injury, who proves that the sidewalk has a 5-inch crack between two parallel boards composing it for its entire length, and that the city officers had actual knowledge of its condition, and that she unwittingly stepped into the crack and was caused to fall, and was injured, makes out a prima facie case, and should not be held to strict proof of the exact point in the sidewalk where she fell, or the exact distance which her foot went into the crack. Caskey v. La Belle, 101 Mo. App. 590, 74 S. W. 113.

And where, in the middle of a sidewalk 8 feet wide, there was a hole 26 inches long on the longest side 5 inches wide in the widest place tapering to a point each way, and 2 inches deep, which hole had remained for a number of years, and in which, when the earth was soft from moisture, a person's foot would sink into the ground and might become entangled or wedged between the stones, a jury, in an action for an injury caused thereby, is justified in holding the municipal corporation to have been negligent. Beltz v. Yonkers, 74 Hun, 73, 26 N. Y. Supp. 106.

gent. Beltz v. Yonkers, 74 Hun, 73, 26 N. Y. Supp. 106.

So, the act of a city in allowing a hole in a bridge on a sidewalk, caused by the removal of a plank, to remain on one of the principal streets in the city within a short distance of a market house from five to twenty days, is grossly negligent, rendering it liable for a resulting injury. Griffin v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 279, 10 S. E. 719.

And proof that a bridge through which a person fell and was injured had been for a long time before in a very bad condition, and that at the point of the accident there was a hole in the sidewalk one foot wide and 5 feet long, and that it was 35 feet from the bridge to the ground beneath, and that this hole had been there more than a month prior to the accident, is sufficient to support a verdict in favor of the person injured, against the city. Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 419, 75 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 34.

Nor does a declaration in an action against a city, charging that the plaintiff slipped into a hole in a sidewalk, and testimony that he stepped into the hole, create a material variance. District of Columbia v. Haller, 4 App. D. C. 405.

And a complaint charging that the defendant city negligently allowed a dangerous hole to remain in one of its sidewalks along which the public were accustomed to pass sufficiently charges the defect in the sidewalk, and notice of its existence. Lord v. Mobile, 113 Ala. 360, 21 So. 366.

And one charging that a cross plank of a walk was broken and depressed at the center to the ground is not insufficient merely because it fails to state the depth of the hole thereby caused. Lyon v. Grand Rapids, 121 Wis. 609, 99 N. W. 311.

And that a hole in a sidewalk by which a person was injured was big enough for the witness to put his foot into it is a fact to which an ordinary witness may testify without being an expert. San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex. Civ. App.) 78 S. W. 28.

(3) Hatchways, areas, and other openings.

While a lot owner in a city may use space under the sidewalk in front of his lot by constructing and maintaining for his convenience hatchways and coal holes in the sidewalk, covering them when not in actual use, so that they will not affect the safety of the walk for ordinary travel, and when in use guarding them to prevent persons traveling on the walk in the exercise of ordinary care from falling into them, this rule does not shield a municipality from the consequences of knowingly permitting such an opening to be used in a negligent manner. Whitty v. Oshkosh, 106 Wis. 87, 81 N. W. 992; Steger v. Milwaukee, 110 Wis. 484, 86 N. W. 161.

And, if they are negligently left open for such a length of time that the municipal authorities ought, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, to know and remedy the mischief, the city may be liable for injuries occasioned thereby to travelers exercising ordinary care. Ibid.

A city which allows a house owner to maintain a hatchway in the sidewalk in front of his premises is under duty to see that such hatchway is so located and constructed as not to be unnecessarily insecure for persons passing when it is open. McClure v. Sparta, 84 Wis. 269, 36 Am. St. Rep. 924, 54 N. W. 337.

And whether a sidewalk was defective by reason of the improper location of a hatchway therein by an abutting owner is a question for the jury, in an action for damages against the city for an injury resulting therefrom. Ibid.

So, where the cover of a coal hole was not defective or liable to slip when properly in position, but on pleasant days it had been propped open a few inches and left in that condition, such condition constituted a defect in the sidewalk for which the city is responsible. Stege v. Milwaukee, supra.

And a city ordinance prescribing as to the structure and material of covers of coal holes in sidewalks is admissible in evidence in an action against a city for a personal injury alleged to have been caused by the defective cover of a coal hole in a sidewalk. Hearn v. Chicago, 20 Ill. App. 249.

And so is an ordinance of the city requiring area ways to be properly guarded, in an action against the city for damages for injuries sustained by falling into an unguarded area way. McNerney v. Reading, 150 Pa. 611, 25 Atl. 57.

But a city cannot be held liable for an injury sustained by a person in consequence of stepping upon the displaced cover of a coal hole in a sidewalk, in the absence of evidence indicating any defect or tending to show that the cover was out of its socket for a sufficient length of time to have enabled the city officers to discover its condition and replace it, or that they had reasonable cause to apprehend that it might become displaced by ordinary use. Cooper v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 458, 72 N. W. 1130.

So, it is negligence upon the part of a municipal corporation to permit the owner or occupant of premises to make an opening in the adjoining sidewalk and permit a trapdoor for such opening to be left open, so that pedestrians may fall in. Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill. 358, 32 N. E. 271.

And cellar doors opening out on the sidewalk and frequently or negligently kept or left open endanger the use of the sidewalk in the night, and the persons of imperfect vision by day; and the city is liable for injury to persons falling into such cellars if it has notice of such negligent use of the cellar doors. Chapman v. Macon, 55 Ga. 506; Smith v. Leavenworth, 15 Kan. 81.

So, where the owner of a building and his tenants maintained a cellar way from a traveled street to a basement with a trap door therein, which they left open without rail or guard, they are guilty of negligence; and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whether the city is also guilty of a like negligence is a question for the jury, depending upon the method of construction, and the use made of the streets, and the number of times the door has been left open and unguarded, and other relevant facts and circumstances of the case. Earl v. Cedar Rapids, 126 Iowa, 361, 106 Am. St. Rep. 361, 102 N. W. 140.

And, where a person falls into a cellar way protruding into a city street some 3 feet, left open on a dark night without any guard or protection around it, it is only necessary for the person injured to show, in order to recover, the exercise of ordinary care and diligence in passing over the street. Kinsley v. Morse, 40 Kan. 577, 20 Pac. 217.

And, where a person walking a city street stepped toward a doorway and stubbed his toe against the step or doorsill and stumbled back and fell into an area in the sidewalk used by the adjoining proprietor, by the permission of the municipality, for the purpose of passing goods into the cellar, which was then open and being used, the municipality is liable to the person injured for negligence in leaving the opening without an adequate guard. Homewood v. Hamilton, 1 Ont. L. Rep. 266.

So, where a cellar way in a street was unguarded in front, but was protected on either side by a coping, and a person was injured by a fall into the cellar way over the coping, the question of the negligence of the city in permitting such cellar way, and of contributory negligence of the person who fell in, is one of fact for the jury, in an action for the injury. Link v. New York, 82 App. Div. 486, 81 N. Y. Supp. 577.

And the city is liable for injuries sustained by a person walking in an alley upon a dark night, who fell into a cellar way therein without negligence upon his part, where the alley was open for public travel, and the cellar way was located in it and had no railing guard or other protection around it, and it was 17 feet 5 inches in length and 5 feet 6 inches in depth. Fletcher v. Ellsworth, 53 Kan. 751, 37 Pac. 115.

And, where an injury resulted from a cellar window occupying a part of a sidewalk, the existence of similar apertures in other parts of the city may be shown in an action for the injury, as bearing upon the manner in which the streets of the city are used, the purpose of the sidewalks, and how far openings in them are obstructions to their proper use; but the fact that similar apertures had existed for a long time and to a great extent would not authorize a finding that such apertures were not actionable obstructions. Bacon v. Boston, 3 Cush. 174.

And, where there was a cellar under a sidewalk; and in the sidewalk were double trapdoors nearly 7 feet long, the sidewalk being about 10 feet 3 inches wide; and the doors were left open; and a person passing along the street fell into the cellar; and no barriers were constructed at the opening; and the ordinary method of using the doors was to lay them flat on the sidewalk; and the city knew of the existence and nature of the doors and the method in which they were built and used,—the negligence of the city in permitting the existence and use of the doors without barriers is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for the injury. Sweeney v. Butte, 15 Mont. 274, 39 Pac. 286.

So, if the construction of a grating over an opening leading to the basement of a building was such as to make it constantly dangerous to public travel upon the walk by its liability to be left out of place, and proper supervision and care on the part of the city authorities would have discovered the danger and guarded against it, the city would be liable for an injury resulting from its displacement. Littlefield v. Norwich, 40 Conn. 406.

And, where excavations are made for admitting light at basement windows, the city should require the owner to place guards as security against possible accidents; and it is negligence in the city to allow them to remain open. Lombard v. Chicago, 4 Biss. 460, Fed. Cas. No. 8,470; Galesburg v. Higley, 61 Ill. 287.

Permission by a city to an abutting owner to use the space under a sidewalk in front of his property with an opening thereto in the walk, and the proper use thereof, however, do not violate any duty owing to the public by the city. Whitty v. Oshkosh, 106 Wis. 87, 81 N. W. 992.

And a municipal corporation cannot be held as a pure matter of law, irrespective of all questions of locality and surroundings, liable for an injury received by a person who falls into an opening made for a stairway, where the entrance only is left open. Franklin v. Harter, 127 Ind. 446, 26 N. E. 882.

And the act of a city in permitting the existence of a stairway leading to a basement in a sidewalk next to and parallel with a building, into which opening a person with defective eyesight fell, the place being lighted and having a rail running parallel with the building along the outside of the opening, leaving 6½ feet of sidewalk beyond and outside of the opening, is not negligence upon the part of the city which will charge it with liability for the injury. Edwards v. Raleigh (N. C.) 63 S. E. 1040.

Nor is it enough to warrant a recovery against a city by a person, who fell into a vault under a sidewalk, which had been left open, and was injured, to prove that the cover was insecurely fastened at the time of the accident, and that, by reason thereof and without fault on her part, she was injured. Kenyon v. Indianapolis, Wilson, Super. Ct. (Ind.) 129.

So, municipal corporations are not bound to maintain railings in front of the numerous basement offices and shops that line their business streets. Beardsley v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 529, 47 Am. Rep. 677.

And, where a stairway descending from a sidewalk to the basement of an abutting building was parallel to the sidewalk, and there was a sufficient barrier on the side thereof, and it did not encroach upon the sidewalk, the city sufficiently performed its duty by maintaining a sufficient barrier between the sidewalk and the stairway on the side thereof, and was not bound to cause a barrier or gate to be maintained at the entrance thereof. Fitzgerald v. Berlin, 51 Wis. 81, 37 Am. Rep. 814, 7 N. W. 836.

So, whether the use of cellar doors opening out on the sidewalk, and leaving them open, is proper and legitimate for the business of the owner, or capricious and unnecessary, and, if legitimate, whether habitually used so negligently as to endanger passers-by, are questions for the jury, in an action for an injury resulting from falling into the cellar. Chapman v. Macon, 55 Ga. 566.

And, where a grating over a coal hole in a sidewalk was hung on hinges and designed to be thrown back against the building when coal was being delivered, and, when so thrown back, was dangerous and liable to inflict injury upon those engaged in that business unless securely fastened; and the appliances furnished by the city for that purpose were inadequate, but many loads of coal had been safely delivered down this hatchway,—the question of the negligence of the city is one for the jury. Galvin v. New York, 112 N. Y. 223, 19 N. E. 675, reversing 22 Jones & S. 295.

Where an injury results from falling into a cellar the door in the sidewalk being left open by the owner of the property, there are two questions for the jury in an action against the city for the injury: First, Is the system adopted by the city in regard to allowing cellars under its sidewalks reasonably calculated to insure the safety of those who travel thereon? and, second, if so, is the city liable in the special case by reason of negligence in the owner, coupled with notice, actual or constructive, to the city? Augusta v. Hafers, 61 Ga. 48, 34 Am. Rep. 95.

The question of the liability of a municipal corporation for injuries to travelers, caused by persons using the space under the street, is treated in a note to State ex rel. Crow v. St. Louis, 61 L.R.A. 583.

(4) Steps.

It would be unreasonable and impracticable to require of cities and towns that they should so construct all their sidewalks that at the junction of rectangular streets the sidewalks should meet upon exactly the same level. Morgan v. Lewiston, 91 Me. 566, 40 Atl. 545; Shippy v. Au Sable, 65 Mich. 495, 32 N. W. 741.

And the general rule has been held to be that the existence of a properly constructed step from a sidewalk to a street crossing is not a defect which will render a city liable for accidents to pedestrians, caused thereby. Miller v. St. Paul, 38 Minn. 134, 36 N. W. 271; Shippy v. Au Sable, supra.

The fact that a sidewalk was higher than an adjoining cross walk does not constitute a defect for which the city is liable, where the alleged defect is a part of a plan adopted which was rendered necessary by the existing conditions. Bigelow v. Kalamazoo, 97 Mich. 121, 56 N. W. 339.

And a municipal corporation cannot be held liable for an injury resulting from a fall caused by the fact that a sidewalk built by an abutting owner was about 4 inches higher than the cross walk to which it joined. Shippy v. Au Sable, supra.

And, where municipal authorities established a uniform grade for the sidewalks of a street; and a property owner put down a concrete pavement in accordance with this grade, which was about 12 inches higher than the old grade of the adjoining pavement; and the municipality adopted as the best plan of relieving the obstruction a step between the two grades of sidewalk; and the arrangement was a satisfactory one and has been continuously used for six months,—the corporation cannot be held liable for an injury to a person who fell on the step. Rotsell v. Warren, 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 283.

So, where, at the junction of two streets, the walk upon one street upon one side and in the middle is from 1 to 2 inches lower than that on the other street, and, upon the extreme outside of the former street walk it is $5\frac{1}{2}$ inches lower than the other walk, the whole width of the walk being about 6 feet, this condition does not constitute a defect within the meaning of the Maine highway statute. Morgan v. Lewiston, 91 Me. 566, 40 Atl. 545.

Where, at the junction of two streets, the sidewalk upon one was higher than that upon the other, making a perpendicular drop of from 6 to 9 inches from the one sidewalk to the other; and this was on one of the most public thoroughfares in the city; and the condition had continued from one to two months; and there was no guard or light to call attention to the inequality, however,—the question of the unsafe condition of the sidewalk, and consequently of negligence on the part of the city in permitting it, is one of fact for a jury. Tabor v. St. Paul, 36 Minn. 188, 30 N. W. 765.

And, where a sidewalk of one street in a city was from 21 inches to 3 feet higher than the sidewalk of another at their intersection; and in passing from one to the other there was a step about half way down, and a man of sixty-two years of age, carrying on his shoulder a heavy basket, while attempting to go down, missed the step and fell, it being dark at the time and the street light having been extinguished,—the questions whether the sidewalk was insufficient or out of repair at the time, and, if so, whether the defect was the cause of the man's injury, are properly submitted to a jury. Berg v. Milwaukee, 83 Wis. 599, 53 N. W. 890.

And, where, at the intersection of two streets, one was somewhat lower than the other, and, for convenience of travelers, a plank was placed over the curb, gutter, or sluice in the lower street to be used as a step between the levels of the two streets, and this plank was permitted to remain unfastened so that, where two persons were walking together, and one stepped upon one end the other end flew up and injured his companion, evidence of the substitution of a stone step for the loose plank shortly afterwards is admissible in an action for the injury, not for the purpose of showing negligence of the municipal corporation, but for the purpose of showing control over the place. Brown v. Towanda, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 378.

So, it has been held that a street crossing of plank, 14 inches above the level of the sidewalk, is a dangerous obstruction. Indianapolis v. Mitchell, 27 Ind. App. 589, 61 N. E. 947.

And that a street crossing consisting of a plank raised from 2 to $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in height above the level of a sidewalk is a dangerous obstruction; and, where the city negligently suffered such an obstruction to remain in one of its public sidewalks and street crossings for an unnecessary period of time, it is liable to one who was injured while passing over the sidewalk and crossing without notice or knowledge of the obstruction. Glantz v. South Bend, 106 Ind. 306, 6 N. E. 632.

So, the use of steps in a sidewalk of a municipal corporation is one of the several permissible means of overcoming a steep grade. Hoyt v. Danbury, 69 Conn. 341, 37 Atl. 1051.

And the building of a step in a sidewalk is not of itself such negligence as will make the municipality liable for injuries to a pedestrian from a fall caused by the step, if the plan adopted is not palpably unsafe, and from the nature of the grade, the municipal authorities deem the step necessary and proper. Teager v. Flemingsburg, 109 Ky. 746, 53 L.R.A. 791, 95 Am. St. Rep. 400, 60 S. W. 718; Clark v. Chicago, 4 Biss. 486, Fed. Cas. No. 2,817.

Whether the use of steps in a sidewalk of a city as a means of overcoming a steep grade is the best means of constructing a particular sidewalk is a question for the municipal authorities to decide; and their decision is not subject to review by the courts. Hoyt v. Danbury, supra.

And, where a stone walk terminated, and the continuation was a dirt walk, and the surface of the stone and the adjoining dirt were not flush at their junction, the surface of the former rising above that of the latter by a distance of about $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in the center and about 5 inches on the outer edge of the walk, the defect is too slight to render the municipal corporation liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Butler v. Oxford, 186 N. Y. 444, 79 N. E. 712.

So, where a sidewalk in a city is constructed with a step at a change of grade, the city is not liable in damages to one who sustains an injury by falling on the step when it is slippery with ice. Chicago v. Bixby, 84 Ill. 82, 25 Am. Rep. 429.

A municipal corporation is liable for an injury caused by an unsafe condition of a sidewalk, consisting of a drop of 7 or 8 inches in height from a new walk to an old one, against which a pedestrian walked and was injured, however, although the defect existed in the plan adopted by the city for the construction of the sidewalk, there being no necessity or reason for such defect. Blyhl v. Waterville, 57 Minn. 115, 47 Am. St. Rep. 596, 58 N. W. 817.

And, where part of a sidewalk on a street is at grade and a part of it is not, requiring a step of 7 inches between them, and this condition has remained for a long time, and, in consequence, a person passing in the night is injured, the city is liable for the injury. Toledo v. Higgins, 12 Ohio C. C. 541.

So, if a city permitted an owner of land abutting upon a street to raise his sidewalk about 6 inches, when another abutting owner immediately adjacent was, owing to the city's negligence, allowed for more than a year, to the knowledge of its officers, to let his sidewalk remain about 6 inches below the regular grade at a place covered by a long shed where there was little or no light, the city is liable for an injury to a traveler caused by the difference in grade of the two sidewalks. Blume v. New Orleans, 104 La. 345, 29 So. 106.

And, where a new sidewalk was constructed, and at the point where the new sidewalk and the old one met the new one was several feet higher than the old one; and there were no guards to prevent persons from walking on the new sidewalk or to prevent their falling therefrom, and no lights to enable persons to see the condition of the sidewalk or to avoid injury; and a person fell from the new sidewalk to the old and was injured,—she is entitled to recover of the city for her injury. Abilene v. Hendricks, 36 Kan. 196, 13 Pac. 121; Hogan v. Chicago, 168 Ill. 551, 48 N. E. 210, reversing 59 Ill. App. 446.

So, three flagstones piled on a sidewalk by an abutting owner in order to make a step to a slight embankment at the inner edge of the sidewalk, which were allowed to remain on the sidewalk for a long period of time, the entire sidewalk at that place being only 3 feet in width and the obstruction extending over 11 inches of the paved walk, leaving only 2 feet and 1 inch between the obstruction and the curb, constituted an obstruction to the street which was negligence on the part of the city to permit. Graham v. New Rochelle, 120 App. Div. 414, 104 N. Y. Supp. 939.

And, where a city had notice of a break in a sidewalk a part of which was elevated and the continuance thereof was on lower ground, and the two parts were connected by a loose plank, and the city permitted it to remain in that condition, and invited the public to pass over it, it was its duty to see that the means adopted for descending from the higher to the lower level of the walk was safe. Hogan v. Chicago, supra.

And, where the authorities of a municipality, in their plan of improvement, made a sidewalk and crosswalk to meet on a level, and they were so used by the public, a private citizen has no right to interfere with such plan in remodeling his sidewalk by creating a step or fall to the cross walk, and such a step is an obstruction which it is the duty of the municipal authorities to remove, and, if they fail to do so after notice, the municipality becomes responsible for the obstruction and for all damages resulting therefrom. Shippy v. Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280, 48 N. W. 584.

So, whether or not a difference of a few inches in height between a concrete sidewalk and an adjoining gravel one is such a defect as to render the municipality liable for injury to a traveler, caused by stumbling over the inequality, is a question of fact for the jury. Watertown v. Greaves, 56 L.R.A. 865, 50 C. C. A. 172, 112 Fed. 183; Graham v. Oxford, 105 Iowa, 705, 75 N. W. 473.

And the construction of a sidewalk with a step for descent of some 12 inches to a continuation thereof on a lower grade, and leaving the same unlighted at night, cannot be said as matter of law not to have been negligence; the question whether or not such construction was negligent is one of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury caused thereby. Pfeifer v. Lake, 37 Ill. App. 367.

And where the defect had existed for such a length of time before an accident occasioned thereby that the municipal corporation should be charged with knowledge of it is a question of fact, and not of law. Graham v. Oxford, supra.

But, where two pieces of sidewalk have, at the point of joining, a difference of 13 inches in the grade, making a clear perpendicular step off without sloping boards or a step; and a person passing along the higher sidewalk steps down to the lower one and falls and is injured,—the question of the negligence of the city in thus constructing the sidewalk is not one for the jury, the defect resulting from the plan of construction. Healy v. Chicago, 131 Ill. App. 183.

Likewise, whether a sidewalk running down a hill, consisting of 4 or 5 steps each elevated 8 inches above the other with no railing on either side, upon which a street lamp gave but a very dim light, was defective so as to charge the city with negligence, is one of fact for a jury. Gutkind v. Elroy, 97 Wis. 649, 73 N. W. 325.

And, where the grade of a street was quite steep; and a step or offset of about 5 inches in height extended across the sidewalk, the street being one on which a great many pedestrians traveled during both day and night; and the step or offset was known to the building inspector and street commissioners; and a person was injured by stepping off of the step or offset while traveling along the walk after dark, there being no light or signal at such place,—it is a question for the jury, in an action against the city for an injury, whether the step or offset in the sidewalk constituted such a defect that the city, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, should have remedied it. Metz v. Butte, 27 Mont. 506, 71 Pac. 761.

(5) Unevenness, inequalities.

"There are slight inequalities in sidewalks, and other trifling defects and obstructions, against which one may possibly strike his foot and fall; but, if the injury might be avoided by the use of such care and caution as every reasonable prudent person ought to exercise for his own safety, the city would not be liable." Indianapolis v. Cook, 99 Ind. 10.

No rule can be laid down as to what unevenness of a sidewalk is dangerous; and it is for the jury in each special case to determine whether the defect complained of was in fact dangerous, or was such as the city or its officers ought to have taken notice of and repaired. Murphy v. Dayton, 7 Ohio N. P. 227.

And a slight deviation of a sidewalk from its original level, caused by the action of the frost in the winter or spring, is not such a defect as to make the municipality liable for injury to a pedestrian injured thereby. Burns v. Bradford, 137 Pa. 361, 11 L.R.A. 726, 20 Atl. 997.

Nor does the existence of an earth sidewalk on a much-traveled city street, with inequalities and depressions so slight as not to obstruct the ordinary use of the walk by pedestrians, but sufficient to permit water to collect in them which freezes in the event of a sudden fall of temperature, afford a sufficient basis for charging the city with negligence, in an action brought against it by a pedestrian who, while passing along the sidewalk, fell upon ice which had formed in depressions and was covered by snow. Hogan v. Watervliet, 42 App. Div. 325, 59 N. Y. Supp. 103.

And a municipal corporation is not chargeable with negligence when an accident happens to a traveler by reason of a slight defect such as a rounded depression in a flag sidewalk, 4 inches deep, 34 inches long, and about 12 inches wide, caused by the wheels of heavily laden trucks, which had worn off the corners of two flagstones where they came together, upon the edge of which depression the person injured stepped and his foot slipped in. Hamilton v. Buffalo, 173 N. Y. 72, 65 N. E. 944, affirming 55 App. Div. 423, 66 N. Y. Supp. 990.

So, the existence in a city sidewalk composed of flagging extending from an abutting building to the curb, of a depression 12 by 6 inches in area and from 2 to 3 inches in depth, caused by a piece of flagging having been broken and then removed or forced into the ground, is not such a defect as will render the city liable to a person who was thrown down in broad daylight by stubbing her toe against the side of the depression which had existed for a period of from four to six months. Getzoff v. New York, 51 App. Div. 450, 64 N. Y. Supp. 636.

And the fact that a brick in a slight depression in a sidewalk became slightly loosened, without getting out of position, is not sufficient to charge the city with liability to a woman who stepped upon the brick, which 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

turned under the pressure of her foot and caused her to fall. Morris v. Philadelphia, 195 Pa. 372, 45 Atl. 1068.

And an inclination of about 1 inch in a foot of a stone leading across a gutter from a sidewalk into the street, and the inclination of the sidewalk of 6 inches in 2 feet immediately adjacent to the stone, is not such a defect in the street as will render the city liable for an injury alleged to have resulted in part therefrom. Cook v. Milwaukee, 27 Wis. 191.

So, evidence that a brick sidewalk had in its surface several depressions covered with ice and varying from $\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 inches in depth, caused by some of the bricks being depressed and some being elevated, there being no sharp corners and the surface of the depressions being smooth, does not warrant a finding, in an action for an injury caused by falling upon such ice, that the way when free from snow and ice was not reasonably safe and convenient for public travel. Newton v. Worcester, 174 Mass. 181, 54 N. E. 521.

And the testimony of witnesses that they had seen elevations of the same size in other sidewalks is not admissible in an action against a city to recover for an injury occasioned by an elevation in a sidewalk. George v. Haverill, 110 Mass. 506.

So, catching one's foot while passing over an incomplete, rough, uneven, sideling, and slippery sidewalk, against a projecting or loose brick, and falling, is an accident which is liable to occur at any place with old and feeble, careless and indifferent, persons; and it is not such an accident as a municipality may be held responsible for, even though the sidewalk is in an imperfect condition. Waggener v. Point Pleasant, 42 W. Va. 798, 26 S. E. 352.

And an apron or cover over a cement sidewalk, placed there in winter when the walk becomes slippery, constructed of pine boards laid lengthwise of the walk and fastened to cleats laid crosswise, the entire thickness being less than 2 inches, and there being no beveled plank leading from the cement to the top of the cover, the ends of the boards being sawed off square, the cleats not coming out flush with the ends, does not constitute an actionable defect in the sidewalk. Kleiner v. Madison, 104 Wis. 339, 80 N. W. 453.

It cannot be held, as a matter of law, however, that it is not negligence for a city to permit inequalities to the extent of 6 inches or more in height, of various portions of a sidewalk on a principal business street, to continue to exist for a period of twelve months. Hartford v. Graves, 8 Kan. App. 677, 57 Pac. 133.

And the fact that an obstruction upon a sidewalk was only from 2 to $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in height above the level of the sidewalk renders it none the less dangerous to one who passes over the sidewalk without notice or knowledge of such obstruction, especially in the nighttime. Glantz v. South Bend, 106 Ind. 306, 6 N. E. 632.

And, where a plank in a sidewalk was broken so that there was a depression of from 2 to 3 inches which was dangerous, and, when stepped on, it would sink down 3 to 4 inches, thus acting as a trip to one unused to stepping on the plank, a question for the jury arises, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom, as to whether the walk was in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel. Urtel v. Flint, 122 Mich. 65, 80 N. W. 991.

And, where a traveler tripped and fell over a broken flagstone a piece of which had been removed so as to leave a depression 6 by 4 inches in surface dimension and about 2 inches deep, and this condition had existed for a long time, sufficient to justify the inference that the city had notice of it and to call for repair before the accident took place, he is entitled to recover of the city for the injury received, where it appears that, prior to the time of the accident, other people had fallen into the hole or tripped over the defect, and that at the time of the accident in question the place was dark, a neighboring street lamp not being lighted, so that after falling it was with difficulty that the hat of the person injured was found. Brewer v. New York, 31 App. Div. 244, 52 N. Y. Supp. 865.

So, where a sidewalk was constructed of 2-inch boards laid crosswise resting on stringers, and the side or edge of one board was laid on top of the one adjoining it, so as to project above the common level and to cause people to stumble and fall, and this condition was allowed to remain for many months, the court, in an action for an injury caused thereby, is justified in submitting the question whether or not the walk was reasonably safe for travel, to the jury. Hill v. Sedalia, 64 Mo. App. 494.

And a plank set edgewise across a sidewalk, and presenting a vertical face 3 inches above the level of the paving, is such an obstruction to public travel upon it that the walk cannot be deemed reasonably safe and convenient, within the meaning of the Maine statute; and the city is liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Moriarty v. Lewiston, 98 Me. 482, 57 Atl. 700.

In the above case Morgan v. Lewiston, 91 Me. 566, 40 Atl. 545, infra IX, d, 6, (o), (4), was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the defect complained of was that the sidewalks at the junction of two streets were not on the same level, the court holding that it would be unreasonable and impracticable to require cities and towns to construct all their sidewalks upon exactly the same level at the junction of rectangular streets.

(6) Holes in cross walks:

Cross walks seem to be regarded as sidewalks, or at least as being within rules of law with reference to municipal liability for obstructions in sidewalks; and the use of the word "sidewalk" in a complaint in an action against a city for an injury received in its streets, instead of the words "cross walk," is not a material variation. Piper v. Spokane, 22 Wash. 147, 60 Pac. 138. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But an ordinance with reference to the width of sidewalks is not admissible in evidence in an action for personal injury caused by slipping on an alleged defectively constructed street crossing. Fairgrieve v. V. Moberly 39 Mo. App. 31.

So, a charter provision constituting the common council of the city commissioners of highways, and authorizing them to use certain funds in defraying the expenses of repairing and keeping in order the streets and highways, etc., casts upon the city the duty of keeping the cross walks which have been constructed in streets or highways under the direction of the city in a safe condition. Hines v. Lockport, 50 N. Y. 238.

It is the duty of a municipal corporation not only to make its gutter crossings safe in the first instance, but to use ordinary care to see that they are kept safe. Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196.

And the existence of a considerable gap in a traveled cross walk at a place where it was totally dark; and the facts that a person endeavoring to pass over it slipped and fell and was injured; and that the gap had been in existence at least three months and was readily noticeable,—tend to establish a breach of duty on the part of the city to keep its streets and sidewalks in a condition of reasonable safety for the use of the public. Maus v. Springfield, 101 Mo. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 634, 14 S. W. 630.

So, the act of a city of leaving a ditch in a street crossing, about 3 feet deep, unguarded and unlighted at night, is negligence for which it is responsible. Mt. Carmel v. Guthridge, 52 Ill. App. 632.

And, leaving a manhole from 1 to 3 feet deep in a public street, almost if not directly in the line of the sidewalk, open at night without guards or lights while it is being repaired and cleaned under the direction and supervision of the city, is an act of gross negligence upon the part of the city, rendering it liable for a resulting injury. Kankakee v. Linden, 38 Ill. App. 657.

So, where a street-railway track in a paved street was removed, and the space which it had occupied was filled with cobblestones and pavement refuse, and, with the action of the elements, it sunk below the level of the remainder of the cross walk, and water cut a channel at one side of the old right of way of the railroad and undermined one end of a flagstone in such a manner as to permit it to project out over the channel so that one passing over the cross walk was liable to step into the channel and slip under the end of the stone tripping and falling, it is a question for the jury, in an action for an injury thus caused, whether the condition of the walk was such as to constitute negligence upon the part of the municipal corporation. Cummings v. New Rochelle, 38 App. Div. 533, 56 N. Y. Supp. 701.

And evidence that a person was injured at night by getting his foot fast in a hole in a plank crossing on a street, which had existed for two weeks or longer upon one of the most frequented streets of the city, while using the crossing as one of the public footways, raises a question for the jury, in an action for the injury, on the question of negligence of the city authorities in having and leaving the crossing in that condition. Dempsey v. Rome, 94 Ga. 420, 20 S. E. 335.

And, where a pedestrian fell into a hole in a street, at a path used as a crossing to a board walk, just outside of the traveled track, made by the removal of a lamp-post and failure to fill the hole, which was about 2½ feet deep and about the same in diameter; and the street, though upon a hillside near the outskirts of the city, was a regularly laid-out street on the city plan, which was established, but poorly lighted,—the question whether the city was negligent is one of fact for the jury. Wall v. Pittsburg, 205 Pa. 48, 54 Atl. 497.

So, whether a displaced stone in a crosswalk which sloped from 2 ⅞ inches to 5 inches at one side and from 4½ to 8 inches on the other side rendered the walk unsafe is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for damages for an injury alleged to have resulted therefrom. Goodfellow v. New York, 100 N. Y. 15, 2 N. E. 402.

And an opening or hole in a footwalk, not being a gutter at a crossing where a break in the continuity of the pavement might be expected, into which one directed by a hand rail was in danger of stepping, into which a person stepped and was injured on a dark and stormy night while following the course indicated by the hand rail, furnishes a case for the jury on the question of negligence on the part of the city. Conroy v. Pittston, 222 Pa. 1, 70 Atl. 944.

And where, at a street crossing, there is a beaten footpath at a point included in a strip which would be covered by the lines of the sidewalk if extended, and a tile drain, which received water from an open ditch on the opposite side of the street, was allowed to discharge it into a continuation of the ditch at a point within the line of the sidewalk if extended, it is a question for the jury, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom, whether the highway at the crossing was in a reasonably safe condition for public travel. Comiskie v. Ypsilanti, 116 Mich. 321, 74 N. W. 487.

So, where a woman's foot was caught by a plank of a street crossing which was raised above the surface of the sidewalk, and she was thrown and injured; and there was a conflict of testimony as to the condition of the sidewalks; and there was testimony tending to show that the defect had existed for ten days or two weeks, and that the crossing was in a thickly inhabited part of the city and much used,—it is the province of the jury, in an action for the injury, to determine the condition of the plank and its height above the walk. Baxter v. Cedar Rapids, 103 Iowa. 599, 72 N. W. 790.

If a street crossing gets out of repair and becomes unsafe and remains so for such a length of time that the municipal authorities, in the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, ought to discover the defect and repair it, however, the corporation is liable for the negligence without actual notice. Aurora v. Bitner, 100 Ind. 396.

And a loose plank in a cross walk, the end of which is raised about 2 inches above the level of the walk, is not such a defect as to prevent the walk from being reasonably safe, or to make it unfit for travel, within the meaning of a statute making it the duty of municipal corporations to keep cross walks in reasonably safe condition for public travel; and a person injured by stumbling against such plank cannot recover of the city. Weisse v. Detroit, 105 Mich. 482, 63 N. W. 423.

And, while a city is under no obligation to construct a crossing over an alley connecting the walks of the street, if it elects to leave such an alley in its natural state it is its duty to keep it free from obstruction; and, if it allows a person to place loose boards there, which, by reason of becoming warped and shifted about, render it dangerous for persons having occasion to cross the alley, it is liable to the same extent that it would have been had it undertaken to construct a crossing and allow it to become out of repair. Springfield v. Tomlinson, 79 Ill. App. 399.

(p) Decay and wear.

The duty of a municipal corporation of keeping its streets and sidewalks, drains, culverts, etc., in a reasonably safe condition does not end with putting them in a safe and sound condition originally. It is required to keep them so to the extent that this can be accomplished by proper and reasonable care and continuing supervision. Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309; Moon v. Ionia, 81 Mich. 635, 46 N. W. 25.

And, where the defect is simple, the city is not relieved from liability by making a futile effort to repair it. Moon v. Ionia, supra.

And a municipal corporation having actual notice of the defective condition of a walk cannot order it to be repaired by someone else and pay no further attention to it, but must, after having actual notice, see that it is repaired in a reasonable time, and put in a reasonably safe condition for travel. Atherton v. Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241, 72 N. W. 208.

And, where, by a city ordinance, the duties of the street supervisor of the city in regard to keeping streets and street crossings in repair are prescribed, and they have taken such structures under their cognizance and control, the neglect on their part to exercise the power given them by the ordinance will make the city liable for any damage resulting from such omission of duty. Champaign v. Patterson, 50 Ill. 61.

So, a municipal corporation is liable for the resulting injury where it negligently permitted a plank walk to remain in a street after the same was decayed and in a dangerous condition, having notice of its danger-condition, where a person using the walk was injured. Lehn v. Brooklyn, 46 N. Y. S. R. 548, 19 N. Y. Supp. 668, affirmed in 143 N. Y. 674, 39 N. E. 21; Washington v. Small, 86 Ind. 462; Evans v. Brookville, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 298.

And evidence, in an action against a city for an injury alleged to have been caused by a defect in a sidewalk, that the sidewalk was, at the place of accident, more or less rotten, and that some of the boards had become loosened, but that there was no manifest danger in attempting to pass over it, raises a question for the jury as to the negligence of the municipality. Allen v. DuBois, 181 Pa. 184, 37 Atl. 195.

And evidence that a sidewalk was old, narrow, made of wood, worn and decayed, and rested on wooden posts several feet high; and that the boards were loose and the sidewalk tipped toward a hole running under it; and that this hole was deep and was filled with water even with the surface of the walk; and that a child fell into the hole and was drowned,—shows a negligent maintenance of the walk by the city, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the death of the child. Benton v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118 S. W. 418.

So, evidence that a sidewalk on which an injury occurred was for some weeks, and probably much longer, in a generally dilapidated condition, the boards loose and gone, and the stringers rotten, is sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff in an action for the injury. Galesburg v. Benedict, 22 Ill. App. 111.

And, where the planks of a sidewalk were laid crosswise on stringers, and, as a pedestrian stepped on one of the planks, it tipped up and caught his other foot and threw him down, the plank being warped and unnailed, and having been so for some time, a verdict for the plaintiff in an action for the injury is warranted, and will not be disturbed. Holloway v. Lockport, 54 Hun, 153, 7 N. Y. Supp. 363; McKinney v. Brown (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 88.

And testimony that a sidewalk was in a rotten, shaky, and bad condition at the time of the injury in question is not objectionable as an expression of opinion. Harrison v. Ayrshire, 123 Iowa, 528, 99 N. W. 132.

So, opinions as to the length of time a certain kind of lumber will last in sidewalks may be given by competent witnesses on the question of negligence of a city in permitting a sidewalk to become rotten. McConnell v. Ossage, 80 Iowa, 293, 8 L.R.A. 778, 45 N. W. 550.

And a civil engineer who has had experience in judging of the soundness of timbers in bridges and such structures may be allowed to give an opinion, in an action against a city for an injury caused by a decayed and defective gutter crossing, whether one of the sleepers in the structure which he had examined had rotted recently, or the decay was of some length of time. Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196.

So, a sidewalk the stringers of which have rotted and sunk into the earth so as to let the boards down on the surface so that they rest on the earth and not on the stringers, and have become partly imbedded in the earth, is per se defective on account of the decayed condition of the boards and of the inevitable uneven displacement of the earth. Williams v. Hannibal, 94 Mo. App. 549, 68 S. W. 380.

Where a sidewalk was elevated above the surface to approach a bridge adjoining an elevated platform and steps to a building fronting the same, the testimony of a witness that he saw a piece of timber which ran from the platform to the sidewalk split, and that as it did so the sidewalk came down with the platform; and several other witnesses testified that stringers supporting the walk next to the platform steps were rotten, and the walk tipped downward toward the building; and another testified that, when replanking the bridge in a prior year, he examined the joist supporting the walk near the platform, and that it had started to rot, and that he thereupon reported it to the city as unfit for use; and much of this evidence was contradicted; and there was affirmative proof that no stringer for which the city was responsible was broken,—an issue is raised for the jury, in an action for the injury resulting therefrom. Leggett v. Watertown, 55 App. Div. 321, 66 N. Y. Supp. 910.

So, a municipal corporation which, in repairing a defective sidewalk, uses unsuitable and unsafe materials, is chargeable with notice of the condition of the walk, and liable to anyone injured thereby while observing ordinary care for his own safety, in consequence of the use of such defective materials. Wheaton v. Hadley, 131 Ill. 640, 23 N. E. 422; Nokomis v. Salter, 61 Ill. App. 150.

And it is negligence upon the part of a city to permit an old sidewalk to remain in a condition of decay, and attempt to repair it by nailing a rotten board back to a rotten stringer. Shelbyville v. Brant, 61 Ill. App. 153.

And a municipal corporation having notice that a sidewalk is out of repair from the decay of the stringers to which the boards are nailed, which attempts to repair the same by the use of old stringers which are so rotten as not to be capable of holding nails, is liable for an injury to a person passing over it, in consequence of the looseness of the boards. Wheaton v. Hadley, 131 Ill. 640, 23 N. E. 422, affirming 30 Ill. App. 564.

And, where the question in an action against a city for damages received on a defective sidewalk was whether repair was made with material which would be reasonably safe when used in making repair of the walk in the way it was repaired, evidence that it was a common practice to make repairs of sidewalks in the way this one was repaired is incompetent, there being no question as to the manner of making the repairs. Moore v. Platteville, 78 Wis. 644, 47 N. W. 1055.

So, evidence, in an action for an injury from an alleged defective sidewalk, that, about two weeks before the accident, the street commissioner and two assistants went over the walk, examined it, and attempted to fix the bad places in it by nailing on the boards; and their attention was called to the stringers, which they found "not right sound," but they thought they would hold the nails and took the chances,—warrants a finding by the jury, in an action for the injury, of negligence upon the part of the city. Sciota v. Norton, 63 Ill. App. 530.

And, where a sidewalk was defective, and repair was made by replacing the defective part with a small plank 4 feet long and 2 inches thick by 4 inches wide, and this broke when stepped upon by a pedestrian and caused her injury, the breaking of the plank, under the pressure of her weight tended strongly to prove that the plank with which the repair was made was a defective one; and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it is evidence tending to show that the defect in the plank might have been discovered by a man with ordinary skill, exercising reasonable care in the selection of the plank for making the repair, so that the question of the negligence of the city in selecting such plank is one of fact for a jury. Moore v. Platteville, supra.

And in such case evidence, in an action against the city for the injury, that a good sound piece of plank of the same thickness and length and supported at the ends would bear up the weight of two heavy men placed on the middle of it, is incompetent and properly rejected. Ibid.

Liability of a street to become defective, however, is not in itself a defect; and a highway cannot be deemed defective merely because, by the ordinary course of the elements, it might be expected to become out of repair and dangerous. Monies v. Lynn, 124 Mass. 165.

But a municipal corporation, in the exercise of care over its streets, should look after the effects arising from the ordinary incidents of the protracted use of a sewer-basin cover in a sidewalk, likely to become dangerous in the course of time. Cassidy v. Poughkeepsie, 71 Hun, 144, 24 N. Y. Supp. 523.

And a city is not relieved from this duty, or from liability to one who sustains a personal injury through its negligence in this respect, by the fact that the appliance may have been originally constructed by lawful authority, and that the municipality was not responsible for the adoption of the plan or the actual construction of the work. Ibid.

And, where a sidewalk had been in a bad condition for a long time, was uneven and some of the bricks sunken, and water flowing from under a fence on the inside formed a pool extending from the middle of the sidewalk to the curb and rendered all of the bricks slippery, a woman who had never been along the street and was using care, and who fell and was injured, is entitled to recover of the city. McDonnell v. Philadelphia, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 672.

So, a traveler on a highway of a city 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

who slips on a portion of a sidewalk consisting of lights made partly of glass set in cement or concrete, the surface of which is smooth and slippery and has grown more so from being walked on, is entitled to go to the jury in an action against the city for the injury, on the question whether there was a defect in the highway which might have been remedied by reasonable care and prudence on the part of the city. Moynihan v. Holyoke, 193 Mass. 26, 78 N. E. 742.

And it is within the discretion of the court, in an action against a city for injuries from a fall caused by slipping on lights forming a part of the sidewalk, to admit or exclude evidence offered by the city to show that the walk was of the usual and ordinary construction for that kind of walk. Ibid.

But, a city is only required to maintain its sidewalks and crossings in a reasonably safe condition; and, where an iron gutter cover that was slightly arched was worn very smooth, and several persons had fallen on it, of which the city had notice, but it was daily used by the public without injury, a party who crossed the same at night and slipped and was injured, there being a slight snow, and the thermometer being below the freezing point, cannot recover for the injury. Lyon v. Logansport (Ind. App.) 32 N. E. 582.

7. Overhanging and falling objects.

(a) Generally.

The duty of a municipal corporation to see that its streets and sidewalks are in such a condition that people may travel upon them in safety, and that there shall be no obstruction to such travel, is not confined entirely to obstructions upon the street or walk, but applies as well to structures or things hanging over them that may make travel unsafe. Larson v. Grand Forks, 3 Dak. 307, 19 N. W. 414; Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561; Hume v. New York, 74 N. Y. 264.

This duty extends upwards indefinitely for the purpose of preservation, safe use, and enjoyment of the streets. Fafayette v. Ashby, 8 Ind. App. 214, 34 N. E. 238, 35 N. E. 516.

And a charter or statutory duty of a municipal corporation to use reasonable diligence to keep its streets and sidewalks in a safe condition, making it liable to those injured by its neglect of such duty, requires it to take reasonable precautions against dangers from overhead as well as under foot. Bohen v. Waseca, 32 Minn. 176, 50 Am. Rep. 564, 19 N. W. 730.

Obstructions entirely above ground may interfere as much with the safe and convenient use of a sidewalk as those upon the surface; and a city is not relieved from liability for an injury to a person in its streets by the fact that the injury arose from a structure high above the surface, not connected with the street or sidewalk, though projecting over it. Grove v. Ft. Wayne, 45 Ind. 429, 15 Am. Rep. 262.

And an object permanently suspended directly over the traveled part of a street or highway is an obstruction to travel if it naturally tends to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, although it is fastened to supports outside of the limits of the street, since such object drives travel from the street over which it is suspended because discreet persons will avoid the risk and danger incident to an attempt to pass under it. Champlin v. Penn Yan, 34 Hun, 33, affirmed in 102 N. Y. 680.

An object suspended over the highway entirely out of the way of travelers, yet dangerous to them by reason of its being insecurely fastened, however, does not render such way defective within the meaning of a statute imposing liability upon a town for injuries by reason of a defective road. Hewison v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 136, 91 Am. Dec. 718.

And a rope stretched across a highway above the ground, and attached at each end to objects which are outside of the limits of the highway, and in temporary use, is not a defect or want of repair in the highway for which a city is liable to a traveler who receives injuries from coming in collision with it while it is in motion from human agency. Barber v. Roxbury, 11 Allen, 318.

(b) Awnings, sheds, etc.

Where a municipal corporation is under duty to use reasonable diligence to keep its streets and sidewalks in safe condition, and liable to those injured by its neglect of such duty, if an awning in a condition dangerous to persons passing beneath it is permitted to overhang a public street, the street is not in a safe condition. Bohen v. Waseca, 32 Minn. 176, 50 Am. Rep. 564, 19 N. W. 730; Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561; Rushville v. Adams, 107 Ind. 475, 57 Am. Rep. 124, 8 N. E. 292.

And, where a wooden awning over a city street is permitted, a duty devolves upon the municipal authorities to exercise reasonable diligence to see that it is adequately secured; and, where an injury results from a defect of construction which might have been ascertained by inspection, or from an accumulation of snow, permitted to remain for such length of time as to warrant an inference of notice to the city officials charged with the duty of keeping the street in repair, the municipal corporation is liable for the injury. Bieling v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 98, 24 N. E. 389.

So, an awning consisting of a permanent roofing of boards over an entire sidewalk, resting against an abutting building and supported on the outside by wooden posts bedded in the ground near the curbstones, thus converting that portion of the street into a covered way, the structure being made for private purposes, if unauthorized, is an encroachment upon the public street and a nuisance, especially if constructed so negligently as to be dangerous to persons passing under it. Hume v. New York, 74 N. Y. 264.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And the structure may properly be treated as a defect in the street. Ibid.

And the fact that an awning placed over a sidewalk did not fall until after the lapse of seven years is not, as matter of law, conclusive evidence that it was properly constructed, or that its fall was not attributable to its defective support; these are questions for the determination of the jury in an action for an injury resulting from the fall of the awning. Ibid.

And, where a person was injured by the falling of a wooden shed or awning extending over a sidewalk, the liability of the owner of the shed therefor arises from his negligent conduct in erecting and maintaining the structure over the sidewalk, and the liability of the city therefor arises from its negligence in not keeping its sidewalks in a safe condition; and the person injured has a right of action against either the owner, or the city, or both. Byne v. Americus (Ga. App.) 64 S. E. 285.

So, if an insecure awning is erected over a sidewalk without authority from the city and without approval or direction of the street commissioner, it is an unlawful erection in the public streets by an individual for his private purposes, which it is the duty of the officers of the city to cause to be removed, after having actual or implied notice of its existence. Hume v. New York, supra.

And, if an awning is erected over a sidewalk; and the ordinance requires that such erection shall be made under the direction of the street commissioner; and, under the direction of that officer, or through his neglect to supervise it, it is constructed in a negligent and insecure manner and injury to an individual ensues,—the city is liable for such negligence. Ibid.

And this liability exists even though the structure is not made by the authority of the city, or under the supervision of any of its officers. Ibid.

Nor is a city absolved from liability for negligently permitting a dangerous awning to overhang a street by the fact that the council has failed to pass an appropriate ordinance for the removal and abatement of nuisances, obstructions, or encroachments upon the streets, or to prevent any person from obstructing sidewalks as it is authorized to do by charter, since the absence of such ordinances does not limit its power and duty to exercise a general care, supervision, and control over the streets. Bohen v. Waseca, supra.

So, a wooden shed or awning which extends from a building abutting on a street to the outer edge of the sidewalk, supported by four wooden posts set in the sidewalk at the edge of the curbstone, and secured to the building by nails, one of the posts of which is so placed that it is struck and broken by a truck in the street, is an improper use of the street; and if the city authorizes it, it is guilty of maintaining a nuisance so long as the obstruction continues; and, if it does not authorize it, it is guilty of permitting a nuisance where it has existed so long that it was bound to take notice of it. Mansfield v. New York, 119 App. Div. 199, 104 N. Y. Supp. 386.

And where, in such case, the awning was constructed some sixteen or seventeen years prior to the injury in question; and since then substantially no repairs had been put upon it except to replace a broken post; and the post the breaking of which caused the injury in question was so far decayed that it would crumble when picked up,—the jury, in an action for the injury, would be justified in finding that the city had not performed its duty in that it had failed to make an inspection of the condition of the post, and that had it done so it would have discovered the defect. Ibid.

And, where an action is brought against a municipality for personal injuries resulting from a negligent failure to keep its sidewalks reasonably safe from an insecure overhanging shed, which it was its duty to have inspected, there is no error in refusing to charge that the same duty rested upon the plaintiff and defendant, and that any defects in the shed which would have been notice to the defendant would also have been notice to the plaintiff. Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785, 48 S. E. 318.

So, where an awning erected over a fruit stand is thrown down by a passing wagon of a third person, and a person is injured thereby, the city is liable for the injury though the fruit stand and awning were lawfully in the street, where the awning, either in its material or in its construction or maintenance, was of such a character as to be a menace and dangerous in itself to persons using the public highway, and was suffered to remain on the street for an unreasonable time after notice or knowledge thereof had come to the city, either express or implied. Jarrell v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 454, 56 Atl. 379.

And, where a wooden awning was constructed over a sidewalk upon a street in the usual manner by competent mechanics with timbers of proper form and size; and, four months prior to the accident in question, the awning was injured by a fire engine running against it, and was repaired by a competent mechanic, who did what he supposed necessary to make it safe; and, a day or two before the accident, there was an unusually heavy fall of snow, and a heavy body of snow was allowed to remain upon the awning, and that part of the awning which had been repaired gave way and fell upon and injured a person,—the question whether the fall of the awning was occasioned by a slight defect, not discoverable, resulting from the injury to it and the unusual quantity of snow upon it, or whether or not the city was negligent, is one of fact for the jury. Hume v. New York, 47 N. Y. 639.

So, a city is liable under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 25, § 22, devolving upon cities the duty to keep all highways in repair so that the same shall be safe and convenient for travelers, to a person who receives an injury by the falling of an awning projecting over the sidewalk of a street, where the awning was dangerous to travelers for a space of twenty-four hours before the injury. Drake v. Lowell, 13 Met. 292; Day v. Milford, 5 Allen, 98.

But, where a stand in a street was covered by an awning; and the stand was located in the street lawfully and pursuant to an ordinance authorizing it; and the awning was a reasonably safe one for the place and purpose; and it was thrown down by a passing wagon of a third person, and a person was injured thereby,—the city is not liable for such injury. Jarrell v. Wilmington, supra.

Nor is a platform slightly narrower than the sidewalk, projecting out over the sidewalk on the level of the second floor of an abutting building, which is used to store baled hay and straw, the platform being used in loading and unloading the bales from wagons in the street below, a nuisance and an obstruction in itself to the street, which will impose a liability upon the city for permitting it to remain and be used for such purpose; since the municipality has the right to presume that it will be properly used. Parmenter v. Marion, 113 Iowa, 297, 85 N. W. 90.

Whether an awning erected in a street by permission was dangerous in itself, so as to render the city liable for an injury resulting therefrom, or was a reasonably safe and proper one for the place and purpose, due regard being had to the safety of people using the highway, is a question of fact for the jury, to be determined from all the evidence, in an action for damages for an injury caused by the awning. Jarrell v. Wilmington, supra.

(c) Signs, billboards, etc.

The rule of liability of a city for injuries resulting from obstructions in its streets is not confined to cases of obstructions upon the surface of the street; an overhead sign or other object may be as dangerous as an obstruction upon the surface. Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561.

And the measure of a city's duty with respect to signs attached to abutting property and hanging over a street or a sidewalk, which became unsafe, is the exercise of reasonable care. Leary v. Yonkers, 95 App. Div. 126, 88 N. Y. Supp. 829.

And, where an occupant of premises abutting on a city street suspended a business sign from an iron rod extending from the building, so that it hung over the middle of the sidewalk and about 13 feet above it; and the city allowed the sign to remain in that position, after receiving notice, or after it should have known, that the sign had become unsafe,—it is liable for personal injuries sustained by a pedestrian in consequence of the sign falling upon him. Ibid.

So, a transparency to announce a show in a building, fastened at one end to the building and at the other supported temporarily by a pole resting on the sidewalk of a street, the pole being so insecurely put up that it is likely to fall and injure persons passing on the sidewalk, constitutes a defect in the street within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute, so that the city is liable for injuries caused by the fall of the pole. West v. Lynn, 110 Mass. 514.

And, where an advertising banner was suspended directly over the traveled part of a street by means of ropes attached to the chimneys of stores on opposite sides of the street, and stayed at the bottom by guy ropes, one fastened to an awning post and one to a window sill of a store, which was an object likely to frighten horses ordinarily gentle and well trained, at which a horse took fright, became unmanageable, upset the buggy, and injured a passenger, the city is liable therefor, where the board of trustees had knowledge that the banner was so suspended over the street. Champlin v. Penn Yan, 34 Hun, 33, affirmed in 102 N. Y. 680.

So, an improperly constructed billboard standing wholly in a street between the sidewalk and the abutting property is a defect in the sidewalk, within the meaning of a statutory provision that no action shall be brought against a municipal corporation on account of injuries resulting from defective streets or sidewalks after six months from the date of the injury, unless written notice of such injury is served on the corporation within ninety days after its occurrence. Bliven v. Sioux City, 85 Iowa, 346, 52 N. W. 246.

And a city is chargeable with knowledge of the existence and use of a large and heavy billboard at the entrance of an opera house near the sidewalk, and of the danger of its being blown over by the wind when it has been so used for four or five months. Cason v. Ottumwa, 102 Iowa, 99, 71 N. W. 192.

So, where a billboard beside a street was blown over and fell upon a passer-by, evidence, in an action against the city for the injury, as to the places where it had been kept at different times, is admissible to show when such board was used, and that it had been used for such time before the accident that the city was chargeable with notice of its use. Ibid.

And evidence that a billboard standing on a sidewalk was 4 by 8 feet in size and weighed 140 pounds; and that when not in actual use it was so placed that the top rested against the side wall of the building while the bottom rested a few inches from it on the sidewalk; and that it was not fastened in any way; and that it had been so used and kept for such a length of time that the city was chargeable with knowledge of it,—is sufficient to support a verdict finding the city guilty of negligence in allowing it thus to stand on the sidewalk. Ibid.

So, evidence tending to show that a billboard which a city had permitted to be erected and maintained close to or upon a sidewalk, and which blew over and injured a traveler, was not securely braced at the time; and that such condition had existed for some twelve months prior thereto,—is admissible in an action against the city for the injury. Bemis v. Omaha (Neb.) 116 N. W. 31.

Where a billboard is placed in a portion of the street not generally used by the public, and it is not an obstruction and does not interfere with the ordinary use of the street or sidewalk near it, and is constructed in a substantial manner so as to be safe under ordinary circumstances, however, and it is blown over by an extraordinary and unprecedented wind, and a person is injured thereby, the city cannot be held responsible for the injury. Oak Harbor v. Kallagher, 52 Ohio St. 183, 39 N. E. 144.

And, where a billboard erected near or upon a street by permission of the city was blown over and injured a traveler; and the witnesses in behalf of the plaintiff in an action for the injury testified that the character of the storm which blew the billboard over was extraordinary and unprecedented, and others in behalf of the defendant testified that the storm was not worse than had occurred through various years, and that in preceding years the winds had been as high and variable as the one that overturned the billboard,—the court will not say as matter of law that reasonable men might not differ as to whether or not the wind storm was of such a character that the city, in the exercise of ordinary care, would not be bound to anticipate and guard against it; this should be left to the jury. Bemis v. Omaha, supra.

And notice of the dangerous condition of a sign suspended over a sidewalk will not be imputed to the city, in an action for an injury caused thereby, because the dangerous condition had existed for twelve or fourteen months, unless the servants of the city should, in the ordinary exercise of their duties, have discovered that fact. Leary v. Yonkers, 95 App. Div. 126, 88 N. Y. Supp. 829.

So, a municipal corporation is not liable for an injury sustained by a traveler on a highway by the fall from an adjacent building of a sign insecurely fastened, under a statute requiring towns to keep highways in good repair. Taylor v. Peckham, 8 R. I. 349, 91 Am. Dec. 235, 5 Am. Rep. 578.

And, where a flag was suspended by private individuals across a public street of a city with iron weights at the lower corners, and one of such weights became detached by the motion of the flag in the wind, and fell upon and injured a traveler in the highway, who was in the exercise of reasonable care, the city is not liable therefor under a duty imposed upon it by law to keep the street in good and sufficient repair. Hewison v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 136, 91 Am. Dec. 718.

Nor is a municipal corporation liable for injuries to a traveler upon a sidewalk through the fall of a billboard insecurely placed by an abutting owner upon his own property near the edge of the street, under a statute requiring the municipal corporation to keep its streets reasonably safe and fit for travel. Temby v. Ishpeming, 140 Mich. 146, 69 L.R.A. 618, 112 Am. St. Rep. 392, 103 Atl. 588.

And a city is not liable for an injury received by a traveler on a sidewalk through the falling of a sign suspended and projecting over the sidewalk, which was attached to the building by the occupant for purposes relating exclusively to his occupancy, although the city had notice of the position and insecurity of the sign and its fastenings. Jones v. Boston, 104 Mass. 75, 6 Am. Rep. 194.

(d) Electric wires, appliances, etc.

A municipal corporation may be held to the same degree of responsibility with regard to fallen or hanging electric wires obstructing a street and likely to come in contact with a traveler that is imposed upon it with reference to awnings and other similar encumbrances on a street. Fox v. Manchester, 183 N. Y. 141, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 474, 75 N. E. 1116.

It is the duty of a municipal corporation to keep its electric wires along its streets in such condition as not to interrupt or endanger public travel. Colbourn v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 443, 56 Atl. 605.

And, if it is guilty of negligence in permitting one of its electric wires to lie on the ground in a street, it is liable to a traveler who, without fault, comes in contact with it and sustains injury thereby. Emporia v. White, 74 Kan. 804, 86 Pac. 295.

A city, or borough, or township may not with impunity leave a highly dangerous and insidious obstruction, such as a heavily charged and exposed electric wire, on any part of the public highway, or so near to it that a traveler, accidentally or intentionally deviating a few feet from the beaten track, may encounter it to the risk of his life. Emery v. Philadelphia, 208 Pa. 492, 57 Atl. 977; McKim v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 243, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 506, 66 Atl. 340.

And, where an electric wire is broken down and suspended in a street by reason of sleet adhering to it, if, after notice of the dangerous condition thereof, the city does not within a reasonable time remove or repair the same, or take proper precaution to notify travelers, or protect them from the danger, it is guilty of negligence, and liable for resulting injuries. Colbourn v. Wilmington, supra.

Nor is liability of a city for neglect of its duty to exercise care and supervision over electric wires suspended over its streets lessened by the fact that individuals or corporations are subjected to a like duty and liability. Mooney v. Luzerne, 186 Pa. 161, 40 L.R.A. 811, 40 Atl. 311.

So, evidence that wires were put up by a city without sufficient guards to protect them, among the trees of an avenue, where they were liable, by the swaying of the limbs, to be detached from the poles and come in contact with wires carrying deadly currents of electricity below, when a parallel and safer line could have been selected and used without difficulty; and that it permitted unused wires, after they had been abandoned, to fall into the street time and again 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

to the obvious danger of persons on the street,—is sufficient to go to the jury, in an action for a resulting injury, on the question of the city's negligence. Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131.

And, though a city policeman is a mere peace officer of the state, and not an agent of the municipality, competent, in the absence of a statute or ordinance, to charge the latter with responsibility for his negligence in failing properly to remove dangerous obstructions to street travel, or guard the public against them, yet, if the city negligently allows a broken, suspended electric wire to remain upon the sidewalk after falling down, it is liable for injuries caused by the negligent act of a policeman in so moving the wire as to make it a conductor of electric current from above, and in failing to guard or warn passers-by against it, not because of the policeman's negligent performance of a legally imposed duty, but because of its negligence in allowing the wire to remain in a condition exposing the public to the hazard of its being so misplaced, or meddled with as to do harm. Kansas City v. Gilbert, 65 Kan. 469, 70 Pac. 350.

So, if a telephone company, in the operation of its lines, uses defective wires which frequently break and expose persons and horses passing upon the street to danger; and the city, with knowledge of such use, neglects to have it discontinued,—the city is liable for a resulting injury. Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561.

And, where a telephone wire was broken during a storm, and negligently allowed to remain for four months suspended from a tree overhanging a street, and the municipality had notice thereof, both the telephone company owning the wire and the municipality are liable for an injury occasioned thereby to a person using the street. District of Columbia v. Dempsey, 13 App. D. C. 533.

So, neglect of municipal authorities for eight days to remove from a business street obstructions consisting of telephone wires which had broken because of water thrown upon them during a fire and freezing, and which had fallen upon the sidewalk and street, justifies a finding, in an action for a resulting injury, that the city was guilty of negligence. Nichols v. Minneapolis, 33 Minn. 430, 53 Am. Rep. 56, 23 N. W. 868.

And a telegraph wire which sloped down from a house to which it was fastened and lay across the highway within a foot of the ground, which caused an injury to a traveler, was a defect in the highway rendering the town liable for the injury if it had, or ought to have had, notice thereof. Hayes v. Hyde Park, 153 Mass. 514, 12 L.R.A. 249, 27 N. E. 522.

And negligence of a city, causing the death of a person by contact with an abandoned telephone wire, is a question for the jury, where the wire had been unused for several months, crossing a charged electric wire in close proximity thereto, and, after sagging so as to interfere with public travel, was cut by a member of the borough council and wrapped around a post within easy reaching distance of pedestrians, and with one end resting on the ground or in the water. Mooney v. Luzerne, supra.

So, where an electric light is upon a public street of a city, the city is responsible for its presence there, and is bound to use care commensurate with its dangerous character, to protect people passing on the street. Schmidt v. Chicago, 107 Ill. App. 64.

And the act of a city of permitting an electric lamp to be within reach of passers-by on a sidewalk, improperly insulated and without protection, is gross negligence; and, where a person is killed by such lamp, the question whether or not this negligence is the proximate cause of the death is one of fact for the jury, in an action against the city for the injury. Ibid.

Nor is the rule that a municipal corporation is liable for an injury resulting from leaving a heavily charged and exposed electric wire in a public highway altered or affected by the fact that the wire was owned or used by the city as a part of its police instruments. Emery v. Philadelphia, 208 Pa. 492, 57 Atl. 977.

And that a municipal corporation operated an electric-light plant in a public capacity is no answer to a claim of liability on its part for permitting uninsulated wires to obstruct its public streets. Palestine v. Siler, 225 Ill. 630, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 205, 80 N. E. 345.

Nor need it be shown, to render a municipal corporation liable for injuries to a person walking on a sidewalk, caused by a live electric wire stretched across the walk, that he necessarily came in contact with it. Ibid.

And the liability of a city for the killing of a person by a heavily charged and exposed electric wire used by the police department of the city is not affected or relieved by the fact that the injury occurred on the side of the road of which 16 feet was macadamized in the middle, and that, if the deceased had kept in the macadamized portion of the road, he would not have been injured. Emery v. Philadelphia, supra.

A city is not responsible, however, for an injury resulting from the breaking or suspension of an electric wire, the property of the city, which was suspended in a street, by reason of sleet adhering to it, and without any neglect or fault upon the part of the city, since such breaking would be regarded as what is called the "act of God." Colbourn v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 443, 56 Atl. 605.

And, where a telephone wire lay across an electric-light wire, and the insulation on the wires had worn away, and the telephone wire hung down from a tree to the ditch between the sidewalk and the carriage way, and a person came in contact with it and was injured, the negligence of the municipal corporation in permitting the wire to exist in that shape is a question for the 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

jury, to be determined with reference to the length of time the wire had been hanging down, whether the village authorities knew or should have known of its condition, and also whether it was likely to be dangerous because of the place at which it was hanging. Fox v. Manchester, 183 N. Y. 141, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 474, 75 N. E. 1116.

But a municipal corporation is not under the duty to inspect the insulation of electric wires, the position in which they are strung, and similar matters involving technical knowledge, except in a case of obvious danger or exceptional occurrence. Ibid.

In the above case Twist v. Rochester, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the line of the wire was maintained and used by the defendant, and the defendant's liability was predicated, not on the failure of its duty as a municipality to keep its streets safe, but on its negligence as the owner and operator of a telephone line.

(c) Trees, poles, etc.

Since trees in streets will necessarily decay and become dangerous to human life, the duty devolves upon the municipality to make tests and examinations, using reasonable diligence to ascertain whether they are safe or not; and a failure to make tests may be taken as a circumstance upon the subject of the city's negligence, in an action for an injury caused by a tree falling in a street. McGarey v. New York, 89 App. Div. 500, 85 N. Y. Supp. 861.

And, where a tree growing on a sidewalk fell and killed a traveler; and, after the tree fell, it was apparent that it was rotten from the roots up, to a dangerous degree; and there was a conflict of evidence as to whether there was any exterior sign of rottenness when the tree was standing,—it is a question for the jury as to whether the city should or should not have done something, even to the cutting down of the tree, to prevent the danger. Vosper v. New York, 17 Jones & S. 296.

So, evidence that a limb of a tree in a street, which fell upon and injured a traveler, was 3 inches in diameter and from 3 to 4 feet long, and was without branches, and was decayed all through and covered with moss; and that the tree was rotten at the point where the break occurred; and that branches had fallen from the tree during the month previous to the accident,—justifies a verdict for the plaintiff in an action against the city for the injury. McGarey v. New York, supra.

And, while a municipal corporation has the right to cut down and remove shade trees in the street when to do so may be regarded by its officers as necessary or expedient, in so doing it must take such precautions as will prevent unnecessary or unreasonable danger to persons using the streets for the purpose for which they are intended; and it may be held liable for an injury to a traveler upon whom a tree, being cut down by order of the municipal authorities, fell where there were no barriers in the streets to give warning. Ward v. District of Columbia, 24 App. D. C. 524.

But, where the top of a tree was cut off to enable an elevated railway to pass over it, and the remaining stump became decayed and was thrown down by a blow from a heavy truck, and a person was injured thereby, the city cannot be held liable for the injury if the appearance and condition of the tree were not such as to indicate insecurity to persons of ordinary observation, care, and prudence; the duty of the city in respect to the tree being reasonable care and prudence. Gubasko v. New York, 14 Daly, 559, 1 N. Y. Supp. 215.

So, under a statute giving leave and power to highway surveyors, with reference to shade trees in a highway, to apply to the proper tribunal for adjudication that they shall be removed, if the superintendent of streets of a city, upon being notified that a shade tree standing in a street is unsound and dangerous, does not proceed to obtain authority to remove it, or take due precaution against the danger, the city will be liable to a traveler who, while in the exercise of due care, is injured by its fall. Chase v. Lowell, 151 Mass. 422, 24 N. E. 212.

And a city the charter of which gives the common council power to make by-laws for the regulation and protection of trees in the public squares and streets, and the common council of which passed a by-law imposing a fine on any person who should cut or otherwise injure any shade tree in any public square or street, without special license, is liable to a person injured while passing under a shade tree, by being struck by a dead limb which fell from the tree, which the city had negligently allowed to remain upon the tree. Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1.

So, a city is liable, under its duty to keep its streets in good condition, for injury to one who, without contributory negligence, was driving a wagon along the street, and was thrown therefrom by coming in contact with a large limb of a tree projecting over the street dangerously low. Louisville v. Michels, 114 Ky. 551, 71 S. W. 511.

And the fact that the person injured in such case was a servant of the city, driving a patrol wagon, does not impose on him the duty, in an action against the city for the negligence, to negative contributory negligence by averring in his petition that he did not know the condition of the street, it being no part of his duty to examine the streets and report their condition. Ibid.

So, a municipality may be held to the same degree of responsibility with regard to electric-light poles, telegraph poles, and the like that is imposed upon it with reference to awnings, gratings, and similar encumbrances on the street. Fox v. Manchester, 183 N. Y. 141, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 474, 75 N. E. 1116.

And it is the duty of a municipal corporation to remove a pole which had been erected in a street by citizens years before and had become rotten; and, where such a pole falls and injures a person lawfully in the street, the municipality is liable for the injury whether the neglect was wilful or not. Norristown v. Moyer, 67 Pa. 355.

And its liability is not affected by the fact that the pole was in such a part of the road as not to obstruct travel. Ibid.

Nor may a city authorize the maintenance of telephone poles in a street which are needlessly projected from the sidewalk over the roadway at such a height as to prevent the free passage of ordinary vehicles near the curb. Fisher v. Mt. Vernon, 41 App. Div. 293, 58 N. Y. Supp. 499.

And evidence, in an action against a city for damages for personal injuries sustained by a collision with such a pole, that the pole was erected by a telephone company with the sanction of the city; and that it was 8 inches inside of the curb line at its base; and that for more than a year it had been permitted from a point 7½ or 8 feet above the street to overhang the driveway, the construction of which was such as to render it proper for travelers to use all parts of the driveway up to the curb,—is sufficient to go to the jury on the question whether the position of the pole was such as to make the highway unsafe for public travel. Ibid.

(f) Other objects or structures in and over streets generally.

A municipal corporation which permits the stringing of a wire across a public street for the giving of an acrobatic performance is liable to a pedestrian upon the street for injuries caused by being struck by a performer who falls from the wire while engaged in his performance, where the duty is imposed upon the municipality, by statute, of keeping its streets free from nuisances. Wheeler v. Ft. Dodge, 131 Iowa, 566, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 146, 108 N. W. 1057.

And a wire stretched from a building on one side of a public street downward across the street until one end terminates near the ground, down which a performer is to slide while purporting to be supported only by her teeth, is, when considered in connection with such performance, a public nuisance which the municipality cannot authorize. Ibid.

And, where an electric light company licensed to use a street erected a pole therein, and, to keep it in position, attached a wire from the top thereof across the street, which was fastened to a decayed and unsafe tree outside and beyond the street, the city, having actual notice or knowledge of the negligence and carelessness of the company in fastening the wire to an insecure and decayed tree in an unsafe manner, is under the duty to exercise at least reasonable diligence in having the wire removed, or safely secured; and, where the decayed tree fell, and the wire was thereby loosened so that it lay across the street about 8 inches above the sidewalk, and injuries were sustained by a person from tripping thereon, the city may be held liable for the injury, though it had no notice of the falling of the tree and of the presence of the wire in its position after the fall. Lafayette v. Ashby, 8 Ind. App. 214, 34 N. E. 238, 35 N. E. 516.

So, where a street lamp in a municipal electric-light plant in a city was let down so that it was only a few feet from the ground, and the employee, after cleaning it and preparing it for future service, left it down and went some distance away, when a person on horseback was caught by the wires holding the lamp and injured, the question of the negligence of the city and the contributory negligence of the person injured is one of fact for a jury. Mickey v. Indianola (Iowa) 114 N. W. 1072.

And whether a wire stretched along the outer edge of a sidewalk about 4 feet from the ground and fastened by two poles, by contact with which a person was injured, was an obstruction to the safe use of the street, is a question of fact for the jury to determine, in an action for the injury, under proper instructions from the court. Augusta v. Tharpe, 113 Ga. 152, 38 S. E. 389.

And so is the question whether a wire attached to a stringer at the outer edge of a sidewalk, or to stakes driven in the street close to the sidewalk and extending along the sidewalk to the top of a fruit booth 6 feet higher than the sidewalk and 8 feet from the place where the wire is attached to the stakes or sidewalk, is an obstruction on the sidewalk. Johnson v. Fargo, 15 N. D. 525, 108 N. W. 243.

So, where a railroad trestle which passed over a public street in a city was always so low that it necessarily impaired the usefulness of the street; and the city permitted such trestle to be built and maintained; and the injury in question resulted from the insufficiency of the height of such trestle above the street,—the whole question of the responsibility of the railroad company and of the city, and of their negligence in respect to the trestle and street, was properly left to the jury in an action for the injury. Ft. Scott v. Peck, 5 Kan. App. 593, 49 Pac. 111.

And, though a railroad bridge over a city street does not constitute a defect for which the city is liable, the act of the city in raising the surface of the street under the bridge, thereby rendering the way defective in view of the height of the bridge over it, constitutes a defect for which the city will be liable. Talbot v. Taunton, 140 Mass. 552, 5 N. E. 616.

So, where a water tank was erected by a private citizen in a street, and a person, while engaged in work near by, was sitting in the shade of the tank engaged in sharpening a saw as an incident of the work in which he was engaged, and, by the breaking of a decayed sill, which was not observable, the tank fell upon him and killed him, it was for the jury, in an action against the city for the killing, to pass upon the question of the city's negligence and the contributory negligence of the person killed. Nesbitt v. Greenville, 69 Miss. 22, 30 Am. St. Rep. 521, 10 So. 452.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(g) Objects and structures adjacent to streets.

The duty of a city to keep the streets and sidewalks in such a condition that persons passing over them or along them may do so with safety and convenience applies to imperfectly constructed and insecure structures, not on the street, but standing so near it as to be liable to fall upon it. Langan v. Atchison, 35 Kan. 318, 57 Am. Rep. 165, 11 Pac. 38.

And, where a billboard was constructed on private property near a sidewalk, and it became insecure and was blown over into the street by the wind, and a person was injured thereby, the city cannot escape liability for the injury on the ground that the billboard was private property on private property, and used for private purposes only. Ibid.

In the above case, Taylor v. Peckham, 8 R. I. 349, 5 Am. Rep. 578, 91 Am. Dec. 235, supra; IX., d, 7, (c); Hixon v. Lowell, 13 Gray, 59, infra; and Jones v. Boston, 104 Mass. 75, 6 Am. Rep. 194, supra, IX., d, 7, (c),—were distinguished upon the ground that in those cases the alleged liability was one created by statute alone, and depended upon the construction of the language of the statute.

So, a cornice on a building, projecting over the sidewalk and constructed in such manner as to be dangerous and liable to fall, is a nuisance interfering with the safe use of the sidewalk, and may be abated by the city; and, if the city fails to do so, and permits the building to be completed with the projecting cornice, and fails to take steps to guard the public against the danger of passing under it, it is liable for an injury resulting from its fall upon a passerby. Grove v. Ft. Wayne, 45 Ind. 429, 15 Am. Rep. 262.

And a building beside a street the walls of which are unsafe and insecure and liable to fall, and which is dangerous to passers-by on the sidewalk, is a public nuisance for which the city is responsible. Pearson v. Birmingham (Ala.) 47 So. 80.

So, a crumbling brick wall left, after the burning of a house, in an insecure condition and liable to fall upon the sidewalk, should be pulled down and removed by the city authorities although it is not actually in the street; and for their failure to do so they will be liable for resulting damages. Parker v. Macon, 39 Ga. 725, 99 Am. Dec. 486.

And, where a city authorized by its charter to declare and abate nuisances had, by general ordinance, declared all buildings and structures which were dangerous to the public to be nuisances; and, after becoming aware of the dangerous condition of a decayed wall situated so near to a street as to imperil the lives of persons passing by on the street, it neglected to cause its removal, and a child was crushed to death by the falling of the wall,—the city is liable though the wall stood on private property and the child at the time of the fall was not in the street, but was on private property, though within a foot of the street. Kiley v. Kansas City, 69 Mo. 102, 33 Am. Rep. 491.

To subject a city to an action for damages occasioned by insecure projections from buildings adjacent to a public street, but so far elevated above the sidewalk as not to interfere with the ordinary use of the same by a traveler, however, there must have been a defect or want of repair in the projection, of such a nature that rendered its continuance dangerous to the public. Drake v. Lowell, 13 Met. 292.

And, if a brick wall left, after the burning of a house, beside a sidewalk, was firm and solid, and did not under any ordinary circumstances endanger any person passing by; and it was thrown down by a tempest or other act of God; and a person was injured thereby,—the city is not liable for the injury. Parker v. Macon, supra.

And it has been held that a city is not liable for injury to the property of a citizen, caused by the falling of a wall left standing after a building which belonged to a private owner was burned, although it had been notified of the fact that the wall was dangerous. Anderson v. East, 117 Ind. 126, 2 L.R.A. 712, 10 Am. St. Rep. 35, 19 N. E. 726.

So, the power conferred by a city charter authorizing its common council to pass ordinances for the razing or demolishing of buildings which, by reason of fire, may become dangerous, is simply one of local legislation; and the failure to exercise it does not make the city liable for injuries caused by the falling of the wall of a building which had become dangerous by reason of a fire. Cain v. Syracuse, 95 N. Y. 83, affirming 29 Hun, 105.

And, where a city charter gives to the common council power to compel by resolution the owners or occupants of any wall or building within the city which may be in a ruinous or unsafe condition to render the same safe, or to take down or remove the same, and to require summary removal or abatement of all nuisances; and a penalty is imposed for the violation of such resolution; and a dangerous wall in the city did not front upon the street, but was upon the line between the lot on which the building stood and an adjoining lot,—an omission upon the part of the common council to pass a specific resolution in regard to the wall, at least in the absence of evidence that that body had notice of its dangerous character, does not render the city liable for an injury caused by the falling of the wall. Ibid.

So, where there is no structure, such as, if inconsistent with the safety of travelers, would be an encroachment upon the street, and the way itself is properly constructed, the descent of snow or water from the roof of a building, whether sudden or gradual, causing an injury, does not give a right of action against the town or city to recover compensation therefor. Hixon v. Lowell, supra.

And this is so although it has so overhung the highway for more than twenty four hours before the accident. Ibid.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the above case, it was said that in Drake v. Lowell, 13 Met. 292, supra, IX., d. 7, (b), one of the limits of reasonable interpretation was reached.

Nor is a city bound from time to time to enter the premises of the owners or occupants of lands along the streets, and make close examination of signs or other projections extending over the highway, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they are in a safe condition. Leary v. Yonkers, 95 App. Div. 126, 88 N. Y. Supp. 829.

And a city, by granting a building permit, does not render itself liable for the negligent acts of persons constructing a building under a permit so granted; and it is not bound to anticipate that the persons erecting the building will be so grossly negligent as to throw a board from the roof of the building into the street. Copeland v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 415, 65 L.R.A. 333, 74 Pac. 582.

8. Objects calculated to frighten horses.

(a) Generally.

Where, by law, it is made the duty of towns to cause the highways within their limits to be kept reasonably safe and convenient; and they are rendered liable to travelers for injuries caused by a neglect of this duty,—a road may be rendered unsafe by objects upon it which are calculated to frighten animals as well as by its defective construction. Dimock v. Suffield, 30 Conn. 129; Ayer v. Norwich, 39 Conn. 376, 12 Am. Rep. 390.

And an object in a public street which is calculated to frighten horses is such an obstruction as makes the corporation liable in case of an accident happening in consequence thereof. Chicago v. Hoy, 75 Ill. 530; Ayer v. Norwich, supra; Rushville v. Adams, 107 Ind. 475, 57 Am. Rep. 124, 8 N. E. 292; Washay v. Glen Haven, 25 Wis. 288, 3 Am. Rep. 73.

And it may be a nuisance, and is not distinguishable in law from an obstruction which a traveler drives against. Clinton v. Howard, 42 Conn. 294.

And cities and towns should be held liable for injuries resulting from the fright of horses of ordinary gentleness at objects naturally calculated to frighten such horses, which the corporation has negligently placed, or permitted to be placed and remain, upon its streets. Rushville v. Adams and Ayer v. Norwich, supra; Halstead v. Warsaw, 43 App. Div. 39, 59 N. Y. Supp. 518; Bennett v. Fifield, 13 R. I. 139, 43 Am. Rep. 17; Rice v. Whithy, 28 Ont. Rep. 598.

Municipal corporations are held to a higher responsibility with reference to removing deposits of private property which are placed on a highway without right, and obstruct public travel by their frightful appearance, than with reference to removing equally dangerous objects which either are incident to the nature of the soil and country, or are thrown upon the margin in the process of constructing the road. Morse v. Richmond, 41 Vt. 435, 98 Am. Dec. 600.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury resulting from an obstruction in a highway of such a nature as to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, by the fact that there was no actual contact with the obstruction. Ouverson v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 676; Card v. Ellsworth, 65 Me. 547, 20 Am. Rep. 722.

Or by the fact that it was so far removed from the traveled path as to prevent all danger of collision. Foshay v. Glen Haven, supra.

Nor is a person, injured by his horse taking fright at an object in the street naturally calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, deprived of a right to recover against the municipality for his injury by the fact that the bit broke. Cairncross v. Pewaukee, 86 Wis. 181, 56 N. W. 648.

And, if an obstruction at which a horse took fright was located in a street, the village is liable for injuries resulting from its being there, even though the horse took fright while on a cross road and just before entering such village street. Barr v. Bainbridge, 42 App. Div. 628, 59 N. Y. Supp. 132.

In order to render a municipal corporation liable for injuries resulting from the fright of horses frightened at objects on the streets, however, it must in some way be made to appear that the object or obstruction was one naturally calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness. Rushville v. Adams, supra; Royal Center v. Bingaman, 37 Ind. App. 626, 77 N. E. 811.

And this fact must be charged in the complaint in an action against the city for the injury. Royal Center v. Bingaman, supra.

And it must be made to appear that the horse which was frightened was one of ordinary gentleness. Rushville v. Adams, supra.

But an instruction, in an action against a town for injuries received from a horse becoming frightened by rubbish in the street, requiring the jury, before finding for the plaintiff, to believe that there was a pile of rubbish on the street, and that it was an object reasonably calculated to frighten gentle horses, sufficiently submits the question whether the street was in a reasonably safe condition. Nicholasville v. Fain, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 564, 99 S. W. 275.

And evidence that other horses passed the same place during the same time and in the same manner, and were not frightened by the obstruction, is competent, in an action for an injury from a horse being frightened by it, on the question of the liability of the obstruction to frighten horses. Gould v. Hutchins, 73 N. H. 69, 58 Atl. 1046.

And so is evidence that other horses were frightened by it, as tending to show that it was dangerous. Elgin v. Thompson, 98 Ill. App. 358; Galt v. Woliver, 103 Ill. App. 71.

Nor does the duty to travelers, of municipal corporations, to remove from the margins of their highways objects unlawfully deposited there, which, by their frightful appearance, make it unsafe to travel the road with ordinarily gentle horses, attach until the municipality knows of the obstruction, or ought to know of it. Morse v. Richmond, 41 Vt. 435, 98 Am. Dec. 600.

Nor does it attach while the property is lying upon the highway a reasonable time in loading or unloading, or for the ordinary purposes of transportation. Ibid.

But, while the right and duty to repair a bridge in a street involves the right, if necessary, to place material therefor in the street, if such material is naturally calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness it is the duty of the city to place it where it cannot be seen by horses, or temporarily to close the street; though this principle is not one to be given in charge to the jury as determining negligence as a matter of law. Patterson v. Austin, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 201, 39 S. W. 976.

And, where a street cleaner turned on a hydrant when there was a horse and wagon 25 feet or more from it, and the horse was frightened and injury resulted, it is a question of fact for the jury whether or not the act of the street cleaner was negligence for which the city was responsible. Crouter v. New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 353.

So, an object, though within the limits of a traveled way, which may frighten horses and is likely to do so, but is not otherwise an obstruction to travel, is not a defect within the meaning of statutes requiring towns to keep their ways in repair. Bemis v. Arlington, 114 Mass. 507; Brooks v. Acton, 117 Mass. 204; Cook v. Montague, 115 Mass. 571; Maxwell v. Clarke, 4 Ont. App. Rep. 466.

An object in a highway with which a traveler did not come in contact or collision, and which is not shown to have been an actual encumbrance or obstruction in the way of travel, is not a defect merely because it was of a nature to cause a horse to take fright, in consequence of which he escaped from the control of his driver and caused damage. Kingsbury v. Dedham, 13 Allen, 186, 90 Am. Dec. 191.

And the same rule applies to objects which, though they obstruct a part of the statutory highway, yet are permissible in the locality. Maxwell v. Clarke, supra.

So, an injury resulting from fright taken by a horse at certain objects exposed for sale in the streets of a town is not an injury caused by any neglect or mismanagement upon the part of the municipal corporation in keeping the streets of the town in proper and safe repair, for which it is made liable by S. C. Rev. Stat. 1893, § 1582. Dunn v. Barnwell, 43 S. C. 398, 49 Am. St. Rep. 843, 21 S. E. 315.

The question of negligence upon the part of a municipal corporation in respect to the removal of objects in a highway calculated to frighten timid animals should always be examined in reference to what may reasonably be required. Dimock v. Suffield, 30 Conn. 129.

And whether a particular object is naturally calculated to frighten horses is to be determined by experience, observation, and intelligence of the court and jury, in an action for damages for an injury resulting therefrom, as applied to the facts of the case before them; and it is not a subject to be pleaded and proven. Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Wynant, 114 Ind. 525, 5 Am. St. Rep. 644, 17 N. E. 118.

And, where a horse was proved to be gentle and to have been carefully driven; and it was frightened by an alleged obstruction in a street,—those facts should be taken into consideration on the question whether or not the obstruction was one which was likely to frighten gentle horses carefully driven. Vandalia v. Huss, 41 Ill. App. 517.

But whether or not an object standing upon a street is calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness is not a question for expert testimony. Ouverson v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 676.

Though a witness testifying from his personal observation and experience may give his opinion whether a certain object on a highway would be likely to make an ordinarily gentle horse shy. Clinton v. Howard, 42 Conn. 294.

And the question whether an alleged obstruction in a street frightened a horse, from which fright an injury resulted; and whether the alleged obstruction was of a character likely to frighten gentle horses carefully driven,—is one to be determined by the jury in an action for the injury, from a consideration of all the evidence touching the character, location, and surroundings of the obstruction at the time of the accident. Vandalia v. Huss, supra; ELAM v. MT. STERLING.

(b) Steam rollers, etc.

A municipal corporation possesses the right to use any proper improvement run by steam for the purpose of constructing or repairing its streets, and, in the absence of carelessness or negligence in its management, is not liable for damages occasioned by a horse becoming frightened at it. Sparr v. St. Louis, 4 Mo. App. 573, Appx.; McMulkin v. Chicago, 92 Ill. App. 331; Lane v. Lewiston, 91 Me. 292, 39 Atl. 999.

Where notice of such use was brought home to the traveler before an injury occurred in consequence thereof. Lane v. Lewiston, supra.

And the use by a city of a steam roller to press down the material of which a street is composed is not negligence. McMulkin v. Chicago, supra.

Nor, when a steam roller is being so used, is the city legally bound to notify persons approaching it with horses that it is about to start. Ibid.

And evidence, in an action against a city for an injury caused by a horse being frightened by a steam roller, as to what the effect of the operation of the steam roller was on horses, is incompetent. Ibid.

Nor can such use of a steam roller, though it may necessarily impede travel over the street to some extent, constitute a defect within the meaning of the statute; and it cannot furnish a ground for recovery against the city for permitting an obstruction in the street. Lane v. Lewiston, supra.

But a steam roller, being a machine by reason of its construction and appearance and the manner of its operation calculated to frighten horses if taken through the streets at a time when it is being used by the public, and when its passage is necessarily attended with danger, requires the exercise upon the part of the persons in charge of a high degree of care and the use of every reasonable precaution to avoid accident. Denver v. Peterson, 5 Colo. App. 41, 36 Pac. 1111.

And leaving upon the street a steam roller about 20 feet long, 10 feet high, and 8 feet in width, with a smokestack and three rollers, operated by steam in a horizontal boiler, and covered with a rubber blanket, at which a horse had shied, raises a question for the jury as to the negligence of the municipal corporation, though there is no direct proof that the machine would scare horses. Halstead v. Warsaw, 43 App. Div. 39, 59 N. Y. Supp. 518.

And the liability of a city for leaving a steam roller upon a public street from Saturday noon until Monday morning following, near the traveled part, for an injury to a person resulting from his horse being frightened at the roller, is not affected by the fact that the roller had been used by the authorities of the city in macadamizing the street, and that it was left near the place where it had been used in order that it might be used again on the Monday morning following; the sole question for determination is whether the city exercised reasonable care in its conduct with the roller to avoid injury to others. Young v. New Haven, 39 Conn. 435.

But leaving a steam roller close to the curb on a street where it was in use for two days, after it was broken, without any change in its appearance to enhance the danger of frightening animals, except by putting over it the usual canvass cover to protect it from the weather, does not present a case of negligence for the jury, where a horse became frightened by its presence in the street, and an injury resulted. District of Columbia v. Moulton, 182 U. S. 576, 45 L. ed. 1237, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840.

So, the act of dumping a load of stone on the wooden platform of a stone crusher, and of starting up the engine of the crusher and letting off steam just as a horse, which was being driven on a roadway 25 feet away and in plain sight was opposite it, may be found to have been a negligent act on the part of the agents of a city operating the crusher, and would constitute evidence of negligence upon the part of the municipality. Butman v. Newton, 179 Mass. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 349, 60 N. E. 401.

As to right to leave steam roller in street over Sunday, see Keeley v. Shanley, 140 Pa. 213, 21 Atl. 305, 306, supra, IX., d, 5, (a).

(c) Building material and other objects.

A municipal corporation is not liable for injuries resulting from the fright of a horse, caused by the presence of building material in the highway, although of such a nature as to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, unless an unlawful or unreasonable use was made of the highway in placing it there, of which fact the municipal authorities had notice. Loberg v. Amherst, 87 Wis. 634, 41 Am. St. Rep. 69, 58 N. W. 1048.

And, where ordinary stones, such as are used to build stone walls, having nothing peculiar or strange about them, were placed in a street by a person about to rebuild a wall along his premises; and a horse shied at them and ran against a fence upon the opposite side of the street,—no negligence upon the part of the municipal corporation appears, for which it can be held liable. McCord v. Ossining, 10 N. Y. S. R. 407. And see ELAM v. MT. STERLING.

Nor is a city liable for an injury caused by a horse being frightened at the sight of a boulder that had been dug out of the roadbed in a street, left between the gutter and the traveled part of the way until it could be removed by a person who had asked for and obtained permission to take it for building purposes. Agnew v. Corunna, 55 Mich. 428, 54 Am. Rep. 383, 21 N. W. 873.

And where, on the side of a road, there was a fill of about 15 feet with railings on either side; and a quantity of tiles were piled by the municipal corporation on one of the sides of the highway in a slight hollow behind the railings of the fill, for the purpose of repairing a culvert running through the fill; and some planks were thrown over them and a board nailed over the two boards forming the railing, so as further to hide the tiles from view,—no negligence upon the part of the municipal corporation appears which will render it liable for injuries sustained by a person whose horse became frightened at the tiles and ran away. Macdonald v. Yarmouth Twp. 29 Ont. Rep. 259.

So, ordinary wagons are neither strange nor rare, and they are not objects which are calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, constituting an obstruction in a street, for an injury from which the city would be liable. Studeor v. Gouverneur, 15 App. Div. 229, 44 N. Y. Supp. 122.

And the existence of a broken-down wagon with a bright red board sticking up in it on the side of a highway and partly in the ditch, where it had been hauled by the owner, some 8 or 10 feet from the traveled part, leaving plenty of room to pass, and remaining there for ten days, does not constitute evidence of actionable negligence upon the part of the municipal corporation; and a person who was thrown out and injured in consequence of his horse taking fright at the wagon and board, and shying, cannot recover of the municipality for his injury. Rounds v. Stratford, 26 U. C. C. P. 11.

Nor is a steam threshing machine allowed to stand upon the traveled portion of a public street as matter of law such an obstruction as is calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness; whether or not it is so is a question for the jury. Ouverson v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 676.

If bales of hay deposited without right by a third person on the margin of a highway presented such an appearance that they might reasonably be expected to and naturally would frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, however; and an injury occurred from such fright,—the municipal corporation is liable, although the surface and width of the traveled path was faultless. Morse v. Richmond, 41 Vt. 435, 98 Am. Dec. 600.

And the facts that a pile of shavings was within a few feet of the traveled track in a public street along which teams were obliged to pass, and that it frightened a gentle horse, carefully driven, furnish sufficient ground for the belief that the obstruction was likely to frighten gentle horses, carefully driven. Vandalia v. Huss, 41 Ill. App. 517.

And an instruction in such case that, if the street in question was in a condition to be reasonably safe for travel at the time and place of the injury, the city was not liable, ignoring the question of the obstructions complained of then and there upon it, is properly refused, since it was not the condition of the street alone that caused the accident, but the dangerous obstruction permitted to remain near the traveled track. Ibid.

And a finding that a city was not guilty of negligence in permitting a pile of stones to remain in the street is contrary to the evidence, and cannot be sustained where many witnesses testified that a great many horses had taken fright at the stones, and a witness living near the place of the accident and having ample opportunity for observation stated that she knew of no horse passing there which was not frightened at the stones. Patterson v. Austin, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 201, 39 S. W. 976.

So, where a workman employed by a city in cutting a ditch along the side of a street left his scraper in the street with its bright side exposed to view, so as to be calculated to frighten horses passing along the street, the city is liable to a person whose horse was frightened by the scraper and backed into a ditch, notwithstanding the fact that the width of the street afforded an unobstructed passage of between 50 and 60 feet. Weatherford v. Lowery (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 34.

And that a water pipe was constructed by a borough or village in the public highway, which was in such a condition that the water escaped therefrom and was thrown into the air with a hissing noise from time to time in such a manner as was calculated to frighten ordinarily gentle and roadworthy horses, is evidence of negligence upon the part of the borough or village. Baker v. North East, 151 Pa. 234, 24 Atl. 1079.

So, a tent on a portion of the traveled path of a highway over which the public is accustomed to pass with horses, carriages, and teams, which is, in its general operation, calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, and of such size and character as to obstruct travel, is a nuisance which it is the duty of the city to remove; and its failure to do so renders the city liable for an injury resulting therefrom, under a statute requiring it to keep its highways reasonably safe and convenient, and making it liable to travelers for injuries caused by a neglect of this duty. Ayer v. Norwich, 39 Conn. 376, 12 Am. Rep. 396.

And a city which authorizes and sanctions and knowingly and carelessly allows one of its principal streets to be obstructed by an exhibition of wild animals therein, which exhibition is calculated to produce injury to persons lawfully traveling along the street, is liable for an injury caused by the animals frightening a team traveling on the street, rendering it unmanageable, so that a passenger is injured. Little v. Madison, 42 Wis. 643, 24 Am. Rep. 435.

9. Snow and ice.

(a) Limitation to recent cases.

The liability of municipal corporations for ice on streets or sidewalks was fully considered in a note to Hausmann v. Madison, 21 L.R.A. 263; and the question of liability for permitting water to accumulate and freeze on a sidewalk to the injury of travelers was exhausted in a note to Brown v. White, 58 L.R.A. 321. This leaves little to be done here except to set out decisions rendered since these notes were written.

(b) General rules.

Ice and snow are unavoidable incidents in streets in winter, and a city can make use of only the requisite skill and industry to remove or mitigate their effects. Roanoke v. Harrison, 1 Va. Dec. 801, 19 S. E. 179.

And the general rule is that the duty of a city to exercise reasonable care to keep its sidewalks in safe condition for travel is not limited to structural defects, but extends, also, to dangerous accumulations of ice and snow. Wright v. St. Cloud, 54 Minn. 94, 55 N. W. 819; Kortlang v. Mt. Vernon, 129 App. Div. 535, 114 N. Y. Supp. 252.

And failure to act after actual notice, or after time sufficient to justify the inference of knowledge, presents a question of negligence for the consideration of a jury. Kortlang v. Mt. Vernon, supra.

Nor is the degree of care and diligence required of a city to keep its sidewalks in proper condition with reference to snow and ice affected or varied by the number of miles of walks in the city; if labor is necessary for the purpose, the force should be commensurate with the work to be done. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Lindsay v. Des Moines, 68 Iowa, 368, 27 N. W. 283.

Though it has been held that, if ice, or snow, or sleet had fallen in such quantities as are unusual, and could not have been removed except at a greater expense than could reasonably be incurred, the municipality would not be liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Cresler v. Asheville, 134 N. C. 311, 46 S. E. 738.

A city is not bound, under all circumstances, however, to keep its sidewalks free from ice; it is required to exercise only reasonable diligence under the circumstances of the case. Clark v. Chicago, 4 Biss. 486, Fed. Cas. No. 2,817; Chicago v. McDonald, 111 Ill. App. 436.

Its duty in this respect is to use only reasonable care to see that they are reasonably safe for persons exercising ordinary care and prudence. Chicago v. McDonald, supra.

And the duty of a city to keep its walks free from ice and snow does not require it also to clear that part of the roadway that is so near the walk that a traveler might step upon it to avoid a pool of water. Lichtenstein v. New York, 159 N. Y. 500, 54 N. E. 67, reversing 29 App. Div. 542, 51 N. Y. Supp. 642.

So, a municipal ordinance requiring persons to see that no snow or ice shall be permitted to remain on the sidewalk and gutter in front of any house, building, or lot occupied by them has no relation to the duty of the city in respect to the walk in front of an alley, which is a cross walk rather than a sidewalk. Moran v. New York, 98 App. Div. 301, 90 N. Y. Supp. 596.

And a crossing is not a sidewalk, within the meaning of a statute which exempts corporations from accidents arising from persons falling owing to snow or ice upon sidewalks, except in cases of gross negligence. Drennan v. Kingston, 23 Ont. App. Rep. 406.

And Mass. Stat. 1896, chap. 540, providing that no city or town shall be liable for any injury to person or property received or suffered in or upon any highway by reason or in consequence of snow or ice thereon, if the place at which the injury or damage was received or suffered was, at the time of the accident, otherwise reasonably safe and convenient for travelers, means that a way shall not be deemed unsafe by reason of snow or ice thereon if it would be reasonably safe and convenient for travelers but for the presence of the snow and ice. Newton v. Worcester, 169 Mass. 516, 48 N. E. 274, second appeal, 174 Mass. 181, 54 N. E. 521.

And whenever ice or snow is the sole proximate cause of an accident, there is no liability on the part of the city. Newton v. Worcester, 174 Mass. 181, 54 N. E. 521.

So, Mass. Rev. Laws 1902, chap. 51, § 19, relieves a city from liability for injuries caused solely by snow or ice in a street, though put into dangerous form by human agency. Hitchcock v. Boston (Mass.) 87 N.

E. 470; Hadden v. Somerville, 197 Mass. 480, 83 N. E. 1105.

While it is not the duty of a city, under all circumstances, to remove ice from streets or crossings, however, if there is anything out of the ordinary course of things which renders the sidewalk and crossings especially dangerous, and which can be removed, it ought to be done. Clark v. Chicago, supra.

But the fact that children were accustomed to slide on an icy sidewalk does not create such an artificial cause of a dangerous condition as will take the case out of the operation of the rule that, where it is practically impossible to remove ice from a sidewalk until a thaw comes which remedies the evil, the municipality is not negligent in awaiting that result. Buck v. Glens Falls, 4 App. Div. 323, 38 N. Y. Supp. 582.

(c) Mere slipperiness.

A municipal corporation is not liable for injuries from mere general slipperiness of its streets and sidewalks, occasioned by a recent fall of rain or snow. Holbert v. Philadelphia, 221 Pa. 266, 70 Atl. 746; Blaine v. Philadelphia, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 177; Wyman v. Philadelphia, 175 Pa. 117, 34 Atl. 621; Hendrickson v. Chester City, 221 Pa. 120, 70 Atl. 552; Metzger v. Chicago, 103 Ill. App. 605; Marek v. Chicago, 89 Ill. App. 358; Masters v. Troy, 50 Hun, 485, 3 N. Y. Supp. 450; Haight v. Elmira, 42 App. Div. 391, 59 N. Y. Supp. 193; Brennan v. New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 578; Cresler v. Asheville, 134 N. C. 311, 46 S. E. 738; Calder v. Walla Walla, 6 Wash. 377, 33 Pac. 1054; Beaton v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 416, 73 N. W. 53.

Unless some defect in the walk concurs with its slippery condition in producing the accident. Beaton v. Milwaukee, supra.

Or unless the ice is so rough and uneven, or so rounded up, or at such an incline, as to make it an obstruction. Calder v. Walla Walla and Metzger v. Chicago, supra; Anthony v. Glens Falls, 4 App. Div. 218, 38 N. Y. Supp. 536; Blaine v. Philadelphia, supra.

And this has been allowed to remain for an unreasonable time. Cresler v. Asheville, supra.

Nor does mere iciness or slipperiness of a sidewalk, produced by a sudden freezing, render the city liable for an injury caused thereby. Salzer v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 471, 73 N. W. 20; McQueen v. Elkhart, 14 Ind. App. 671, 43 N. E. 460; Buck v. Glens Falls, 4 App. Div. 323, 38 N. Y. Supp. 582; Anthony v. Glens Falls, supra.

And something more than the presence of ice due to the result of a low winter temperature must be shown to make a city chargeable with negligence. Peard v. Mt. Vernon, 83 Hun, 250, 31 N. Y. Supp. 395.

A municipal corporation is not bound to remove smooth slippery ice from a sidewalk, where there are no hills or ridges which amount to an obstruction, unless the slippery condition is caused by the independent negligence of the municipality. Ingram v. Philadelphia, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 305.

And, where a sidewalk is in a slippery condition from ice and snow which does not amount to an obstruction to travel upon it, and a person is injured thereon, not by stumbling against anything, but merely by slipping, the city cannot be held liable for the injury. Chicago v. McDonald, 111 Ill. App. 436.

Nor does proof that a considerable quantity of ice formed on a sidewalk near a watering trough, and that the ice was rough, and that a person fell upon it and was injured; but not tending to show that the roughness of the ice caused the fall,—show that the fall was the result of any actionable defect in the street. Mueller v. Milwaukee, 110 Wis. 623, 86 N. W. 162.

And a person walking on a sidewalk on a steep grade during a snowstorm which had continued for two hours and had covered a coating of old ice on the walk to the depth of 2 inches, who fell while so walking, cannot recover from the city for the injury received, in the absence of evidence that the old ice was a concurring cause of his fall. Lawless v. Troy, 44 N. Y. S. R. 735, 18 N. Y. Supp. 506.

So, a city is under no specific duty to sand its streets or sidewalks; and an instruction in an action for an injury from a fall on an icy sidewalk, that, if sanding the walk would have prevented the injury, and was a reasonable duty on the part of the city, the person injured could recover, is properly refused. McGuinness v. Worcester, 160 Mass. 272, 35 N. E. 1068.

(d) Ordinary falls of snow.

The obligation imposed by law on a city to keep its streets in repair and free from nuisance does not extend to the removal of an ordinary fall of snow and ice upon a sidewalk. Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532; Rolf v. Greenville, 102 Mich. 544, 61 N. W. 3; Brennan v. New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 578.

When the ice on a sidewalk is the result of rain or snow which has made all the sidewalks slippery, it is not negligence of the city to fail to remove it. Masters v. Troy, 50 Hun, 485, 3 N. Y. Supp. 450; Anthony v. Glens Falls, 4 App. Div. 218, 38 N. Y. Supp. 536; Haight v. Elmira, 42 App. Div. 391, 59 N. Y. Supp. 193.

And a slippery condition of a sidewalk which is a natural temporary condition caused by the weather for the time being, with constant alternations from rain to snow and from thawing to freezing, is not a defect or an obstruction for which the city is liable. Brennan v. New York, 117 App. Div. 849, 103 N. Y. Supp. 266.

Nor is a city liable for an injury alleged to have resulted from an accumulation, at a certain point, of snow and ice upon a sidewalk, where it does not appear that the sidewalk was out of repair or defective, or that the accumulation of snow and ice upon the walk was so great as to constitute a nuisance or a material obstruction to ordinary travel upon the street. Bretsh v. Toledo, 1 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 96.

And a city situated in the latitude of northeastern Ohio is not bound, as a matter of law, to remove, even from its principal streets, snow which fell during an unusual storm to the depth of 4 feet; and the fact that the snow had remained a week, and had been piled up by the street car companies in clearing their tracks, and had become frozen and hard, is notice to the public as well as to the city authorities of its dangerous condition, and therefore the public is bound to exercise care in driving. McDonald v. Toledo, 63 Fed. 60.

Nor is a municipality which worked diligently to remove snow from its streets chargeable with negligence for failing to completely clear a street, where no defect or obstruction is shown other than a temporary condition of ice and snow caused by the weather conditions. Brennan v. New York, supra.

So, a recovery cannot be had against a municipal corporation for an injury by a fall on a sidewalk, where the walk was well made and of good material, and the fall would not have occurred had it not been for an extraordinary fall of snow and the formation of ice by the tramping of the snow, and freezing,—contingencies against which the corporation could not always provide. Gibson v. Johnson, 4 Ill. App. 288.

And, where a pile of snow has been sufficient to cause an accumulation in a roadway higher than the sidewalk, which is added to by the snow removed from the sidewalk, so that it is impossible to prevent the snow from being thrown back on the sidewalk by passing vehicles, and being tramped down and frozen into compact masses near the curb; and the temperature remains below freezing so that such masses of compact frozen snow and ice are hard to remove,—a person using the street when such conditions are apparent is not justified in expecting to find the whole width of the sidewalk entirely free from obstructions; and a city cannot be obliged to see that all such obstructions, especially those near the curb and away from the center of the sidewalk, have been removed. Winckler v. New York, 129 App. Div. 45, 113 N. Y. Supp. 412.

(c) Rough accumulations of snow and ice.

While the mere slipperiness of a sidewalk, occasioned by ice or snow, not accumulated so as to constitute an obstruction, is not ordinarily such a defect as will make the city liable for damages occasioned thereby, if the snow or ice is permitted to accumulate, or to become rough and uneven, so that the slipperiness becomes more dangerous than if it lay in a smooth surface, it is generally held to constitute an obstruction which the municipality must remove or pay resulting damages. Storm v. Butte, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

35 Mont. 385, 89 Pac. 726; Mareck v. Chicago, 89 Ill. App. 358; Jones v. Troy, 22 N. Y. S. R. 276, 4 N. Y. Supp. 792, affirmed in 127 N. Y. 671, 28 N. E. 255; Brennan v. New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 578.

And, where ice and snow have been allowed to accumulate upon a particular spot in a street for a considerable length of time, until they become an obstruction and dangerous to pedestrians, the city is liable for injuries resulting therefrom. Brennan v. New York, 117 App. Div. 849, 103 N. Y. Supp. 266; Masters v. Troy, 50 Hun. 485, 3 N. Y. Supp. 450; Haight v. Elmira, 42 App. Div. 391, 59 N. Y. Supp. 193; Beck v. Buffalo, 50 App. Div. 621, 63 N. Y. Supp. 499; Bull v. Spokane, 46 Wash. 237, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1105, 89 Pac. 555; Smith v. Spokane, 16 Wash. 403, 47 Pac. 888; Hyer v. Janesville, 101 Wis. 371, 77 N. W. 729; West v. Eau Claire, 89 Wis. 31, 61 N. W. 313.

Where they have been there for a time long enough to give constructive notice to the city. Masters v. Troy and Beck v. Buffalo, supra; Wyman v. Philadelphia, 175 Pa. 117, 34 Atl. 621; Bull v. Spokane and Smith v. Spokane, supra.

Ice and snow accumulating on a sidewalk from natural causes, if suffered to remain until the surface is so rough and ridged, rounded or slanted, that it is difficult and dangerous for persons traveling on foot to pass over it when exercising ordinary care, constitute a defect for which the city or town is liable. Huston v. Council Bluffs, 101 Iowa, 33, 36 L.R.A. 211, 69 N. W. 1130; Wyman v. Philadelphia and Mareck v. Chicago, supra.

So, where snow on a sidewalk had thawed and frozen until the walk was in a rough and uneven condition, the center thereof being rounded and sloping toward either edge of the walk; and water from melting snow had run down onto the walk and there frozen; and the day before the accident in question was warm, and the snow and ice had largely disappeared, but pieces of ice still remained; and, during the night, there was a storm of sleet or snow and a drop in the temperature, so that on the next morning, when the accident in question occurred, the walk was uneven, slippery, and dangerous,—it is sufficient to take the case to the jury on the issue of the city's negligence. Templin v. Boone, 127 Iowa, 91, 102 N. W. 789.

And evidence that snow and ice were piled up on a sidewalk; and it was exceedingly dangerous to walk upon in that condition; and that said condition continued for several weeks; and that a person who fell and was injured on it did not know of its slippery condition; and that the fall was after dark,—is sufficient legally to present the question to a jury as to whether or not the city was negligent, and as to whether or not such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Bull v. Spokane, supra.

And a complaint in an action against a city, alleging that it negligently permitted snow and ice to accumulate on a sidewalk to the depth of several inches at a point where the injury in question occurred, and that, by persons passing over it and other causes, it became so uneven and rounded, and had such an angle from the level of the sidewalk, that a person could not walk over it without danger of falling; and that this condition was known to the city for a long time prior to the date of the plaintiff's injury; and that the accumulation constituted an obstruction which the city negligently permitted to remain without proper protection, and without light or signal to indicate danger,—sufficiently shows actionable negligence upon the part of the city in the absence of special demurrer. Storm v. Butte, supra.

So, that a sidewalk was icy, slanting, and uneven, with hills or hummocks of ice 2 or more inches high; and that it was upon one of these hills or hummocks that a person slipped when she fell and received injuries; and that the ice on the walk was 3 or 4 inches thick; and that this condition had existed practically all winter, and most of the ice had accumulated ten days before the accident,—furnishes proof of negligence upon the part of the city. Klaus v. Buffalo, 86 App. Div. 221, 83 N. Y. Supp. 620.

And a municipal corporation which permits a ridge of ice 4 inches wide and from 2 to 5 inches high to remain across a sidewalk for a month, upon which a person slips and falls after it is covered with snow, is liable in damages for the injuries sustained. Moore v. Philadelphia, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 194.

So, evidence that a ridge of snow and ice extending along the center of a sidewalk was 5 or 6 inches high; and that it was formed of snow part of which fell during a storm about sixteen days before the injury complained of, and a part during another storm about four days previous to the injury; and that it was packed down and glazed with ice and uneven and very slippery, and had been so about a week before the injury,—is sufficient to warrant a verdict charging the village with negligence. Keane v. Waterford, 130 N. Y. 188, 29 N. E. 130.

And so is evidence that a person fell on a ridge of snow on a sidewalk, some 8 or 10 inches in height and 6 or 8 inches in width, running through the center of the walk for its entire length; and that, though the ridge of snow was the result of an unusually severe and prolonged storm, yet many other walks in the immediate locality were entirely cleared of snow which had fallen, within a reasonable time after the storm had subsided, and this had been permitted to remain; and that it might have been removed with the exercise of a fair degree of care and diligence. Scanlon v. Weedsport, 85 App. Div. 623, 82 N. Y. Supp. 577.

And evidence that, during the winter, a ridge of hard snow or ice had formed in the center of a sidewalk, about 4 inches high and 12 inches wide at the base, and sloping from the highest point at the center to the edges; and that the ridge was rough and slippery, so that a person using the walk was liable to stumble by his feet coming in contact with the ridge, or to step upon the ridge and fall by his foot slipping upon its sloping and rough sides,—is sufficient to make a question for the jury, in an action for an injury caused thereby, whether the walk was reasonably safe for public travel, Byington v. Merrill, 112 Wis. 211, 88 N. W. 26.

And evidence that, at a place where an accident occurred, there was a slope or declivity in the sidewalk, occasioned by snow having been cleared off the walk opposite one lot and having been allowed to accumulate in front of an adjoining lot, so that at the point where the accident occurred there was a descent or declivity at an angle of 45 degrees, of the length of 10 or 12 inches extending the entire width of the sidewalk, justifies the jury, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom, in finding that the municipal corporation was negligent in not removing an accumulation of snow and ice from the sidewalk at the place where the accident occurred, and that such negligence was a proximate cause of the injury. Goff v. Little Falls, 47 N. Y. S. R. 729, 20 N. Y. Supp. 175.

So, a fall upon an icy sidewalk is attributable to the negligence of the city, where it appears that the walk where the accident occurred and for a considerable distance on either side of that point was covered with ice and snow some 4 or 5 inches in depth, and that the accumulation was higher in the center of the walk than upon either side, and the entire width of the walk was in an icy and slippery condition, and that it was difficult to pass over it without slipping and falling, and this condition had existed for such a time before the accident as to afford constructive notice to the city. Walsh v. Buffalo, 17 App. Div. 112, 44 N. Y. Supp. 942.

And, where the plaintiff and three other witnesses in an action for damages against a city for a personal injury testified to the existence of hills and ridges of ice of a dangerous character on a sidewalk, continuing long enough to charge the city with constructive notice, a verdict and judgment for the person injured will be sustained though three or four of the plaintiff's own witnesses contradicted him, and a large number of witnesses for the defendant testified that no such condition existed on the sidewalk in question at the time of the accident and before it. McDevitt v. Philadelphia, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 317.

And proof, in an action against a municipal corporation for damages for an injury alleged to have been caused by an obstructed sidewalk, tending to show that, in violation of a city ordinance requiring owners or occupants to remove before 9 o'clock in the morning all snow and ice which may have fallen upon the sidewalk in front of his premises, an accumulation of snow and ice at least 9 inches in thickness has been permitted to remain upon the sidewalk in question at the point where the accident happened, charges the city with notice thereof, and makes the question as to the negligence of the municipality one to be submitted to the jury. McPherson v. Buffalo, 13 App. Div. 502, 43 N. Y. Supp. 658.

Nor does the condition of general slipperiness of the streets in the winter relieve a city from liability for their obstruction caused by accumulations of ice or snow after knowledge, actual or constructive; and, if the accumulations assume the shape of ridges or hills, or any other form which renders travel dangerous, they constitute unlawful obstructions, and a municipality, in allowing them to remain for an unreasonable length of time, is guilty of negligence. Scott v. Scranton, 5 Lack. Legal News, 73.

And, if a city is negligent in allowing ice and snow upon its sidewalks to become and remain in a dangerous condition, it cannot avoid liability for injuries caused thereby by showing that the iciness or slippery condition of the walk was caused by natural causes, as by rain or sleet or sudden changes of the weather. Templin v. Boone, 127 Iowa, 91, 102 N. W. 789.

And a city is responsible for injuries suffered by one who fell on a walk because of the rough surface of the snow and ice which it had had an opportunity to remove, though it was made more dangerous by a recent fall of sleet, provided the injury would not have been sustained but for the uneven condition due to the older snow and ice. Hodges v. Waterloo, 109 Iowa, 444, 80 N. W. 523.

The duty resting upon municipal corporations to remove accumulations of ice and snow as it falls from time to time upon their streets, however, is a qualified one, and becomes imperative only when dangerous formations or obstacles have been created and notice of their existence has been received by the corporation. Hawkins v. New York, 54 App. Div. 258, 66 N. Y. Supp. 623; O'Shaughnessy v. Middleport, 93 App. Div. 93, 86 N. Y. Supp. 944; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532.

And only when the accumulations of ice or snow render the walk dangerous to pedestrians. Berger v. New York, 65 App. Div. 394, 73 N. Y. Supp. 74; O'Shaughnessy v. Middleport, supra; Anthony v. Glens Falls, 4 App. Div. 218, 38 N. Y. Supp. 536; Metzger v. Chicago, 103 Ill. App. 605; Chicago v. Hutchinson, 129 Ill. App. 239; Cresler v. Asheville, 134 N. C. 311, 46 S. E. 738.

And a city cannot be held liable for an injury caused by an icy sidewalk when the roughness and unevenness at the point of injury was only such as was occasioned by footprints made in the slush and wet snow, of the previous day, which had frozen the night before the accident. Vonkey v. St. Louis (Mo.) 117 S. W. 733.

So, a person who fell on a slippery sidewalk and received injury is not entitled to recover from the city therefor, where it appears that the irregularities of the surface of the ice where he fell were very slight. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ingram v. Philadelphia, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 305.

And a sidewalk merely covered evenly with tramped snow 2 inches deep, and then made rough by being traveled on when the snow was soft and sloppy, and then frozen hard, leaving the surface indented with footprints, is not legally defective, so as to render the city liable for an injury caused thereby. Hyer v. Janesville, 101 Wis. 371, 77 N. W. 729.

Nor is the formation of ice on a sidewalk from a hydrant during the course of a night, in a few hours, by which a person is injured, negligence on the part of the city, as a matter of law. Cresler v. Asheville, supra.

And, in the absence of structural defects which combined with the action of the elements in causing accumulations of ice and snow on a sidewalk, the condition of a sidewalk crossing an alley, which has become uneven by falling snow and the melting and freezing of the same while used by persons and teams, does not constitute an actionable defect. Dapper v. Milwaukee, 107 Wis. 88, 82 N. W. 725.

Nor is a city bound to remove from the roadway or bed of a street ridges of snow accumulated from clearing a cross walk. Lichtenstein v. New York, 159 N. Y. 500, 54 N. E. 67, reversing 29 App. Div. 542, 51 N. Y. Supp. 642.

Or which had been thrown off the sidewalk, and off a street-car track by the street railway company. Hutchinson v. Ypsilanti, 103 Mich. 12, 61 N. W. 279; Ellis v. Lewiston, 89 Me. 60, 35 Atl. 1016.

In Hutchinson v. Ypsilanti, supra, Joslyn v. Detroit, 74 Mich. 458, 42 N. W. 50, supra, IX., d, 5, (b), and Hayes v. West Bay City, 91 Mich. 418, 51 N. W. 1067, supra, XI., a, 1, were distinguished upon the ground that in each of those cases the city was an active agent in placing the obstruction.

A street railway is required to move its cars over its road, and is authorized to remove snow from the track to prevent its obstruction and enable it to operate its road, and owners of property upon the street are under obligation to remove the snow from their sidewalk; and where there is a constant accumulation of snow and ice from these causes, and a continuous storm practically without intermission, and an injury results from the accumulation of ice and snow, it is a case in which no ordinary care could have preserved the street from the ice and snow which accumulated in it, and no breach of duty upon the part of the city appears rendering it liable for the injury. Peard v. Mt. Vernon, 83 Hun, 250, 31 N. Y. Supp. 395.

So, where a crosswalk has been cleared of snow to its full width, the law does not impose upon the municipal authorities the duty of foreseeing that water may accumulate on the walk, and that a traveler, in avoiding it, may be injured by stepping upon a ridge of snow cast from the walk into the roadway; and the omission to remove the snow so as to render such a contingency impossible does not constitute negligence. Lichtenstein v. New York, supra.

Where a person fell upon an icy sidewalk and was injured, and there was evidence tending to show that at the point where the fall took place the sidewalk was in a dangerous condition, caused by an accumulation of snow and ice, of which the city had actual or constructive notice, the question whether or not the city was negligent is a question for the jury. Hawley v. Gloversville, 4 App. Div. 343, 38 N. Y. Supp. 647; Holbert v. Philadelphia, 221 Pa. 266, 70 Atl. 746.

And so is the question of the contributory negligence of a person injured. Holbert v. Philadelphia, supra.

And whether a city was negligent in allowing snow and ice shoveled off a railway track at a crossing to accumulate in the highway on each side of the railway in such a manner as to make an unnatural hump or ridge on either side of the railroad track is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for a resulting injury. Johnson v. Marquette (Mich.) 15 Det. L. N. 655, 117 N. W. 658.

(f) Time and opportunity for removal.

Where ice and snow accumulated upon a sidewalk in the ordinary manner, the city must be allowed due time to remove the same, or so to deal with the conditions as to render the walks as reasonably safe as could ordinarily be expected under the circumstances. Bull v. Spokane, 46 Wash. 237, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1105, 89 Pac. 555.

A municipal corporation is entitled to reasonable time after the defect is known to it, or should be so known, within which to remove it. Cosner v. Centerville, 90 Iowa, 33, 57 N. W. 636; Stanton v. Salem, 145 Mass. 476, 14 N. E. 519; Brennan v. New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 578.

And, when it is attempted to make a municipal corporation responsible in damages for an accident caused by ice on a sidewalk, it must be shown that the sidewalk was allowed to remain in a dangerous condition for an unreasonable time. Ince v. Toronto, 27 Ont. App. Rep. 410; Cresler v. Asheville, 134 N. C. 311, 46 S. E. 738.

Nor is a municipal corporation in a northern state required to remove the snow and ice from a sidewalk immediately after it falls or forms. Kleng v. Buffalo, 72 Hun, 541, 25 N. Y. Supp. 445; Crawford v. New York, 68 App. Div. 107, 74 N. Y. Supp. 261; Kortlang v. Mt. Vernon, 129 App. Div. 535, 114 N. Y. Supp. 252.

And a city will not be held liable for the presence on the sidewalk of ice upon which a person slipped and was injured, where the accident took place a little more than two days after the rain which caused the ice had ceased. Zunz v. New York, 103 N. Y. Supp. 222.

And, where a street in a city becomes unsafe by the sudden freezing at night of the snow and slush thereon, the city is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian, occurring about noon the following day by slipping on a sidewalk. Vonkey v. St. Louis (Mo.) 117 S. W. 733.

So, where a city keeps a force of men constantly employed in removing snow, ice and mud from the crossings of its streets, an injury resulting from a hole in a crossing cannot be said to have been occasioned by any negligence on the part of the city for which it should respond in damages. Roanoke v. Harrison, 1 Va. Dec. 801, 19 S. E. 179.

And, where a sidewalk in front of a store which was one of the chief business places in the city was 20 feet wide and level and perfect in its construction, and was lighted by electric lights in the usual manner; and there was upon the sidewalk an accumulation of ice and snow extending along its center for a considerable distance, being from 1½ to 4 or 5 inches in thickness and from 2½ to 7 feet in width, sloping gradually to either side; and the accumulation was rough and uneven on top and had been allowed to remain for several days, but the conditions were such that, immediately preceding the accident, the sidewalks were unavoidably icy and slippery; and the city had sprinkled the walk with sawdust and ashes in the morning, and again immediately preceding the time of the accident,—the city was not negligent in allowing the walk to remain in that condition. Rogers v. Rome, 96 App. Div. 427, 89 N. Y. Supp. 130.

Nor is a city guilty of negligence in permitting a crossing on a street to be encumbered with snow and ice during a period when the temperature is so low that the coating adheres to the pavement, and cannot, with the use of reasonable care, be conveniently removed. Staley v. New York, 37 App. Div. 598, 56 N. Y. Supp. 237.

And, where a fall of rain is suddenly followed by severe cold, by reason of which the snow or ice is frozen to the sidewalk, so that it is practically impossible to remove it until a thaw comes, the municipality is not negligent in awaiting a thaw. Ibid.; Betts v. Gloversville, 29 N. Y. S. R. 331, 8 N. Y. Supp. 795.

Nor is a city liable for an injury where the icy condition of a sidewalk was caused by melting snow on an adjoining lot, and had existed only three or four days before an accident caused thereby, during which time the temperature was such as to cause both thawing and freezing each day. Kortlang v. Mt. Vernon, supra.

And a city cannot be charged with negligence in not causing the removal of ice on a sidewalk, formed as the result of a storm or the melting of snow, where there is no evidence that the same had been softened by a thaw for a sufficient length of time prior to the injury in question to charge the city with negligence in not causing its removal. Berger v. New York, 65 App. Div. 394, 73 N. Y. Supp. 74.

Nor is a municipal corporation negligent because, during a period of frequent snowstorms and of very cold weather, it failed to remove the accumulated ice and snow from a cross walk, and thus keep the surface of the cross walk exposed, or because it failed to keep the snow and ice on the cross walk in a perfectly smooth condition. O'Shaughnessey v. Middleport, 93 App. Div. 93, 86 N. Y. Supp. 944.

And a city is not liable for injuries to a person resulting from falling on a sidewalk because of snow and ice thereon, where there had been snow and ice on the sidewalk for two weeks, and the temperature was uniformly below the freezing point, except for portions of three days, when it snowed and rained, and the sidewalks of the city were partly covered with ice during that time, and these conditions were general throughout the city, the weather conditions being such that the city was not obliged to remove the snow and ice from the sidewalks. Cupp v. Elmira, 126 App. Div. 539, 110 N. Y. Supp. 742.

And, where a severe snowstorm took place, and for three days afterwards the temperature was below the freezing point, and for the following two days it was below the freezing point except at short intervals on each of those days, and on the last of the two there was another storm which continued until the morning of the following day, and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the next day an accident occurred, the city cannot be said to have been negligent because it did not clear the sidewalk of snow and ice within that time. Foley v. New York, 95 App. Div. 374, 88 N. Y. Supp. 690.

Nor can a city be said to be negligent immediately following a fall of snow because it does not proceed at once to clear the sidewalks of snow and ice, where it is the duty of abutting property owners to do that work; in such case the city has a right to rely for a reasonable time upon the assumption that they will perform the obligation which the law casts upon them. Ibid.; Crawford v. New York, supra; Hawkins v. New York, 54 App. Div. 258, 66 N. Y. Supp. 623.

And in such case it is called upon to act only when it has actual or constructive notice that dangerous accumulations of snow or ice exist, and a reasonable time has elapsed after such notice to enable it, in the exercise of ordinary care, to remove the obstruction. Berger v. New York, supra.

And it is not guilty of negligence if, observing that the work is being generally done, it awaits for a reasonable period the action of its citizens. Hawkins v. New York, supra.

And a city sued for an injury resulting from ice on a sidewalk is entitled to have an ordinance requiring persons occupying property abutting on streets where sidewalks were laid to keep the same free from snow and ice admitted in evidence to show that it had provided a way for keeping sidewalks free from obstruction, and that it was authorized to wait a reasonable time for the persons upon whom the duty was imposed to comply with the provisions of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the ordinance. Calder v. Walla Walla, 6 Wash. 377, 33 Pac. 1054.

There is an affirmative duty upon a municipality to keep its sidewalks reasonably free from accumulations of ice and snow, however; and the failure to do this after adequate notice, or after ample time has elapsed to justify the inference of knowledge of the defective condition, constitutes negligence upon the part of the city. Beck v. Buffalo, 50 App. Div. 621, 63 N. Y. Supp. 499; Cuzner v. Calgary, 1 N. W. Terr. 162.

And, where an accumulation of ice and snow in a street formed a dangerous obstruction which it was the duty of the city to remove, and this was permitted to remain for over a month before the accident in question, the negligence of the city in so permitting it to remain is a question for the jury, in an action for an injury caused thereby. Haight v. Elmira, 42 App. Div. 391, 59 N. Y. Supp. 193.

And a city the charter of which makes the members of its common council commissioners of highways, and charges them with the care of the streets, is liable for an injury occurring to one passing after dark along an unlighted street, who was injured by slipping upon ice which had been permitted to remain for a week upon the sidewalk, into a hole which had existed there for three weeks, it appearing that the street had usually been lighted by the city. Deufel v. Long Island City, 19 App. Div. 620, 46 N. Y. Supp. 355.

And an objection to an instruction that it fixed a liability upon the defendant city for injury caused by snow on a sidewalk without reference to whether the city had had a reasonable time within which to remove the snow is cured by another instruction that the city was not negligent if snow had fallen so short a time before the accident that with ordinary care it could not have been removed in time to have avoided the injury. Robinson v. Cedar Rapids, 100 Iowa, 662, 69 N. W. 1064.

(g) Snow and ice combined with defect in street.

While a municipal corporation is not responsible in damages for the results of mere iciness or slipperiness of its sidewalks, produced by natural causes, where such conditions concur with a previous defect for which the municipal corporation is responsible, it is liable for damages. Hodges v. Waterloo, 109 Iowa, 444, 80 N. W. 523; Newton v. Worcester, 174 Mass. 181, 54 N. E. 521; Holbert v. Philadelphia, 221 Pa. 266, 70 Atl. 746; Salzer v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 471, 73 N. W. 20.

And a statutory provision exempting municipal corporations from liability for injuries caused by obstructions of snow and ice in the highways, unless notice of the particular obstruction causing the injury has been given to the highway officers, applies to obstructions of snow and ice produced by artificial causes as well as those produced by natural causes. Winsor v. Tripp, 12 R. I. 154.

This rule applies to the act of allowing snow and ice to accumulate on a sidewalk in an uneven and dangerous manner, and to remain there for a long time. Salzer v. Milwaukee, supra.

And a municipal corporation is liable for injuries to a person slipping on ice in a street or sidewalk, which has accumulated by reason of the city's neglect to construct and maintain suitable drains to carry off the water. Holbert v. Philadelphia, supra.

And, where a broken leader on a house cast water on the sidewalk every time there was a rain or thaw, which water froze there, and there was an alternation of freezing and thawing all the time in winter, which condition continued for more than a year, the condition constituted a nuisance to be abated by the city, and for which the city is liable. Duffy v. New York, 128 App. Div. 837, 113 N. Y. Supp. 118.

And, where the evidence, in an action against a city for damages for a personal injury, shows that the plaintiff was injured by stepping on a ridge of ice about 8 inches high, which had been formed by water dropping from the eaves of an abutting building; and there was conflicting evidence as to whether the general sidewalks of the city were slippery and icy from rain suddenly turning to ice, and as to whether the plaintiff knew of the dangerous character of the locality,—the case is one for the jury in an action for the injury. Miller v. Bradford, 186 Pa. 164, 40 Atl. 409.

So, a city which constructs a sidewalk with a slope so abrupt as to make it dangerous to pedestrians, under conditions likely to occur in the winter when it is covered with ice and snow, is liable to one who slips on it when coated with ice, unless it is built pursuant to a plan prepared by a competent engineer. Hodges v. Waterloo, supra.

And, where, to the knowledge of a city, a sidewalk has become uneven and unsuitable for travel; and the public has on that account been induced to walk on the surface of the ground beside the walk: and a peg or other obstruction has been left in such traveled portion of the street set apart for sidewalk purposes,—the city is negligent in allowing the obstruction to exist, and allowing snow and ice to accumulate about it so as to render the traveled path unsafe. Rea v. Sioux City, 127 Iowa, 615, 103 N. W. 949.

So, smooth, level, and slippery ice formed upon the surface of a sidewalk or in depressions therein, by reason of its improper construction or of its condition, may be found to be a defect which will render a municipal corporation liable for injuries caused by falling on it. Adams v. Chicopee, 147 Mass. 440, 18 N. E. 231.

And, where a pedestrian was walking at an ordinary gait, and fell because of ice formed on the sidewalk, and sustained injury by catching his foot in a hole, worn in the crossing by heavy wagons, which had been there for a year or more, the question of the city's negligence is one for a jury. Hamilton v. Buffalo, 55 App. Div. 423, 66 N. Y. Supp. 990, affirmed in 173 N. Y. 72, 65 N. E. 944.

A municipal corporation is not liable, however, for an injury caused by the recent accumulation of ice and frozen snow on a crossing, though it knew or ought to have known that the crossing was defective or out of repair, and that such want of repair combined with its icy and slippery condition rendered it dangerous, unless such accumulation of ice and snow might reasonably have been anticipated as the natural and probable result of such construction or lack of repair. Circleville v. Sohn, 20 Ohio C. C. 368.

And, in order to recover of the city for the injury, it is necessary for the person injured to prove, among other things, not only that the way when bare was defective, but also that the accident was due, in part at least, to the operation of this defect as such. Bailey v. Cambridge, 174 Mass. 188, 54 N. E. 523.

And that a sidewalk consists of only three boards 8 inches wide does not constitute a defect which, combined with its icy condition, will render the city liable for an injury received by a person who slips upon it. Beaton v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 416, 73 N. W. 53.

So, where a city, in paving a street, lowered the sidewalk so that it lay 18 inches below a sidewalk on an intersecting street with which it had previously been level; and about 3 feet of the intersecting walk had been cut away so that the earth walk inclined 12 inches in 3 feet; and upon this inclined walk ice and snow collected, and a person attempting to cross over it fell and was injured,—the sidewalk was in a condition in which the city had a right to leave it, and was made unsafe solely by the accumulation of ice and snow; and the city it not, therefore, liable for the injury. Wesley v. Detroit, 117 Mich. 658, 76 N. W. 104.

And, where there was a gutter in a concrete sidewalk, 20 inches wide and 3 inches deep in the middle; and the bottom of the gutter was not true grade, so that the accumulated water did not all run off after rains; and, after a heavy snowstorm, a person slipped on ice in the gutter and was injured,—the mere presence of the ice, in the absence of notice to the city, does not render it liable for injury; to make it liable the gutter must in itself have constituted such a defect as would have rendered the city liable in case the accident had happened by reason of it in the absence of the ice. Allen v. Cook, 21 R. I. 525, 45 Atl. 148.

Nor can a municipal corporation be held liable for allowing the sidewalk on one of its streets to have an inclination of $\frac{1}{4}$ of an inch to the foot greater than that provided for by its own ordinance, and permitting snow and ice to accumulate thereon, by reason of which a pedestrian was caused to fall and sustained injuries. Stamberger v. Cleveland, 22 Ohio C. C. 65.

And, where an inclination or slope of a stone apron leading from a sidewalk to a cross walk is not such as to constitute an actionable defect in the street, a slippery condition of it resulting from ordinary accumulations of ice in winter, when such accumulations are smooth, does not constitute an actionable defect. De Pere v. Hibbard, 104 Wis. 666, 80 N. W. 933.

So, where a defect in a sidewalk was harmless in itself, but existed for a long time, and afterwards became dangerous in combination with snow and ice, with reference to which the municipal corporation had no notice, the corporation is not liable simply because it had notice of the pre-existing defect. Free v. District of Columbia, 21 D. C. 608.

But, while a city is not guilty of negligence in building a sidewalk slanting for the purpose of draining, the greater the slope the greater will be the city's duty to keep it free from slippery substances, such as mud, ice, etc. Milledge v. Kansas City, 100 Mo. App. 490, 74 S. W. 892.

And while a municipal corporation is not bound to construct a sidewalk so that, when rendered slippery with snow and ice, it will be impossible for one passing over it to slip and fall, it must exercise reasonable care so that the sidewalk shall be reasonably safe at all times to one in the exercise of reasonable care and caution thereon. Chicago v. Richardson, 75 Ill. App. 198.

And the presence of snow at a defective street crossing does not relieve the municipal corporation from liability for injuries resulting from the defect if the snow was not a factor in causing the accident. Lyon v. Logansport, 9 Ind. App. 21, 35 N. E. 128.

So, a municipal corporation is under a continuing duty to prevent property owners from discharging water from spouts upon sidewalks, and thus causing dangerous accumulations of ice thereon. And the accumulation of ice from a water spout which casts water on the sidewalk is a nuisance which it is the duty of the municipal corporation to abate; and, if it negligently fails to do so, it is liable for resulting injuries. Muncie v. Hey, 164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250.

And a municipality is liable for injury sustained by one who, while exercising ordinary care, slipped upon a bed of ice covering part of a sidewalk, which was not the result of frost or the casual freezing of rain or accumulated snow, but of a flow of water from abutting premises that in freezing weather regularly produced the same result to an extent that rendered it a dangerous obstruction to travel, provided that such conditions had existed for such a length of time that the municipal officers would necessarily have discovered them by the exercise of ordinary care under all the circumstances. District of Columbia v. Frazer, 21 App. D. C. 154; McGowan v. Boston, 170 Mass. 384, 49 N. E. 633; Stone v. Poughkeepsie, 15 App. Div. 582, 44 N. Y. Supp. 609.

And, where a ridge of ice from 2 to 4 inches thick had formed across a sidewalk, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

not from natural causes alone, but from the freezing of water discharged upon the walk from a pipe in a supporting wall on abutting premises; and the ridges had negligently been allowed to remain in said condition during the whole winter preceding the accident in question; and a person slipped on one of the ridges and was injured,—the city is not relieved from liability for the injury by the circumstance that the ridge had been augmented by a recent fall of snow for which it was not responsible. Kopper v. Yonkers, 110 App. Div. 747, 97 N. Y. Supp. 425, affirmed in 188 N. Y. 592, 81 N. E. 1168.

Nor is there any distinction between a smooth and a corrugated bed of ice, as affecting the question of responsibility of the municipality for an injury from slipping on a bed of ice resulting from a flow of water from abutting premises that in freezing weather regularly produced the same result to an extent that rendered it a dangerous obstruction to travel. District of Columbia v. Frazer, supra.

And ice in a street, produced by water escaping from a water main of the city, which ran upon the street and was frozen and became a dangerous obstruction, being some 18 inches thick at one side of the street and sloping down to two or three inches at the other side, which condition had existed for ten days, constituted a nuisance; and it was the duty of the city to remove the obstruction. Cincinnati v. Grebner, 25 Ohio C. C. 700.

So, where a city, during or just after a storm, shoveled off a cross walk and threw the snow upon an iron grating at a corner, which was designed to carry off the water from the street; and this grating became clogged so that it did not do its work; and the water was thrown onto the sidewalk and froze; and a passer-by slipped and fell upon it,—the city is liable for the injury, the cause of the accident having been occasioned by the direct act of its servants. Bishop v. Goshen, 10 N. Y. S. R. 401.

Where injuries were received from falling on a sidewalk by reason of snow and ice thereon, however, no recovery can be had against the city, where it is uncertain whether the fall was on ice formed by water dripping from a platform, or from snow left on the sidewalk, when in the former event the city would not be liable. Cupp v. Elmira, 126 App. Div. 539, 110 N. Y. Supp. 742.

And a town or city should not be held liable upon less notice for the existence of obstructions by snow and ice in the streets due to artificial causes, which it has no agency in creating, than from those arising from natural causes. Winsor v. Tripp, 12 R. I. 454.

And evidence that a woman was injured by stepping on a ridge of ice about 8 inches high, which had formed by water dripping from the eaves of an abutting building, together with conflicting evidence on the question as to whether the general sidewalks of the city were slippery and icy from rain suddenly turning to ice, and as to whether the person injured knew of the dangerous character of the locality, is sufficient to go to the jury in an action by the woman against the city for damages for the injury. Miller v. Bradford, 186 Pa. 164, 40 Atl. 409.

Where a person falls and is injured because of a ridge of earth upon a cross walk, the sides of which are covered with snow and ice, whether the way when bare is defective, and whether the accident is wholly or partly caused by this defect, are questions for the jury in an action against the city for the injury. Bailey v. Cambridge, 174 Mass. 188, 54 N. W. 523.

And the fact that the jury, in an action for an injury on an icy sidewalk, might have had some difficulty in determining whether the plaintiff's accident was caused by the irregular surface of the walk, or by its mere slippery condition, does not warrant the court in taking the issue from the jury and determining the question in favor of the municipality. Hodges v. Waterloo, 109 Iowa, 444, 80 N. W. 523.

e. General condition and other accidents as evidence of negligence.

1. General condition of street.

The bad condition of a street or sidewalk in the immediate vicinity of a place of an accident may be shown in an action for damages for the injury, upon the question of negligence and notice upon the part of the city. Mt. Sterling v. Crummy, 73 Ill. App. 572; Shelbyville v. Brant, 61 Ill. App. 153; Witt v. Latimer (Iowa) 117 N. W. 680; Duncan v. Grand Rapids, 121 Wis. 626, 99 N. W. 317; O'Neil v. West Branch, 81 Mich. 544, 45 N. W. 1023; Stebbins v. Oneida, 1 Silv. Sup. Ct. 240, 5 N. Y. Supp. 483; Belton v. Turner (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 831.

And evidence that the planks of a sidewalk were rotten for some distance either side of the place where an injury occurred is admissible, in an action against the city for an injury, to show that the city had notice of the bad condition of the walk. Viellesse v. Green Bay, 110 Wis. 160, 85 N. W. 665; Smith v. Butler, 48 Mo. App. 663.

Nor need the evidence in an action against a municipal corporation for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk be confined to the condition of the sidewalk at the immediate place of the accident; it may properly take in the condition of the walk along the premises in front of which the injury occurred. Huff v. Marshall, 97 Mo. App. 542, 71 S. W. 477.

And that other obstructions not alleged in the petition narrowed the roadway at the point in question, and the condition of the street, together with all the surroundings at the time and place of the accident in question, are competent and admissible in evidence in an action against a city for negligently allowing an obstruction to remain in a street unguarded and without lights or other warnings to travelers thereon, by reason of which an accident occurred. Kansas City v. McDonald, 60 Kan. 481, 45 L.R.A. 429, 57 Pac. 123.

So, evidence that other gutter crossings in the city were in a similar condition to the one at which the accident in question occurred is competent in an action against a city for an injury caused by falling into an open gutter between a street crossing and a curbstone. Heiss v. Lancaster, 203 Pa. 260, 52 Atl. 201.

And, on the trial of an issue as to whether the material in a sidewalk was unfit for the purpose and therefore washed out by ponded surface water, leaving a hole, evidence that subsequently the rain washed another hole in the same sidewalk under similar conditions is relevant. Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785, 40 S. E. 318.

And, where a person fell through an iron and glass framework covering an area under a sidewalk, evidence of the condition of the frames adjoining on either side, which were of the same material and put in about the same time, is admissible in an action for the injury. Buckley v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. 188, 68 S. W. 1069.

So, a witness in an action against a city for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk may be allowed to exhibit to the jury pieces of the plank in which was the hole which caused the injury, for the purpose of showing its condition, where the hole in the walk and its rotten condition are established. Viellesse v. Green Bay, supra.

And photographs of a sidewalk at a place where a person was injured by a defect showing a cement patch where the walk had been repaired are admissible in evidence on an issue as to the extent of a hole in the sidewalk. San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex. Civ. App.) 78 S. W. 28.

A bad condition of a sidewalk at a place remote from the accident in question, however, cannot be shown in an action against a city for an injury alleged to have been caused by an obstruction or defect in a street. Mt. Sterling v. Crummy, 73 Ill. App. 573.

And evidence as to the defective condition of the sidewalks a block or more each way from a cross walk where an injury occurred from a passenger stepping into a hole in it is inadmissible in an action against the city for the injury. Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 5 L.R.A. 143, 13 Am. St. Rep. 457, 42 N. W. 1011.

Nor is evidence as to a generally defective condition of a sidewalk in the vicinity of an accident admissible, where the particular defect causing the injury, such as the breaking down of a strong plank, had no relation to such general condition. Lyon v. Grand Rapids, 121 Wis. 609, 99 N. W. 311.

And evidence that the wooden walks of a city were generally in defective condition does not establish a particular defect by which an injury was alleged to have been caused. Boulder v. Weger, 17 Colo. App. 69, 66 Pac. 1070.

And the fact that sidewalks in other cities were constructed upon the same plan as the sidewalk in question is not admissible in evidence in an action against a city for an injury resulting from a defective sidewalk. Stone v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 644, 74 Pac. 808.

So, the generally good condition of a sidewalk prior to an accident thereon is admissible in an action by a pedestrian who was injured by slipping upon refuse matter on the sidewalk used for market purposes by a market company, brought against the city and the market company, on behalf of the defendants, to meet evidence introduced by the plaintiff tending to prove the existence of a nuisance, and showing that the sidewalk had been in bad condition for many years on account of the same refuse matter. O'Dwyer v. Northern Market Co. 30 App. D. C. 244.

And evidence, in an action against a city for an injury from a projecting door in a sidewalk, that there were no other such doors in the city, is not prejudicial to the city, where it is not sought to show that the city was negligent in this instance by reason of negligence in other instances, but is pertinent as bearing upon the question of contributory negligence. Smith v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 481, 74 Pac. 674.

But findings, in an action against a city, that the sidewalk in question had been used for a long time by day and by night by a large number of people without accident, are not conclusive where the nature of the alleged defect can be definitely appreciated, and proof of prior use by the general public without injury, if admissible at all, can, at the most, only be an evidentiary circumstance bearing on the question of due care. Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757.

So, evidence of the defective condition of a sidewalk before or after the accident in question is admissible in an action against a city for damages alleged to have resulted from a defective or obstructed sidewalk, if within such reasonable time as to justify the inference that it was in such condition at the time of the accident. Norton v. Kramer, 180 Mo. 536, 79 S. W. 699; Chicago v. Dalle, 115 Ill. 386, 5 N. E. 578; Vandalia v. Ropp, 39 Ill. App. 344; Lohr v. Philipsburg, 165 Pa. 109, 30 Atl. 822; Reed v. Spokane, 21 Wash. 218, 57 Pac. 803; Monroeville v. Weihl, 13 Ohio C. C. 689.

And witnesses who examined a sidewalk after an accident thereon are competent to testify as to its condition, there being other evidence that it was practically the same as when the accident occurred. Harrison v. Ayrshire, 123 Iowa, 528, 99 N. W. 132.

And evidence, in an action against a municipal corporation for personal injuries received from a defective sidewalk, that the walk was in the same condition at various times, is admissible as a statement of fact, and is not a mere conclusion. Yeager v. Spirit Lake, 115 Iowa, 593, 88 N. W. 1095.

So, where an injury occurred by a fall upon a temporary sidewalk at a place where a street was being regraded, the accident happening between midnight and 1 o'clock A. M., evidence of the condition of the sidewalk 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

walk just before daylight that morning, and before there was any traffic on the street, is admissible in an action for the injury. Jones v. Seattle (Wash.) 98 Pac. 743.

And the condition of a coal hole and cover which projected above the sidewalk in which they were placed, and over which a person fell and was injured, about an hour and a half after the accident, is admissible in evidence in an action for the injury, where the nature of the coal hole and cover was such that there could have been no substantial change in their condition in the meantime. Chicago v. Jarvis, 226 Ill. 614, 80 N. E. 1079.

Nor is evidence of the condition of a defective highway a long time after an accident inadmissible in an action for damages for injuries resulting from the accident, if no repairs or changes in the condition had been made during that time. Salladay v. Dodgeville, 85 Wis. 318, 20 L.R.A. 541, 55 N. W. 696; Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196; Dallas v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S. W. 606.

And a photograph of a hole or defect in the street, taken a long time after a person fell into it and was injured, is admissible in evidence in an action for the injury, where it appears that the photograph correctly represented the condition of the hole on the day of the accident, with an explanation of any changes. Miller v. New York, 104 App. Div. 33, 93 N. Y. Supp. 227; San Antonio v. Talerico, supra.

But, while the defective condition of a sidewalk may sometimes be shown by evidence of its condition at a subsequent time, when the time is such that the evidence in respect to the subsequent defective condition would more probably lead to a wrong inference than a correct one such evidence should not be admitted. Parkhill v. Brighton, 61 Iowa, 103, 15 N. W. 853; Ottawa v. Black, 10 Kan. App. 439, 61 Pac. 985; Dallas v. Moore, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 74 S. W. 95.

And, where a person was injured by a loosened plank in a sidewalk, one end of which was raised above the level of the sidewalk, the condition of the stringers underneath the walk something over a year after the injury complained of is not admissible in evidence in an action for the injury. Edwards v. Cedar Rapids, 138 Iowa, 421, 116 N. W. 323.

So, the condition of a sidewalk more than two years prior to the injury complained of may be properly excluded in an action against a city for an injury caused by falling into a hole in a cross walk. Scheel v. Detroit, 130 Mich. 51, 89 N. W. 554, 90 N. W. 274.

But the admission of evidence in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street, of the condition of the sidewalk two years after the accident in question, does not justify the granting of a new trial where there was no dispute but that the condition of the sidewalk was the same at the expiration of such two years as at the time of the accident. Brewer v. New York, 31 App. Div. 244, 52 N. Y. Supp. 865.

So, where a portion of a sidewalk is generally defective and in disrepair, evidence that it had remained so for a considerable length of time previous to an accident caused thereby must be received as bearing upon the question of negligence of the municipal corporation in failing to ascertain and repair the particular defect complained of. Kellogg v. Janesville, 34 Minn. 132, 24 N. W. 359.

But that similar defects were frequently suffered to continue for a considerable time without attention from the public authorities is immaterial and inadmissible in evidence, in an action against a city for an injury caused by a defect in one of its streets, the jury having nothing to do with any negligence except that which resulted in the injury complained of. Grand Rapids v. Wyman, 46 Mich. 516, 9 N. W. 833.

And that a walk was built in the manner customarily adopted by the city is no defense in an action against the city for an injury alleged to have resulted from a defect, the fact that negligence was usual or customary being no defense. Weber v. Creston, 75 Iowa, 16, 39 N. W. 126.

License for negligence in making an excavation in a street will not be presumed against a city from the overlooking by it of negligence committed on former occasions in similar cases. Corsicana v. Tobin, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 492, 57 S. W. 319.

And evidence that in former years a city had been negligent in allowing the sidewalks in front of certain vacant lots to become encumbered by snow and ice is inadmissible in an action against the city for an injury caused by snow and ice upon the sidewalk in front of those lots. Crawford v. New York, 68 App. Div. 107, 74 N. Y. Supp. 261.

Nor is the fact that sidewalks similarly constructed, or constructed in any given manner, were common in other cities, towns, or localities, admissible in evidence in an action against the city for an injury from the alleged slippery condition of a sidewalk caused by ice amounting to a defect, for the purpose of showing either that the sidewalk was properly constructed, or that the person injured did not exercise proper care and prudence in passing over it. Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520.

And an official of a city who has had charge of the repairs of streets and sidewalks for some years, and who is familiar with the condition of streets and sidewalks of many cities, is not competent to testify as to whether it is common to find in cities depressions in the sidewalks, caused by irregularities in the paving or covering, large enough to admit a portion of the foot of an ordinary adult. Marvin v. New Bedford, 153 Mass. 464, 33 N. E. 605.

2. Subsequent repair or removal of defect or obstruction.

Evidence that, after an accident resulting from a defect or obstruction in a street, the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

city repaired the same, is competent, in an action against the city for injuries received in such accident, for the purpose of showing that the defect was one which the city was bound to repair. Brennan v. St. Louis, 92 Mo. 482, 2 S. W. 481; Shelbyville v. Brant, 61 Ill. App. 153; Vandalia v. Ropp, 39 Ill. App. 344; Kelley v. Boston, 201 Mass. 86, 87 N. E. 494.

And as tending to show that the street was out of repair at the time of the accident. Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36.

And evidence of the removal from a street of an obstruction after an accident caused by it is competent to show that the obstruction was not necessary. Dillon v. Raleigh, 124 N. C. 184, 32 S. E. 548; Rufher v. Aurora, 71 Mo. App. 418.

So, the fact that a sidewalk was removed by the city authorities, and another and better one substituted therefor soon after an injury occurred, may be considered, in an action for the injury, as a circumstance tending to show that the walk removed was out of repair. Emporia v. Schmidling, 33 Kan. 485, 6 Pac. 893.

And, while removal of a boulder constituting an obstruction in a city street, by the city after an injury caused thereby, is not evidence, in an action for the injury, of negligence in failing to remove it before that time; it is relevant as tending to show that the point where the accident occurred was in a street over which the city had assumed control, and hence was under obligation to repair. May v. Anaconda, 26 Mont. 140, 66 Pac. 759.

So, where there had been for a long time an open ditch or drain across a street; and over this ditch there was a bridge on the westerly side of the street; and the city removed this bridge and built a new one across the center of the street, placing no guard or protection where the old bridge had stood; and a person was injured by driving into the ditch at the place where the old bridge had been,—evidence that, after the accident, the city widened the bridge so as to cover the exposed portion of the ditch is admissible in an action for the injury, though not very strong, as tending to show that the condition of the street was such that it was at least proper that the ditch should be covered at that point. O'Leary v. Mankato, 21 Minn. 65.

And, where a contractor holding a contract with a village to keep a sidewalk in repair testifies, in an action for damages against the city for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, that, immediately after the accident, he examined the sidewalk at the point in question and found it in good condition, it is competent to ask him, on cross-examination, whether he did not, a few days later, repair the sidewalk at the point in question. Bond Hill v. Atkinson, 16 Ohio C. C. 470.

It has been held, however, that the existence of a previous defect or nuisance in a street, which has been removed, has no tendency to prove a subsequent one, or to show notice to the city that another similar obstruction will be created. Donaldson v. Boston, 16 Gray. 508.

And that the repairing of a sidewalk after an accident does not tend to show knowledge upon the part of the city of the defect before the accident and evidence of such repairing, in an action against the city for the injury, is improper and prejudicial. Dallas v. Meyers (Tex. Civ. App.) 55 S. W. 742.

And evidence that an obstruction which caused an injury has since been removed is incompetent, in an action for damages for the injury, to prove the character of the obstruction. Dillon v. Raleigh, supra.

So, where, in an action against a city for a personal injury, the plaintiff fails to show the nature of the defect in the sidewalk complained of at the time and before the accident, it is error to predicate the existence of an actionable defect upon the fact of repairs subsequent to the accident. Lombar v. East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14, 48 N. W. 947.

And, where a sidewalk was rebuilt after an injury thereon, and witnesses in the employ of an abutting owner testified that it was rebuilt because of a change of grade, the opinion of a witness that the sidewalk was rebuilt because it needed rebuilding is inadmissible. Rogers v. Orion, 116 Mich. 324, 74 N. W. 463.

But withdrawal by plaintiff's attorney, in the presence of the jury, of evidence that the city repaired the street after plaintiff's injury thereon; and the court's announcement of the withdrawal, and direction that the evidence should not be considered,—cure error in its admission. Heberling v. Warrensburg, 133 Mo. App. 544, 113 S. W. 673; Robinson v. Cedar Rapids, 100 Iowa, 662, 69 N. W. 1064.

And an attempt to show that the sidewalk in question was repaired after an accident is not a ground for reversal of a judgment in favor of the person injured, where neither bad faith nor prejudice appears. Normal v. Bright, 125 Ill. App. 478, affirmed in 223 Ill. 99, 79 N. E. 90.

So, where a defect consisting of a hole in a sidewalk is shown to have existed prior to the accident, the admission of evidence showing subsequent repairs, if erroneous, is without prejudice. Lombar v. East Tawas, supra.

And evidence that, after an injury caused by defect in a street from a large hole washed in one side of the traveled way, a bridge was built by the village at that place, which freed the street from the injurious effect of water crossing it, is incompetent in an action against the city for the injury; but, where it further appeared that, before the accident, the stone for the bridge had all been placed upon the street, evidence of which was competent, the further proof of the completion of the bridge planned before the accident was harmless. Mt. Morris v. Kanode, 98 Ill. App. 373, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

3. Other accidents.

The frequency of accidents at a particular place is good evidence of its dangerous character; and the prevailing rule would seem to be that, in an action against a municipal corporation to recover damages for injuries received from a fall caused by an obstruction or defect in a street or sidewalk, proof that other accidents of the same character had been frequent there is admissible as tending to show the existence of a dangerous condition. District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 519, 27 L. ed. 618, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840; District of Columbia v. Duryee, 29 App. D. C. 37, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 675; Aurora v. Brown, 12 Ill. App. 122, affirmed in 109 Ill. 165; Taylorville v. Stafford, 196 Ill. 288, 83 N. E. 624; Chicago v. Jarvis, 226 Ill. 614, 80 N. E. 1079; Smith v. Des Moines, 84 Iowa, 685, 51 N. W. 77; Burrows v. Lake Crystal, 61 Minn. 357, 63 N. W. 745; Golden v. Clinton, 54 Mo. App. 100; Stebbins v. Oneida, 1 Silv. Sup. Ct. 240, 5 N. Y. Supp. 483; Avery v. Syracuse, 29 Hun. 537.

Within this rule, evidence of similar accidents to other persons, caused by the same obstruction, is admissible in an action against a city for negligently permitting an obstruction to exist in a street or sidewalk, by means of which a person was injured. Scott v. New Orleans, 21 C. C. A. 402, 41 U. S. App. 498, 75 Fed. 373; Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36; Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, 20 So. 424; Yeager v. Spirit Lake, 115 Iowa, 593, 88 N. W. 1095; Bailey v. Centerville, 115 Iowa, 271, 88 N. W. 379; Lombar v. East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14, 48 N. W. 947; Gillrie v. Lockport, 12 N. Y. S. R. 707; Fordham v. Gouverneur, 160 N. Y. 541, 55 N. E. 290; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43; Magee v. Troy, 48 Hun. 383, 1 N. Y. Supp. 24; Sherman v. Oneonta, 49 N. Y. S. R. 267, 21 N. Y. Supp. 137; Smith v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 481, 74 Pac. 674.

On the issue as to the extent and character of the defect, and whether it was such as the city was bound to repair. Birmingham v. Starr, supra.

And similar accidents occurring in the same neighborhood may be shown in evidence in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction or defect in a street, not only as tending to show the actual condition of the walk, but also as tending to show notice to the city. Osborne v. Detroit, supra.

Thus, where roots of a tree were negligently left projecting above a sidewalk, and the foot of a pedestrian at night was caught thereby, causing her to fall and injuring her, evidence, in an action against the municipal corporation for the injury, that another person was tripped and thrown by the same roots at the same place some days previously is admissible as tending to show that they were such as to occasion falls. Gilmer v. Atlanta, 77 Ga. 688.

And, where an action is brought against a city for injuries resulting from falling through a cellar door on one of its sidewalks, evidence that children upon different occasions had previously fallen into such openings is admissible as bearing upon the question as to the reasonable safety of the city's sidewalks according to the system adopted by it in regard to cellars therein in front of business houses. Augusta v. Hafers, 61 Ga. 48, 34 Am. Rep. 95.

So, evidence by witnesses, in an action for an injury sustained on an icy sidewalk, that, subsequent to the accident and on the same afternoon, they had slipped on ice at the same place; and that another person had been seen to slip about the same time and place; and that, three days previous to the accident, one of them had fallen upon the same sidewalk,—is competent as tending to show the actual condition of the sidewalk. Masters v. Troy, 50 Hun, 485, 3 N. Y. Supp. 450.

And that a culvert had previously given way is admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that the culvert was defectively constructed, and that the municipal corporation had notice of the defect. Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303.

And the testimony of a witness in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction in a road, that he had always driven around the place in question after having made one attempt to cross over it, is admissible as tending to show the condition of the street. Sherman v. Oneonta, supra.

But evidence of similar accidents to other persons, caused by the same obstruction or defect in a street, is not competent for the purpose of showing independent acts of negligence. Chicago v. Jarvis, 226 Ill. 614, 80 N. E. 1079; Taylorville v. Stafford, supra; Barrett v. Hammond, 87 Wis. 654, 58 N. W. 1053.

Nor is the fact that other people may, at different times, have stumbled or fallen at the same place, competent to show either the character of the defect or obstruction at the time of the injury in question, or that the person injured did not exercise ordinary care, or that the city had notice of the defect. Birmingham v. Starr, supra; Circleville v. Sohn, 20 Ohio C. C. 363.

And evidence that similar accidents had happened to others from driving against an obstruction in a street is not admissible in an action against a city for damages for an injury caused by driving against the obstruction in question, when not offered for the purpose of showing notice to the town of the defect, but to prove that the obstruction constituted a defect and was in the traveled part of the highway. Phillips v. Willow, 70 Wis. 6, 5 Am. St. Rep. 114, 34 N. W. 731.

Nor is the testimony of a witness that she fell on the same defective walk three or four days after the fall in question admissible in an action by a person injured by reason of the tipping up of a loose plank in a sidewalk, where there was nothing to show how the witness was walking, or whether using due care, or that the accident was due to the same cause. McGrail v. Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52, 53 N. W. 955.

And the testimony of a witness in such an action, that, about two years prior to the accident in question, he fell upon the ice at the same place, and that there was then about the same amount of ice, is inadmissible where it does not appear that the prior accumulation was caused by defects in the sidewalk. Gillrie v. Lockport, 122 N. Y. 403, 25 N. E. 357.

So, the contrary rule has been squarely held, that the testimony of witnesses in an action against a city for injuries caused by falling into a hole in a sidewalk, that they fell into the same hole on the same night, is inadmissible. Moore v. Richmond, 85 Va. 538, 8 S. E. 387.

And it has been held that the fact that other persons, in passing upon a sidewalk, had met with difficulty and slipped there, is inadmissible in evidence, in an action by a person against the city for an injury received at that place from an alleged defect in the sidewalk, consisting of its slippery condition caused by ice, as presenting a collateral issue, and raising an issue material in the case which the other party was not bound to be prepared to meet. Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520; Marvin v. New Bedford, 158 Mass. 464, 33 N. E. 605.

But while, under this rule, injuries to others in the same accident are irrelevant and inadmissible in an action against a city for injuries from a defect or obstruction in a city street, an instruction that such evidence was admitted only as part of the circumstances surrounding the accident; and that it was not to be considered in relation to, or in connection with, any injuries suffered by the person injured,—renders the admission of such evidence harmless. Apker v. Hoquiam (Wash.) 99 Pac. 746.

And in erroneous admission of testimony that a witness had her attention called to a defective sidewalk by falling thereon is without prejudice where she was afterwards permitted without objection to tell how, when, and where she fell. Robinson v. Cedar Rapids, 100 Iowa, 662, 69 N. W. 1064.

So, while the absence of any prior accident due to an alleged defect or obstruction in a street is not conclusive that the construction is a proper one, it is important in establishing the propriety of the construction and in relieving the municipal corporation from any imputation of negligence in not changing it. Butler v. Oxford, 186 N. Y. 444, 79 N. E. 712.

And it is cogent evidence of the lack of any negligence on the part of the city in failing to guard the spot. Hubbell v. Yonkers, 104 N. Y. 434, 58 Am. Rep. 522, 10 N. E. 858.

And the fact that no previous accident had happened because of a defect or obstruction in a street is important as bearing upon the question whether or not the street was reasonably safe, and as bearing upon the question of notice to the municipality. Moroney v. New York, 117 App. Div. 843, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1135, affirmed in 190 N. Y. 560, 83 N. E. 1128.

And evidence that a number of persons had passed along a sidewalk without harm is admissible, in an action for damages for injuries received from slipping on a formation of ice extending across the sidewalk, as tending to show that the ice was not slippery and dangerous. Calkins v. Hartford, 33 Conn. 57, 87 Am. Dec. 194.

So, where, in constructing a bridge, a city made an excavation in the bed of a shallow stream where it was crossed by a street, and left the same unguarded, and a child fell in and was injured; and there was evidence tending to show that, previous to the excavation, the stream was not dangerous,—the testimony of a witness that she had never before heard of anyone being drowned there is competent. Indianapolis v. Emmelman, 108 Ind. 530, 58 Am. Rep. 65, 9 N. E. 155.

But the fact that no previous accident has resulted from a defect or obstruction in a street does not excuse the municipality for allowing the defect or obstruction to continue. Moroney v. New York, supra.

And the facts that an obstructed street had been in the same condition for forty years, and that there had been no previous accidents of a similar character to the accident in question, do not establish the safety of the street, or that the village authorities had no reason to apprehend the occurrence of the accident in question. Bradner v. Warwick, 91 App. Div. 408, 86 N. Y. Supp. 935.

And that no accident had previously happened at the place of an alleged defect is not competent, has been held by high authority. Marvin v. New Bedford, supra.

f. Sufficiency of way, how determined.

Whether a given street was in a reasonably safe condition for the convenience of travel is a practical question, to be determined by the jury in each case by the particular circumstances. Brennan v. St. Louis, 92 Mo. 482, 2 S. W. 481; Taubman v. Lexington, 25 Mo. App. 218; Anniston v. Ivey, 151 Ala. 392, 44 So. 48; Americus v. Johnson, 2 Ga. App. 378, 58 S. E. 518; Rock Island v. Drost, 71 Ill. App. 613; Vandalia v. Ropp, 39 Ill. App. 344; Weber v. Creston, 75 Iowa, 16, 39 N. W. 126; Scurlock v. Boone (Iowa) 120 N. W. 313; Witham v. Portland, 72 Me. 539; Hall v. Lowell, 10 Cush. 260; Metz v. Butte, 27 Mont. 506, 71 Pac. 761; Craig v. Sedalia, 63 Mo. 417; Caton v. Sedalia, 62 Mo. App. 227; Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520; McDowell v. Auburn, 126 App. Div. 173, 110 N. Y. Supp. 941; Bullock v. New York, 99 N. Y. 654, 2 N. E. 1; Bennett v. Sing Sing, 38 N. Y. S. R. 347, 14 N. Y. Supp. 463; Welsh v. Amesbury, 170 Mass. 437, 49 N. E. 735; Culverson v. Maryville, 67 Mo. App. 343; McClure v. Sparta, 84 Wis. 269, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

36 Am. St. Rep. 924, 54 N. W. 337; Saylor v. Montesano, 11 Wash. 328, 39 Pac. 653; McNamara v. Clintonville, 62 Wis. 207, 51 Am. Rep. 722, 22 N. W. 472; Hill v. Fond du Lac, 56 Wis. 242, 14 N. W. 25; Peake v. Superior, 106 Wis. 403, 82 N. W. 306; Kawiecka v. Superior (Wis.) 118 N. W. 192; Merrill v. Portland, 4 Cliff. 138, Fed. Cas. No. 9470.

And the court should not assume the existence of the bad condition of the street in its instructions. Rock Island v. Drost, supra.

And whether an obstruction or a defect in a street is such that it is negligence on the part of the municipality to suffer it to exist is generally and in the main a question of fact for a jury. Michigan City v. Boeckling, 122 Ind. 39, 23 N. E. 518; District of Columbia v. Duryee, 29 App. D. C. 327, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 675; Jarrell v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 454, 56 Atl. 379; Augusta v. Tharpe, 113 Ga. 152, 38 S. E. 389; Harrell v. Macon, 1 Ga. App. 413, 58 S. E. 124; Pontiac v. Grandy, 108 Ill. App. 466; Champaign v. Jones, 132 Ill. 304, 23 N. E. 1125; Newport v. Miller, 93 Ky. 22, 18 S. W. 835.

And the rule is the same where the evidence in an action for injuries received in consequence of a defective condition of a sidewalk in a city leaves it doubtful what caused the injury complained of. Alexander v. Big Rapids, 70 Mich. 224, 38 N. W. 227.

And, where there was a defect in a street, from which an injury resulted of such a character that reasonable and prudent men might reasonably differ as to whether an accident could or should not have reasonably been anticipated from its existence, then the case is generally one for the jury. Archer v. Mt. Vernon, 57 App. Div. 32, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1040.

So, whether, when a part of a sidewalk is defective through negligence of the city, the other part which is not defective is sufficient and reasonably safe and convenient for travel thereon, is a question of fact for a jury. Tritz v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 632; Streeter v. Breckenridge, 23 Mo. App. 244.

And, where a defect in a sidewalk, which caused an injury, was one about which different minds might honestly draw different conclusions as to its liability to cause an accident, and the danger which might reasonably be anticipated from its existence, the question as to the negligence of the city in permitting it to exist should be submitted to a jury. Denver v. Hubbard, 29 Colo. 529, 69 Pac. 508.

Nor should a jury, in determining from the evidence of its condition whether a highway was or was not in a reasonably safe condition for travel, be restricted to the mere inquiry whether a certain class of persons may or may not think that accidents are liable to befall ordinarily careful travelers at the place of the alleged insufficiency, by reason thereof. Draper v. Iron- ton, 42 Wis. 696; Peake v. Superior, supra; Chicago v. McGiven, 78 Ill. 347.

And a witness in an action against a city for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk cannot give his opinion as to whether the sidewalk was reasonably safe. Metz v. Butte, 27 Mont. 506, 71 Pac. 761; Anniston v. Ivey, 151 Ala. 392, 44 So. 48; District of Columbia v. Haller, 4 App. D. C. 405; Chicago v. McGiven, supra; Alexander v. Mt. Sterling, 71 Ill. 366; Atherton v. Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241, 72 N. W. 208; Heberling v. Warrensburg, 133 Mo. App. 544, 113 S. W. 673; McKim v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 243, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 506, 66 Atl. 340.

A witness in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street must give the facts as to the condition of the walk, and the jury must decide as to its safety. Mt. Vernon v. Brooks, 39 Ill. App. 426.

Where the existence of a particular obstruction upon a sidewalk is admitted, or the proof of its existence is clear and conclusive, however, it is a question of law whether or not the obstruction is such as to render the sidewalk not in a reasonably safe condition, thereby making the corporation liable in damages to a person injured by reason thereof. Parrish v. Huntington, 57 W. Va. 286, 50 S. E. 416.

And, when the facts bearing upon the subject are unquestioned, or are sustained by uncontroverted testimony, their legal effect is a matter of law. Witham v. Portland, 72 Me. 539.

But, when the fact is determined by the jury, their finding will not be disturbed unless absolutely unsupported by the evidence. Saylor v. Montesano, 11 Wash. 328, 39 Pac. 653.

And a judgment for the plaintiff in an action for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street, on evidence tending to show that the street was unsafe, and that the city knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care could have known, of its condition, will not be disturbed on appeal as against the evidence, though the evidence was quite conflicting, and the preponderance of it tended to establish that the crossing where the injury occurred was in a reasonably safe condition for public travel. Henderson v. Sizemore, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1134, 104 S. W. 722; Kawiecka v. Superior (Wis.) 118 N. W. 192.

And, where the question in an action against a city was whether the condition of a street was such that danger was reasonably to be apprehended, which must be determined by the facts proven; and the jury was so instructed,—refusal to instruct that a certain defect in a street, therein described, would not render the city liable as for negligence, was not erroneous. Kelly v. New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 178.

So, where the jury in an action against a city for an injury caused by an alleged obstruction in a street, at the request of the defendant, were permitted personally to inspect the obstruction and form their own opinion concerning it, a verdict in favor of the plaintiff will be permitted to stand, although the evidence as to the dangerous character of the obstruction was rather weak. Atlanta v. Milam, 95 Ga. 135, 22 S. E. 43.

X. Failure to prevent improper conduct in streets as affecting liability.

This has been made the subject of an independent subject note in this series.

XI. Precautions against injury.

a. Warning of obstruction.

1. General rules.

A city having knowledge of a dangerous obstruction or defect in a street is bound to exercise ordinary care for the protection of the traveling public in giving warning of the danger. Louisville v. Keher, 117 Ky. 841, 79 S. W. 270; McPherson v. District of Columbia, 7 Mackey, 564; Holitz v. Kansas City, 68 Kan. 157, 74 Pac. 594; Hayes v. West Bay City, 91 Mich. 418, 51 N. W. 1067; Dolan v. Brooklyn, 1 Alb. L. J. 315, reversing 46 Barb. 604; Bauer v. Rochester, 35 N. Y. S. R. 959, 12 N. Y. Supp. 418; Revis v. Raleigh (N. C.) 63 S. E. 1049; O'Malley v. Parsons, 191 Pa. 612, 71 Am. St. Rep. 778, 43 Atl. 384; Pittston v. Hart, 89 Pa. 389; Memphis v. Lasser, 9 Humph. 760.

And this is so whether the obstruction was made or created by the city, or by an individual. Holitz v. Kansas City, supra.

And whether the work causing it is being done by the corporation through its own servants, or by contract, or by subcontractors under the primary contractor. Savannah v. Waldner, 49 Ga. 324.

The duty of municipal corporations to keep highways in repair and safe for travel includes the duty to use proper precautions against accident while they are unsafe and out of repair. Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 10 N. W. 162.

And, if it is necessary to erect barriers at certain places in order to maintain streets in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, failure upon the part of the municipal corporation to do so is negligence. Andrews v. Elmira, 128 App. Div. 699, 113 N. Y. Supp. 711.

While a city has the right temporarily to allow obstructions on the streets and sidewalks for any lawful purpose, while they remain there the traveling public should have notice and warning thereof; and, if a city permits a dangerous obstruction on a street, it can justify its action only by showing that it took proper steps to protect the public. Arthur v. Charleston, 51 W. Va. 132, 41 S. E. 171; O'Rourke v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 520, 57 N. W. 738.

And, if a work in a street amounting to a nuisance is, for any reason, tolerated by the authorities, it is their duty to exercise a supervision over its construction and condition; and it is negligence and a breach of duty in them to omit to exercise such supervision. Wendell v. Troy, 39 Barb. 329, affirmed in 4 Abb. App. Dec. 563.

So, under a statutory requirement that a city must keep its streets in a condition reasonably safe and fit for travel, it is its duty to place signals or other safeguards at given points of danger or obstruction, or to give other proper warning, or to see that the street is closed to travel, and it is liable for injuries resulting in case of non-performance of such duty. Joslyn v. Detroit, 74 Mich. 458, 42 N. W. 50.

Nor is a municipal corporation permitting an obstruction in a street relieved from liability for failure in the performance of its duty to have such safeguards and lights as will protect travelers from accident and injury thereby, by the fact that the work was in the hands of contractors who were liable for the injury. Bauer v. Rochester, supra; Brusso v. Buffalo, 90 N. Y. 679; Storrs v. Utica, 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437; McAllister v. Albany, 18 Or. 426, 23 Pac. 845; Drake v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 81, 94 Am. St. Rep. 644, 70 Pac. 231.

Or by the fact that the omission was that of some person who had previously assumed to give warning. Tiers v. New York, 74 Hun, 462, 26 N. Y. Supp. 688.

But, where blasting is done in a street by individuals, and a team is thereby frightened and caused to run away, and an injury results, evidence that the persons in charge of the work were expressly told by the alderman of the city that no blasting should be done is admissible in an action against the city for damages for the injury. Joliet v. Seward, 86 Ill. 402, 29 Am. Rep. 35.

Nor does the responsibility of a city for an obstruction in a street without guard or light depend upon the question whether its charter requires the streets to be kept in repair, or simply leaves it permissive. Arnold v. San Jose, 81 Cal. 618, 22 Pac. 877.

And, where there is an obstruction consisting of an uncovered excavation across a street, the duty of the city to repair the street, or to give warning of the danger to travelers, is not affected by the fact that the day after the defect occurred was Sunday. Snook v. Anaconda, 26 Mont. 128, 66 Pac. 756.

And evidence of an overseer of streets of a city as to its rules in relation to doing street work on Sunday are properly excluded in an action against the city in such a case. Ibid.

So, the obligation of a municipal corporation to erect barriers around an obstruction, such as an area adjoining or extending into one of its highways, grows out of the duty which rests upon municipal corporations to maintain their streets and sidewalks in a safe condition for those who may rightfully use them, whether they be grown persons or children. Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369.

And, where a person fell into an excavation in a sidewalk made for the purpose of erecting a building, an instruction in an action for the injury, with reference to the "unsafe and dangerous condition of the sidewalk," is not objectionable as tending to mislead the jury by keeping before it the defective condition of the walk instead of the defective manner of guarding or of giving notice of the condition, which was legal and permissive. Kansas City v. Birmingham, 45 Kan. 212, 25 Pac. 569.

Nor is a city ordinance permitting a person engaged in building to deposit material upon the street, occupying one half of its width, a defense to an action against the city for negligence in permitting obstructions to remain in the street at night without any light, or other signal to give warning of them, in consequence of which a traveler sustains injuries. McCoull v. Manchester, 85 Va. 579, 2 L.R.A. 691, 8 S. E. 379.

And an instruction on the negligence of a city in leaving open a street excavation without guarding it is not erroneous because it does not submit the issue of contributory negligence, where that issue is submitted in other instructions. Campbell v. Stanberry, 105 Mo. App. 56, 78 S. W. 292.

So, where it appears, in an action against a city for a personal injury, that the injury was caused by the negligence of the city in failing to place a barrier along the edge of a sidewalk, the city cannot urge that a defect in the sidewalk, for which it was responsible, caused the injuries, rather than the failure to maintain a barrier. Newcastle v. Griggs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757.

All that is required of a municipal corporation, however, is that it shall see that its sidewalks are reasonably safe and fit for travel, and, if they are kept in that condition, whether it is done by a contractor engaged in work on the street, an abutting property owner, or the city, it is to be treated as done by the city, and there can be no liability; and the city will not be held liable for an injury caused by an excavation in a sidewalk because it placed no barriers or lights thereon where the contractor and the property holder had erected barriers and placed lights. Walker v. Ann Arbor, 111 Mich. 1, 69 N. W. 87; Kansas City v. Birmingham, supra.

Nor does the mere fact that there was no light at a place where an injury was received from an alleged obstruction in a street necessarily show negligence upon the part of the municipality, since its absence might be accounted for in many ways consistent with freedom from legal negligence. O'Rourke v. Sioux Falls, 4 S. D. 47, 19 L.R.A. 789, 46 Am. St. Rep. 766, 54 N. W. 1044.

And, where an excavation, not amounting to a nuisance, is made in a street, and notice is given by sufficient lighting, and, without fault of the city, and without its knowledge, the light is removed, it is not liable for an injury resulting therefrom until it knows or should know of the removal. Garnetz v. Carroll, 136 Iowa, 569, 114 N. W. 57; Se- vestre v. New York, 15 Jones & S. 341; Richmond v. Poore (Va.) 63 S. E. 1014.

And this is so though no watchman was employed. Sevestre v. New York, supra.

And, where an excavation was made adjacent to a sidewalk in a city street; and a person fell into it in the night and was injured; and there was positive evidence of the erection of a barricade on the night in question; and the person injured testified that there was no barrier or guard around the excavation when he fell,—the inference will arise that the barrier was removed in some unexplained way for which the city is not in any way responsible. Welsh v. Lansing, 111 Mich. 589, 70 N. W. 129.

Nor is a municipal corporation liable for failure to guard an obstruction where it had no authority to erect barriers; and, where a street was laid out along a canal, covering land along the canal belonging to the state, a strip of land along a retaining wall of the canal belonging to the state being used as a part of the street, and an injury occurred to a traveler which would have been prevented by a railing on such wall, legal negligence on the part of the corporation cannot be predicated on its omission to erect such a railing, where the wall was on land of the state and the municipal corporation had no right to put a railing on it. Veeder v. Little Falls, 100 N. Y. 343, 3 N. E. 306.

And a permit by a city to use part of a street for the placing of building materials for use in the construction of a building on adjacent property is the mere regulation of a right of the property owner to make such use of the street, and is not a license to do any act in the street which but for such license would be illegal or a nuisance; and a city, by giving such permit, is not charged with the duty of seeing that the place is guarded, and will not be liable in damages to a person injured in consequence of the omission to guard such places with barriers or lights, unless it had notice, express or implied, of such omission, and after such notice was guilty of negligence. Columbus v. Penrod, 73 Ohio St. 209, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 386, 111 Am. St. Rep. 716, 77 N. E. 826.

So, an ordinance obligating the city to guard an excavation in its streets by barriers and mark it by lights, at most, affords only evidence of negligence, in an action against the city for an injury resulting from an unguarded and unlighted excavation in a street; and refusal to instruct, in such an action, that, as a matter of law, an ordinance of the city obligated the city thus to guard the excavation, is proper. Sterling v. Detroit, 134 Mich. 22, 95 N. W. 986.

It has been held, however, that the rule that there is no liability upon the part of cities and towns for the negligence of their officers or agents in the performance of duties purely public and governmental in their nature saves a city from liability for injuries resulting from a failure of its servants to display danger signals at a point where a street which is being repaired is obstructed by a barricade. Collier v. Ft. Smith, 73 Ark. 447, 68 L.R.A. 237, 84 S. W. 480.

2. Necessity of.

Whether a city is under obligations to erect a fence or other barrier along an embankment made or permitted by it in one of its streets depends upon whether or not the street was reasonably safe for travel without the fence. Fugate v. Somerset, 97 Ky. 48, 29 S. W. 970.

And whether the absence of a railing in a highway is a defect, and a neglect to maintain one a breach of duty, rendering a municipal corporation liable for an injury, must be determined by the character of the place or object in question. Spencer v. Mayfield (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 23; Adams v. Natick, 13 Allen, 429.

A city under the absolute duty to keep its streets in a safe condition for public travel, and bound to exercise reasonable diligence and care to accomplish that end, which causes or permits an obstruction to be placed in a street, is bound to see that it is carefully guarded so that it is reasonably free from danger to travelers upon the street. Brusso v. Buffalo, 90 N. Y. 679; Covington v. Bryant, 7 Bush, 248; O'Malley v. Parsons, 191 Pa. 612, 71 Am. St. Rep. 78, 43 Atl. 384.

And failure of a municipal corporation to provide railings or barriers at a dangerous place along a public highway will render it liable for injuries resulting therefrom, where the erection of such railings or barriers is a reasonable and necessary precaution to guard travelers against injury. Malloy v. Walker Twp. 77 Mich. 448, 6 L.R.A. 695, 43 N. W. 1012.

It is a question of the exercise of ordinary prudence. Peoria v. Walker, 47 Ill. App. 182.

And a general custom and usage as to placing railings or barriers along a highway embankment is of no importance in determining the liability of a municipal corporation for failure to provide such barriers at a dangerous place, where the statute imposes an absolute liability to make highways safe for travel. Malloy v. Walker Twp. supra.

And an instruction, in an action for damages against a city, that it was the city's duty to keep a street, when excavated, in a reasonably safe condition; and that, if it left the excavation open, unguarded, and unlighted, and an injury occurred, and it was dangerous to persons crossing at night, this was a breach of duty,—is not objectionable as requiring, without qualification, that the street be kept absolutely safe. Campbell v. Stanberry, 105 Mo. App. 56, 78 S. W. 292.

So, the violation of a statutory duty, such as a failure to put out, as required by a city's ordinances, danger signals at night where a ditch is being dug across a street, is negligence as a matter of law; and the court, in an action for an injury caused thereby, may so charge. Corsicana v. Tobin, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 492, 57 S. W. 319.

And where a statute provides that, where a defect in a street exists for a day after notice to the superintendent of streets, persons bound by law to repair it and the officers through whose neglect the defect remains shall be liable to one injured thereby, the exercise of due care to prevent injury by such obstruction, thus imposed upon a contractor and the superintendent, requires the erection of guards and the placing of lights. Stockton Automobile Co. v. Confer (Cal.) 97 Pac. 881.

So, it is the duty of a municipal corporation to exercise ordinary care in causing warnings to be given by persons licensed by it to use a portion of the public street as a place of deposit for building materials; and it is liable as well as the person using the street if it fails to exercise such care. Louisville v. Keher, 117 Ky. 841, 79 S. W. 270; Dolan v. Brooklyn, 1 Alb. L. J. 315, reversing 46 Barb. 604.

And, where a city granted a license to a person to move buildings in the streets subject to the supervision of the city marshal, and the city marshal had knowledge that a building was left in the street after dark without guard or signal of any kind, it was his duty to see that ordinary care was taken to warn passers-by of its presence; and his neglect of such duty was the negligence of the city, for which it is liable. Hayes v. West Bay City, 91 Mich. 418, 51 N. W. 1067.

And a municipal corporation which neglects its duty to cause guards or lights to be put up at night at an excavation in a street to prevent accidents is liable for a resulting injury, though the excavation was not made for a public improvement, but was made for the private benefit of an individual, and was left unguarded at night by the fault of such individual or of some person employed by him and acting under a permit of the city authorities. Dolan v. Brooklyn, 1 Alb. L. J. 315.

And a complaint in an action against a city for injuries from negligence in failing to maintain a barrier between a sidewalk and an adjoining low lot, charging a negligent failure to keep the sidewalk in a safe condition for public travel by the erection of a guard or barrier, and that it was very dark, and the person injured, while walking upon the sidewalk, stumbled upon a projection or uneven surface and fell over the side of the walk into the excavation, and that his injuries were caused by the negligence of the municipality in failing to place a guard, railing, or barrier along the sidewalk, sufficiently charges that the guard was needed to render the sidewalk ordinarily safe, and that it was because of the lack thereof that the injuries were received. Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757.

And an allegation in a complaint against a city for an injury caused by an obstructed street, that building material was suffered to remain in the street after dark without being guarded, is a direct averment that no guards or lights were placed around the obstruction, and not a mere recital of such facts, the word "without" being synonymous with "not being." Laporte v. Osborn (Ind. App.) 86 N. E. 995.

So, the absence of a railing to guard an open basement, where the public travel is endangered thereby, constitutes a defect in the highway as rendering it unsafe for public travel, independently of any statutory provision as to a railing. Beardsley v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 529, 47 Am. Rep. 677.

A railing or barrier is not required to be erected along a street or sidewalk, however, merely because a traveler may meet with an accident if there is none; the question in each case is whether one is needed to make the highway reasonably safe and convenient for travelers who are themselves in the exercise of due care. Logan v. New Bedford, 157 Mass. 534, 32 N. E. 910; O'Rourke v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 520, 57 N. W. 738.

And a railing is not required as a protection to the traveling public, unless there is some dangerous object or place outside the required railing in or upon which a traveler might come to harm if not warned therefrom by the railing. Spencer v. Mayfield (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 23.

The danger which requires a railing along a sidewalk must be of an unusual character, such as bridges, declivities, excavations, steep banks, or deep water. Spaces adjoining roads and streets are not bound to be fenced against unless their condition is such as to expose travelers to unusual hazard; and a person receiving injury by walking off from a sidewalk which adjoined land which was substantially on a level with the sidewalk, and there slipped upon smooth ice covered with snow, cannot recover of the city for her injury. Damon v. Boston, 149 Mass. 147, 21 N. E. 235.

And, where the risk from a dangerous place or object near the line of travel of a street is so small that it would be unreasonable to require the city to provide a railing for the protection of travelers, the court, in an action against the city for personal injuries occasioned thereby, will decide the question as to whether a railing is required as one of law, and order a verdict for the defendant. Scannal v. Cambridge, 163 Mass. 91, 39 N. E. 790.

And, where a bank wall about 3 feet high connected two houses from 20 to 25 feet apart, and was between 5 and 6 feet from and parallel to the street line; and there were steps projecting from the houses to the street line, and the surface of the land rose slightly from the sidewalk to the wall, and, including the sidewalk, was all of the same general character, the danger from the wall is not so evident or unusual as to require that a fence or barrier should be erected or maintained by the city. Logan v. New Bedford, supra.

So, where municipal authorities have arranged a safe and convenient means of avoiding a place naturally dangerous in its streets, but have omitted to fence off the traveler from the straightforward and perilous path, they are not responsible to a person well acquainted with the locality and with the means which have been provided for escaping the danger, who, in a moment of oblivion, pursued the path of peril and sustained injury thereby. Vicksburg v. Hennessy, 54 Miss. 391, 28 Am. Rep. 354.

And a failure of a city to put a fence around a water hydrant, when such hydrant is properly located, cannot render the city liable for an injury from coming in contact with the hydrant. Vincennes v. Thuis, 28 Ind. App. 523, 63 N. E. 315.

And, where an archway in front of a brick block was built up to and formed the line of the highway, but was at right angles with and not a continuation of the sidewalk; and it was about 3 feet wide and 3 or 4 feet high, and served as an entrance space leading down to an arched and covered passageway which ran through the block; and no part of the steps, archway, or passageway was within the line of the highway except a portion of the space which did not come above the surface, but was covered by planks, making the street at that point even and regular with the rest of the highway, and of proper width,—the reasonable security of the public did not require that it should be fenced or railed; and the city is not liable to a person who slipped down and slid through the passageway because of a failure to maintain a fence or rail. Richardson v. Boston, 156 Mass. 145, 30 N. E. 478.

Nor is it negligence on the part of a municipal corporation to omit to erect a barrier on the boundary line of a street, if such barrier would have rendered the street more unsafe than it was in its existing condition. Veeder v. Little Falls, 100 N. Y. 343, 3 N. E. 306.

And, where a street is obstructed, and a contractor erects suitable warnings to travelers, the city may avail itself of such warning, and need not take a like precaution. Stockton Automobile Co. v. Confer (Cal.) 97 Pac. 881.

So, a municipal corporation need not provide means of access from private property to its streets; and it is not liable for failure to guard its streets from approach from such property at dangerous points. And a traveler who approaches a public street over private property which he has no right to use as a traveled way, and over which the city has no control, and is precipitated over the embankment into an excavation in the street, and injured, cannot recover therefor from the city on the ground that the city failed to provide proper danger signals along such street. Mulvane v. South Topeka, 45 Kan. 45, 23 Am. St. Rep. 706, 25 Pac. 217; Ivester v. Atlanta, 115 Ga. 853, 42 S. E. 220; Calhoun v. Milan, 64 Mo. App. 398.

It is not required to put up danger signals along an excavated street so as to protect persons traveling outside thereof, except at the crossings or intersections of such streets by other public streets or highways. Mulvane v. South Topeka, supra.

Nor is the rule that a city is not bound to furnish safe means of reaching its streets 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

from private property, or to protect those passing over private property from injury by falling into the street, affected by the fact that the walk on which the person was injured was within the actual limits of a street as originally laid out, where the city had never recognized it as public property, and had graded and built the public sidewalk as though the embankment was the true dividing line between the street and the private property. Calhoun v. Milan, supra.

And the fact that persons were in the habit of traveling across lots and passing over a sidewalk and gutter into the street at a place other than the street intersection does not create a license by the city of such method of traveling; and it will not be required to put up barriers or keep a light where the path so beaten crosses the gutter. Holding v. St. Joseph, 92 Mo. App. 143.

But a city, which, in altering and lowering the grade of a street at the point of intersection of two streets, and just where an old well-established and well-used walk way entered the street, negligently omitted to put any barrier or sign to warn the public, whereby a person who had long used the walk way across the adjoining lot, in ignorance of the alteration of the street, stepped off a precipice of 8 feet and sustained injuries therefrom, is liable for damages for the injuries thus sustained. Orme v. Richmond, 79 Va. 86.

And it has been held that a municipal corporation does not in all cases fulfill the duty incumbent on it by law by merely placing barrier across a street which is obstructed, to protect travelers from injury, without adopting any measures to guard against accidents to those who may have occasion lawfully to come on the dangerous portion of the way from private lands adjoining and lying within the limits, which are closed against travelers approaching in other directions. Burnham v. Boston, 10 Allen, 293.

Whether a place in or near a street where an injury occurred required a guard or barrier for the protection of travelers, and whether the municipal corporation was guilty of actual negligence in not constructing such guard or barrier, are questions for the jury in an action against the corporation for an injury resulting from an obstruction or defect in the street. Hyatt v. Rondout, 44 Barb. 385; Rockford v. Russell, 9 Ill. App. 229; Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757; Wyandotte v. Gibson, 25 Kan. 236; Fugate v. Somerset, 97 Ky. 48, 9 S. W. 970; Scannal v. Cambridge, 163 Mass. 91, 39 N. E. 790; Malloy v. Walker Twp., 77 Mich. 448, 6 L.R.A. 695, 43 N. E. 1012; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 39 Hun, 449.

And, where the negligence complained of in an action against a city was in failing to place a guard or barrier along a sidewalk in front of an excavation, the jury may, in determining whether the city was guilty of negligence in failing to do so, consider the nature of the lot, its location, and the condition of the sidewalk and all the other conditions and surroundings bearing on the question. Newcastle v. Grubbs, supra.

But, while the question of negligence upon the part of a city in failing to guard or light a trench dug by it in a street is usually one of fact for the jury, where it is patent to every reasonable mind that the failure to guard or light such ditch is negligence, then the court may so declare as a matter of law. Campbell v. Stanberry, 85 Mo. App. 159; Scannal v. Cambridge, supra.

3. Nature and sufficiency of barrier.

Since a street is a public highway of a city, to the proper use of which all the citizens are entitled, it is the duty of the city, where there is an obstruction in it, so to place and mark it as properly to guard the public safety, and to give such notice and warning of the existence of the obstruction as would reasonably notify all persons having occasion to use the street that the danger is there. Anderson v. Wilmington, 2 Penn. (Del.) 28, 43 Atl. 841; Ahlfeldt v. Mexico, 129 Mo. App. 193, 108 S. W. 122.

A city, an officer of which digs a pit in, or otherwise obstructs, a public highway, must so guard and protect it that no accident can happen except by extreme negligence of the traveler. Childs v. West Troy, 23 Hun, 68.

And a statement in a charge in relation to the duty of a city to protect the public from injury in the use of its streets, that "what does not protect is not sufficient," is not subject to the objection that it is too emphatic, where it does not appear that anything whatever had been done to guard an excavation in a much-frequented thoroughfare, or give notice of the danger to a footman, except a small pile of dirt, and a lot of rubbish scattered about, which he might or might not see at night; the dirt and rubbish being there only incidentally, and not so placed as to give notice of the excavation. Toledo v. Nitz, 23 Ohio C. C. 350.

So, it is the duty of a municipal corporation, while engaged in excavating a public street, not only to provide during the nighttime the usual electric lights, but also to display danger signals, or to put up barriers so as to keep pedestrians from walking into the excavation. La Salle v. Evans, 111 Ill. App. 69.

And, where there is an obstruction or excavation in a street, and barriers and lights will not afford the degree of protection required, then other means must be employed to make the street reasonably safe for public travel by giving reasonably sufficient notice and warning of the defect. Griider v. Jefferson Realty Co. (Ky.) 116 S. W. 691.

And proof that an obstruction had remained in a street a sufficient length of time to give the city notice thereof, and that the same was left without guard of light, warrants a finding of negligence upon the part of the city. Although there was an electric light near by. Naylor v. Salt Lake City, 9 Utah. 491, 35 Pac. 509.

And a custom, obtaining in the city and in other neighboring cities and towns, to display certain signals to indicate one class of dangerous conditions in a street and other signals to indicate other classes of dangerous conditions, is admissible in an action against a city for an injury resulting from a dangerous condition of a street closed for improvement, as bearing upon the question of reasonable care upon the part of the city, as tending to show what ordinarily prudent persons do under like circumstances, and for the purpose of determining the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence and enlightening the jury as to what he was to understand from certain signals and what should be his course of conduct upon seeing them. Ahlfeldt v. Mexico, supra.

So, where an excavation is made in a street, ordinary care which will relieve the city from liability for an injury resulting therefrom calls for something more than the mere erection of a mound of earth at the point where excavation is made. Akers v. New York, 14 Misc. 524, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1099.

And, where a city contracts for the paving of the roadway of a street, and the contractor leaves a large pile of stones in the street which he lights with one red light, and there is evidence to show that this was quite dim and placed in a sheltered position to protect it from the wind, it is a question for the jury, in an action for an injury resulting from driving against the obstruction, to say whether the obstruction was sufficiently lighted to warn persons using the street of the existence thereof. Godfrey v. New York, 104 App. Div. 357, 93 N. Y. Supp. 899.

And, where a street was obstructed with two piles of gravel or concrete material, and an injury resulted therefrom, the question whether the city discharged its duty by placing, or causing to be placed, on the obstruction a single common old stable lantern which was rusty and somewhat weatherbeaten, is one of fact for the jury. Saut-hof v. Granger, 19 R. I. 606, 35 Atl. 300.

And in such case the condition of the weather, particularly as to the force and velocity of the wind on the day of the accident, coupled with the fact that it frequently came in sudden puffs or gusts, is an element for the jury, in an action for the injury, to consider in determining whether a single lantern was a sufficient safeguard. Ibid.

And, where a street was closed by a wooden horse with a lantern attached, standing across the roadbed, but there was no barrier across the sidewalk, and a person walked along the sidewalk of the street and was injured by falling into a trench crossing it, the question whether the barrier was sufficient notice that the sidewalk as well as the roadway was closed is one of fact for the jury. White v. Boston, 122 Mass. 491.

So, where there was an excavation in a street, and a rope was put up as a barrier, and a traveler in an automobile ran against the rope and was injured; and the evidence tended to show that the rope was of a color not easily distinguishable, and that no flag or other means of attracting attention to the presence of the rope was used, and the traveler did not see the rope until within 2 or 3 feet of it,—the question whether the way was defective, and whether the traveler was in the exercise of due care, is for the jury, in an action for a resulting injury. Baker v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 53, 72 N. E. 336.

And the rule is the same where, after a fire which left the front wall of a building standing, in order to prevent accidents to passers-by a barricade was erected to prevent passing by within reach of the danger, and a part of the barricade consisted of a rope stretched across the sidewalk about 2 or 3 feet from the ground, extending from the gutter to the building, there being no signal light on the rope, and it being about midway between two electric arc lamps, the nearer one being about 125 feet away; and a person was injured by running against the rope. Place v. Yonkers, 43 App. Div. 380, 60 N. Y. Supp. 171.

And the liability of a city for the negligence of those in charge of a street in stretching a rope across it, thereby causing an injury, is not affected by the fact that the control of the street was not vested in the city council, but in the park board. Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 90 Minn. 158, 95 N. W. 908.

So, a barbed wire placed across a street at a place where the street is in process of reconstruction, to prevent traffic thereon, is a nuisance; and, in the absence of any light or warning, the city is liable in damages to one who in the nighttime runs against the wire. Glasgow v. Gillenwaters, 113 Ky. 140, 67 S. W. 381.

Nor can it be said, as a matter of law, that a railing $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet high less than one half the height of an ordinary man, is a sufficient protection to an area way along the line of a sidewalk, to persons passing on the busiest and most frequented street in a large city; the question is one of fact for the jury. Donnelly v. Rochester, 166 N. Y. 315, 59 N. E. 989.

And where, along the side of a sidewalk, there is a perpendicular descent of about 20 feet with a rapid descent of over 30 feet in addition thereto, along which the ground is covered with stones and rubbish, there is no rule of law from which it can be determined that one piece of scantling 2 by 4 inches, extending from post to post and $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet above the bed of the sidewalk, constitutes a safe and sufficient protection to all persons using the sidewalk; the question of negligence in such case is one of fact for the jury. St. Paul v. Kuby, 8 Minn. 154, Gil. 125.

So, the question of negligence is one of fact for the jury, where a trench dug by 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the owner of an adjoining lot for the purpose of connecting his premises with the water mains in the street extended from near a gutter several feet into the street, and the barriers consisted of one or more slabs laid over the trench, on which were placed two boxes and a barrel, and a person drove into the trench and was thrown from his wagon and injured. Weed v. Ballston Spa, 76 N. Y. 329.

And so is the question whether a board placed across a sidewalk as a guard to prevent persons from walking into an excavation in the sidewalk, which was without any permanent or substantial fastening, and was liable to be thrown down at any time by the mere carelessness or thoughtlessness of persons passing along the sidewalk, was a sufficient protection to the public. Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273.

And evidence, in an action against a city for an injury caused by a person falling into a sewer in the process of construction, that the person injured was 6 feet 8 inches in height and weighed 250 pounds, and that he came in contact with the barricade at the excavation, which consisted of a cross-grained board which gave way, is sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the guard at the sewer excavation was inadequate. Ott v. Buffalo, 40 N. Y. S. R. 716, 16 N. Y. Supp. 1, affirmed in 131 N. Y. 594, 30 N. E. 67.

So, where a city dug a trench across a highway and under the track of a horse railroad for the purpose of laying a sewer, and erected barriers to make it reasonably safe and convenient for travelers, but permitted the railroad company to continue running its cars, knowing that it would be necessary to remove the barriers as often as a car passed, the city is responsible for the negligence of the railroad company in omitting to replace the barriers, and is liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Prentiss v. Boston, 112 Mass. 43.

And, where a street railway company, under authority from the city to build its road on certain streets on grades to be approved by the city authorities, dug a trench in a street, and, upon being notified to suspend work until the grade was fixed, built a fence around the trench, which remained there awaiting the establishment of the grades, and, when a person was driving down a steep incline leading to the fence, the holdback strap of his harness broke and the horse started and collided with the fence, and he was thrown out and injured, a question for the jury arises, in an action against the city, as to whether it was negligent in leaving the trench open and unprotected, and as to whether or not the fence was a proper one. Lane v. Syracuse, 12 App. Div. 118, 42 N. Y. Supp. 219.

Actual notice is not required to be given to a traveler, however, of every obstruction on a public highway; knowledge that there is a probability of danger is enough, and it is sufficient that he has notice or knowledge enough of the facts to put him on inquiry. Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520.

And it is not the duty of a city, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, and in order to keep a street in a safe condition, to place a signal or guard at an excavation in it when it is plainly visible to those traveling upon the street. Rock Island v. Gingles, 217 Ill. 185, 75 N. E. 468.

So, no other notice to travelers of the presence of a steam roller in the street is needed than a view of the roller itself, when it can be seen in ample time to avoid it. District of Columbia v. Moulton, 182 U. S. 576, 45 L. ed. 1237, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840, reversing 15 App. D. C. 363.

And, when a steam roller was being taken through a street at a time when it was being used by the public; and the horse of a traveler was frightened thereby, and the traveler was injured; and there was evidence, in an action against the city for the injury, that a mounted policeman went ahead of the roller and told the person injured that it was coming and directed her to turn aside into another street, which she failed to do; and there was evidence in her behalf that there was no person going ahead of the roller,—the question of the negligence of the city is properly submitted to the jury. Denver v. Peterson, 5 Colo. App. 41, 36 Pac. 1111.

So, if a cut or excavation in a city street, made in the course of the execution of a public work, is sufficiently guarded by barriers, lights are unnecessary, and to omit them is not negligence. Sevestre v. New York, 15 Jones & S. 341.

And a city which dug a trench in a street for the purpose of laying water mains is not under the duty of putting up both guard rails and lights; it is merely required to maintain either guard rails or lights. Campbell v. Stanberry, 85 Mo. App. 159.

But an error in an instruction in such a case in requiring the city both to place a guard rail or barricade about a street excavation, and to place lights along its sides, is harmless where there is no evidence that either precaution was taken to prevent injury. Campbell v. Stanberry, 105 Mo. App. 56, 78 S. W. 292.

So, where a city street in the middle of which a car track is laid, dividing the ordinary course of travel into two streams, is undergoing repairs, and in a defective condition, it cannot be held, as matter of law, that a danger sign placed upon one side of the car track is not a reasonable warning to those approaching on the other side. Mulligan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 96, 36 Atl. 1005.

And, where an excavation was made between the rails of a street-railway track in a street for the building of a tide gate in a sewer, and a person attempting to catch a car ran for it between the rails and fell into the excavation and was injured, the city cannot be said to have failed in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

where it had erected barriers with signs to show that the way was not open to public travel, and had a watchman on the spot night and day, and what happened could not reasonably be expected to happen. Martin v. Chelsea, 175 Mass. 516, 56 N. E. 703.

So, while a city in which, along the side of a street, there is a precipice 40 feet deep, the edge of which is within the line of the street as dedicated, and the sidewalk on that side of which extends along near such edge, is under duty to maintain a proper fence or barrier along the precipice, no such extraordinary duty rests upon the city as that of maintaining a barrier so high and so close that children cannot find ways or means to surmount it. Lineburg v. St. Paul, 71 Minn. 245, 73 N. W. 723.

The test of sufficiency of protection against danger from an obstruction or excavation in a street is not whether barriers and lights had been used, but whether or not the means employed, whatever they may be, are reasonably sufficient for the purpose. Grider v. Jefferson Realty Co. (Ky.) 116 S. W. 691.

And what constitutes a reasonable precaution upon the part of a municipal corporation to protect an unguarded pit in a city thoroughfare is a question of law for the court, and should not be submitted to the jury. Montgomery v. Bradley (Ala.) 48 So. 809.

But it is a question for the jury, in an action against a city for personal injuries to a traveler caused by an obstruction or defect in a street, whether barriers erected by the city to protect travelers against it were reasonably safe and proper, and, whether, after being erected, they were maintained by the city. Norwood v. Somerville, 159 Mass. 105, 33 N. E. 1108; Stockton Automobile Co. v. Confer (Cal.) 97 Pac. 881; Koontz v. District of Columbia, 24 App. D. C. 59.

4. Application to particular classes of obstructions.

(a) Excavations, embankments, etc.

A city, on excavating in a street for any proper purpose, is under the duty to place proper barricades about the excavation to prevent injury to passers-by; and, if it fails to do so, and injury results to one in the exercise of due care on his part, it is liable therefor. Chicago v. Johnson, 53 Ill. 91; Carstesen v. Stratford, 67 Conn. 428, 35 Atl. 276; Covington v. Bryant, 7 Bush. 248; Merrill v. Wilbraham, 11 Gray, 154; O'Rourke v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 520, 57 N. W. 738.

And the rule is the same where a city permits an individual to make an excavation in a street. Covington v. Bryant, supra.

Whenever, owing to the existence of embankments or excavations along the side of a public street or highway, it will be reasonably prudent and necessary to erect and maintain railings or other suitable barriers to prevent accidents to persons traveling there, or coming into or leaving the public street or highway at customary and proper points, it becomes the duty of the proper municipal authorities to provide such guards or barriers; and its neglect to do so will render it liable in damages to those who, in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, sustain injuries in consequence of such neglect. O'Malley v. Parsons, 191 Pa. 612, 71 Am. St. Rep. 778, 43 Atl. 384.

Although an excavation in a street is not a nuisance, it is the duty of the city to barricade or light it, or both, and to take such reasonable precautions to warn and protect the public as reasonable care and prudence would dictate for the safety of travelers using the street. Garnetz v. Carroll, 136 Iowa, 569, 114 N. W. 57; O'Rourke v. Monroe, supra; Moon v. Middletown, 14 Ohio C. C. 498.

An excavation for a sewer in the traveled part of a highway is a defect for which the municipality is responsible, unless guarded by sufficient barriers. McGowan v. Watertown, 130 Wis. 555, 110 N. W. 402; Chicago v. Seben, 62 Ill. App. 248, affirmed in 165 Ill. 371, 56 Am. St. Rep. 245, 46 N. E. 244.

And a municipal corporation owing to the public the duty of keeping its streets in a safe condition for travel, which undertakes to construct a sewer in a public street, cannot, in that undertaking and in any mode of providing for the execution of the work, throw off its duties and responsibilities; and it is liable to persons receiving injury from the neglect to keep proper lights and guards at night around the excavation for the sewer which it has caused to be made, whether it has or has not contracted for such precautions with the persons executing the work. Storrs v. Utica, 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437.

And where a sewer is constructed in a street, and the excavation is such as to make the street dangerous to those traveling in street cars along the course of the sewer, it is a question of fact for the jury whether a railing or barrier placed along the excavation is suitable and sufficient to afford safety to passengers on the cars. Koontz v. District of Columbia, 24 App. D. C. 59.

So, it is negligence in the authorities of a city to leave a ditch constructed by them in or across a public street open and unguarded or unprotected, without lights or danger signals, during the nighttime. Salem v. Webster, 95 Ill. App. 120, affirmed in 192 Ill. 369, 61 N. E. 323; Mt. Carmel v. Guthridge, 52 Ill. App. 632; Deyoe v. Saratoga Springs, 1 Hun. 341, 3 Thomp. & C. 504.

And evidence that a trench dug in a street for the purpose of setting a curbstone was allowed to remain exposed; and that the place was not barricaded, and no signal lights were placed to give warning to pedestrians of its dangerous character; and that a person attempting to cross in the night stepped in and was injured,—shows a clear case of negligence upon the part of the city. Canton v. Dewey, 71 Ill. App. 346, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And an instruction, in an action against a city for an injury caused by an unguarded pit in a thoroughfare, which assumes that there were circumstances surrounding the hole which should be taken into consideration, is faulty and improper, where the circumstances surrounding the hole consisted of the dirt taken from the excavation, and the evidence as to this is conflicting. Montgomery v. Bradley (Ala.) 48 So. 809.

Nor does a permit from the village authorities to lay a drain authorize the person receiving it to open or dig in a street; and, where an opening is made in a street in pursuance of such a permit, the person making it is a trespasser, and, if his work renders the street unsafe for ordinary travel, it is the duty of the village authorities, having actual or constructive notice of the dangerous condition created by him, to take proper measures to protect the public against it. Boyle v. Hazleton, 171 Pa. 167, 33 Atl. 142; McPherson v. District of Columbia, 7 Mackey, 564.

And, where a person, in going from the sidewalk of a street toward a street car to get upon it after dark, is injured by falling into a trench between the curbstone and the railway track, made for the purpose of laying water pipes, the question of due care is one for the jury, in an action for the injury, where the evidence tends to show that the excavation was inefficiently lighted, and that proper barriers were not maintained. Fox v. Chelsea, 171 Mass. 297, 50 N. E. 622.

Nor does the fact that the proximity of an excavation in a street to a street-car track therein prevents its complete inclosure by barriers excuse the municipal corporation from adopting such means as may be reasonably sufficient to give warning of the excavation and prevent persons exercising ordinary care from falling into it. Griender v. Jefferson Realty Co. (Ky.) 116 S. W. 691.

And, where a railroad company, pursuant to authority from the city to build its road on certain streets of grades to be approved by the city authorities, dug a trench in a street, and, upon notice by the city authorities, suspended work until the city fixed the grade of the street, and built a fence around the ditch; and these conditions remained for several months awaiting the establishment of the grade, when an accident took place causing an injury,—it is a question for the jury, in an action against the city for the injury, whether the city authorities were negligent in suspending the work and allowing the street to remain in such a condition for such a length of time. Lane v. Syracuse, 12 App. Div. 118, 42 N. Y. Supp. 219.

So, the act of a city of leaving a ditch filled with water 5 feet deep, bordering on the sidewalk in a public street, without guards, is negligence. Chicago v. Hesing, 83 Ill. 204, 25 Am. Rep. 378.

And evidence, in an action for damages from stepping into the gutter while attempting to pass from one street into another, that the sidewalk and cross walk at the junction of the two streets was covered with water, so that the person injured could not determine the location of the gutter; and the testimony of the street commissioner that, on the day of the accident, he found the gutter at the point in question full of ice and snow and water running over the walk, and he cleaned out the gutter, but did not remove the obstruction which prevented the water from running into the sewer; and that the place was not guarded and no lights were placed there,—justifies a finding of negligence upon the part of the defendant. Bly v. Whitehall, 120 N. Y. 506, 24 N. E. 943.

And, where a sidewalk and street in front of a building in process of construction were obstructed as far as the tracks of a street railway, but the tracks and the other side of the street were open for travel; and between the rails of the track next to the obstruction there was on unguarded deep trench filled with soft mud as high as the level of the street and looking like the rest of the street; and a woman who came to the obstruction passed around it and along the car track and fell into the trench,—the question whether the city exercised reasonable care and diligence to keep the street safe for travelers is one for the jury in an action for the resulting injury. Hyde v. Boston, 186 Mass. 115, 71 N. E. 118.

So, while a person attempting to travel in a street in the night is bound to exercise care and caution commensurate with the danger incurred, he is not bound to anticipate that he will encounter excavations or embankments without having some notice thereof by lights or other precautions taken for his protection. Wright v. Saunders, 65 Barb. 214; Collins v. Dodge, 37 Minn. 503, 35 N. W. 368.

And the rule that a traveler in the carriage path of a street must guard against natural obstacles and irregularities of the surface; but has the right to assume that there are no pits in his way without a rail to prevent his walking into them, or a light to warn him of their existence,—applies alike whether the street is a completely worked and improved thoroughfare, or one in its natural condition. Collins v. Dodge, supra.

And whether a manhole in a city street was properly barricaded, and sufficient signal lights were displayed in the night, is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. Perry v. Centralia, 50 Wash. 670, 97 Pac. 802.

So, a municipal corporation is liable for an injury to a person, caused by falling off of an embankment leading to a bridge, where the accident was due to the fact that the municipality failed to maintain a proper railing along the embankment. Toms v. Whitby, 37 U. C. Q. B. 100.

And evidence that, between the top of a cut or steep embankment and the line of a street, there was plenty of public ground over which the city had exclusive control, on which the barrier could have been erected; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and that the street had recently been excavated; and that a traveler, while driving along the highway, was thrown from his carriage over the embankment,—raises the questions for the jury to determine, what the condition of the street was, and what the municipal corporation could and should have done under the circumstances. O'Malley v. Parsons, 191 Pa. 612, 71 Am. St. Rep. 778, 43 Atl. 384.

Likewise, if dangerous excavations are made in a sidewalk, no matter by whom, the city must fill them up or cause them to be filled up; or if, in constructing a building, it is necessary to make excavations in a pavement, the city must, if such excavations are dangerous, guard them, or cause the owner or contractor to guard them. light them in the night, or otherwise warn travelers against them. Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 567.

And whether sufficient barriers were erected by a municipal corporation across a cross walk on each side of an excavation in a principal street, and whether lights were placed thereon, is a question for the jury in an action against the city to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by falling into the excavation, where the testimony on that point is conflicting, and it is undisputed that, if any barriers or lights were erected or placed at that point, they were removed prior to the accident. Reed v. Spokane, 21 Wash. 218, 57 Pac. 803.

And a city in which subway work is being done is bound to know that such work is likely to leave dangerous holes in the highways, and as to any hole of which it has notice, or which has existed long enough to justify a presumption of notice, it is its duty to see that it is properly lighted or otherwise guarded; and it must exercise reasonable care with reference thereto, determined by taking into account the desirability of interfering as little as possible with traffic, and the probability or improbability of pedestrians attempting to cross a street at a point other than the usual crossing. McDonald v. Degnon-McLean Contracting Co. 124 App. Div. 824, 109 N. Y. Supp. 519.

So, where the law required all areas in a city to be protected by railings with an allowance of 4 feet for an opening or entrance, and a building had an area along its entire front, but had no railing, and a person fell in and was injured, it is no defense, in an action against the city for the injury, that he fell into the area at a point where the opening or entrance would have been had a railing been erected. McGill v. District of Columbia, 4 Mackey, 70, 54 Am. Rep. 256.

And a city has the right to erect a barrier across the entrance of a passageway which opens upon and is below the level of a public street, if it is necessary to do so in order to make the street safe and convenient for travelers. Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen. 402.

The failure of a city to guard or light a place where holes exist in a sidewalk, however, is not negligence per se, but raises a question of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury caused by the defect. Gerber v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. App. 191, 79 S. W. 717.

And, where a ditch along the side of a street is 22 inches deep at the deepest point, and about 4 feet wide, and was constructed with a culvert running across and intersecting the street, so as to cover the whole width of that street including sidewalks, and that portion of the town was new and sparsely settled, and the street and sidewalk were unimproved, the municipal corporation is not negligent as matter of law in omitting to maintain a railing as a protection to the traveling public against injury therefrom, since injury therefrom could not reasonably be anticipated in the exercise of reasonable prudence. Spencer v. Mayfield (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 23.

And municipal corporations are not required to place barriers to prevent the use of the street along the sides of which excavations are being made for water pipes, gas pipes, and the like if sufficient room is left for the passage of vehicles. In such case travelers are entitled to the use of the street if they choose, at their own responsibility. O'Rourke v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 520, 57 N. W. 738.

But an instruction in an action for damages against a city, that the city was negligent in leaving a street excavation unlighted and unguarded, is not subject to objection as excluding the consideration of every possible precaution, where there is no evidence that the excavation was protected in any way. Campbell v. Stanberry, 105 Mo. App. 56, 78 S. W. 292.

So, where an excavation was made in a sidewalk covered by a roof which was supported by posts at the outer side of the sidewalk; and a board was nailed to the corner of the house on the inner side of the sidewalk and to the posts supporting the porch at the outer side about 3 or 4 feet above the walk; and beneath this board a piece of 2x12 plank about 4 feet in length was laid up against the house; and there was an arc light about 150 feet distant from the excavation, the barrier having been placed there simply to guard the excavation over night,—the barrier was sufficient as a matter of law to relieve the city from liability for an injury caused by the excavation. Tagge v. Roslyn (Wash.) 98 Pac. 668.

Whether ordinary care requires a city to guard against accidents of teams and wagons falling into the ditches being excavated in its streets is a matter of fact for the jury, in an action for such an injury. Peoria v. Walker, 47 Ill. App. 182.

And so is the question whether a city was negligent in failing to guard an excavation in a street with barriers and lights. Jackson v. Kansas City, 106 Mo. App. 52, 79 S. W. 1174.

And so, also, is the question, where the evidence is conflicting, whether the excavation in question was protected by a barrier, or by lights, as required by law. Myers v. Kansas City, 108 Mo. 480, 18 S. W. 914; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Garnetz v. Carroll, 136 Iowa, 569, 114 N. W. 57.

(b) Defective bridges.

The duty of a municipal corporation to keep a bridge or a highway in repair extends not merely to the floor of the bridge or road-bed of the highway, but to proper guards or railings on their sides or borders, when necessary for the safety or protection of the public. Hyatt v. Rondout, 44 Barb. 385.

And, where the evidence, in an action against a city, shows that the planking on the driveway of a street narrowed at a certain point from 16 to 8 feet in width; that the street at that place was elevated more than 4 feet without a guard rail along the side; and that an ordinarily safe horse, accustomed to bicycles, became frightened at a bicycle while upon such portion of the street, and backed over the side of the highway into the depression below, injuring an occupant of the carriage to which it was attached,—the question whether the city was negligent in the construction of the street is one for the jury; and their verdict will not be disturbed. White v. Ballard, 19 Wash. 284, 53 Pac. 159.

So, where a street was being improved by independent contractors; and it became necessary to lower a bridge forming a part of the street so as to correspond with a new grade; and one end of the bridge was raised several inches in order that the abutment might be cut down; and, while the bridge was thus raised, the workmen employed by the contractors placed a block at the end of the bridge making a step for footmen, who continued to cross; and a traveler passed over the bridge using the block as a step, and in the evening, about two hours after he had crossed the bridge in safety, he attempted again to cross, and the block had been removed, and no lights or barriers had been placed, and he fell and was injured,—the city is liable for the injury. Indianapolis v. Marold, 25 Ind. App. 428, 58 N. E. 512.

And where, across a frequented street, there had for a long time been an open ditch or drain 3 feet deep and about 3 feet wide at the bottom and 6 or 8 feet wide at the top; and over this ditch was a bridge on the westerly side of the street; and the city removed this bridge and built a new one across the ditch in the center of the street; and no guard or protection of any kind was placed where the old bridge had stood,—it was a case of gross and culpable neglect upon the part of the city of its duty to keep its streets in a safe condition; and a person who, not knowing of the removal of the old bridge, drove through the street on a dark night and followed the beaten traveled track, and two of the wheels of his wagon went upon the bridge and the other two missed it, whereby he was thrown from his wagon and injured, is entitled to recover damages therefor against the city. O'Leary v. Mankato, 21 Minn. 65.

Nor can a city sought to be held liable for an injury in a street, due to the fact that a bridge which had existed over a creek which crossed the street had been washed away, resist liability on the ground that there were other streets by which the person injured might have reached the point at which he was aiming when he was hurt, where the officers of the city permitted the street to be used without warning the public of its condition. Erie City v. Schwingle, 22 Pa. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 87.

And evidence, in an action against a city charging negligence in failing to construct and maintain a railing on a bridge over a stream crossing one of its streets, tending to show a change in the construction of the railing after the accident in question, is admissible. McDonald v. Duluth, 93 Minn. 206, 100 N. W. 1102.

The lack of barriers on the side of approaches to a bridge, however, will not make a municipality liable for injuries caused by a team going off the bank, where the roadway was wide enough for two teams to pass without difficulty, and the proximate cause of the accident was the fact that the horse became frightened and so unmanageable that the driver could not keep him within the limits of the road. Bell v. Wayne, 123 Mich. 386, 48 L.R.A. 644, 81 Am. St. Rep. 204, 82 N. W. 215.

And, where a bridge over a canal for the passage of draft horses from one side to the other was used by the public as a highway across the canal; and there was a steep descent to the towpath which was unguarded by a wall or railing; and a traveler was injured by his horse losing his footing and falling down the descent or declivity,—the city cannot be held guilty of a neglect of duty in not barricading the road so as to prevent travelers from using the bridge. Carpenter v. Cohoes, 81 N. Y. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 468.

So, that there are a great number of bridges in the city that were built higher than the street, and that nearly all approaches to these bridges thus built were raised, is inadmissible in evidence and irrelevant to the issue, in an action against a city for an injury resulting in a fall received on a raised approach to a bridge. Perkins v. Fond du Lac, 34 Wis. 435.

Whether the want of a warning light at a bridge at night tends to establish negligence upon the part of the city, however, depends upon the character of the danger as arising from the situation, condition, and use of the bridge, and is properly a question for the jury. Loewer v. Sedalia, 77 Mo. 431.

(c) Elevated streets and sidewalks.

Municipal authorities having power and jurisdiction to erect embankments in streets have power and are under duty to make such embankments safe by side railings or other suitable barriers. Wilson v. Atlanta, 60 Ga. 473.

And, where a city maintains a street on 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

two levels, one considerably higher than the other, and the two are divided by an abrupt declivity, and both levels are open to travel, it may be incumbent on the city to place a barrier upon the upper level to prevent accidents in driving over the edge. Herdson v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646.

So, a street on low ground, in which the city had constructed an embankment in the center about 15 feet high and 30 feet wide at the top, upon one side of the center of which a street-car track was laid with iron rails projecting 3 inches above the surface, with no guard or railing of any kind on either edge of the embankment, cannot be held to be reasonably safe. Danville v. Makemson, 32 Ill. App. 112.

And a city which maintains a street elevated from 3½ to 6 feet above the adjacent land without a guard rail to protect teams from shying off the roadway in case of fright is liable where a gentle horse, driven with ordinary care by an experienced driver, becomes frightened at the sight and noise of escaping steam blown off at that point in the street through pipes passing thereunder from an electric power house operated by the city, and backs the buggy to which it is harnessed off the roadway, causing injury to the driver. Taylor v. Ballard, 24 Wash. 191, 64 Pac. 143.

But, where an injury is alleged to have resulted from the absence of a railing upon an embankment in a street, the questions whether such railing was reasonably necessary for safety, and whether the city was guilty of negligence in not constructing it, and whether the absence actually caused the injury, may well be elucidated by inquiry whether the person injured would have been hurt even though the railings had been constructed; and, in order to recover, he must show that barriers would probably have prevented his injury. Wilson v. Atlanta, supra.

And whether the omission of a city to supply a railing upon an embankment in a street was in any given case negligence depends upon various considerations, such as the amount of travel on the street, etc., and is a question of fact for the determination of a jury. Wyandotte v. Gibson, 25 Kan. 236.

And whether an injury on a highway, caused by the sliding of the rear end of a vehicle over an embankment, would have occurred if proper railings or barriers had been provided at the place, is a question for the jury in an action for damages caused thereby. Malloy v. Walker Twp. 77 Mich. 448, 6 L.R.A. 695, 43 N. W. 1012.

So, more precaution may be needed when a sidewalk is elevated a long distance above the ground than when it rests directly upon it; but in all cases it must be reasonable care and diligence, relative to the danger and risk. Atchison v. Jansen, 21 Kan. 560.

And it is gross negligence for a city to omit the duty of erecting railings or other guards on the side of a walk, elevated over a ravine, adequate for protection from the danger of falling therefrom, of persons using the walk with ordinary care. Mt. Vernon v. Brooks, 39 Ill. App. 426.

And, where a sidewalk was a dangerous structure when built, being only 4 feet wide and 6 feet above the level of the street and 4 feet from the buildings, without any railings or guards, and being upon a busy thoroughfare; and a person in the night fell from it and was injured; and the walk had no appearance of any change since it was built,—the city is guilty of gross negligence; and it is liable for the injury without reference to notice of the defect in the walk which caused it. Chicago v. Langlass, 66 Ill. 361.

And, if a sidewalk was so constructed and maintained as to be apparently intended for public use, then the city is at fault in allowing it to terminate 3 feet above the ground without barriers or railings so that one attempting to use such sidewalk in the dark is liable, in the exercise of reasonable care, to step inadvertently from the walk to the ground below, and be injured. Dunn v. Oelwein (Iowa) 118 N. W. 764.

And a statutory provision that any person who shall receive bodily injury or damage in his person or property through a defect in any street or public way by reason of defect or mismanagement of anything under the control of a municipal corporation within the limits thereof may recover the amount of actual damages sustained, makes municipalities liable for damages resulting from failure to place safeguards at a ditch at which a sidewalk ends. Hutchison v. Summerville, 66 S. C. 442, 45 S. E. 8.

So, a city is liable for an injury resulting from the absence of a guard rail on a sidewalk adjoining a bridge, where the guard rail had been down for a time sufficient to give it constructive notice thereof. Chicago v. Farrell, 27 Ill. App. 526.

And, where a sidewalk crossed a stream and was elevated above the bed of the stream about 4 feet, and the walk was 4 feet in width and originally had a guard rail along each side, but the rail on one side had been off for over two years, and the rail on the opposite side deflected inward narrowing the space for the traveling public, although there was room left for a person to walk along, a jury, in an action for the injury caused thereby, is justified in finding that the municipal corporation was negligent. Williams v. Port Leyden, 62 App. Div. 490, 70 N. Y. Supp. 1100.

So, where a slip is crossed by a bridge much narrower than the street, and there is no protection in the course from the sidewalk to the bridge to prevent persons proceeding in that direction from falling into the slip if they continue in a direct line from the walk to the slip, the omission to erect proper barriers to protect persons from so walking and falling into it is negligence for which the city is liable for damages resulting therefrom. Chicago v. Gallagher, 44 Ill. 295.

And whether it was the duty of a city to erect a railing or barrier at the blind end of a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

plank wall to keep persons from falling down an inclined driveway beyond it is a question of fact for the jury, in an action for an injury resulting from such a fall, although the walk is on private property and adjoins the real sidewalk at the lot line, there being no visible line of demarcation between them, and apparently they are parts of a single sidewalk. Chicago v. Baker, 195 Ill. 54, 62 N. E. 892, affirming 95 Ill. App. 413.

And, where a sidewalk was raised in front of one lot only on a street between 6 or 8 inches; and the municipal authorities knew that it was so raised; and the danger after nightfall arising from the abrupt change of grade at the junction of the new walk with that adjoining could have been guarded against by sloping the approach to the raised portion, guarding it with a suitable barrier, or adequately lighting the spot, the failure to do this was negligence for which the municipality must answer. Canfield v. East Stroudsburg, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 649.

So, a cross walk on one of the principal streets of a city, which at a point where it left the sidewalk was $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet above the street, and descended to the street at a distance of but 8 feet from the sidewalk, and which was but 4 feet 5 inches wide, while the sidewalk was 14 feet 9 inches in width, and was not in line with the sidewalk, and had no rail or other protection to prevent a traveler from falling therefrom, or to guide him along it, cannot be said, as matter of law, to have been in all respects sufficient. Whitney v. Milwaukee, 57 Wis. 639, 16 N. W. 12.

The construction of a sidewalk elevated above the surface of the ground 30 inches and without guard rails, however, is not negligence per se, or conclusive evidence that the sidewalk so constructed is a place of danger. Sumner v. Scaggs, 52 Ill. App. 551.

And whether a substantial plank sidewalk which is 8 feet wide, in good condition, and raised 3 or 4 feet above the surface of the ground, and but 34 feet long, in a small country town, is sufficiently safe for the travel passing over it, without side railings, is a question of fact to be determined by a jury, in an action for an injury resulting from falling from such sidewalk, upon a consideration of all the circumstances. Forker v. Sandy Lake, 130 Pa. 123, 19 Atl. 609.

And where, at the junction of the sidewalks of two streets, they are elevated several feet, and an open space is left within the angle, the city is under no obligation, in the absence of charter or statutory requirements, to maintain guard rails around such open space to prevent travelers from stepping off in making the turn. Bohl v. Dell Rapids, 15 S. D. 619, 91 N. W. 315.

So, a footway 35 feet from the line of the street, the side of which toward such line rests on the top of posts 6 feet high, thus rendering it practically inaccessible directly from the abutting lots, is not a sidewalk for the construction of which a lot owner can be held liable, under a charter by which lot owners may be required to construct and repair sidewalks in front of their lots; and a lot owner cannot be required to construct and maintain a railing along such footway. Cronin v. Delevan, 50 Wis. 375, 7 N. W. 249.

(d) Objects outside of way.

A municipal corporation is not, as a general rule, required to erect barriers or railings along a street to prevent travelers from straying from it. Puffer v. Orange, 122 Mass. 389, 23 Am. Rep. 368; Daily v. Worcester, 131 Mass. 452; Murphy v. Gloucester, 105 Mass. 470; Stockwell v. Fitchburg, 110 Mass. 305; Monmouth v. Sullivan, 8 Ill. App. 50; Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646.

And this is so although there is a dangerous place at some distance from the highway which they may reach by so straying. Puffer v. Orange and Daily v. Worcester, supra.

Barriers are generally required only where an obstruction or excavation is placed in the traveled part of a street, or where the excavation is so near the traveled part that it makes a dangerous place to pass over; barriers are intended to make the passage-way safe, and not to define or mark the limits of the way. Herndon v. Salt Lake City, supra.

Nor can statutes which require cities and towns to provide railings for streets when necessary for the safety and convenience of travelers be made to inure to the benefit of one who, in pursuit of his own pleasure or business, designedly leaves the street to go upon adjoining land, and there meets with an obstruction. Morgan v. Hallowell, 57 Me. 375.

Obstructions or excavations near the boundaries of streets or highways, and separated therefrom by no visible mark which may aid the traveler to keep within the highways, however, may charge a municipality with liability for neglecting to guard against accidents. Sweet v. Poughkeepsie, 97 App. Div. 82, 89 N. Y. Supp. 618.

And railings along a public way are necessary when defects are in such close proximity to the traveled way as to make it unsafe to travel upon it and near its boundary. Stockwell v. Fitchburg; Puffer v. Orange; and Daily v. Worcester, supra; Hudson v. Marlborough, 154 Mass. 218, 28 N. E. 147; Monmouth v. Sullivan, supra.

And the absence of a railing on a highway to prevent travelers from going down a declivity just outside of the limits of the way constitutes a want of repair of the way for which the city is liable. Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402.

And it constitutes a defect in the highway itself. Spencer v. Mayfield (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 23.

And proof that a highway was defective by reason of the want of a railing to protect travelers from going down a declivity just outside of the limits of the highway is competent under a declaration alleging simply 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a want of repair in the highway. Alger v. Lowell, supra.

And evidence that the water in a slip was noxious and dangerous is admissible in an action against the city for failure to maintain proper barriers to keep people walking along the sidewalk from walking into it, for the purpose of showing the greater degree of care required of the city in protecting the public. Chicago v. Gallagher, 44 Ill. 295.

So, a city is liable for an injury sustained by reason of the want of a railing at a point so near to a declivity outside of the limits of a street as to make the street dangerous for travelers, although the injury was not received by passing down the declivity directly from the street itself. Alger v. Lowell, supra.

And the liability in such case is not affected by the fact that the injury was sustained by a person by being pushed from the street down the declivity by a crowd, if it was not done through the wilful act or negligence of the crowd or any person therein. Ibid.

Nor is it the duty of the city to protect animals by a guard or barrier at a dangerous place in proximity to a street confined to animals which at the time of the injury are docile and obedient and under the absolute control of the owner. Kennedy v. New York, 73 N. Y. 365, 29 Am. Rep. 160.

And a city owning part of a dock which is used in connection with its streets is charged with the duty of keeping the dock in a safe condition; and, if in using it in the customary way, a person's horse, without negligence, is lost, the city is liable, although the horse was not at the moment obedient to the will of the owner. Ibid.

And, where there was a steep, perpendicular bank at the side of a road extending about 28 feet above railroad tracks below, and about 56 feet distant from the tracks; and there were no guards or barriers along the road; and the horse of a traveler took fright at a locomotive and ran over the embankment,—the question of the defendant's negligence in an action against the city for the injury received, is one for the jury. Wellman v. Susquehanna Depot, 167 Pa. 239, 31 Atl. 566.

So, evidence that a street ran parallel with and about 20 feet from a canal, and the surface of the street sloped toward the canal, and, after reaching the edge of the street, the descent became precipitous; and there was a guard on the canal side of the street originally consisting of several rails, all of which except the bottom rail about 12 inches from the ground were gone; and that a man, while walking along the street on a snowy evening, fell over the rail and into the canal,—justifies the submission, in an action for the injury, of the claim of the city's negligence to the jury. Tompkins v. Oswego, 40 N. Y. S. R. 4, 15 N. Y. Supp. 371.

And an instruction in an action for a personal injury resulting from the failure of a city to erect barriers along a street next to a river bank is not erroneous in failing to define under what circumstances it would have been the city's duty to erect such barriers, where the entire charge showed that, if the facts admitted in evidence were proved, such circumstances were shown as made it the city's duty to have erected the barriers. San Antonio v. Porter, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 444, 59 S. W. 922.

So, a city which graded and filled one of its public streets so as to level it with and include as part thereof the top of a high wall erected by the owners of adjoining real estate, and allowed the public to use such street, without erecting guards or railings to prevent accidental driving or falling over such wall, is liable to a traveler who, having no knowledge of the wall, and without fault on his part, fell over the embankment and was injured. Aurora v. Colshire, 55 Ind. 484.

Likewise, an unguarded and unlighted excavation in close proximity to a cross walk may constitute negligence on the part of the municipality, although the cross walk itself is not defective. Hall v. Manson, 90 Iowa, 585, 58 N. W. 881.

And a municipal corporation is liable for the death of a child who was drowned in a pond of water situate in part on a public street and in part on abutting lots, where the accumulation of water was occasioned by the negligence of the city in filling in the street with earth, there being no fence or barrier, and the child having entered the pond from the street. Bowman v. Omaha, 59 Neb. 84, 80 N. W. 259; Omaha v. Richards, 49 Neb. 244, 68 N. W. 528.

And a finding, in an action against a city, charging that a child was killed by the failure of a city to prevent it from getting from a street into a sand pit, that the banks caved in upon it; and a failure or refusal of the jury to find whether the accident would have occurred even if the city had maintained barriers reasonably sufficient to protect persons lawfully using the street,—do not entitle the city to a judgment, notwithstanding a general verdict against it. Hawley v. Atlantic, 92 Iowa, 172, 60 N. W. 519.

A municipal corporation is not liable, however, for an injury caused by a dangerous place on a roadside which required a fence or barrier to make the road safe, where it had no power or right to erect such a fence or barrier. Jones v. Waltham, 4 Cush. 299, 50 Am. Dec. 783.

And a municipal corporation is not bound to erect barriers of any kind to prevent or warn travelers from straying off the side of a highway and falling into a dock 25 feet distant, although the land between the highway and the dock is on a level with the way, and open. Murphy v. Gloucester, 105 Mass. 470.

And a dangerous place at a distance of 25 feet from the limits of a highway is not in such proximity to the way as to make it necessary for the municipal corporation to maintain a railing. Hudson v. Marlborough, 154 Mass. 218, 28 N. E. 147.

Nor are municipal corporations bound so
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to construct their roads that a horse frightened by any cause, and rushing out of the track which is wrought for travel, will not expose himself, and the carriage or its occupants to injury from embankments, gutters, or other obstructions upon the side of the road, either within or without the limits of the highway. Adams v. Natick, 13 Allen. 429.

And this is so even though the near location of a railroad may render such occurrences probable. Ibid.

And, where a public road leading from a city into the country, in passing through the outskirts of the city, crossed a low tract of land on an embankment 33 feet wide and 7 feet high; and there was nothing along the highway which was ordinarily likely to frighten horses or make them unmanageable,—the city is not guilty of negligence in failing to maintain railings or other barriers along the side of the embankment; and a person whose horse, while being driven upon the embankment, stopped, backed up, and precipitated the driver and her wagon over the embankment, cannot recover for the injury received. Tarras v. Winona, 71 Minn. 22, 73 N. W. 505.

So, where a road runs along the bank of a lake and the roadside has no high bank, the whole descent from the top of the road-bed being only about 2½ to 3 feet in a distance of about a rod, no part of which descent is abrupt, and, when the lake is full, the water comes within 6 or 8 feet of the roadway, but, when it is shallow and the water is low, the water recedes to a distance of 6 or 8 rods from the opening, neither the bank formed by the side of the road, nor the vicinity of the margin of the lake, is of so dangerous a character as to require the municipality to maintain a railing between the road and the lake, or render the town liable for an accident at that place. Adams v. Natick, supra.

And, where a street runs along the towpath of a canal and another street comes into this street at right angles and crosses the canal by a bridge, the sides of the bridge being sufficiently protected, but there are no guards on the edge of the towpath or elsewhere except directly on the bridge, the city is not liable to a person who, in the night, started to cross the bridge, and fell from the edge of the towpath into the canal at a point 7 or 8 feet from the bridge, since the city is under no duty to guard the canal. Reinhart v. South Easton, 2 Sadler (Pa.) 90, 4 Atl. 532.

And, where a street was laid out along a canal, and a strip of land along a retaining wall of the canal was used as a portion of the street, and a traveler was thrown into the canal by driving onto the retaining wall, the city will not be held liable for the injury on the theory that it was negligent in not having erected a railing or wall in the street inside of the line of the property of the state, where by so doing the width of the street would have been so contracted that the obstruction that the guard or barrier would have created would have constituted a greater danger to travelers than the one sought to be avoided. Veeder v. Little Falls, 100 N. Y. 343, 3 N. E. 306.

So, where, at the intersection of two streets, the surface of the streets and abutting lots were level, and the grade of one of the streets became gradually lower so that about 30 feet down one of the lots the sidewalk was about 2 or 3 feet lower than the level of the abutting lot, and a traveler passing along the former street and supposing that she was turning on the latter street turned upon the lot instead, and walked some 30 feet over the lot, when she fell off the embankment and was injured, no such dangerous place contiguous to the street as to warrant a finding that there was negligence in the construction of the street, or in failing to erect barriers to prevent travelers from walking on the private lot, is shown; and a finding of negligence upon the part of the city in not having the street lighted is unwarranted. Denison v. Warren (Tex. Civ. App.) 36 S. W. 296.

Nor does the exercise of reasonable care by a city to keep its streets in a safe condition for bicycles and other vehicles require its officers to foresee that a woman riding a bicycle about midway between the sidewalks would lose control of it while riding down a slight descent and be carried across the carriage way and plank walk down to an embankment on the side of the street, so as to render it negligence upon the part of the city to fail to erect a guard rail or barrier that would have prevented her going over the walk and down the embankment. Smith v. Henderson, 54 App. Div. 26, 66 N. Y. Supp. 347.

And the obligation of municipal corporations to erect barriers around excavations in proximity to a highway does not extend to the protection of children against every sudden freak that may possess them; and a municipal corporation will not be held liable in damages to a child who had left the street or highway and suffered injury in consequence of having climbed upon a structure, entirely without its traveled limits, and fallen therefrom. Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369.

Nor can a temporary location of a traveling circus in the vicinity convert a reservoir in process of construction in a vacant lot into a nuisance, either public or private, so as to render a city liable for an injury to a person attracted to it by the circus. Morgan v. Hallowell, 57 Me. 375.

b. Lighting streets.

Unless the duty to light the streets of a municipality is imposed by statute or charter, the failure to maintain lights in the streets is generally not regarded as negligence. Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646; Gaskins v. Atlanta, 73 Ga. 746; Randall v. Eastern R. Co. 106 Mass. 276; 8 Am. Rep. 327; Miller v. St. Paul, 38 Minn. 134, 36 N. W. 271; Andrews v. Elmira, 128 App. Div. 699, 113 N. Y. Supp. 711.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And a city is under no obligation to light its streets to enable travelers to avoid a dangerous embankment outside a street where the street itself is safe and convenient for travel the whole width, unless the duty to do so is imposed by its charter. McHugh v. St. Paul, 67 Minn. 441, 70 N. W. 5; Miller v. St. Paul, supra; White v. New Bern, 146 N. C. 447, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1166, 59 S. E. 992; Canavan v. Oil City, 183 Pa. 611, 38 Atl. 1096.

In Canavan v. Oil City, supra. Bruch v. Philadelphia, 181 Pa. 588, 37 Atl. 818, was distinguished upon the ground that that case turned upon the question of contributory negligence: and the obligation of the city to provide light was not in question.

A municipal corporation exercises a quasi judicial or governmental function in establishing street lights. Andrews v. Elmira, supra.

So, failure of a city to avail itself of a discretionary power conferred upon it to light its streets cannot properly be regarded as an act of negligence rendering it liable for an injury to a person received from falling into an excavation in a street in the night, which would have been safe had the city lighted its streets. Freeport v. Isbell, 83 Ill. 440, 25 Am. Rep. 407; Chicago v. McDonald, 57 Ill. App. 250; Chicago v. Apel, 50 Ill. App. 132; Daytona v. Edson, 46 Fla. 463, 34 So. 954, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1000.

And a city which is under no statutory obligation to light its streets is not, as matter of law, when lighting them voluntarily, bound to do it in such a manner as to enable persons using them to see any obstruction that the city may have placed in the street irrespective of the question whether the obstruction was a reasonable and proper one or not. Columbus v. Sims, 94 Ga. 483, 20 S. E. 332.

Nor is a city liable for an accident that might have been caused by a failure to keep the street lamps lighted if this was its only omission. Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196.

And when, either from its having undertaken to do so, or from any other cause, it becomes the duty of a municipal corporation to light a bridge or street, it is sufficient if it does so in such a manner that it is in a reasonably safe condition for travel in the ordinary modes. Chicago v. Apel, and Chicago v. McDonald, supra.

But, if a city has assumed to light a street, but exercised the power in a negligent manner, and failed to furnish light sufficient to afford proper security from danger, it is liable for an injury caused by an obstruction or defect in the street when proper lighting would have removed the danger. Freeport v. Isbell, supra; Winchester v. Carroll, 99 Va. 727, 40 S. E. 37.

And this is so whether the charter imposes the obligation to light the streets or not. Winchester v. Carroll, supra.

In such case it is under duty to light its streets and bridges in such a manner as will afford protection to travelers against dangers which may be incident to their use.

Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169, 89 Am. Dec. 418.

And a nonsuit in an action against a municipal corporation to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by a fall into an excavation in a city street will not be granted on the ground that the street was sufficiently lighted to enable a person, in the exercise of ordinary care, to discover the danger and avoid it, where the testimony is conflicting as to the amount of light afforded by the street lights at that point, and there is evidence that the night was dark and foggy. Reed v. Spokane, 21 Wash. 218, 57 Pac. 803.

So, a charge in an action against a city that it carelessly and negligently allowed and permitted a cellar way to remain open in one of its public streets is broad enough to cover negligence in the manner of lighting the opening at night; and an instruction that, if the fall was caused by darkness, or arose from any other cause than the existence of an open cellar way, the verdict should be for the defendant was properly refused. McLeod v. Spokane, 26 Wash. 346, 67 Pac. 74.

And, where a personal injury is alleged to have been received by reason of a city negligently permitting an obstruction to be and remain upon a sidewalk of a street in the lighting of the city gas lamps in the vicinity lamps in that vicinity, by reason of which the person injured had fallen over the obstruction, evidence touching the location and lighting of the city gas lamps in the vicinity of such obstruction at the time of the accident is admissible. Indianapolis v. Gaston, 58 Ind. 224.

And the testimony of the engineer of an electric-light station that a large arc light was burning at the time and place of an alleged injury from an obstruction of the sidewalk, from a record kept by him made at the time showing that the light went on and off, is admissible in an action for the injury, claimed to have occurred when the place was unlighted. Edwards v. Cedar Rapids, 138 Iowa, 421, 116 N. H. 323.

And, where a personal injury is alleged to have resulted from a city negligently permitting an obstruction to be and remain upon a sidewalk of a street, and from its negligently failing to light the gas lamps in the vicinity so that a person passing along upon the sidewalk fell over the obstruction, evidence may be given of an ordinance of the city prescribing the duty of its commissioner of streets. Indianapolis v. Gaston, supra.

So, where a street was partially obstructed or out of repair, and might have been reasonably safe if lighted, but dangerous if unlighted, the fact that it was not lighted may be material upon the question of negligence of the city in failing to keep its streets in a proper condition. Miller v. St. Paul, supra; Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196; McKim v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 243, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 506, 66 Atl. 340.

And, where a person attempted to enter upon a bicycle path in a parkway with a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bicycle at night when the path was so poorly lighted that he could not distinguish the barriers thereof, and, deviating therefrom, he was injured by an obstruction near the path, the city is liable for the injury where the path is used by a large number of people at night, and the city, knowing such fact, took no precautions to warn the people of the danger. Collett v. New York, 51 App. Div. 394, 64 N. Y. Supp. 693.

And, where a person was injured by driving into a pile of bricks which had been placed in the street by certain contractors, who were building houses at a place near by, which was left in the nighttime without light or signal to indicate danger, the municipality is liable in an action for the damages sustained, where the accident resulted from a want of light, since it is responsible for the failure of the electric light company to light the street, where the evidence shows that the accident would not have happened had the street been lighted, notwithstanding the neglect of the contractor to place a lantern on the obstruction. Baltimore v. Beck, 96 Md. 183, 53 Atl. 976.

But, where the proximate cause of an injury is an opening or water way in a street, it is not error to give an instruction, in an action for the injury, authorizing a recovery, which does not require the jury to determine whether or not a lamp was maintained in the vicinity of the place of the accident. Davenport v. Hannibal, 108 Mo. 471, 18 S. W. 1122.

And an instruction in an action for an injury resulting from an obstruction in a street, that, if the place was not lighted, and the injury resulted solely from a failure to light the street, then no recovery could be had, is properly refused where the negligence in respect to which a cause of action was claimed was, in suffering a cross walk to remain out of repair, in improperly constructing a cross walk and improperly replacing it. Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 438, 11 Am. St. Rep. 136, 20 N. E. 33.

So, if, in order to maintain the streets of a municipality in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, it is necessary to place lights at certain places, the failure of the municipal corporation to do so is negligence. Andrews v. Elmira, 128 App. Div. 699, 113 N. Y. Supp. 711.

And absence of lights and defective lights are evidence on the question whether, at the time and place where an injury occurred, the streets were in a reasonably safe condition. White v. New Bern, 146 N. C. 447, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1166, 59 S. E. 992.

And evidence that a municipality provided arc lights for the vicinity of a sidewalk past a lot containing an excavation, and that these lights and those from near-by stores must have aided a person falling into the excavation in discerning the general course of the sidewalk, does not conclusively show that the city was not negligent in failing to guard the excavation, where it appears that the street light at the next street intersection toward which the person injured was walking was not giving any light at the time, and that such light had not been working properly for several days. Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757.

But, where a person was injured while walking after dark on a pathway at the side of a road in the outskirts of a city in a neighborhood that was sparsely settled, by being run into by a bicycle rider riding an unlighted bicycle; and there were two arc lights of about 200 candle power each, located a little over 300 feet from the place of accident, and an incandescent light about 190 feet distant, which lights were maintained under a contract with the city,—the failure of the city to supply the streets with more lights was not negligence, rendering it liable for the injury. Andrews v. Elmira, supra.

So, refusal to admit in evidence city ordinances for the placing of lights by persons occupying the streets for the storage of building materials is not error in an action against the city for an injury received from colliding with such an obstruction, since such ordinances do not give rise to a liability on the part of the city. Mills v. Philadelphia, 187 Pa. 287, 40 Atl. 821.

And, where a street has been closed at the top of a high embankment over which it had formerly passed on a bridge, which bridge had been removed and a new one erected a short distance away with an approach intersecting the street at another point, whereby the street at that point and the embankment where the old bridge had been was converted into a cul-de-sac terminating at the top of the embankment, barricaded by a fence and guard rail which might be a dangerous place in the night to travelers unacquainted with the locality, and who might be misled into thinking that the cul-de-sac might be a continuation of the street leading to the new bridge, such cul-de-sac should be so well lighted as to give fair warning that it is a mere cul-de-sac, or so guarded as to prevent entrance at the point of danger, even upon the darkest night. Corcoran v. New York, 188 N. Y. 131, 80 N. E. 660.

And where, in such case, a party riding in an automobile in the night through the street left it at the point where it intersected with the cul-de-sac, crashing through the fence at the top of the embankment, and fell to the railroad tracks below, where several of the party were struck by a passing train, there being evidence that the lights were insufficient to show the guard rail and fence at the end of the cul-de-sac, and also that, a short time before, another automobile had crashed into the fence under similar circumstances, which accident had been reported, the question whether the city had provided sufficient light to enable a traveler at night to discern the guard rail and fence, and to be aware of the danger in time to avoid accident, is one of fact for the jury. Ibid.

So, the absence or presence of lights in the streets of a city may be important on the question of the contributory negligence of a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) traveler injured because of a defect or obstruction in a street. Herndon v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 95 Pac. 646; Giffen v. Lewiston, 6 Idaho, 231, 55 Pac. 545.

But the presence of a light at a place where there was an opening in a sidewalk from which an injury resulted does not excuse the city, which is required to keep its streets in a safe condition, from liability for the injury. Giffen v. Lewiston, supra.

The duty of a city especially to illuminate a place where an obstruction exists, or to give warning thereof, however, depends upon the object being an unlawful obstruction; and a municipal corporation is not charged with the duty so to light a street as to show the presence of a stepping stone on the sidewalk near the curb, by a statute directing the proper authorities to increase as the public good may require the number of street lamps in the city, and to do any and all things pertaining to the well lighting of the city; the stepping stone not being an unlawful obstruction. Wolff v. District of Columbia, 196 U. S. 152, 49 L. ed. 426, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 967, affirming 21 App. D. C. 464, 69 L.R.A. 83.

And a city which permitted a ridge of earth from 4 to 6 inches high in a street over a water main, and allowed stumps and brush to remain in the street, and placed a hydrant in the street, failing to fence it, and failed to light the street or to place a light or signal at the hydrant, is not liable for an injury to a person who drove along the street and struck the hydrant, where the hydrant was in its proper place, and the city had a right to place it there, and neither the ridge, the stump, nor the brush pile, caused or contributed to the accident. Vincennes v. Thuis, 28 Ind. App. 523, 63 N. E. 315.

But, where the evidence in an action against a city for an injury from falling into a street drainage ditch about 2 feet in depth, running parallel with the outside of the sidewalk, the negligence charged being a failure to maintain a light and provide barriers, tends to prove an unsafe condition of the place of the injury with respect to the relative position of the sidewalk and ditch and the absence of light; and that the unsafe condition was known to the municipal officers, or would have been known by the exercise of reasonable care; and that the person injured was in the exercise of due care for his own safety,—a peremptory instruction for the defendant is properly refused. Odin v. Nichols, 133 Ill. App. 306.

So, the duty of a city as to the walks in one of its parks is one of reasonable care commensurate with the danger to be apprehended; and, since the walks of a park are not generally used in the nighttime for pleasure travel, it cannot be held that the city has the legal duty imposed upon it to light them so that the attention of people will necessarily be called to irregularities like those of steps connecting different surfaces of the walks, O'Rourke v. New York, 17 App. Div. 349, 45 N. Y. Supp. 261.

Nor is a city which causes a lamp-post to be set in a street in the prosecution of a public improvement, which it has power to authorize, rendered liable for an injury caused by a collision with the lamp-post, by the fact that no light is placed upon the post. Van Wie v. Mt. Vernon, 26 App. Div. 330, 49 N. Y. Supp. 779.

And a municipal corporation is not bound to have its streets or bridges so well lighted that intoxicated persons, or others proceeding with reckless want of care, may go safely along. Chicago v. Apel, 50 Ill. App. 132.

So, evidence that, when a person injured by falling over a hydrant reached the place where the hydrant was, a near-by electric light in the street flickered and went out, is not alone sufficient to show negligence upon the part of the city in lighting the street, since it is not possible to guard against particular electric lights going out suddenly. Halifax v. Lordly, 20 Can. S. C. 505.

And whether or not a city is negligent in permitting an electric light to be placed in such a manner that the shadow cast by the supporting pole conceals an opening in a cross walk, which may cause an injury to pedestrians, is a question for the jury in an action for such an injury. Stone v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 65, 67 L.R.A. 253, 70 Pac. 249.

XII. Knowledge or notice of obstruction.

a. Necessity of, to liability.

1. General rules

The duty to remove obstructions in streets the neglect of which will make a city liable to an injured person must come from knowledge of their dangerous character. Kunz v. Troy, 16 N. Y. S. R. 459, 1 N. Y. Supp. 596; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 533.

And, before a municipal corporation charged with the duty of maintaining a highway can be made liable for a defect or obstruction therein, it must have notice, actual or constructive, of such defect or obstruction. Boucher v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 456; Denver v. Aaron, 6 Colo. App. 232, 40 Pac. 587; Denver v. Saulcey, 5 Colo. App. 420, 38 Pac. 1098; Cunningham v. Denver, 23 Colo. 18, 58 Am. St. Rep. 212, 45 Pac. 356; District of Columbia v. Payne, 13 App. D. C. 500; Brunswick v. Braxton, 70 Ga. 193; Lewis v. Atlanta, 77 Ga. 756, 4 Am. St. Rep. 108; Rome v. Suddeth, 116 Ga. 649, 42 S. E. 1032; Chicago v. McCarthy, 75 Ill. 603; Ft. Wayne v. DeWitt, 47 Ind. 391; Spiceland v. Alier, 98 Ind. 467; Evansville v. Senhenn, 151 Ind. 42, 41 L.R.A. 728, 68 Am. St. Rep. 218, 47 N. E. 634, 51 N. E. 88; Lewisville v. Batson, 29 Ind. App. 21, 63 N. E. 861; Bucher v. South Bend, 20 Ind. App. 177, 50 N. E. 412; Ft. Wayne v. Patterson, 3 Ind. App. 34, 29 N. E. 167; Rosedale v. Ferguson, 3 Ind. App. 596, 30 N. E. 156; Canfield v. Newport, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2213, 73 S. W. 788; Bell v. Henderson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2434, 74 S. W. 206; Bragg v. Bangor, 51 Me. 532; Nesbitt v. Greenville, 69 Miss. 22, 30 Am. St. Rep. 521, 10 So. 452; Butler v. Ox- ford, 69 Miss. 618, 13 So. 626; Gerber v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. App. 191, 79 S. W. 717; Caton v. Sedalia, 62 Mo. App. 227; Schweickhardt v. St. Louis, 2 Mo. App. 571; Sweet v. Gloversville, 12 Hun, 302; Requa v. Rochester, 45 N. Y. 129, 6 Am. Rep. 52; Hoyer v. North Tonawanda, 79 Hun, 39, 29 N. Y. Supp. 650; Fox v. Manchester, 183 N. Y. 141, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 474, 75 N. E. 1116; Griffin v. New York, 9 N. Y. 456, 61 Am. Dec. 700; Hart v. Brooklyn, 36 Barb. 226; Bush v. Geneva, 3 Thomp. & C. 409; Higgins v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co. 54 App. Div. 69, 66 N. Y. Supp. 334; Seaman v. New York, 3 Daly, 147; McDermott v. Kingston, 19 Hun, 198; Magee v. Troy, 48 Hun, 383, 1 N. Y. Supp. 24; Jones v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 310, 32 S. E. 675; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532; Boyle v. Mahanay City, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 195; Duncan v. Philadelphia, 173 Pa. 550, 51 Am. St. Rep. 780, 34 Atl. 235; Galveston v. Smith, 80 Tex. 69, 15 S. W. 589; Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 10 N. W. 162; Cooper v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 458, 72 N. W. 1130.

But notice may be either express or constructive, arising from the lapse of time. Anderson v. Wilmington (Del.) 70 Atl. 204.

Where defects or obstructions in a street are not occasioned by any act of the municipal corporation, its officers or agents, the basis of an action against the city for an injury resulting therefrom is negligence; and notice to the corporation of the defect which caused the injury, or facts from which notice thereof may reasonably be inferred, or proof of circumstances from which it appears that the defect ought to have been known and remedied by it, is essential to liability. Rosedale v. Ferguson, supra; Madison v. Baker, 103 Ind. 41, 2 N. E. 236; Lafayette v. Blood, 40 Ind. 62; Warsaw v. Dunlap, 112 Ind. 576, 11 N. E. 623, 14 N. E. 568; Montgomery v. Wright, 72 Ala. 411, 47 Am. Rep. 422; Denver v. Magivney (Colo.) 96 Pac. 1002; Denver v. Dean, 10 Colo. 375, 3 Am. St. Rep. 594, 16 Pac. 30; Boulder v. Niles, 9 Colo. 415, 12 Pac. 632; Anderson v. Wilmington; Lewis v. Atlanta; and Rome v. Suddeth, supra; Montezuma v. Wilson, 82 Ga. 206, 14 Am. St. Rep. 150, 9 S. E. 17; Warren v. Wright, 3 Ill. App. 602; Chatsworth v. Ward, 10 Ill. App. 75; Chicago v. Watson, 6 Ill. App. 344; Paxton v. Frew, 52 Ill. App. 393; Joliet v. Seward, 86 Ill. 402, 29 Am. Rep. 35; Royal Center v. Bingaman, 37 Ind. App. 626, 77 N. E. 811; Black v. Mishawaka, 30 Ind. App. 104, 65 N. E. 538; Dwyer v. Boston, 180 Mass. 381, 62 N. E. 397; Smith v. St. Joseph, 42 Mo. App. 392; Martin v. St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 117 S. W. 94; McGinity v. New York, 5 Duer, 674; Mattimore v. Erie, 144 Pa. 14, 22 Atl. 817; Boyle v. Mahanay City, supra; Lohr v. Phillipsburg, 156 Pa. 246, 27 Atl. 133; Galveston v. Smith, 80 Tex. 69, 15 S. W. 589; Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 15 S. W. 90; Ft. Worth v. Johnson, 84 Tex. 137, 19 S. W. 361; New York v. Sheffield, 4 Wall. 189, 18 L. ed. 416; Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309.

And the mere existence of an obstruction or defect in a street, not resulting from defective construction, is not sufficient to establish negligence upon the part of a municipal corporation. Doulon v. Clinton, 33 Iowa, 397; Turner v. Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 51; Kenyon v. Indianapolis, Wilson, Super. Ct. (Ind.) 129; Fitzgerald v. Concord and Vandyke v. Cincinnati, supra.

To hold a city liable for an injury resulting from a defective or obstructed sidewalk or street, it must be made to appear either that the city had actual notice of the defect, or that it was a patent defect and had continued so long that notice might reasonably be inferred, or that the defect was one which, with reasonable and proper care, should have been ascertained and remedied. Kansas City v. Bradbury, 45 Kan. 381, 23 Am. St. Rep. 731, 25 Pac. 889; Pleasanton v. Rhine, 8 Kan. App. 452, 54 Pac. 512; Jansen v. Atchison, 16 Kan. 358; Denver v. Dean, supra; Boulder v. Weger, 17 Colo. App. 69, 66 Pac. 1070; Jarrell v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 454, 56 Atl. 379; Anderson v. Wilmington, supra; Herfurth v. Washington, 6 D. C. 289; Montezuma v. Wilson, supra; Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561; Joliet v. Gerber, 21 Ill. App. 622; Ransom v. Belvidere, 87 Ill. App. 167; Sherman v. Chicago, 101 Ill. App. 312; Ryan v. Chicago, 79 Ill. App. 28; Chicago v. Langglass, 66 Ill. 361; Kenyon v. Indianapolis; Turner v. Indianapolis; and Doulon v. Clinton,—supra; Edwards v. Cedar Rapids, 138 Iowa, 421, 116 N. W. 323; Sikes v. Manchester, 59 Iowa, 65, 12 N. W. 735; Jones v. Clinton, 100 Iowa, 333, 69 N. W. 418; Hazellrigg v. Frankfort, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 207, 92 S. W. 584; Mitchell v. Brady, 124 Ky. 411, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 751, 124 Am. St. Rep. 408, 99 S. W. 266; Donaldson v. Boston, 16 Gray, 508; Parker v. Boston, 175 Mass. 501, 56 N. E. 569; Miller v. St. Paul, 38 Minn. 134, 36 N. W. 271; Moore v. Minneapolis, 19 Minn. 300, Gil. 258; Baustian v. Young, 152 Mo. 317, 75 Am. St. Rep. 462, 53 S. W. 921; Young v. Webb City, 150 Mo. 333, 51 S. W. 709; Squires v. Chillicothe, 89 Mo. 226, 1 S. W. 23; Carrington v. St. Louis, 89 Mo. 208, 58 Am. Rep. 108, 1 S. W. 240; Russell v. Columbia, 74 Mo. 480, 41 Am. Rep. 325; Jordan v. Hannibal, 87 Mo. 673; Yocum v. Trenton, 20 Mo. App. 489; Williams v. Hannibal, 94 Mo. App. 549, 68 S. W. 380; Bonine v. Richmond, 75 Mo. 437; Nothdurft v. Lincoln, 66 Neb. 430, 92 N. W. 628, 96 N. W. 163; Palmer v. Portsmouth, 43 N. H. 265; Hunt v. New York, 20 Jones & S. 198; Hart v. Brooklyn, 36 Barb. 226; Dorlon v. Brooklyn, 46 Barb. 604; Hume v. New York, 47 N. Y. 639; Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344; Farley v. New York, 152 N. Y. 222, 57 Am. St. Rep. 511, 46 N. E. 506; Beekman v. New York, 18 Misc. 509, 41 N. Y. Supp. 990; Rehberg v. New York, 91 N. Y. 137, 43 Am. Rep. 657; Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309; Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Reprint, 567; Circleville v. Sohn, 20 Ohio C. C. 368; Lohr v. Phillipsburg, 156 Pa. 246, 27 Atl. 133; Briggs v. Huntington, 32 W. Va. 55, 9 S. E. 51; Goodnough v. Oshkosh, 24 Wis. 549, 1 Am. Rep. 202; Cooper v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 458, 72 N. W. 1130.

That a city had actual or constructive notice of a defect in a street, causing a personal injury, is a substantive fact to be established by the evidence, in an action for the injury; and this fact cannot be left to the mere inference or conjecture of the jury. Nothdurft v. Lincoln, 66 Neb. 434, 92 N. W. 628, 96 N. W. 163.

And the burden of proof rests with the plaintiff to establish that the defect was open and notorious, of long standing, and of such a character as would naturally arrest the attention of the passer-by. McGrail v. Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52, 53 N. W. 955.

And a person injured by a hidden defect in a sidewalk of which the city had no actual notice cannot recover for the injury in the absence of anything tending to show how long the defect had existed before the accident occurred, or the usual duration of sidewalks of the kind in controversy. Buckley v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 16, 56 S. W. 319.

And a city is not liable for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk, where the defect was caused by the soil underneath the stone giving way and causing the stone to become loose, the sidewalk having been in such defective condition but a short time, and its condition not being known to the city. Dixon v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 359.

A city is responsible only for reasonable diligence in repairing a defect in a street or taking proper precautions to prevent accident after being advised of the defective condition. Cunningham v. Denver, 23 Colo. 18, 58 Am. St. Rep. 212, 45 Pac. 356.

And, if work by which an obstruction or defect in a street is created is done by the consent of the city, but not under its immediate supervision, the city is not liable for the negligence of those doing the work, but only for its own negligence in not correcting the evil after notice, actual or constructive. McDermott v. Kingston, 19 Hun, 198.

And a complaint against a city for an injury caused by a dangerous hole in a sidewalk must show that the city authorities had notice of the defect, or with reasonable care might have known of it. Cuthbert v. Appleton, 22 Wis. 642.

But, where the charge in an action for injuries resulting from a hole in a sidewalk fully explained the element of notice of the defect, an instruction as to the degree of care required of the city is not rendered erroneous by omitting the subject of notice. Padelford v. Eagle Grove, 117 Iowa, 616, 91 N. W. 899.

Nor can the officers of a municipal corporation be said to have suffered a use of a way, within the meaning of a statute making it liable for injuries resulting from suffering a use of a defective or obstructed way, unless they knew or ought to have known of its use. Hyde v. Swanton, 72 Vt. 242, 47 Atl. 790.

And the liability of a city for injuries arising from defects in public ways is the same, so far as concerns innocent persons, whether the condition of the way is due to wear and decay, or to the misconduct of individuals in tearing it up, in the absence of any showing of actual notice to the municipality, or that a reasonable time to repair has elapsed. Hembling v. Grand Rapids, 99 Mich. 292, 58 N. W. 310.

Nor does a city ordinance requiring the owners or occupants of a dwelling house to remove snow, or rain which shall freeze on the sidewalk, within four hours, under a penalty, render the city liable in an action against it for damages for personal injuries sustained by slipping upon ice which had formed on the sidewalk in front of a building the title to which was in the city, without proof of actual or constructive notice of the condition of the sidewalk before the happening of the accident; and the mere fact of ownership by the city raises no presumption of notice. Heintze v. New York, 18 Jones & S. 295.

So, if a sidewalk was properly constructed, and afterwards became out of repair, the city would not be liable for a resulting injury, unless it had notice of the defect. Montgomery v. Des Moines, 55 Iowa, 101, 7 N. W. 421; Miller v. St. Paul, supra.

And, where a street had been put in good condition, and was reasonably safe against all accidents that could be reasonably foreseen and provided for, and afterwards it became dangerous from any cause, the corporation would not be liable for an injury resulting therefrom unless it had notice of such dangerous condition in time to have repaired it. District of Columbia v. Boswell, 6 App. D. C. 402; Rogers v. Williamsport, 199 Pa. 450, 49 Atl. 293.

But, where a sidewalk in a city was out of repair, and the occupant of the abutting lot was required by the city commissioner to repair it under an invalid ordinance, and did so, but left it in a defective condition, the defect not being apparent, and this defect caused an injury to a pedestrian, the city having had notice of the former defect, its obligation to repair continued until the walk was put in proper repair; and it will be conclusively presumed that the city knew of the defect left therein when the repairing was done which caused the injury. Woodward v. Boscobel, 84 Wis. 226, 54 N. W. 332.

Municipal authorities having actual notice of a dangerous defect or obstruction in a street, however, are under duty, without unreasonable delay, to repair it. Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43; Aurora v. Dale, 90 Ill. 46; Reid v. Chicago, 83 Ill. App. 554; Lamb v. Cedar Rapids, 108 Iowa, 629, 79 N. W. 366; Farrell v. Dubuque, 129 Iowa 447, 105 N. W. 696; Aitchison v. King, 9 Kan. 550; Fugate v. Somerset, 97 Ky. 48, 29 S. W. 970; Covington v. Huber, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2107, 66 S. W. 619; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Cline v. Crescent City R. Co. 43 La. Am. 327, 26 Am. St. Rep. 187, 9 So. 122; York v. Everton (Mo. App.) 116 S. W. 490; Caton v. Sedalia, 62 Mo. App. 227; Tucker v. Salt Lake City, 10 Utah, 173, 37 Pac. 261; Delger v. St. Paul, 4 McCrary, 634, 14 Fed. 567; Merrill v. Portland, 4 Cliff, 138 Fed. Cas. No. 9,470.

And in such case the city is liable for an injury caused thereby to one in the exercise of proper care. King v. Oshkosh, 75 Wis. 517, 44 N. W. 745; Bradford v. Aniston, 92 Ala. 349, 25 Am. St. Rep. 60, 8 So. 683; Buckley v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. 188, 68 S. W. 1069; Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96; Weed v. Ballston Spa, 76 N. Y. 329; Gordon v. Richmond, 83 Va. 436, 2 S. E. 727; Delger v. St. Paul, supra.

So, where a defect or obstruction in a street of a city is patent or obvious, and has continued so long that notice may be reasonably inferred; or where the defect or obstruction is one which, with reasonable or proper care, should have been ascertained and remedied,—the city is liable for injuries resulting therefrom. Union Street R. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan. 83, 37 Pac. 1012; Aitchison v. King, 9 Kan. 550; Aurora v. Dale, supra; Schmidt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 83 Ill. 405; Fugate v. Somerset; Covington v. Huber; and Caton v. Sedalia,—supra; Barr v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. 550, 16 S. W. 483; Miller v. Canton; Buckley v. Kansas City; and York v. Everton,—supra; Norwalk v. Jacobs, 27 Ohio C. C. 691; Tucker v. Salt Lake City and Gordon v. Richmond, supra.

And this is so no matter how the defect was caused. Aitchison v. King, supra.

So, failure of municipal authorities to discover and remedy a dangerous defect in a public street within a reasonable time is itself negligence. Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273; Niven v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 619.

And failure to repair a defect in a traveled public street after notice and reasonable opportunity to do so is evidence of negligence on the part of the city. Maus v. Springfield, 101 Mo. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 634, 14 S. W. 630; Weed v. Ballston Spa, 76 N. Y. 329.

And a charge that a city wrongfully and negligently permitted a walk to remain unsafe and out of repair sufficiently alleges notice, actual or constructive. Mattoon v. Worland, 97 Ill. App. 13.

And one charging that the city negligently permitted a sidewalk to be broken and out of repair so as to be unsafe, and negligently permitted it to remain in such unsafe condition, warrants proof that the defendant city had actual notice of such defective sidewalk, or that it had been out of repair for such a length of time as to impute notice to the city. Guthrie v. Finch, 13 Okla. 496, 75 Pac. 288.

The duty is imposed upon a municipal corporation to keep its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition, and the law conclusively presumes either that such diligence has been exercised, and that the knowledge which such diligence would procure has been acquired, or that the city has been culpably negligent in not employing such diligence. Rice v. Des Moines, 40 Iowa, 638.

And, to maintain an action against a municipal corporation for an injury to a person in consequence of its streets or sidewalks being defective, obstructed, and out of repair, it may be alleged and proved that the corporation or its officers had notice of such defect and want of repair; or a state of facts may be shown from which notice may be implied or inferred. Mack v. Salem, 6 Or. 275.

And where, in an action against a city for injuries from an excavation across a sidewalk, in which the defense was that the excavation was made by an independent contractor, the parties proceed to trial, and no objection is made until the argument of counsel that the petition does not allege that the city had constructive notice of the excavation, it is proper, under a statutory provision authorizing amendments in furtherance of justice, to allow an amendment to the petition, no prejudice to the defendant being shown, charging that the city had constructive notice of the excavation so as to conform it to the evidence. Pace v. Webster City, 138 Iowa, 107, 115 N. W. 888.

So, a charge in a petition in an action against a city for an injury by an obstruction in a street, that the defendant unlawfully and negligently permitted the street car company to make the obstruction, sufficiently alleges notice to the city of the existence of the obstruction, since the city could not negligently permit a thing not known to it. Sparr v. St. Louis, 4 Mo. App. 573; Mansfield v. Moore, 124 Ill. 133, 16 N. E. 246, affirming 21 Ill. App. 326; Union Street R. Co. v. Stone, supra.

And error in instructing the jury in an action against a city, that the city was charged with the duty promptly to repair an alleged defect in a street after it had knowledge of its existence, or after the circumstances were such that knowledge might be inferred, is without prejudice, where the evidence shows that the defect had existed for an unreasonable length of time, and that the city had actual or constructive knowledge of it. Denver v. Moewes, 15 Colo. App. 28, 60 Pac. 986.

So, a municipal corporation is liable for injuries resulting from a depression or excavation in a sidewalk caused by the operations of an abutting owner, if it has actual or constructive notice of the defect, through the owner is also liable. Philadelphia v. Smith, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 147, 16 Atl. 493.

And evidence, in an action for injuries sustained in falling upon an icy sidewalk, tending to show an accumulation of ice which had remained a length of time sufficient to charge the municipality with notice of its existence, and which would have enabled it, by the exercise of ordinary care, to have caused its removal; and that its condition was such as to indicate the necessity of its removal,—justifies the jury in finding a failure of the performance of its duty upon the part of the municipality. Colburn v. Canandaigua, 28 N. Y. Week. Dig. 441, 15 N. Y. S. R. 668.

2. Effect of special statutory provisions.

Where the statute in express terms imposes an absolute liability upon a municipality for defects or obstructions in its streets, the question of notice thereof to the municipality is immaterial; and it is not necessary to allege or prove notice to the municipality of the defect. Chapman v. Milton, 31 W. Va. 384, 7 S. E. 22; Biggs v. Huntington, 32 W. Va. 55, 9 S. E. 51; Evans v. Huntington, 37 W. Va. 601, 16 S. E. 801.

And, if the street or sidewalk was in fact defective, and such defect caused the injury in question, it is no defense on the part of the town that it had exercised great care in repairing the street or sidewalk. Biggs v. Huntington, supra.

And a statute declaring that any person who sustains any injury to his person or property by reason of a public road, bridge, street, sidewalk, or alley in any corporate city, town, or village being out of repair may recover all damages sustained by him by reason of such injury, is unqualified and absolute, and fixes the liability upon the municipal corporation for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in a street, irrespective of the question of notice to the municipality. Chapman v. Milton, supra.

Where, under the statute, cities and towns are liable for injuries caused by a defect in a way only when the defect might have been remedied by reasonable care and diligence on their part, however, it is incumbent upon a person injured by a defect or obstruction in a street to show either actual notice of the defect to the city or town before the accident, or such facts and circumstances that the city or town, by the use of care and diligence, might have had notice of it. Whitney v. Lowell, 151 Mass. 212, 24 N. E. 47; Hanscom v. Boston, 141 Mass. 242, 5 N. E. 249.

And, under a statute providing that towns are liable in damages for injuries happening to any person, his team or carriage, traveling upon any highway, by reason of any obstruction, defect, insufficiency, or want of repair of a bridge, culvert, sluiceway, or dangerous embankment, and defective railings, which renders it unsuitable for travel thereon, a town is not liable to a highway traveler who is injured by falling into a trench dug across a sidewalk by an adjoining landowner, unless it has been given express notice of the defect in the manner provided by the statute, and has not begun to repair. Wilder v. Concord, 72 N. H. 259, 56 Atl. 193.

So, a charter provision that the city shall not be liable for any damage or injury sustained by any person in consequence of any street, highway, bridge, culvert, sidewalk, or cross walk in said city being out of repair, unsafe, dangerous, or obstructed, unless actual notice of the defective, unsafe, or obstructed condition of said street, highway, bridge, culvert, sidewalk, or cross walk shall have been given to the city at least a specified time previous to such damage or injury, requires actual notice as distinguished from constructive notice. McNally v. Cohoes, 127 N. Y. 350, 27 N. E. 1043, affirming 53 Hun, 202, 6 N. Y. Supp. 842; Smith v. Rochester, 79 Hun, 174, 29 N. Y. Supp. 539; Tarba v. Rochester, 41 App. Div. 188, 58 N. Y. Supp. 755.

It is not sufficient that the proper city officer was negligent in not discovering the defect. Smith v. Rochester and Tarba v. Rochester, supra.

And such a provision has been held not to be unconstitutional as depriving a person injured of a remedy against the party who had inflicted the injury, and affording no other remedy. McNally v. Cohoes, 53 Hun, 202, 6 N. Y. Supp. 842.

And it is valid and bars a recovery where the required notice has not been given. Houston v. Vatter, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 298, 74 S. W. 806.

But it has also been held that such a provision is an unreasonable regulation amounting to a denial of justice, and is, therefore, void. Born v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 719, 68 Pac. 386.

And it is sufficient if the defective condition of a sidewalk was actually brought to the knowledge of the proper city officer for a sufficient length of time prior to the accident to have enabled the city authorities by reasonable diligence to remedy the defect in the walk; and the notice need not necessarily be a written or a verbal one. Smith v. Rochester, supra.

But, where a city charter expressly provides that no action is maintainable against the city for an injury to person or property caused by snow or ice upon a sidewalk or street, unless a designated notice thereof be given the city, the city cannot be held liable for an injury to a pedestrian falling on a sidewalk on account of accumulated ice, unless such notice was given in accordance with the charter provision. Sayfaus v. Rochester, 113 N. Y. Supp. 840.

So, under a city charter providing that the city shall not be liable for any damages arising or growing out of any sidewalks being in a defective or dangerous condition, or out of repair, unless it is shown that, previous to the happening of the same, one of the aldermen of the ward in which the same is located had knowledge thereof; and no knowledge of such condition of the same shall be presumed unless the defect out of which the same grew existed three weeks before such damages occurred,—if there was no actual knowledge of the defect on the part of the aldermen of the ward it is necessary, in order to establish liability on the part of the city, to prove that the defect had in fact existed for three weeks before the injury, and also such facts as would charge the proper city officers with notice of the defect before the accident happened. Sullivan v. Oshkosh, 55 Wis. 508, 13 N. W. 468.

And the defect must have existed three weeks continuously in order that the city may be charged with constructive notice. Byington v. Merrill, 112 Wis. 211, 88 N. W. 26.

But knowledge or notice may be presumed where the defect has existed three weeks, in any case in which such presumption would have arisen before the enactment of the charter provision. Studley v. Oshkosh, 45 Wis. 380.

And the fact that the defect which caused the injury had existed for three weeks before the accident need not be proved by positive evidence that the particular defect which caused the injury existed so as to be dangerous for that period of time; it may be inferred, like any other fact, from all the evidence upon the subject. Sullivan v. Oshkosh, supra.

And a complaint, in an action against a city under such a provision, which charges the continuance of a defect in a sidewalk for more than three weeks preceding the accident, shows prima facie a liability upon the part of the city. Studley v. Oshkosh, supra.

But an instruction to the jury, in an action under such a provision, that, if the defect had existed for three weeks prior to an injury therefrom, they might presume and find the city had knowledge thereof, is erroneous; it should have been so framed as to permit the jury to find whether, under all the facts and circumstances of the case, the conditions were such as to bring constructive notice home to the city. Rhyner v. Menasha, 107 Wis. 201, 83 N. W. 303.

So, under a statutory provision that no recovery can be had against a town or city for an injury received through a defect in one of its highways, unless some one of its municipal officers, or highway surveyors, or road commissioners had twenty-four hours' notice of the actual defect, the notice must be of the identical defect which caused the injury; notice of another defect, or of the existence of a cause likely to produce a defect, is not sufficient. Smyth v. Bangor, 72 Me. 249.

And a statute providing that any person who has received any injury by reason of any defect in a highway which has existed for the space of twenty-four hours may recover; and that, if the town had reasonable notice of such defect, the person injured may recover double the damages sustained,—is intended to give damages in every case if the defect had existed twenty-four hours, without other proof of notice, and to give a penalty in addition if the town had actual and seasonable notice. Brady v. Lowell, 3 Cush. 121.

And, where a defect or obstruction has existed in a street for twenty-four hours; or where the town has been duly notified of its existence,—the town is primarily liable for all injuries of which it is the sole cause. Hawks v. Northampton, 116 Mass. 420.

And, where an obstruction in a street is occasioned by the exercise of a temporary right to dig up the way for laying an aqueduct pipe, the duty attaches to the municipal corporation of providing proper guards for the public travel during the period that the way may be necessarily dug up for such purpose; and the municipality is liable for injury occasioned by such a defect in the highway, not only upon reasonable notice thereof, but also where it has existed for the space of twenty-four hours previous to the occurrence of the injury. Merrill v. Wilbraham, 11 Gray, 154.

But this provision makes the previous existence of such a defect for the length of time specified in the statute an essential to entitle a party suffering damage to a remedy; and under it a city is not liable for either single or double damages if the defect had not previously existed for twenty-four hours. Brady v. Lowell, supra.

And the defect which was the proximate cause of the injury must have existed twenty-four hours, or been brought to the notice of the town, or been such that, with due care, the town might have known of its existence before the time of the injury; it is not enough that another defect, which occasioned the defect which was the proximate cause of the injury, had then existed more than twenty-four hours. Ryerson v. Abington, 102 Mass. 526.

A statutory requirement of written notice to a city of the dangerous condition of a street for the purpose of making the adjoining lots chargeable with the expense of repairing the street, however, has no application to the liability of the city for permitting the nuisance to remain in its streets, by means of which persons or property are injured. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

So, a charter provision that the city shall not be liable for any damages or injury arising from the bad condition of the streets, alleys, or highways of the city by reason of the neglect of the proper officer of said city to repair the same, until the supervisor of said city shall have been notified thereof, and shall have failed to repair the same within a reasonable time after such notice, does not apply in a case in which there is no charge of negligence in not keeping the street in repair, but one of permitting a work to be carried on in a street dangerous in itself without proper safeguards. Springfield v. Le Claire, 49 Ill. 476.

Nor does a charter provision of a city that no action shall be maintained against the city for injuries caused from streets, sewers, etc., being out of repair from the gross negligence of the city, unless the same shall have remained so for ten days after special notice in writing to the mayor or city engineer, apply to an injury caused by the caving in of a sewer in a street near another break which had existed for two months. Dallas v. McAllister (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 173.

But it does not exempt a city from liability for ordinary negligence in failing to repair a broken grating near the corner of two of the principal streets and adjacent to the sidewalk, on which a person stepped and was injured without fault on her part. Peacock v. Dallas, 89 Tex. 438, 35 S. W. 8.

And, where a city's failure to construct a crossing in the most substantial manner only remotely contributed to an injury to a traveler in using it, while the proximate cause was its failure to keep the same in repair; and the crossing had been out of repair for more than ten days prior to the injury, the city is not liable in the absence of the notice prescribed by the charter. Houston v. Vatter, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 298, 74 S. W. 806.

Nor does this provision protect a city which sold fences on property through which a street was opened, and authorized the purchaser to remove them, which he did, but failed to fill a hole where a fence post was removed, just beside the sidewalk, and a pedestrian stepped into the hole and was injured, although no notice of the hole had been given, since the act of the purchaser was to be considered the act of the city. Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76.

b. Actual knowledge or notice.

1. General rules.

Actual knowledge or notice to officers of a municipality of a defect or obstruction in its streets, when such officers are clothed with general powers and duties with reference to supervision and control of corporate affairs, or are clothed with specific duties as to the care of the streets, is notice to and binding upon the municipality. Cunningham v. Thief River Falls, 84 Minn. 21, 86 N. W. 763; Louisville v. Keher, 117 Ky. 841, 79 S. W. 270; McEvoy v. Sault Ste. Marie, 136 Mich. 172, 98 N. W. 1006; Small v. Kansas City, 185 Mo. 291, 84 S. W. 901; Gage v. Hornellsville, 2 N. Y. S. R. 351; Nitz v. Toledo, 22 Ohio C. C. 454; Lynchburg v. Wallace, 95 Va. 640, 29 S. E. 675; Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

And the knowledge of a defect or obstruction in a street, of an officer or agent, obtained in the line of his duty a sufficient length of time before an accident caused thereby, for the repair of the defect or the removal of the obstruction, is actual notice to the city. Denver v. Dean, 10 Colo. 375, 3 Am. St. Rep. 594, 16 So. 30; Fuller v. Jackson, 82 Mich. 480, 46 N. W. 721; Lincoln v. Woodward, 19 Neb. 259, 27 N. W. 110.

And that a municipal corporation refused or failed, when informed of the condition of a street, to repair it, is competent, in an action for an injury resulting from the alleged want of repair, as tending to establish the fact of negligence. Montgomery v. Gilmer, 33 Ala. 116, 70 Am. Dec. 562.

By actual notice of a defect or obstruction in a sidewalk is meant that some member of the board of mayor and aldermen, or some agent or employee of the city, whose duty it was to keep the streets in repair, or see that they were so kept, saw it; or that someone notified them, or some of them, of its existence. Poole v. Jackson, 93 Tenn. 62, 23 S. W. 57.

And, where subordinate officers of a municipal corporation, charged with the duty of inspection, have actual notice of an obstruction in a street, their failure to report cannot shield the city from liability for an injury resulting therefrom. Goodfellow v. New York, 100 N. Y. 15, 2 N. E. 462.

And a person injured by a defect or obstruction in a street has the right to show, in an action against the city for the injury, that the city, through any of its officers charged with police powers, or superintendents of the street, had notice of its condition. Johnson v. Poughkeepsie, 29 App. Div. 16, 51 N. Y. Supp. 190; Woods v. Lisbon, 138 Iowa, 402, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 886, 116 N. W. 143; Bowman v. Tripp, 14 R. I. 242.

Nor is there any legal distinction between the personal knowledge of a municipal officer charged with the duty of supervision of a street, and his official knowledge; there is no line dividing the physical senses or the intellectual perceptions of individuals from those of the officer; and, when an officer is bound to act upon knowledge, and the law fixes no channel through which it must reach him in order to impose a duty, the knowledge gained by the individual must be imputed to the officer. Canfield v. East Stroudsburg, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 649.

So, in satisfying a charter provision requiring notice to the city officers having charge of highways of a defect in a sidewalk as a prerequisite to a right of action to recover damages for an injury caused thereby, it is unimportant how the defective condition of the walk is brought to the knowledge of the proper officer, provided he actually knew the fact long enough before the injury to enable the city by reasonable diligence to remedy the defect. Sprague v. Rochester, 159 N. Y. 20, 53 N. E. 697.

And actual information, intelligence, or knowledge of a defective or dangerous condition of a sidewalk, on the part of a superintendent of streets, is sufficient to answer the requirement of a statutory provision requiring actual notice of a defect to hold the city liable for an injury resulting therefrom. McNally v. Cohoes, 127 N. Y. 350, 27 N. E. 1043.

So, under a charter provision that the city shall not be liable for any damage arising from accidents occasioned by reason of the sidewalks or streets being in a defective or dangerous condition, unless one of the officers of the city had actual knowledge of the defect three days prior to the accident, where officers of the city had actual knowledge of a dangerous excavation in a sidewalk and neglected to erect a barrier or warning to prevent people from falling into it, the city is liable for the consequences of such neglect though the defect had existed but a few hours. Cantwell v. Appleton, 71 Wis. 463, 37 N. W. 813, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And, if a city had knowledge of and permitted to exist an opening and trapdoors in a sidewalk which it knew were dangerous whenever they were used in the manner for which they were built to be used, and ordinarily were used, in order to hold the city liable for injuries resulting from such use it need not be shown that the city had knowledge that they were used in that particular way at the particular time the accident occurred. Sweeney v. Butte, 15 Mont. 274, 39 Pac. 186.

And, where a sidewalk upon which a person fell and received an injury was made of old boards or planks which had long been in use, before being placed in the walk, and some of the planks were broken, and some were gone, and some were partly out of place; and this condition had existed for from three months to two years; and it was not only a condition of common knowledge, but was personally known to the town marshal, and had been brought to the knowledge of the town council of the city,—the city should have, in the exercise of ordinary diligence, repaired the walk; and it is liable for the injury. Huntingburgh v. First, 22 Ind. App. 66, 53 N. E. 246.

But notice of defects in a sidewalk must relate to the defects which caused the injury; and notice to a councilman of defects which had been repaired before the accident occurred will not charge the municipal corporation with notice of those which caused the injury although they occurred at the place where the repairs had been made. Carter v. Monticello, 68 Iowa, 178, 26 N. W. 129.

And, where a city councilman, at noon on the day of the accident in question, discovered a plank out of the walk at the place where the accident subsequently occurred, and replaced it without nailing, and, upon the evening of that day, notified the street commissioner, the jury, in an action for an injury caused by the defect in the sidewalk, should not be permitted to base a finding of negligence upon the failure of the councilman sooner to notify the commissioner. McKormick v. West Bay City, 110 Mich. 265, 68 N. W. 148.

So, notifying a member of the street committee of a village of a loose plank in a sidewalk, without specifying the location, is not sufficient to charge the village with notice of the defect. Rogers v. Orion, 116 Mich. 324, 74 N. W. 463.

2. How established.

Actual knowledge or notice may be established by evidence, either direct or circumstantial, the same as any other fact. McNally v. Cohoes, supra.

And it may be shown by proof of such notice to any officer having authority to act, or to cause action to be taken, or whose duty it is to report the matter to some officer with authority. Dallas v. Meyers (Tex. Civ. App.) 55 S. W. 742.

And the question of notice to a city of a defect or obstruction in a street, where there is evidence in an action for an injury alleged to have resulted from the defect or obstruction, is a question of fact for the jury. Ft. Worth v. Johnson, 84 Tex. 137, 19 S. W. 361; Larson v. Grand Forks, 3 Dak. 307, 19 N. W. 414; Harrell v. Macon, 1 Ga. App. 413, 58 S. E. 124; Davis v. Adrian, 147 Mich. 300, 110 N. W. 1084.

Notice to municipal officers of the necessity of barriers or railings along a dangerous place in a highway is sufficiently shown where it appears that they lived in close proximity to the place, and some of them frequently passed over it. Malloy v. Walker Twp., 77 Mich. 448, 6 L.R.A. 695, 43 N. W. 1012; Clark v. Brookfield, 97 Mo. App. 16, 70 S. W. 934.

And a city's knowledge of a defect in a sidewalk can be inferred from the fact of its officers frequently passing over such walk in its defective condition. Shipley v. Bolivar, 42 Mo. App. 401.

And a statement by an officer who had the condition of a street specially in charge, tending to show that he and the village authorities generally knew before the injury in question that the street was defective, describing its condition as such, that people could get across by careful driving, but careful driving was necessary at night, sufficiently establishes notice to the village of the condition of the street. Mt. Morris v. Kanode, 98 Ill. App. 373; Mauch v. Hartford, 112 Wis. 40, 87 N. W. 816.

And testimony, in an action against a city for injuries caused by a defective bridge, of a policeman whose duty it was to watch for defects in it, that, some time during the day before the injury in question at night, he discovered the hole in the bridge through which the person injured fell, and immediately telephoned to the officer whose duty it was to have repaired it, is proof of actual notice to the city of the dangerous condition of the bridge. Covington v. Gates (Ky.) 117 S. W. 342.

So, where the evidence, in an action for personal injuries received by reason of the negligence of a city in not properly guarding an excavation in a place used as a sidewalk caused by the removal of a set of scales, shows that the city, by ordinance, leased the scales to a certain person, and, through the proper officer, notified the former lessee to remove his scales and give way to the new lessee; that the city auditor was personally notified of their removal by the retiring lessee immediately after removal; and that the new lessee was notified of such fact the same day by such officer; and the market superintendent was present and knew that the same were removed,—the city cannot deny notice, so as to excuse it from properly guarding the excavation. Nitz v. Toledo, 22 Ohio C. C. 454.

And declarations by a sidewalk inspector, made by him while in the discharge of his duty in supervising the erection of frames in the street for purposes of decoration during a street fair, as to the dangerous character of the sidewalk by reason of their improper erection, are admissible in evidence 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) in an action against the city for an injury resulting from the falling of a crosspiece of one of the frames, on the question of notice of their dangerous condition. Farrell v. Dubuque, 129 Iowa, 447, 105 N. W. 696.

And, where the mayor of a city, and council and police, had personal knowledge of an excavation across a street before an accident caused thereby, error, if any, in an action against the city for damages for an injury caused by the accident, in admitting evidence that the overseer of streets said, several days after the accident, that he knew of the defect and had intended to repair it, without prejudice. Snook v. Anacanda, 26 Mont. 128, 66 Pac. 756.

So, a person injured by a defective sidewalk may prove that the council of the city had previously resolved to repair it in order to show that the city had knowledge of its condition. Grattan v. Williamston, 116 Mich. 462, 74 N. W. 668.

And the testimony of a member of a city council to certain complaints concerning the condition of a sidewalk in the city, which were made to the council, is admissible in an action for an injury happening on such sidewalk, to show that the city had notice of the alleged defect, and that the notice was given to the officers of the city whose duty it was to make provision for keeping the streets in repair. Trapnell v. Red Oak Junction, 76 Iowa, 744, 39 N. W. 884.

And evidence that the boards in a sidewalk at the place of an accident had been occasionally loose, and that this fact was known to at least one member of the village board, and he had immediately nailed them down, but that the stringers were insufficient to hold the nails, justifies a finding that the walk at that place was out of repair, and that such fact was known to the authorities. Sorento v. Johnson, 52 Ill. App. 659.

The burden of showing defects and obstructions in the public streets, causing injury, and notice thereof, express or implied, however, rests with the plaintiff, in an action against the city for an injury caused thereby. Jones v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 310, 32 S. E. 675; Galveston v. Barbour, 62 Tex. 172, 50 Am. Rep. 519.

And notice of a defect in a sidewalk, to a city officer who had no authority in the premises, and who was charged with no duty in relation to such matter, does not affect the city with notice. Dallas v. Meyers, supra.

And the fact that a sidewalk upon which an injury occurred was removed after the injury by the city authorities and another and a better one substituted therefor is not evidence that the city authorities had knowledge of the defect before the occurrence of the injury. Emporia v. Schmidling, 33 Kan. 485, 6 Pac. 893.

Nor is a petition for the building of a new sidewalk 7 feet wide, presented to a village board about six months and a half prior to an injury on a sidewalk, the old walk being only 4 feet wide, admissible in evidence in an action against the city for an injury, for the purpose of showing notice to the village authorities of the condition of the walk at the time the petition was presented, or otherwise, since the object of the petitioners may have been merely to secure a wider walk. Barrett v. Hammond, 87 Wis. 654, 58 N. W. 1053.

And evidence, in an action against a city for damages for an injury sustained by a person by falling upon a ridge of ice and snow about 2½ feet long, 8 or 9 inches wide, and 3 or 4 inches high, on a sidewalk, that the superintendent of public works of the city was seen by a witness walking along the sidewalk in question looking at it at the point of injury with his head down, and that the ridge of snow or ice remained substantially unchanged from the time the superintendent passed over it until the time of the accident, is insufficient to sustain a finding of actual notice to the superintendent of public works, within the meaning of a charter provision that the city shall not be liable for damage or injury sustained by any person in consequence of any sidewalk or cross walk being unsafe or obstructed by snow, ice, or otherwise, unless actual notice of the defective, unsafe, or obstructed condition shall have been given to the mayor and board of public works or superintendent of public works, or any regular policeman, at least forty-eight hours previous to such damage or injury. McManus v. Watertown, 88 App. Div. 361, 84 N. Y. 638.

3. Officers or agents whose knowledge or notice is binding.

Actual knowledge or notice of a defect or obstruction in a street, to be notice to the municipal corporation, must be that of officers clothed with general powers and duties with reference to the supervision and control of corporate affairs, of that of officers clothed with specific duties as to the care of the streets. Cunningham v. Thief River Falls, 84 Minn. 21, 86 N. W. 763; Austin v. Colgate (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 896.

And an instruction, in an action for damages for an injury resulting from an obstruction on a sidewalk, that notice to any of the city officers, or to a street commissioner, of the defect, is notice to the city, is erroneous. Edwards v. Cedar Rapids, 138 Iowa, 421, 116 N. W. 323.

But a notice to any of the municipal officers who are charged with the supervision and repair of sidewalks is notice to the city. Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96.

And a city in the streets of which a dangerous obstruction has existed for several weeks with knowledge of its officers, whose duty it is to report such matters, is estopped, in an action for personal injuries resulting therefrom, to claim that it had no notice of the obstruction. Louisville v. Keher, 117 Ky. 841, 79 S. W. 270.

And it is the duty of a city's representatives, as, for example, its police or other employees, to notify the proper officer whose 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

duty it is to repair defective sidewalks and to keep them in order, and meanwhile to take proper precautions to warn people of the danger and prevent accident; and notice to such officers is notice to the city. The city cannot claim exemption upon the ground that some particular officer had not been notified. Lundon v. Chicago, 83 Ill. App. 208.

Thus, notice to the chief executive officer of a city of an obstruction in its streets is notice to the city. Shinnick v. Marshalltown, 137 Iowa, 72, 114 N. W. 542.

And so is notice to the mayor and marshal of the city. Salina v. Trosper, 27 Kan. 544.

And, where the evidence in an action for damages for an injury caused by a dangerous hole in a street tends to prove that the excavation was made some two months before the person injured fell into it; and that the mayor of the city and at least one of the members of the council were frequently in close proximity to it before the accident occurred,—it is not error to refuse to withdraw the question of notice from the consideration of the jury. Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273.

And statements of the president of a municipal corporation subsequent to the accident in question, showing knowledge prior thereto that the street where the accident occurred was used for the customary storage of vehicles while not in use, is admissible, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom, on the question of notice. Radichel v. Kendall, 121 Wis. 560, 99 N. W. 348.

So, the superintendent of streets of a city is the proper officer to whom to give notice of an obstruction in a public street; and notice to him is notice to the city. Walker v. Lockport, 43 How. Pr. 366; Bradford v. Anniston, 92 Ala. 349, 25 Am. St. Rep. 60, 8 So. 683; Joliet v. McCraney, 49 Ill. App. 381; Mason v. Winthrop, 196 Mass. 18, 81 N. E. 644; Hawley v. Gloversville, 4 App. Div. 343, 38 N. Y. Supp. 647; Cowie v. Seattle, 22 Wash. 659, 62 Pac. 121.

And notice of a dangerous obstruction in a street, to the street commissioner of a city, upon whom is imposed the duty of keeping the streets in proper condition, is notice to the city. Saylor v. Montesano, 11 Wash. 328, 39 Pac. 653; Brownlee v. Alexis, 39 Ill. App. 135; Fuller v. Jackson, 82 Mich. 480, 46 N. W. 721; McSherry v. Canandaigua, 35 N. Y. S. R. 432, 12 N. Y. Supp. 751, affirmed in 129 N. Y. 612, 29 N. E. 821; Kittredge v. Milwaukee, 26 Wis. 46.

And this is so though the city is divided into wards, and the commissioners are called ward officers. Kittredge v. Milwaukee, supra.

And notwithstanding the fact that neither the charter nor the by-laws of the village provide for the appointment of such an officer. McSherry v. Canandaigua, supra.

And, where a person is injured by defects in a public street in the control of a city contractor, evidence that the city engineer and street commissioner had knowledge of such defects is admissible in an action against the city for the injury, to establish negligence upon the part of the city. Patterson v. Austin (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 1139.

So, a city is chargeable with notice of the existence of an obstruction on one of its sidewalks where the obstruction had been there for two or three weeks, and the police and the street superintendent passed that way every day. Palestine v. Hassell, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 519, 40 S. W. 147.

And, under a city charter requiring all repairs of sidewalks to be made under the supervision of the street commissioners and the direction of the common council, and that one or more commissioners may be appointed by the city, the commissioner may be fairly regarded as representing the corporation in matters with relation to repairs of sidewalks; and, if the defect is one which he ought to have known, and which he has failed to repair within such reasonable time after such knowledge may be presumed to have reached him as, under the circumstances, was sufficient to provide for such repairing, then the city is liable, but not otherwise. Dewey v. Detroit, 15 Mich. 307.

And, while highway surveyors are public officers whose duties are prescribed by law, in performing which they are not agents of the town, a surveyor by whom or under whose direction repairs may be made or work done upon or with reference to the highway may be deemed the agent of the town to receive and charge the town with notice of an alleged defect, insufficiency or want of repair existing under his special observation and superintendence; and the fact that a defect, insufficiency, or want of repair existed through the fault of the surveyor who caused it would be evidence from which a jury might find knowledge of its existence on the part of the town. Hardy v. Keene, 52 N. H. 370.

So, knowledge by the city inspector of sidewalks, whose duty it is to inspect the sidewalk in question, of a defect or obstruction therein, is notice to the city. Small v. Kansas City, 185 Mo. 291, 84 S. W. 901, s. c. on subsequent appeal, 110 Mo. App. 721, 85 S. W. 627.

And evidence tending to show that an awning over a sidewalk had been inspected by an inspector some seven years prior to the injury in question, and pronounced by him in an unsafe condition, is admissible in an action for an injury caused by the falling of the awning. Mansfield v. New York, 119 App. Div. 199, 104 N. Y. Supp. 386.

But notice of a defect in a sidewalk in a city, given to a sidewalk inspector, is not actual notice to the city officers having charge of highways, where the sidewalk inspector has no authority to repair sidewalks, his duty being to examine the sidewalks and notify the abutting owner to remedy any defects discovered by him, and, if such defects are not remedied within five days, to notify the foreman of repairs to the end 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that the latter may make the necessary repairs and charge the expense upon the abutting property. Touhey v. Rochester, 64 App. Div. 56, 71 N. Y. Supp. 661.

So, notice of defects in a sidewalk, to a person employed by the city to have charge of repairs in sidewalks and general supervision over them, is chargeable to the city. Smith v. Des Moines, 84 Iowa, 685, 51 N. W. 77.

And notice of a hole in a sidewalk, given to a foreman of sidewalks clothed with general power to repair throughout a large district of a city, is notice to a city officer having charge of highways, within the meaning of a charter provision requiring notice to the city officers having charge of highways of a defect in a sidewalk as a prerequisite to a right of action to recover damages for an injury caused thereby. Sprague v. Rochester, 159 N. Y. 20, 53 N. E. 697.

So, the rule has been asserted generally that notice to a member of a city council of a defective or obstructed street is notice to the city. Columbus v. Strassner, 124 Ind. 482, 25 N. E. 65; Owen v. Ft. Dodge, 98 Iowa, 281, 67 N. W. 281; Carter v. Monticello, 68 Iowa, 178, 26 N. W. 129; Pittsburg v. Broderson, 10 Kan. App. 430, 62 Pac. 5; Fuller v. Jackson, 82 Mich. 480, 46 N. W. 721; Frazier v. Butler, 172 Pa. 407, 51 Am. St. Rep. 739, 33 Atl. 691; Waxahachie v. Connor (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 692.

And this is certainly the rule where the notice was to an alderman of the ward in which the obstruction was located, who, as a member of the council, had charge of the streets. Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 5 L.R.A. 143, 13 Am. St. Rep. 457, 42 N. W. 1011; Frazier v. Butler, supra.

And, where the members of the council of a city are charged with the duty of acting with respect to the streets and sidewalks of the city, knowledge on their part of an unsafe condition of a street or sidewalk is notice to the city. Cropper v. Mexico, 62 Mo. App. 385.

And evidence of complaints made to a city council concerning obstructions in a street is admissible, in an action for injuries caused thereby, to show actual notice to the city, though the time of the complaints was not definitely fixed, it appearing that they were made within two years, during which time the obstructions existed prior to the injury in question. Larsen v. Sedro-Woolley, 49 Wash. 134, 94 Pac. 938.

So, evidence that a defect in a sidewalk which caused an injury consisted of a rotten plank; that the sidewalk was largely used, and was on one of the principal streets of the town; that it was passed over daily by one of the selectmen; that it had been for some time in a bad condition; and that several of the planks composing it were rotten and decayed,—is sufficient to take the case to the jury, and to permit them to infer that the proper officers of the town knew, or with reasonable diligence might have known, the condition of the way, although no one had previously noticed the rotteness of the particular plank the breaking of which caused the injury. Noyes v. Gardner, 147 Mass. 505, 1 L.R.A. 354, 18 N. E. 423.

And, where a section of a sidewalk was removed, leaving an opening from 8 to 12 feet deep; and a passer-by fell in, there being no guards or lights, and was injured; and the work had been going on for from four days to a week; and the president of the village lived on the same street in which the work was done, 10 or 20 rods from the place, and there was nothing to prevent his seeing the excavation from his house; and the place of business of one of the trustees of the village was on the corner of the street in sight of the work; and another of the village trustees, in going from his residence to his place of business, passed along the street in view of the walk in question.—it is a question for the jury, in an action for the injury, whether one or more members of the board of trustees did not know, or in the exercise of a reasonable degree of diligence and care ought not to have known, of the defective condition of the sidewalk. Higgins v. Salamanca, 6 N. Y. S. R. 119.

But the rule has been asserted that knowledge of a member of a municipal council of a nuisance in a street is not, of itself, notice to the municipality, since his knowledge and acts as an individual are not notice to the municipality of which he is an official representative. Frazier v. Butler, supra; Groveport v. Bradfield, 2 Ohio C. C. 145.

And the fact that one of the aldermen of a city saw an excavation in a street being made is not per se evidence that the city was guilty of neglect, in an action for damages for an injury caused by such excavation. McDermott v. Kingston, 19 Hun, 198.

And knowledge of defects in a sidewalk, acquired by a person before he became a burgess of the borough, does not bind the borough and charge it with notice of such defects after he became a burgess, so as to render the borough liable for an injury caused by such defects. Lohr v. Philipsburg, 156 Pa. 246, 27 Atl. 133.

Nor is the fact that two of the trustees of a village saw a plank placed over a gutter to enable people to pass over at the time of an extraordinary overflow, when they were passing along the street, notice to the corporation even that the plank was there, and much less that it rendered the street dangerous. Bush v. Geneva, 3 Thomp. & C. 409.

And the testimony of the trustees of a village, taken at an inquest held by the coroner on the body of a person killed by a wire charged with electricity which hung down from a tree to the ditch between the sidewalk and carriage way, and with which deceased came in contact, though competent for the purpose of contradicting their testimony on the trial of an action against the city for the injury, is incompetent as affirmative evidence to show that the trustees of the village had notice of the dangerous condition of the pendent wire. Fox v. Man- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) chester, 183 N. Y. 141, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 474, 75 N. E. 1116.

So, where a city does not require permits for the erection of buildings, an alderman making an excavation in a sidewalk for the erection of a building without permission is not a trespasser, so as to prevent his knowledge from being notice to the city, because it was to his interest to keep his knowledge from the city, where the excavation was easily seen, and no fraud or concealment appears. Keyes v. Cedar Falls, 107 Iowa, 509, 78 N. W. 227.

Likewise, the actual knowledge and presence of a market superintendent, whose duty it is to see that a market place is not rendered dangerous either by obstructions or excavations, when market scales are removed, leaving an excavation or opening in a platform generally used as a thoroughfare by pedestrians for many years with the city's knowledge, constitutes notice to the city of the excavation and opening. Nitz v. Toledo, 22 Ohio C. C. 454.

And knowledge by two members of the board of public works and the city engineer who had charge of the construction of a sewer, of the existence of an obstruction in the streets resulting therefrom and its dangerous character, in time to have abated it before the injury, was notice to the city. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

And, where a city ordinance establishes the office of state electrician, and defines the duties of the officer, and lays down rules and regulations concerning electric wiring and appliances, which delegates to such officer authority to supervise the use of electrical apparatus on the streets of the city, a notice to such officer of a dangerous appliance or condition would be notice to the city; and such an ordinance is admissible in evidence, in an action for an injury resulting from such use. Decatur v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. App. 561.

So, notice to a city marshal of a defect in a sidewalk is not notice to and does not bind the city, where he was clothed with no power and charged with no duty in regard to the repairing of sidewalks. Cook v. Anamosa, 66 Iowa, 427, 23 N. W. 907.

But while, as a general rule, notice to a city marshal of a town or city of the defective condition of a street or sidewalk is insufficient to charge the municipality with actual notice, where the city marshal is instructed by the city council or board of trustees to look after the condition of the streets and sidewalks, and to repair them or cause them to be repaired, evidence that such officer had actual notice of the condition of the sidewalk a short time before the accident occurred is admissible in an action for a resulting injury. Norman v. Teel, 12 Okla. 69, 69 Pac. 791.

And notice of an obstruction or defect in a street, to a patrolman detailed to report any violation of city ordinances, and his report thereof to his superior officer, made in the usual course, constitutes notice to the city. Twogood v. New York, 102 N. Y. 216, 6 N. E. 275.

So, where members of the police force of a city are officers of the city, the city is liable for an obstruction to a sidewalk caused by the negligent use of city property by such officers; and knowledge of the obstruction by such officers is knowledge on the part of the city. Carrington v. St. Louis, 89 Mo. 208, 58 Am. Rep. 108, 1 S. W. 240.

And notice to policemen charged by the statute with the duty at all times to remove nuisances existing in public streets, and enforce ordinances relating to police, public health, or criminal procedure, of an unlawful obstruction in a street, is notice to the city; and the city is chargeable with any neglect upon the part of the policeman to make proper observation or inquiry, or for any negligence in permitting the obstruction to exist. Rehberg v. New York, 91 N. Y. 137, 43 Am. Rep. 657; O'Hara v. Brooklyn, 57 App. Div. 176, 68 N. Y. Supp. 210; Cummings v. Hartford, 70 Conn. 115, 38 Atl. 916; San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex. Civ. App.) 78 S. W. 28.

And the attention of the jury in an action for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk may properly be called to the fact that the accident occurred in front of the police station, and within sight of the officers whose duty it was to have charge of the station. Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36.

So, a city ordinance which makes it the duty of policemen to report to the lieutenants of police all footways, bridges, and sidewalks requiring repairs renders it incumbent on the lieutenants to report upon the same to the authorities, whose duty it is to have the needed repairs made; and, under such an ordinance, notice to a policeman or lieutenant of a hole in a sidewalk is notice to the city. Columbus v. Ogletree, 102 Ga. 293, 29 S. E. 749.

And evidence tending to prove that the attention of a city's policeman was called to the defective or obstructed condition of a sidewalk shortly before an accident caused thereby is admissible for the purpose of showing notice, where policemen were expressly required by ordinance to report defects. Chicago v. Davies, 110 Ill. App. 427.

And, where, with knowledge and approval of the superintendent of streets, a book is kept at the police station in which policemen were directed to note defects in sidewalks, and the superintendent is accustomed to resort to the reports of policemen for information concerning defects in streets, in case of knowledge of a defect by a policeman for a sufficient length of time in the exercise of reasonable care to report and repair it, the city will be held chargeable with notice of the defect. Joliet v. Looney, 159 Ill. 471, 42 N. E. 854, affirming 56 Ill. App. 502.

So, the fact that all the members of a police force of a city, just before the injury in question, were frequently instructed to report obstructions in the street, may properly be admitted in evidence in an action against the city for damages for injuries caused by an obstruction in a street, as bearing upon the question of notice. Koch v. Williamsport, 195 Pa. 488, 46 Atl. 67.

And, where a third person dug a ditch across a street, and an injury resulted therefrom, evidence, in an action for the injury, that it had existed about three weeks, and had attracted the attention of a policeman, who notified the city attorney about it, and that it was on a public street, is sufficient to justify a jury in finding that the city had notice of the ditch. Ft. Worth v. Johnson, 84 Tex. 137, 19 S. W. 361.

But notice to a policeman of the existence of a hole or other obstruction in a street or sidewalk is not necessarily notice to the municipal authorities, unless it is affirmatively shown that the police officer had some duty to perform in reference to the streets or sidewalks. Columbus v. Ogletree, 96 Ga. 177, 22 S. E. 709; Reid v. Chicago, 83 Ill. App. 554.

And, where the statute provides that the common council of a city shall appoint police commissioners; and these commissioners are not amenable to the city, but are removable only by the supreme court; and the commissioners appoint policemen and have power to remove them,—the police department of the city is a creation under the laws of the state for the purpose of securing public order, and not a creation of the city, and is not its agent; and notice to a policeman of an obstruction on a street is not notice to the city. Kunz v. Troy, 36 Hun. 615; King v. Troy, 21 N. Y. Week. Dig. 558.

And, when it does not appear that there was any act of the legislature authorizing a municipal corporation to prescribe the duties of a policeman and to make him an agent of the corporation in respect to its duty of keeping its streets open and in repair; or when the legislature has conferred such power upon the corporation, and it does not appear that the council of the corporation has, by ordinance or resolution, so prescribed the duties of a policeman and so made him its agent for such purpose,—a rule of a police department which requires a policeman to note defects in the streets or sidewalks and to remove them when practicable, and, in case of complaint by any citizen, to report the same, is irrelevant and incompetent as evidence to charge such corporation with liability for a defect in a street or sidewalk, although it is shown in connection therewith that the policeman had knowledge of such defect. Cleveland v. Payne, 72 Ohio St. 347, 70 L.R.A. 841, 74 N. E. 177.

So, where a sidewalk was covered with ice caused by the freezing water which flowed from a hydrant, which ice remained for several days, the fact that the president of the council of the city lived on the opposite side of the street and took a street car frequently in front of his house does not warrant an inference of knowledge upon his part of the obstruction, in the absence of evidence that he knew of the ice. Corey v. Ann Arbor, 134 Mich. 376, 96 N. W. 477.

But, testimony of a night watchman paid by private parties, as to circumstances tending to show an obstruction in a street, and notice thereof to the city, is not subject to the objection that the jury might infer that notice to the watchman was actual notice to the city, where such inference is expressly negatived by the instructions. Ottawa v. Hayne, 214 Ill. 45, 73 N. E. 385.

Notice of a defective condition of a sidewalk to a city treasurer, police magistrate, or other municipal officer whose duty in no way relates to the care of streets, however, is not notice to the city which will charge it with liability. Savanna v. Trusty, 98 Ill. App. 277.

And a city clerk who is required to keep the books and act as the clerk of the board of public works of a city is not an officer having charge of the city streets, so that notice to him of a defective street will constitute notice to the city. Corey v. Ann Arbor, supra.

And the knowledge of an open coal hole in a sidewalk, by a janitor of a school building appointed by the school committee, the city having no voice in the appointment and no control over him, is not notice which will render it liable for an injury caused thereby. Foster v. Boston, 127 Mass. 290.

Nor does proof of notice of an obstruction or defect in a street to one or more of the inhabitants of a city establish the requisite notice to the city, since it is not their duty to repair the defect or remove the obstruction. Donaldson v. Boston, 16 Gray, 508; Frazier v. Butler, 172 Pa. 407, 51 Am. St. Rep. 739, 33 Atl. 691.

So, while the declarations of an officer which accompany his official acts and tend to explain them are admissible in evidence, notice of a defect in a street or highway cannot be proved by the admission of a town or city officer, such an admission consisting only of a narration of past transactions. Smyth v. Bangor, 72 Me. 249.

4. Creation of obstruction as affecting.

(a) By act of city itself.

If a municipal corporation causes work to be done upon its streets or sidewalks which is in its nature dangerous to the public, it is bound to take notice of the character of the work, and the condition in which it is left, whether safe or dangerous. Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 438, 11 Am. St. Rep. 136, 20 N. E. 33; Carstesen v. Stratford, 67 Conn. 428, 35 Atl. 276; Nesbitt v. Greenville, 69 Miss. 22, 30 Am. St. Rep. 521, 10 So. 452; Beatrice v. Reid, 41 Neb. 214, 59 N. W. 770.

And notice is not necessary to establish the liability of a municipal corporation for an obstruction in a street, where the obstruction was caused by the direct act of the municipality, or by its authority. Muncie v. Hey, 164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250; Ft. Wayne v. Patterson, 3 Ind. App. 34, 29 N. E. 167; Jefferson v. Chapman, supra; Cleveland v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 279, Gil. 255; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Carver v. Jackson, 82 Miss. 583, 35 So. 157; Smith v. St. Joseph, 42 Mo. App. 392; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Milwaukee v. Davis, 6 Wis. 377.

Or where the obstruction or defect was produced by acts done with the express sanction of the municipality. Haniford v. Kansas City, 103 Mo. 172, 15 S. W. 753; McDermott v. Kingston, 19 Hun, 198.

Where an unsafe or obstructed condition of a street is caused directly by the act of the municipal corporation itself or its agents, liability for injuries resulting therefrom attaches directly, and not through the doctrine of notice, either express or constructive. Riddle v. Westfield, 65 Hun, 432, 20 N. Y. Supp. 359.

And in such case the municipal corporation will be conclusively presumed to have notice of the obstruction. Ludlow v. Fargo, 3 N. D. 485, 57 N. W. 506; Salem v. Webster, 192 Ill. 369, 61 N. E. 323; Lincoln v. Calvert, 39 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115; Akers v. New York, 14 Misc. 524, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1099.

And a city cannot defend in an action against it for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street upon the ground of want of notice, where the act creating the obstruction was done by itself, or by its authority. Denver v. Aaron, 6 Colo. App. 232, 40 Pac. 587.

The question of notice to city authorities concerning the condition of a street or an obstruction therein is involved only where they have not produced the condition themselves. Salem v. Webster, 192 Ill. 369, 61 N. E. 323.

And, where work in the way of the construction of sewers is done within the limits of a city, it is presumed to be done by the proper authority of the city. Chicago v. Brophy, 79 Ill. 277.

And where a hole in a street of a city resulted from the construction of a sewer by the city, the city is liable for an injury caused thereby to a traveler, though it had no notice thereof. Smith v. St. Joseph, supra; Hutchinson v. Clarke, 26 R. I. 307, 58 Atl. 948.

And the same rule applies to a municipal corporation charged with negligence in so constructing and grading a sewer that a hole was washed out along a sidewalk, and in failing to place guards along it to protect travelers, and in bridging such hole with planks which had become warped and insecurely fastened. Dallas v. Jones, 93 Tex. 38, 49 S. W. 577, 53 S. W. 377.

So, a city which causes a ditch to be made in a street may be held liable for an injury resulting therefrom, without reference to notice to it of the excavation. Chicago v. Johnson, 53 Ill. 91; Omaha v. Jensen, 35 Neb. 68, 37 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. W. 833.

And the same rule applies to an embankment constructed in a street by the authority of the city; and this is particularly so where the embankment conformed to the requirements of the ordinance permitting it. Golden v. Clinton, 54 Mo. App. 100.

And, where a water box was constructed by a water company at the outer edge of a sidewalk, and there was negligence in the placing of the box, and the city widened the sidewalk and built it around the box, leaving a depression or hole in the sidewalk, the city necessarily then became aware of the depression or hole and the danger arising therefrom, and it is chargeable with knowledge of the defect coexistent with the laying of the sidewalk. Denver v. Magivney (Colo.) 96 Pac. 1002.

So, where an obstruction in a street was the natural result of defects in its original construction by the city, the city was chargeable with notice from the beginning, and was under a continuing duty to repair it. Barr v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. 550, 16 S. W. 483; Brake v. Kansas City, 100 Mo. App. 611, 75 S. W. 191; McDonald v. Duluth, 93 Minn. 206, 100 N. W. 1102; Poole v. Jackson, 93 Tenn. 62, 23 S. W. 57.

And where a city constructed a sidewalk, and defects in it were then apparent, no subsequent notice to the city of such defects is necessary to render it liable for a resulting injury, since it was itself the author of the defects. Covington v. Webster, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 630, 110 S. W. 878; Chicago v. Langlass, 66 Ill. 361; Alexander v. Mt. Sterling, 71 Ill. 366; Mansfield v. Moore, 21 Ill. App. 326, affirmed in 124 Ill. 133, 16 N. E. 246; Evans v. Iowa City, 125 Iowa, 202, 100 N. W. 1112; Alliance v. Campbell, 17 Ohio C. C. 595; Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk by the rule that it must have notice of defects to be liable therefor, when it is charged with knowledge that the material of which a walk is composed is insufficient for the purpose, and omits the duty of making the walk safe, but adopts the policy of attempting to discover and repair breaches that may be occasioned because of such insufficiency of the material, before anyone is injured. Paxton v. Frew, 52 Ill. App. 393.

And, if the defect in a sidewalk which caused an injury consisted in repairing the walk with defective materials, the city is liable for the acts of its agents and employees in making such defective and dangerous repair, and is chargeable with notice of such defective repair from the time it was made. Moore v. Platteville, 78 Wis. 644, 47 N. W. 1055.

And, where repairs are made by the municipality to a sidewalk, the municipality is bound to take notice of the character of the same and the condition of the walk when repaired, whether safe or unsafe. Brownlee v. Alexis, 39 Ill. App. 135.

So, if a city constructed a bridge of loose planks in a street, or, when a city reconstructed the bridge, if such planks were left unfastened by its employees, the knowledge of the employees was notice to the city. Atlanta v. Buchanan, 76 Ga. 585.

And, where a plank in a bridge in a street breaks and causes an injury, and the city is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

sought to be held liable therefor on the ground of positive misfeasance on its part or that of its officers or servants in doing acts which cause the street to be out of repair, no notice to the corporation of the condition of the street is essential to liability. Brunswick v. Braxton, 70 Ga. 193.

So, where city authorities prescribe a plan of constructing a crossing between a street and a railroad, and the railroad company follows the plan, and the plan is defective, both are chargeable with knowledge of the plan; and the question of notice is immaterial to their liability. Carroll v. Louisville, 117 Ky. 758, 78 S. W. 1117.

And, where a city maintains a water cock connected with its water pipes, extending several inches above the level of the pavement, and an injury results from a foot passenger stumbling thereon, the city is the original wrongdoer, and its negligent act causes the injury; and it is not entitled to any notice before being sued for the injury. Baltimore v. Walker, 98 Md. 637, 57 Atl. 4.

Nor is the want of notice of a defect in a street, required by statute, available as a defense for persons who were the active agencies in placing the obstruction in the street. Cairncross v. Pewaukee, 86 Wis. 181, 56 N. W. 648; Stedman v. Rome, 88 Hun, 279, 34 N. Y. Supp. 737; Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131.

And a charter provision of a city that the corporation shall not be liable to any person for damages caused from streets, ways, crossings, bridges, or sidewalks being out of repair, unless the same shall have so remained for ten days after special notice in writing, has no reference to defects growing out of the manner of construction of streets, bridges, or sidewalks; and written notice is unnecessary in such cases. Houston v. Owen (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. 788.

So, where a water way or opening existed in a street, and it had previously been the habit of the city to light the street, its negligence in failing to maintain a light consists in a failure to discharge a known duty, and not in a failure to know that a duty was required; and the principle that a city is entitled to notice of a defect in a street and a reasonable time in which to make repairs before it can be held for damages resulting from such defect does not apply. Davenport v. Hannibal, 108 Mo. 471, 18 S. W. 1122.

The mere existence of a defect or obstruction in a street, however, affords no evidence of original defective construction for which the city would be liable without notice. Stein v. Council Bluffs, 72 Iowa, 180, 33 N. W. 455.

And it cannot be held, as a matter of law, that a municipal corporation would have notice of a defect in a cesspool built within the limits of a public way, if it was in fact defectively built and put in by others than the municipal corporation itself. Hoey v. Natick, 153 Mass. 528, 27 N. E. 595.

So, if a defect in a sidewalk occurred after the original construction of the sidewalk, the original construction having been proper, and an injury results from such defect, the municipality, before being liable for the injury, is entitled to actual notice thereof, unless the defect was of such a character, or had continued for such a length of time, that notice is presumed. Alliance v. Campbell, supra.

And a complaint in an action against a city for a personal injury, alleging the presence of an obstruction on its streets, without stating by whom the obstruction was placed there, or for what purpose it was so placed, must be construed as a complaint seeking recovery for damages caused by an obstruction of the street, not made or authorized by the town, but created by the act of a third person. Royal Center v. Bingaman, 37 Ind. App. 626, 77 N. E. 811.

(b) By officers, agents, or servants.

If a municipal corporation, by its officers, agents, or servants, placed an obstruction in a public street which was open to travel by the public, and which was dangerous, no notice to the city of its existence need be proved, in an action for a resulting injury. Ringelstein v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 21 S. W. 634; Carstesen v. Stratford, 67 Conn. 428, 35 Atl. 276; McDermott v. Kingston, 19 Hun, 198; Wilson v. Troy, 135 N. Y. 96, 18 L.R.A. 449, 31 Am. St. Rep. 817, 32 N. E. 44; Yearance v. Salt Lake City, 6 Utah, 398, 25 Pac. 254.

Where an obstruction in a street is created by an agent or quasi agent of the city by an authorized act, the law imputes notice to the city of the existence of the obstruction. Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630.

And the city is liable, in a civil action, to the person injured, if he was in the exercise of due care. Ludlow v. Fargo, 3 N. D. 485, 57 N. W. 506.

So, where an obstruction was created in a street by persons engaged in doing work which the laws require the city to do, and apparently in the pay of the city at the time, the city is liable for an injury resulting from the obstruction, though it does not appear technically that the obstruction in question was created under official authority. Ibid.

And, where a trench is made in a street, and a duly authorized agent of the city is present watching the progress of the work, who sees the obstruction of a culvert and gutter and the danger to be reasonably apprehended therefrom, the city has actual notice that property in the immediate neighborhood of the trench, gutter, and culvert will be threatened with injury if a rain occurs; and it is liable in such case if no effort to protect against it is made. Schumacher v. New York, 166 N. Y. 103, 59 N. E. 773, affirming 40 App. Div. 320, 57 N. Y. Supp. 968.

So, where a street commissioner digs a ditch in a city street, his knowledge is notice to the municipal corporation. Childs v. West Troy, 23 Hun, 68, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And, where the superintendent of water commissioners was also superintendent of highways of a village; and his duty was to keep the streets in repair, or, in case they were necessarily out of repair, so to guard and protect the public that no injury should come therefrom; and this superintendent directed an excavation to be made in a street for the purpose of making repairs to pipes,—his knowledge of the excavation was the knowledge of the village, and his neglect to repair the highway or guard against accident fixes the village with liability for resulting damage. Deyoe v. Saratoga Springs, 1 Hun, 341, 3 Thomp. & C. 504.

Nor can a city escape liability for an injury to a person who drove against a rope stretched across one of its principal streets for the purpose of stopping travel at that particular point, on the theory that it is not liable for the act of the police officer who placed it there, if he was acting under the mayor's instructions. Shinnick v. Marshalltown, 137 Iowa, 72, 114 N. W. 542.

And, where a rope was strung across a street by a park policeman under the supervision and control of the park commissioners in order to carry out instructions to prevent travel upon the street at that place, and an injury was caused thereby, the cause of the injury was the direct act of the servant of the board, and the city cannot escape liability on the plea that it had no notice of the obstruction, or that the obstruction had not continued for such a length of time as to have given the city constructive notice thereof. Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 93 Minn. 118, 100 N. W. 669.

And a charter provision for the election of an executive board with power to let all contracts to be made by the city pursuant to ordinances, and to superintend their execution, and giving it superintendence and control of all work and improvement ordered by the common council, and control of construction, improvement, repairing, and cleaning of streets, and making them commissioners of highways of the city, makes the executive board one of the instrumentalities employed to execute the power and carry out the business of the corporation; and the executive board is the agent or representative of the city as distinguished from a public officer, as such; and the city is chargeable with the negligence of the executive board; and, if such negligence causes an injury, there is no question of notice to the city. Groves v. Rochester, 39 Hun, 5.

So, a bridge across the sidewalk of a public street, 7 inches above the level of the sidewalk, and sloping on each side to the sidewalk, erected by the superintendent of streets of the city, which causes an accident, is an obstruction created by the city; and the city will be deemed to have had full notice of its existence. Stedman v. Rome, 88 Hun, 279, 34 N. Y. Supp. 737.

And a municipal corporation the civil engineer of which directed a property owner to erect a water spout so as to run the water onto a sidewalk is chargeable with notice that ice would be formed by reason thereof, and would make such sidewalk dangerous. Muncie v. Hey, 164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250.

And, where a defective grating covering a cesspool in a street was placed there by a street commissioner of the city; and he knew its condition from the beginning,—no notice of it is necessary to establish the liability of the city for a resulting injury. Buck v. Biddleford, 82 Mo. 433, 19 Atl. 912.

And a complaint in an action against a city, charging that the agents of the city knowingly and carelessly allowed a street to be obstructed by an exhibition of wild animals; and that such exhibition was authorized by the city,—sufficiently alleges that the city had due and sufficient notice of the exhibition. Little v. Madison, 42 Wis. 643, 24 Am. Rep. 435.

Nor does a statutory or charter provision that no action against a city for injuries sustained by reason of any defect in any street shall be maintained unless written notice of the injury was given to the proper officers within a specified number of days of the occurrence thereof apply where the injury was caused by a nuisance created by the positive acts of the city's agents. Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis. 380, 41 N. W. 407; Adams v. Oshkosh, 71 Wis. 49, 36 N. W. 614; Jones v. Deering, 94 Me. 165, 47 Atl. 140; Stedman v. Rome, supra; Houston v. Isaacks, 68 Tex. 116, 3 S. W. 693.

Such as leaving a large wooden roller in a street. Hughes v. Fond du Lac, supra.

Where a street commissioner directed a subordinate to construct a cross walk across a street, and, in doing so, the subordinate created an obstruction in the street which resulted in an injury to a traveler, however, the question of actual notice under Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 18, § 80, it not one of general legal principles, but is purely one of statutory interpretation, since the injured party's right of action, if any, is based solely on the statute, and the doctrine of principal and agent, and master and servant, in this respect, is not applicable. Emery v. Waterville, 90 Me. 485, 38 Atl. 534.

And the mere fact that a street commissioner directed a subordinate to construct a cross walk across a street does not of itself charge the commissioner with actual notice that the cross walk was so constructed as to become a defect and obstruction in the street, where the commissioner, while cognizant of the existence of the cross walk, was ignorant of any defect in it. Ibid.

So, where a boy sixteen years of age who was employed to light and extinguish street lamps in a city, having received general directions from his superior to shut off the gas at midnight, was told of the existence of a defect in a street just before an accident caused thereby, as he was in the act of extinguishing the lights, his knowledge thereof was not notice to the city. Monies v. Lynn, 119 Mass. 273.

And a city is not chargeable with notice of a pile of snow in a street, left there by an employee in cleaning a sidewalk, no officer of the city knowing of it, and the employee not being a person whose knowledge of a defect is sufficient to charge the city. Rich v. Rockland, 87 Me. 188, 32 Atl. 872.

(c) By contractor.

A municipal corporation which rightfully causes an improvement to be constructed or other work to be done in its streets, whether by an independent contractor or otherwise, is bound to take notice of the character of the work, and its condition, whether safe or dangerous, and is bound to take notice of the condition, whether safe or dangerous, of its streets as affected by the prosecution or performance of such improvement or work. Beatrice v. Reid, 41 Neb. 214, 59 N. W. 770.

And, if a street has been rendered unsafe or insecure by the act of the city's own contractors in making a public improvement, the city must be held to have knowledge of the resulting consequences. Smith v. St. Joseph, 42 Mo. App. 392.

And, where a city contracts for the performance of work, and, to do the work contracted for, necessarily requires the creation of obstructions or excavations dangerous to public travel, it is charged with notice of the necessity for guards or signal lights; and notice that the duty of properly placing such guards or signal lights has not been performed is not required to charge the city with liability for the nonperformance. Drake v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 81, 94 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 Pac. 231; Smith v. St. Joseph, supra.

So, no actual notice of the dangerous condition of a street, caused by an excavation therein, is necessary to be brought home to the officers of the city, where the city had, by contract, allowed ditches and excavations dangerous to the traveling public to be made in its streets, and left unguarded by barriers or danger signals. Oklahoma City v. Welsh, 3 Okla. 288, 41 Pac. 598; Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630; Sterling v. Schiffmacher, 47 Ill. App. 141; Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 438, 11 Am. St. Rep. 136, 20 N. E. 33; Kinsey v. Kinston, 145 N. C. 106, 58 S. E. 912.

And, where a trench was made in a street under a contract by the city with a contractor by which the contractor was to furnish material and labor for the reconstruction of sewer inlets in any part of the city; and, when ordered, the work was to be done in the presence of an inspector, the city reserving the right of absolute control and direction,—if there is negligence in the manner of filling the trench, and an injury results from the surface of the street sinking at that point, the city, through its agents appointed to supervise and inspect the work, has notice of it, and is liable for the injury. Burger v. Philadelphia, 196 Pa. 41, 46 Atl. 262.

Nor can a city which employed an independent contractor to cut an opening in an asphalt pavement on a street, who, during a suspension of the work, put in a temporary filling, escape liability for the defective condition of such opening, on the ground that it had no time in which to remedy the same, where the temporary filling was done under the supervision of the city inspector. Newman v. New York, 57 Misc. 636, 108 N. Y. Supp. 676.

And a city is chargeable with notice of an excavation extending into a sidewalk, made for the purpose of a basement window, under the direction of a member of a firm of building contractors who was a member of the city council and chairman on streets and alleys, notwithstanding the fact that he had not obtained a permit to make the excavation, where it does not appear that such permit was necessary. Keyes v. Cedar Falls, 107 Iowa, 509, 78 N. W. 227.

So, a municipal corporation is liable for an injury to a traveler on a highway, caused by negligence in guarding trenches for laying water pipes, although the defect had not existed twenty-four hours and the town had no notice thereof, where the trenches were made by a contractor with whom the municipality had agreed that he should make all trenches needed for laying water pipes in such streets, as the committee might from time to time direct, and that he should guard and light trenches by night for the protection of travelers. Brooks v. Somerville, 106 Mass. 271.

And where a contract between a city and a water company engaged in laying water pipes in the streets of the city provided that, upon failure of the water company for twenty-four hours after laying its pipe to put the street in the required order, the city, by its proper officer, should notify it to do so; and, upon further failure of twenty-four hours, that the city should do the work itself,—the city was obliged to know for itself whether the work was properly done or not; and it will be conclusively presumed to have had knowledge of a defect in such work, and cannot be heard to say that it did not receive notice thereof. Denver v. Aaron, 6 Colo. App. 232, 40 Pac. 587.

(d) Under permit or license.

Where work is being done in the public streets by permission of the municipal body, of a kind likely to cause, or that may cause, injury to individuals, it is the duty of the municipal body to exercise a vigilant supervision of the work to see that no such injury takes place; and a failure to do so is negligence for which it is liable to the party injured. Anderson v. Wilmington, 8 Houst. (Del.) 516, 19 Atl. 509; McPherson v. District of Columbia, 7 Mackey, 564; Godfrey v. New York, 104 App. Div. 357, 93 N. Y. Supp. 899.

And a municipal corporation which authorizes or acquiesces in the obstruction of a street has notice of the obstruction. Louisville v. Keher, 117 Ky. 841, 79 S. W. 270.

The law charges a city which grants permission for an act to be done in the streets, with notice of everything that is done pursuant to the permission. Mehan v. St. Louis (Mo.) 116 S. W. 514.

And where a defect or obstruction in a street was occasioned by the act of a party authorized by the city to make use of the street, which resulted in producing the defect, the city is liable for a resulting injury without notice. Taubman v. Lexington, 25 Mo. App. 218; McPherson v. District of Columbia, supra; Cleveland v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 279, Gil. 255; Nesbitt v. Greenville, 69 Miss. 22, 30 Am. St. Rep. 521, 10 So. 452; Uhrichsville v. Fisher, 45 Ohio L. J. 229; Oklahoma City v. Welsh, 3 Okla. 288, 41 Pac. 598.

And, if a nuisance is placed or erected in a street of a city by an individual in pursuance of a license or permission granted for that purpose by the corporation, its responsibility for the structure commences from that instant as though it was its own work. Herfurth v. Washington, 6 D. C. 289.

And a city which grants a permit to repair a sidewalk is chargeable with notice of the work and with the duty to see that the work is properly conducted. McClammy v. Spokane, 36 Wash. 339, 78 Pac. 912.

So, where an obstruction is placed in an alley by permission of the city, and an injury results therefrom, that the city had notice of the obstruction need not be alleged in a complaint in an action for the injury. Mehan v. St. Louis, supra.

It is only when a city is the actor in placing an obstruction in a street, or in cases of license by the city to do an intrinsically dangerous thing in the street, and not in cases properly of mere regulation, however, that the city is liable without notice, or is charged with notice by the fact that it gave the permit to do the thing in the street. Columbus v. Penrod, 73 Ohio St. 209, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 386, 112 Am. St. Rep. 716, 76 N. E. 826.

And a city which, for compensation, granted the right to erect a booth on one of its public squares for the use and exhibition of an animal, is not liable for an injury occasioned by the animal frightening a horse, where at the time the animal was not in the place for the use of which the city received compensation, or in charge of any agent of the city. Cole v. Newburyport, 129 Mass. 594, 37 Am. Rep. 394.

c. Constructive or implied notice.

1. General rules.

Actual knowledge or express notice of an obstruction in a street need not be brought home to a municipal corporation in order to hold it liable for an injury resulting therefrom; constructive or implied notice is sufficient. Mosey v. Troy, 61 Barb. 580; Walker v. Lockport, 43 How. Pr. 366; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43; Weed v. Ballston Spa, 76 N. Y. 329; Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, 20 So. 424; Downs v. Smyrna, 2 Penn. (Del.) 132, 45 Atl. 717; Larmon v. District of Columbia, 5 Mackey, 330; Chapman v. Macon, 55

Ga. 566; Atlanta v. Perdue, 53 Ga. 607; Idlett v. Atlanta, 123 Ga. 821, 51 S. E. 709; Sterling v. Merrill, 124 Ill. 522, 17 N. E. 6; Chicago v. Dalle, 115 Ill. 386, 5 N. E. 578; Streator v. O'Brien, 103 Ill. App. 85; Fairfield v. Hornick, 53 Ill. App. 558; Reid v. Chicago, 83 Ill. App. 554; Springfield v. Doyle, 76 Ill. 202; Hearn v. Chicago, 20 Ill. App. 249; Murphysboro v. Baker, 34 Ill. App. 657; Muncie v. Hey, 164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250; Frankfort v. Coleman, 19 Ind. App. 368, 65 Am. St. Rep. 412, 49 N. E. 474; Linton v. Smith, 31 Ind. App. 546, 68 N. E. 617; Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757; Montgomery v. Des Moines, 55 Iowa, 101, 7 N. W. 421; Madisonville v. Pemberton, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 347, 75 S. W. 229; Campbell v. Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655, 45 N. W. 652; Dotton v. Albion, 50 Mich. 129, 15 N. W. 46; Whitfield v. Meridian, 66 Miss. 570, 4 L.R.A. 834, 14 Am. St. Rep. 596, 6 So. 244; Rusher v. Aurora, 71 Mo. App. 418; Market v. St. Louis, 56 Mo. 189; Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96; Walker v. Point Pleasant, 49 Mo. App. 244; Bonine v. Richmond, 75 Mo. 437; Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309; Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 567; Norman v. Teel, 12 Okla. 69, 69 Pac. 791; Dallas v. Moore, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 74 S. W. 95; Born v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 719, 68 Pac. 386.

And an instruction on actual knowledge of a hole in a street, in an action against a city for injuries caused by it, is harmless although actual knowledge was not proven, where the evidence was sufficient to charge the city with constructive notice. Dallas v. Muncton, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 112, 83 S. W. 431.

Constructive notice in case of a defective or obstructed street is an inference of notice drawn from official opportunity to obtain it and from official obligation to be reasonably vigilant in keeping the public streets safe for travel. McNally v. Cohoes, 53 Hun, 202.

It exists where the municipal corporation, by the exercise of ordinary intelligence, could have discovered the defect in time to have made the necessary repairs before the injury in question, and is inferred from the circumstances, by the jury. Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90.

By constructive notice of a defect or obstruction is meant that, there was a defect or obstruction which was so patent and obvious as to be generally noticed by persons passing over it, and this continued to exist for such a length of time prior to the time of the accident in question that it might be reasonably inferred that some person whose duty it was to keep the streets in repair knew of such defect. Poole v. Jackson, 93 Tenn. 62, 23 S. W. 57.

Negligent ignorance on the part of a city is no less a breach of duty than wilful neglect. Whitfield v. Meridian, supra; Hazard v. Council Bluffs, 87 Iowa, 51, 53 N. W. 1083.

And, if there existed a set of facts with which ignorance was not compatible, except 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by a failure to exercise reasonable official care, then there is sufficient ground for presuming notice. Dotton v. Albion, supra.

It is sufficient to prove that the obstruction or defect had existed such a length of time that the corporation, in the exercise of proper care and diligence, should have known of it. Muncie v. Hey, supra; Boulder v. Niles, 9 Colo. 415, 12 Pac. 632; Larmon v. District of Columbia, supra; District of Columbia v. Payne, 13 App. D. C. 500; Domer v. District of Columbia, 21 App. D. C. 284; Idlett v. Atlanta; Sterling v. Merrill; and Chicago v. Dalle,—supra; DeKalb v. Ashley, 61 Ill. App. 647; Frankfort v. Coleman, supra; Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196; Newcastle v. Grubbs; Montgomery v. Des Moines; Hazard v. Council Bluffs; Madisonville v. Pemberton; Rusher v. Aurora; and Walker v. Point Pleasant,—supra; Sherman v. Oneonta, 49 N. Y. S. R. 267, 21 N. Y. Supp. 137; Fitzgerald v. Concord, supra; Toledo v. Center, 16 Ohio C. C. 308, Walker v. Springfield and Dallas v. Moore, supra; Cowie v. Seattle, 22 Wash. 659, 62 Pac. 121; Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273.

Or so long as to make it public and notorious. Mosey v. Troy; Walker v. Lockport; and Weed v. Ballston Spa,—supra; Larson v. Grand Forks, 3 Dak. 307, 19 N. W. 414; Thomas v. Brooklyn, 58 Iowa, 438, 10 N. W. 849.

Or as to justify the presumption that its existence was known to the agents of the corporation, charged with the duty of keeping the streets in repair. Weed v. Ballston Spa, supra; Chenoweth v. Kramer, 109 Ill. App. 85; Hearn v. Chicago, supra; Brownlee v. Alexis, 39 Ill. App. 135; Montgomery v. Des Moines, supra.

And this is true, though in point of fact the proper officers of the city did not know of such obstruction. Boulder v. Niles and Domer v. District of Columbia, supra.

If it had existed for such a period of time that, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, the city authorities ought to have discovered and could have repaired the defect or obstruction, and placed the street or sidewalk in a reasonably safe condition; and it failed to do so,—it is liable for any injuries that may have been occasioned thereby, provided the injured party was in the exercise of ordinary care. Norman v. Teel and Atlanta v. Perdue, supra; Monticello v. Kennard, 7 Ind. App. 135, 34 N. E. 454; Senhenn v. Evansville, 140 Ind. 675, 40 N. E. 69; Smith v. Sioux City, 119 Iowa, 50, 93 N. W. 81; Cook v. Anamosa, 66 Iowa, 427, 23 N. W. 907; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43; Cincinnati v. Frazer, 18 Ohio C. C. 50; Cowie v. Seattle, supra; Fairfield v. Hornick, 53 Ill. App. 558; Michigan City v. Phillips, 163 Ind. 449, 71 N. E. 449, affirming (Ind. App.) 69 N. E. 700; Miller v. Canton, supra; Lynch v. Buffalo, 6 Misc. 583, 27 N. Y. Supp. 303.

If a defect or an obstruction in a street was, at the time of an injury therefrom, palpable, dangerous, and in a public place, and had existed for a considerable period of time, knowledge upon the part of the city authorities may be presumed. Bill v. Norwich, 39 Conn. 222; Downs v. Smyrna, 2 Penn. (Del.) 132, 45 Atl. 717; Seward v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 189, 42 Atl. 451; Chapman v. Macon, 55 Ga. 566; Hogan v. Chicago, 168 Ill. 551, 48 N. E. 210, reversing 59 Ill. App. 446; Springfield v. Doyle, 76 Ill. 202; Reid v. Chicago, 83 Ill. App. 554; Fairfield v. Hornick, supra; Powell v. Bowen, 92 Ill. App. 453; McLeansboro v. Lay, 29 Ill. App. 478; Belvidere v. Crichton, 81 Ill. App. 595; Cleveland v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 279, Gil. 255; Shipley v. Bolivar, 42 Mo. App. 401; Todd v. Troy, 61 N. Y. 506; Rife v. Middletown, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 68; Philadelphia v. Smith, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 147, 16 Atl. 493.

In such case it is proper to infer either negligent supervision and ignorance consequent upon the negligence, or notice of the defect and a disregard of the duty to repair it. Manchester v. Hartford, 30 Conn. 118.

And a prima facie case against a city is made out by evidence showing the defective condition of a sidewalk, where the injury in question occurred after the lapse of such a period of time that notice thereof should be inferred, where the defect was not so glaring that a prudent man would not have undertaken to use the walk. Huff v. Marshall, 97 Mo. App. 542, 71 S. W. 477.

Nor need a complaint in an action against a city for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street directly allege that the city had notice of the defect complained of; it is sufficient if it states facts from which such notice would be inferred. Gallamore v. Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978; Evansville v. Wilter, 86 Ind. 414; Padelford v. Eagle Grove, 117 Iowa, 616, 91 N. W. 899.

And a complaint in such an action, charging that the street was obstructed by a large mowing machine which then and there stood in the street, of which, on the day of the injury and for a long time previous, the city had knowledge, sufficiently charges notice to withstand a demurrer. Mt. Vernon v. Hoehn, 22 Ind. App. 282, 55 N. E. 654.

And a charge in an action against a city, that the defendant allowed a dangerous hole to remain in one of its sidewalks, imports that the defect had existed sufficiently long to have been discovered and remedied by the exercise of due care on the part of the defendant. Anniston v. Ivey, 151 Ala. 392, 44 So. 48.

Nor is a complaint in an action against a city for a personal injury objectionable because it charges that the city had actual notice of an obstruction in a street, causing the injury complained of, when the evidence shows that it had constructive notice only. Indianapolis v. Mitchell, 27 Ind. App. 589, 61 N. E. 947.

And, where an injury was caused by a ditch dug by a contractor across a sidewalk for the purpose of laying a water pipe, an allegation in an action against the city for 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the injury that the city well knew of the dangerous condition sufficiently charges constructive notice of such excavation. Pace v. Webster City, 138 Iowa, 107, 115 N. W. 888.

And an allegation that notice of the dangerous condition of a sidewalk was had by the city for a long time prior to the date of the accident in question is sufficient. Linton v. Smith, 31 Ind. App. 546, 68 N. E. 617.

And proof of circumstances from which it appears that a defect or obstruction in a street ought to have been known and remedied by the city or its proper officers is sufficient, in an action for damages for the injury, on the question of notice. Lindholm v. St. Paul, 19 Minn. 245, Gil. 204.

Nor will a recovery for an injury caused by a defective street be disturbed for want of notice to the city of the condition of the street, where the evidence tends to show a set of facts which charges it with presumptive notice that the sidewalk at the place of injury was out of repair. Goodno v. Oshkosh, 28 Wis. 300.

And a city in the streets of which a dangerous obstruction had existed for such a length of time that it was chargeable by law with notice and with the duty of removing it cannot complain, in an action against it for an injury resulting therefrom, of an instruction given upon the question of notice. Denver v. Murray, 18 Colo. App. 142, 70 Pac. 440.

To constitute constructive notice of a defect or obstruction in a street, however, the defect or obstruction must be so patent that it can be found out by the corporation by the use of reasonable care and diligence. Hunt v. New York, 20 Jones & S. 198; Ryan v. Chicago, 79 Ill. App. 28.

And, in the absence of actual notice of a defect in a highway, the town or city is not liable for an injury caused by it, unless it had existed so long that notice or knowledge thereof should be imputed to the municipality. Franklin v. House, 104 Tenn. 1, 55 S. W. 153; Nokomis v. Farley, 113 Ill. App. 161.

Where a defect in a sidewalk was hidden, and the city had no actual notice of its existence, and it is not shown to have existed for a sufficient length of time to justify the assumption that, by the exercise of ordinary care, the city might have known of its existence, there is no such negligence as will justify a recovery for an injury caused thereby. Carvin v. St. Louis, 151 Mo. 334, 52 S. W. 210.

And a plank sidewalk is not so unsafe as to render a municipal corporation liable to one who falls upon it because his cane goes through it, although it is so old that the edges of the plank have become decayed, and, adjacent to the cracks, they will not withstand the pressure of a cane, where the defect is not such as to attract attention, and obvious defects have been repaired as they occurred. Harden v. Jackson, 137 Mich. 271, 66 L.R.A. 986, 100 N. W. 389.

2. Duration of existence of obstruction as affecting.

(a) Generally.

Length of time during which a defect or obstruction in a street existed and was visible may justify a jury, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom, in finding notice to the city of the defect. Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 5 L.R.A. 143, 13 Am. St. Rep. 457, 42 N. W. 1011; Aurora v. Bitner, 100 Ind. 396; Donaldson v. Boston, 16 Gray, 508; Davenport v. Ruckman, 10 Bosw. 20, 16 Abb. Pr. 341, affirmed in 37 N. Y. 568; Magee v. Troy, 48 Hun, 383, 1 N. Y. Supp. 24.

And evidence tending to show how long a hole in a sidewalk was left unguarded is admissible in such an action. District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 34 L. ed. 472, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990.

But there is no fixed or definite rule as to what length of time a defect or obstruction must have existed to furnish notice to the municipal authorities thereof; each case must depend upon the facts and circumstances attending it. Young v. Webb City, 150 Mo. 333, 51 S. W. 709; Gerber v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. App. 191, 79 S. W. 717; Reed v. Mexico, 101 Mo. App. 155, 76 S. W. 53; Ottawa v. Hayne, 114 Ill. App. 21, affirmed in 214 Ill. 45, 73 N. E. 385; Cutter v. Des Moines, 137 Iowa, 643, 113 N. W. 1081; Colley v. Westbrook, 57 Me. 181, 2 Am. Rep. 30; Hoyer v. North Tonawanda, 79 Hun, 39, 29 N. Y. Supp. 650.

And very much depends upon the character of the defect or obstruction. Monticello v. Kennard, 7 Ind. App. 135, 34 N. E. 454; Reed v. Mexico, supra.

And upon the circumstances and surroundings. Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96; Aurora v. Bitner, supra.

Where a defect or obstruction in a street or sidewalk has remained such a length of time that the city officers whose duty it is to examine streets and repair them should, in the use of reasonable diligence, have discovered the danger, then notice to the city will be inferred. Tucker v. Salt Lake City, 10 Utah, 173, 37 Pac. 261; Denver v. Hyatt, 28 Colo. 129, 63 Pac. 403; Chicago v. Gillett, 108 Ill. App. 455; McLeansboro v. Trammel, 109 Ill. App. 524; Birch v. Charleston Light, Heat & P. Co. 113 Ill. App. 229; Brown v. Chillicothe, 122 Iowa, 640, 98 N. W. 502; Louisville v. Brewer, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1671, 72 S. W. 9; Henderson v. Reed, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 463, 62 S. W. 1039; Cutcher v. Detroit, 139 Mich. 186, 102 N. W. 629; Rodda v. Detroit, 117 Mich. 412, 75 N. W. 939; Market v. St. Louis, 56 Mo. 189; Clark v. Brookfield, 97 Mo. App. 16, 70 S. W. 934; Knight v. Kansas City, 113 Mo. App. 561, 87 S. W. 1192; White v. New Bern, 146 N. C. 447, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1166, 59 S. E. 992; Johnson v. Fargo, 15 N. D. 525, 108 N. W. 243; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442, 22 N. E. 1095; Archer v. Mt. Vernon, 57 App. Div. 32, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1040; Strobel v. New York, 15 Misc. 115, 36 N. Y. Supp. 814; Byrne v. Syracuse, 79 Hun, 555, 29 N. Y. Supp. 912; Davenport v. Ruckman, 10 Bosw. 20; Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 567; Philadelphia v. Smith, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 147, 16 Atl. 493; Waxahachie v. Connor (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 602; Lynchburg v. Wallace, 95 Va. 640, 29 S. E. 675; Born v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 719, 68 Pac. 386; Devenish v. Spokane, 21 Wash. 77, 57 Pac. 340; Larsen v. Sedro-Woolley, 49 Wash. 134, 94 Pac. 938; West v. Eau Claire, 89 Wis. 31, 61 N. W. 313; Grand Forks v. Allman, 83 C. C. A. 554, 153 Fed. 532; Gaffney v. Montreal, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 16 C. S. 260.

Where a street is thrown open for public use, those who travel upon it have the right to assume that it is in a reasonably safe condition; and if, without default on their part, or without knowledge of some existing obstruction, they are injured while lawfully using the street, the city is liable, unless the defect which has caused the injury has existed for so short a time that the city officials, by the exercise of reasonable care and supervision, could not have known of it. Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344.

And a declaration in an action against a city for an injury caused by stepping into a hole in a sidewalk in the night, alleging that the defendant well knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care ought to have known, of the existence of the defect, is not subject to the objection that it does not allege that the defect existed for such a length of time before the accident as to justify a presumption of notice, which takes the place of actual notice. Germaine v. Muskegon, 105 Mich. 213, 63 N. W. 78.

Nor is a complaint against a city for a personal injury caused by a defective board sidewalk alleged to have been permitted to become out of repair bad when questioned for the first time on appeal, for failing to allege that it had been out of repair for any designated period, or that the city had knowledge or notice of its decayed condition for any specified period before the time of injury. Evansville v. Frazer, 24 Ind. App. 628, 56 N. E. 729.

So, where mortar boxes had been permitted to remain in a street at least three or four weeks, and an accident resulted therefrom, the municipality will be deemed to have had notice thereof; and it will be held liable for the injury. Munley v. Sugar Notch, 215 Pa. 228, 64 Atl. 377.

And, where a person was injured by driving in the nighttime into a pile of stones of the presence of which in the street no warning was given by a light, and it appears that the stones had been in the street for at least three days, the question whether the city had constructive notice of the obstruction, in an action against it for the injury, is properly submitted to the jury. Koch v. Williamsport, 195 Pa. 488, 46 Atl. 67.

So, where a counter was placed on a sidewalk in front of the owner's building, leaning against the building, on Tuesday, and it remained there without falling until Saturday afternoon, when it was pushed over by one of three children playing around it, and a person was injured thereby, it is for the jury, in an action for the injury, to say whether the time during which the counter had stood on the sidewalk was enough to make the city responsible therefor. Kunz v. Troy, 16 N. Y. S. R. 459, 1 N. Y. Supp. 596.

And, where a pile of dirt was deposited in a street by the procurement of the owner of adjacent premises for the purpose of having it taken on his lot, and it had remained there three or four days and nights continuously up to the time of an accident caused thereby, the city is chargeable with notice of the obstruction, and therefore with negligence in permitting it to remain. Briel v. Buffalo, 90 Hun, 93, 35 N. Y. Supp. 359.

And a complaint, in an action for damages resulting from a horse being frightened by a stump lying in a street, and running over an unguarded side of the street into a river, charging that the stump was there and the side of the street was without barricade for two weeks; and that the city knew thereof and failed to remedy it,—sufficiently charges notice to the city of the obstruction and defect. Huntington v. Lusch, 33 Ind. App. 476, 70 N. E. 402.

So, the existence of a defect in a sidewalk for a year or more is sufficient to charge the city with constructive notice thereof. Rodda v. Detroit, 117 Mich. 412, 75 N. W. 939; Michigan City v. Phillips, 163 Ind. 449, 71 N. E. 205, affirming (Ind. App.) 69 N. E. 700.

And evidence that a visible defect has existed in a sidewalk of a principal street of a city for several months is sufficient to warrant a jury in finding that the city was negligent in relation thereto. Salina v. Kerr, 7 Kan. App. 223, 52 Pac. 901; Hoover v. Mapleton, 110 Iowa, 571, 81 N. W. 776.

And a complaint in an action against a city for an injury alleged to have been caused by a dangerous sidewalk will not be dismissed upon the ground that there was no evidence of any knowledge brought home to the city of the condition of the sidewalk, where the case was such that the jury were at liberty to find that the sidewalk had been for two weeks dangerous to passers-by from the snow and ice upon it. Smid v. New York, 17 Jones & S. 126.

And evidence of the condition of a sidewalk and repairs thereof for many years prior to an accident thereon is admissible, in an action against the municipal corporation for injuries caused by the accident, to show not only the actual condition of the walk, but that the municipal corporation had knowledge thereof. Yeager v. Spirit Lake, 115 Iowa, 593, 88 N. W. 1095.

So, a dangerous condition of a sidewalk caused by an accumulation of ice and snow existing for three or four days prior to an accident caused thereby constitutes sufficient evidence of constructive notice to the borough authorities to carry the case to the jury. Reed v. Schuylkill Haven, 22 Pa. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Super. Ct. 27; Hodges v. Waterloo, 109 Iowa, 444, 80 N. W. 523.

And, where ice was formed by water flowing down from an embankment and freezing; and it alternately thawed and froze for two or three weeks; and the ice was in several layers; and at the time of an accident thereon it had a slight covering of snow; and it did not appear that the streets were in a generally icy condition,—notice to the city might be presumed from the long-continued accumulation. Re Nay, 19 N. Y. S. R. 259, 3 N. Y. Supp. 679, affirmed in 123 N. Y. 628, 25 N. E. 952.

So, where a hole has existed in a sidewalk for several months, actual notice to the city authorities thereof is not necessary to a right of recovery against the city for an injury resulting therefrom. Ottawa v. Stricklin, 45 Ill. App. 288; Chicago v. Davies, 110 Ill. App. 427; Chicago v. Crooker, 2 Ill. App. 279; Larmon v. District of Columbia, 5 Mackey, 330; Robinson v. Wilmington, 8 Houst. (Del.) 409, 32 Atl. 347; Idlett v. Atlanta, 123 Ga. 821, 51 S. E. 709; Rosenberg v. Des Moines, 41 Iowa, 415; Lorenz v. New Orleans, 114 La. 802, 38 So. 566; Hunter v. Durand, 137 Mich. 54, 100 N. W. 191; Moore v. Minneapolis, 19 Minn. 300, Gil. 258; Bradford v. Downs, 126 Pa. 622, 17 Atl. 884; Lorenz v. Ellensburg, 13 Wash. 341, 52 Am. St. Rep. 42, 43 Pac. 20; Gallamore v. Olympia, 34 Wash. 379, 75 Pac. 978.

And the existence of a trench in a sidewalk, excavated by a private individual, for eight days, is sufficient to justify a jury in finding that the city authorities should have known of its existence. O'Hara v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 443, 57 N. Y. Supp. 367.

And evidence tending to prove that a hole about 3½ inches in depth and about 4 feet 4 inches wide, in a sidewalk, had existed for eight or ten days before an accident caused thereby; and that a witness had stumbled into it during that time,—is sufficient to permit the jury, in an action for the injury, to infer that the city authorities, by the use of reasonable diligence, had or should have obtained information of its existence, and to charge them with carelessness in not restoring the walk to a safe condition. Ryan v. New York, 28 N. Y. Week. Dig. 129, 13 N. Y. S. R. 550.

So, where a crossing was dangerous because it was oval shaped, and not level, and by long use it had become worn smooth and slippery; and it was located in a public and much-traveled street; and this condition had existed for ninety days,—the city is liable for an injury caused thereby. Lyon v. Logansport, 9 Ind. App. 21, 35 N. E. 128.

And a municipal corporation is chargeable with constructive notice of defects in a public alley which had existed for the period of six weeks preceding an injury caused thereby. Indianapolis v. Murphy, 91 Ind. 382.

And a charge that an excavation in a street was in existence on the 10th of a named month, and that the injury therefrom was sustained on the 14th of the same month, sufficiently imputes knowledge thereof to the city. Ft. Wayne v. Duryee, 9 Ind. App. 620, 37 N. W. 299.

And, where a trench dug for laying water pipes in a street is improperly filled, and the street is rendered defective thereby, and, six months afterwards, a person is injured by reason of such negligent filling of the trench, a finding, in an action for the injury, that the municipality either had notice of the defect, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence might have had notice of it, is warranted. Stoddard v. Winchester, 157 Mass. 567, 32 N. E. 948.

So, the existence for two or three weeks, of a hole about a foot wide in a highway bridge, into which a person stepped in the daytime without seeing it, justifies a finding, in an action for the injury received, that the highway commissioner was guilty of negligence. Foels v. Tonawanda, 75 Hun, 363, 27 N. Y. Supp. 113.

And a municipal corporation sued by one who fell into a drain which had been dug in a much-frequented place, and which had been under process of construction for nearly a month, and had remained in an unprotected state for some time, cannot defend on the ground that it did not authorize the drain to be dug, since it must be deemed to have had full notice. Adair v. Kingston, 27 U. C. C. P. 126.

And, where an injury occurs because an excavation authorized by the city was left unguarded during the night, it is not necessary to show, in order to recover of the city, that on previous nights the excavation had also been left unguarded. Gable v. Toledo, 16 Ohio C. C. 515.

And, where a trapdoor of a cellar way projecting into a sidewalk of a city street was open, and a person fell in and was injured at noon, evidence that it was open early in the morning, and that it could be raised only from the inside, and the testimony of the occupant of the building that he did not open the door or cause it to be opened or know that it was open, is sufficient to go to the jury in an action against the city for the injury, on the question whether the proper officers of the city, whose duty it was to attend to municipal affairs, either knew, or with proper vigilance might have known, of the open door, in time to have prevented by reasonable effort the injury complained of. Harriman v. Boston, 114 Mass. 241.

To recover for an injury alleged to have been caused by a defective or obstructed sidewalk, however, it is essential that the defect which caused the injury should have existed for a sufficient length of time to enable the proper officers of the municipality, by the exercise of ordinary care, to discover it. Hallum v. Omro, 122 Wis. 337, 99 N. W. 1051; Montezuma v. Wilson, 82 Ga. 206, 15 Am. St. Rep. 150, 9 S. E. 17; Ince v. Toronto, 27 Ont. App. Rep. 410; Gunlack v. Montreal, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 17 C. S. 294.

And, when a defective condition of a street is produced by some sudden cause, or by the act of a trespasser, or by some means not anticipated, the lapse of a reasonable time is necessary to raise the implication. (N.S.)

tion of notice to the municipal authorities, so as to hold them liable for a resulting injury. Hoyer v. North Tonawanda, 79 Hun, 39, 29 N. Y. Supp. 650; Warsaw v. Dunlap, 112 Ind. 576, 11 N. W. 623, 14 N. E. 568; Franklin v. House, 104 Tenn. 1, 55 S. W. 153.

And, if a sidewalk was repaired and placed in a condition reasonably safe for pedestrians, and a traveler was injured thereon on the next day, it cannot be said that a sufficient length of time had elapsed from which notice of the condition of the sidewalk could be inferred, or that the city had a reasonable time within which to repair the defect. Dittrich v. Detroit, 98 Mich. 245, 57 N. W. 125.

So, the fact that a sleigh was left standing in a street for ten or fifteen minutes will not raise a presumption of knowledge of the obstruction upon the part of the town officers. Sikes v. Manchester, 59 Iowa, 65, 12 N. W. 755.

And a municipal corporation is not liable for injuries to a person caused by the fright of the horse she was driving at an object in the street but outside of the traveled way, which had been put there two hours before without the knowledge of the city authorities. Butler v. Oxford, 69 Miss. 618, 13 So. 626.

Nor can it be held to be actionable neglect for a city to fail to discover in three hours an obstruction in one of its streets, caused by a lot of rock screenings being dumped there, so as to charge it with liability for an injury resulting therefrom. Hazelrigg v. Frankfort, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 207, 92 S. W. 584.

And, where a city contracted with a contractor for the paving of a street, the contractor agreeing to place proper guards around the work for the prevention of accidents; and the contractor left a pile of stones in the road without sufficiently lighting it, and an injury resulted therefrom; and there is no evidence that the city had any express notice of the obstruction; and the pile of stones was placed there the night before the accident,—the time between the accident and the placing of the pile of stones was not sufficient to justify a finding that the city was negligent in not knowing the condition of the street and removing the obstruction. Godfrey v. New York, 104 App. Div. 357, 93 N. Y. Supp. 899.

Nor is a lapse of less than forty-eight hours between a snowstorm and an accident caused by the slippery condition of the sidewalk resulting therefrom sufficient, as a matter of law, to establish constructive notice to the city authorities of the dangerous condition of a sidewalk, resulting from a deposit of fallen and unremoved snow. Hawkins v. New York, 54 App. Div. 258, 66 N. Y. Supp. 623; Leipsic v. Gerdeman, 68 Ohio St. 1, 67 N. E. 87; Springer v. Philadelphia, 9 Sadler (Pa.) 395, 12 Atl. 490.

And, where water flowed from a hydrant and froze upon a sidewalk on Monday night, and on the succeeding Friday night a person was injured by falling on the ice, no presumption of knowledge, upon the part of the city officers, of the obstruction, arises. Corey v. Ann Arbor, 134 Mich. 376, 96 N. W. 477.

So, the mere lapse of about five hours from the time a barrier was erected at a dangerous place in a street to the time of an injury caused thereby does not raise a presumption of notice to the city of the removal of the barrier, where it was not known when the barrier was removed, and nothing is shown as to the relative situation of the street, or the part of the street, in which the barrier had been placed. Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 10 N. W. 162.

And, where a hole in a sidewalk was first seen at about 5 o'clock in the morning; and it caused an injury at about 8 o'clock in the evening of that day; and no actual notice upon the part of the city of its existence appears,—a verdict should be directed for the defendant in an action against the city for the injury, upon the ground that the hole had not existed long enough to constitute constructive notice. Reed v. Detroit, 99 Mich. 204, 58 N. W. 44.

And a municipal corporation should not be held liable for an injury caused by the removal of a plank from a sidewalk by the wilful act of an unknown person less than an hour before the accident, the time being too short for the defect to become known and notorious. Ferguson v. Waverly, 128 App. Div. 697, 112 N. Y. Supp. 891.

So, where cellar doors in a sidewalk were properly constructed and safe when they were shut; and a pedestrian passed over them about 8 o'clock in the evening, when they were closed; but when she returned a little later one door was open, and she fell in and was injured,—the city is not liable for the injury in the absence of evidence that it had any actual notice that the door was open, or that it had ever before been open in the nighttime, or that it had ever before been open in the same manner or for like purposes. Fehlhauer v. St. Louis, 178 Mo. 635, 77 S. W. 843.

And, where a manhole in a street was properly constructed, and the cover was a proper and sufficient one, and the only defect charged was the misplacement of the cover, evidence that, two or three days before the accident, which consisted of falling into the manhole, two men were cleaning out the sewer through this manhole, is not sufficient to go to the jury as tending to show that the defect had existed so long that the municipal corporation should have had notice of it. Whitney v. Lowell, 151 Mass. 212, 24 N. E. 47.

(b) Visible and notorious defects as distinguished from latent ones.

A much shorter period of time would be required to impose constructive notice upon a municipal corporation of a defect or obstruction in a street where the obstruction was prominently plain and visible in a much-frequented and public place than if it were some slight defect partially hidden from view and readily and easily overlooked by both the authorities and the traveler. Monticello v. Kennard, 7 Ind. App. 135, 34 N. E. 454; Powell v. Bowen, 92 Ill. App. 453; Reed v. Mexico, 101 Mo. App. 155, 76 S. W. 53.

A city must be held to have constructive notice of a defect in a sidewalk where the defect was a matter of public notoriety in the neighborhood, and well known by almost everyone traveling over the walk. Elster v. Seattle, 18 Wash. 304, 51 Pac. 394; Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 275, 71 N. W. 475; Moon v. Ionia, 81 Mich. 635, 46 N. W. 25.

And, if an obstruction in a street was one of such long duration as to be generally observable, the city is chargeable with constructive notice thereof. McLaughlin v. Corry, 77 Pa. 113, 18 Am. Rep. 432; Requa v. Rochester, 45 N. Y. 129, 6 Am. Rep. 52; Colby v. Beaver Dam, 34 Wis. 285; Balls v. Woodward, 51 Fed. 646.

And, where it has existed for such a length of time as to be generally known to the people in the neighborhood, it may be assumed that the officers of the city, whose duty it is to keep the streets in safe condition, have notice of such obstruction. Evansville v. Wilter, 86 Ind. 414.

So, evidence of the declarations of other persons with reference to the condition of a cross walk upon which a person fell and was injured is competent, in an action against the city for the injury, as tending to prove notice to the city of the condition of the sidewalk. Piper v. Spokane, 22 Wash. 147, 60 Pac. 138.

And the existence of defects and obstructions in a street may be shown in an action for an injury resulting therefrom, by proof that they were known to travelers and persons not citizens, as well as to citizens. Varnham v. Council Bluffs, 52 Iowa, 698, 3 N. W. 792.

And an instruction, in an action for an injury caused by a defect in a sidewalk, that, if the defect was open and notorious, the city is chargeable with notice thereof, means that the defect was not concealed or hidden but exposed to view and apparent; and is not subject to the objection that it would lead the jury to understand the reference to be to an open hole in the sidewalk. Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60 Iowa, 473, 15 N. W. 280.

So, a hole in a sidewalk which could be discovered at a distance of 2 rods, and which had existed for a number of months, cannot, as matter of law, be said to be a latent defect, but is such a defect as would be notice of itself to the city. Urtel v. Flint, 122 Mich. 65, 80 N. W. 991.

And, where a defect or depression in a sidewalk is a patent one, and has existed five or six weeks, the jury, in an action against the city for an injury caused by it, is warranted in finding that the city had notice of it. Philadelphia v. Smith, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 147, 16 Atl. 493.

And the existence of a depression in a city street for thirty days prior to an injury resulting therefrom is sufficient to charge the city with notice thereof. Apker v. Hoquiam (Wash.) 99 Pac. 746.

So, constructive notice of a washout in the edge of a sidewalk, which caused an injury, may be inferred from the notoriety of the defect, and its continuance for such length of time as to raise the presumption that the proper municipal officers did in fact know, or with due vigilance and care ought to have known, of it. Montgomery v. Wrigut, 72 Ala. 411, 47 Am. Rep. 422.

And the existence of a hole in a street, from 3 to 5 feet wide, from 1 to 2½ feet long, and 1 foot deep, caused by the settling of the paving stones, apparently, by the ground settling in front of a fire hydrant, and extending some distance across the highway; which had been in existence for a month before the accident,—requires the court, in an action against the city, by a person who drove into the excavation and was injured, to submit to the jury the question as to whether or not the defendant had notice of the existence of this condition of the pavement, or whether it was negligent in not having ascertained the condition of the street before. Smith v. New York, 17 App. Div. 438, 45 N. Y. Supp. 239.

So, the testimony of a witness that he passed an opening in a street to light and ventilate a cellar, daily for some time, and had always found it open, is sufficient to go to the jury, in an action for the injury caused by the hole, on the question whether, by the exercise of proper care, the town might have had notice of the hole. Purple v. Greenfield, 138 Mass. 1.

And evidence, that, before the accident in question, someone telephoned to the city hall that the street was in a dangerous condition because an approach to a bridge was undermined by water and contained openings, crevices, and holes is admissible in an action against the city for an injury caused by such defect as tending to show such a publicity or notoriety of the existence of the defect as would indicate that the city had, or with reasonable diligence could have had, notice thereof. Dallas v. Moore, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 74 S. W. 95.

Likewise, a pile of dirt in a street might properly be found by a jury to be such an obstruction, when continued about ten hours, as would attract attention; and that, in the exercise of ordinary care, the city would have discovered and remedied it before an accident therefrom. Parsons v. Manchester, 67 N. H. 163, 27 Atl. 88.

And, where a pile of brush 2 feet high projected 8 feet into one of the principal streets of a town near the business portion thereof, and remained in such position for three days, the corporation was chargeable with notice of the obstruction and with liability for damages resulting from such negligence, where the person injured was free from contributory negligence. Monticello v. Kennard, 7 Ind. App. 135, 34 N. E. 454.

It cannot be presumed, however, that a city had notice of a latent defect in one of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) its streets when the defect was not made by it or under its direction. Hunt v. New York, 20 Jones & S. 198; Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785, 48 S. E. 318.

A city is not liable for latent or unseen defects in its sidewalks, not discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care; and no recovery can be had against a city for an injury on a city sidewalk where the sidewalk was at the time in a reasonably safe condition for ordinary travel by persons using such degree of care and caution as reasonably prudent persons would use under the circumstances, so far as they were discoverable by the city by the use of ordinary care. Karczenska v. Chicago (Ill.) 88 N. E. 188.

And notice to the proper authorities of a city of a sidewalk being out of repair cannot be inferred or presumed unless the defect was open and notorious and of long standing, and of such a character as would naturally arrest the attention of the passer-by. McGrail v. Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52, 53 N. W. 955.

A city is not liable for injuries caused by a latent defect in a street or sidewalk where it had no actual notice of its existence and the authorities had used all ordinary and reasonable means to discover it. Powell v. Bowen, 92 Ill. App. 453.

And a defect in a highway that is discovered by only one of a thousand or more persons who pass in the ordinary pursuit of business or pleasure is not notorious, or such that the municipality is bound to take notice of it. Burns v. Bradford, 137 Pa. 361, 11 L.R.A. 726, 20 Atl. 997.

But refusal to instruct, in an action against the city, that the city is not liable for latent or unseen defects in its sidewalks not discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care, though a correct proposition, is not error where the jury is told that it is only for a failure to exercise ordinary care that the city is liable, the two statements being substantially the same. Karczenska v. Chicago, supra.

Nor is a city chargeable with notice of a defect in a sidewalk which is not apparent to the ordinary observer, and the existence of which is not known to the inhabitants of the city generally. Cook v. Anamosa, 66 Iowa. 427, 23 N. W. 907.

And, where persons passing along a defective or obstructed street failed to observe that it was in bad condition, it cannot be assumed that the city officials, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, would have noticed its condition. Broburg v. Des Moines, 63 Iowa. 523, 50 Am. Rep. 756, 19 N. W. 340; Williams v. Carterville, 97 Ill. App. 160.

And it has been held that, if a defect in a sidewalk is not such as to make it easily observable to one passing by as dangerous, it is not of a kind which the municipal authorities are bound to notice and remedy. Cole v. Scranton, 4 Lack. Leg. News, 287.

So, the existence of an obstruction in a street for from only two to four hours, at a place where it would in all probability not be at once observed by the public officers of the city, is not sufficient to establish constructive notice thereof to the city. Vance v. Kansas City, 123 Mo. App. 644, 100 S. W. 1101.

And the knowledge of two or more citizens that a sidewalk having an offset in it is in a dangerous condition is not notice thereof to the city; to render the city liable for resulting injuries it must either have express notice of a defect not in the original construction, or the fact of such defect must be notorious. Cramer v. Burlington, 39 Iowa, 512.

And evidence that a sidewalk at a place where an accident took place was near the ground and level, that the boards were in place and apparently sound, and that in walking over it there was no noticeable defect in it, does not charge the municipal corporation with implied notice of a defect in it. Lohr v. Philipsburg, 165 Pa. 109, 30 Atl. 822.

So, the existence in a plank sidewalk 6 feet wide, of a hole 17 inches long, 7 inches wide, and 2½ inches deep, where one of the planks had broken off at the end and been forced downward at a place where the walk had been repaired three months before, to which the attention of no witnesses had ever been called, though they had frequently been over the walk, is not enough to charge the city, which had no actual notice of the defect, with negligence. Jones v. Sioux Falls, 18-S. D. 477, 101 N. W. 43.

And the testimony of a witness that she was tripped by a loose board in a sidewalk two or three weeks before the accident in question is insufficient to charge notice to the corporation, where it appears that the occupant of abutting property, who frequently passed over the walk, put the board in proper position and nailed it to the stringers when he discovered that it was out of place, and that the witness went over the walk several times between the day she was tripped and the day of the accident in question, and did not observe any defects in it. Lohr v. Philipsburg, supra.

Nor can a municipal corporation be held liable for an injury to a person who stepped on a board which covered a hole in a sidewalk in such a way that the hole was not visible, when the board turned and the person injured was precipitated into the hole, where the hole covered by the board had been in that condition only twenty-four hours. Yeager v. Berwick, 218 Pa. 266, 67 Atl. 347.

And, where an excavation is made in a city street by permission of the municipal authorities but without their supervision, and it is afterwards filled and the street is restored to an apparently safe condition, the city is not liable for injuries from hidden defects in filling until after express or implied notice of defects, and a lapse of a reasonable time to make repairs. Scanlon v. New York, 12 Daly, 81; Fitzpatrick v. Darby, 184 Pa. 645, 39 Atl. 545.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And a hollow beneath a sidewalk, caused by the ground being washed out, is not such an obvious defect as to impute notice to the city, where nothing is shown as to when the washout occurred. Baustian v. Young, 152 Mo. 317, 75 Am. St. Rep. 462, 53 S. W. 921.

And, where a water-meter box situated in a sidewalk was entirely without fastenings, and was loose and liable to become displaced and removed; and dirt and débris had accumulated in the flanges and grooves and under the cover so that the cover was liable to slip and give way under the weight of a person walking across it; and a person was injured by stepping on the cover and the sliding of the cover to one side, thereby letting her foot drop down in the hole,—the defect must be regarded as a hidden or latent one, and not an open and notorious one, with reference to rules with relation to notice. Carvin v. St. Louis, 151 Mo. 334, 52 S. W. 210.

Nor is a city liable for the breaking of a liberty pole erected in a street, causing an injury where the breaking occurred by reason of a defect in the pole unknown to the city authorities, and which could not have been discovered by careful examination of the pole as it stood. Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649.

A municipal corporation is not, however, exempt from liability for injury caused by defects in its streets or sidewalks because the defects were latent, where they could have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Owen v. Chicago, 10 Ill. App. 465; Buckley v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. 188, 68 S. W. 1069.

Knowledge of a defect upon the part of a municipal corporation may be inferred notwithstanding it may have escaped the attention of all travelers, or even of an officer frequently passing by. It is not a question whether all passers-by actually notice a defect, but whether it is noticeable. Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309; Rosevere v. Osceola Mills, 169 Pa. 555, 32 Atl. 548.

City officers whose duty it is to use ordinary care to keep streets in a reasonably safe condition cannot shut their eyes to a condition which would be made plain to them by the use of common faculties and the intelligence of ordinary men, and then claim, when an injury occurs, that they had no notice of such condition. Mattoon v. Worland, 97 Ill. App. 13.

And that persons living in the immediate vicinity of a defect in the street which had existed for several days had not noticed the defect is immaterial and inadmissible in an action against a city for an injury from a defective highway. Grand Rapids v. Wyman, 46 Mich. 516, 9 N. W. 833.

And that a person injured by a loose plank in a sidewalk had passed over it twice a day for eight months before the accident does not necessarily show that the city should not be charged with notice of the defect. Krisinger v. Creston (Iowa) 119 N. W. 526.

So, where a sidewalk was old, rotten, and unsafe, the defect cannot be considered a latent one with reference to rules with relation to constructive notice to the city of the defect. Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 614.

And, where the stringers of a sidewalk, holding the boards, were decayed so as insecurely to hold nails driven in them through the planks, the defect is a danger which ought to have been foreseen by the exercise of reasonable care, so as to render the municipal corporation liable for injuries to pedestrians therefrom. Aslen v. Charlotte, 35 App. Div. 625, 54 N. Y. Supp. 754.

And evidence, consisting of the testimony of four witnesses, that boards in a sidewalk were loose from two to four weeks prior to the accident in question, and of eight witnesses that they never had noticed any loose boards, and of one witness that he noticed the loose board first on the day of the accident, though not conclusive, is sufficient to justify a finding by a jury that the defect had existed for a sufficient length of time, and was of such a nature, that the city could, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, have ascertained its existence and repaired it. Streator v. Chrisman, 182 Ill. 215, 54 N. E. 997, affirming 82 Ill. App. 24.

It is the duty of a city, and not of travelers, to notice defects in the sidewalks and repair them; and it does not follow, because a defect is not of a character necessarily to attract the attention of travelers, that the city, by the exercise of due care, would not have discovered it. Squires v. Chillicothe, 89 Mo. 226, 1 S. W. 23.

And it is incumbent upon a city to use ordinary caution to anticipate danger that could come into existence by way of defects or obstructions in a street without manifesting itself to ordinary observation. Vosper v. New York, 17 Jones & S. 296.

But the rule that a city is liable for defects, though latent, if they could have been discovered by inspection, observation, or otherwise, is not applicable to latent defects in structures over dangerous places, over which sidewalks are constructed. Jackson v. Pool, 91 Tenn. 448, 19 S. W. 324.

So, a city is bound by its knowledge, or obligation to gain knowledge, as to the intrinsic qualities of a tree growing in a sidewalk, and its liability to rot without exterior sign of the rottenness, and though these things were not manifested in the outward appearance of the tree. Vosper v. New York, supra.

And the declarations of persons as to the dangerous character of a shade tree in a street, made while looking at its decayed roots at a time when they were exposed while the street was being paved, are competent, in an action against the city for an injury caused by the tree falling on a traveler, on the issue of notice to the city of the defective condition of the tree. Chase v. Lowell, 151 Mass. 422, 24 N. E. 211.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And, where an abutting owner constructed a coal hole in the sidewalk for the convenience of his property, and it became defective so that the cover would tip over if stepped on on one side, and remained in this condition for a long time, the walk being one much traveled upon, it is for the jury, in an action for the injury, to say, under all the circumstances, whether, if ordinary care had been exercised on the part of the city, it would not have discovered before the time of the accident that the coal hole with its cover was in a defective and dangerous condition. L'Herault v. Minneapolis, 69 Minn. 261, 72 N. W. 73.

3. Cause naturally calculated to produce obstruction.

Where a defect or obstruction in a street is produced by some known, permanent cause which would naturally create a defect or obstruction, the existence of such cause may properly be considered by the jury in an action for an injury caused by the defect or obstruction, in determining whether the officers of the town or city might have had notice of it by the exercise of proper care and diligence. Olson v. Worcester, 142 Mass. 536, 8 N. E. 441.

The duty of municipal corporations to use ordinary care in keeping their sidewalks in a safe condition for travel involves the anticipation of defects that are the natural and ordinary results of use and climatic influences; and, where there is a neglect on the part of the proper officers to make a sufficiently frequent examination of the particular structure, the municipality will not be relieved from liability by the fact that the defect was not open and notorious. Chicago v. Gillett, 108 Ill. App. 455.

And, if work in a street was being done in such a manner and for such a length of time that the city authorities should have known of it if they had exercised reasonable care, actual notice to the city of the fact that such work was being done is not necessary to be proven to establish its liability for a resulting injury. Joliet v. Seward, 99 Ill. 267.

So, knowledge upon the part of a city of the manner in which a walk was constructed, and evidence that walks so constructed were liable to become unsafe, and that this walk had stood for a long time, is sufficient to charge the city with notice that this walk was defective. Weber v. Creston, 75 Iowa, 16, 39 N. W. 126.

And, where a hole in a sidewalk had existed for months; and the very dangerous character of the hole had existed for two or three days before an accident occurred therefrom,—it will be presumed that the city had implied notice of the dangerous character of the hole, although it may not be shown that any actual notice was given to any officer of the city. Salina v. Trosper, 27 Kan. 544.

So, a municipal corporation is chargeable with notice of the generally unsafe condition of a sidewalk which is old and out of repair at many places, its stringers as well as its cross planks being in a condition of decay. Shelbyville v. Brant, 61 Ill. App. 153.

And, where a street commissioner had actual knowledge of a crack across the center of a large stone constituting the surface of a sidewalk, and a part of the stone dropped when stepped upon by a traveler and injured him, it is for a jury to decide from all the facts and circumstances whether or not the city was chargeable with either actual or constructive notice of the defect. Joliet v. Walker, 7 Ill. App. 267.

But, if a crack across the center of a large stone constituting the surface of a sidewalk was of such a nature, taken in connection with all the other facts and circumstances in the case, as not to cause a reasonably prudent man whose business it was to look after the repairs of the street to suspect there was danger on account of the crack in the stone; or if it would not, under such circumstances, put such a man on inquiry further to examine the condition of the sidewalk,—the city cannot be held to have had notice of the defect. Ibid.

So, a city is chargeable with knowledge of the natural tendency of timber in a gutter crossing to rot and decay by lapse of time and exposure to the weather. Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196.

And a city is chargeable with knowledge that continued rains will render the perpendicular banks of a trench in a street liable to cave; and that planks unfastened, lying loose upon the uneven surface of the ground, placed there for the purpose of furnishing a passageway over the trench, are liable to slip or give way under pedestrians, who by this action of the city are invited to use them. Carver v. Jackson, 82 Miss. 583, 35 So. 157.

And, where a sidewalk was defective because water flowed down from a lot across it under the brick and carried away a portion of the sand in which the brick were laid, thereby allowing the brick to settle; and the attention of the street commissioner was called to these defects; and places cut by wheels passing over it were repaired; and injuries caused by the overflow were also repaired; but the flow of water which caused the injury continued right along so that the same defect reappeared and an injury resulted; it being open and obvious that the water flowed down upon the sidewalk at that point all the time,—a finding of the jury that the city had knowledge of the defective condition is warranted. Toledo v. Center, 16 Ohio C. C. 308.

Nor is the right to recover for an injury caused by the falling of a pole which had been erected by citizens years before and had become rotten dependent upon notice to the municipal corporation of the condition of the pole. Norristown v. Moyer, 67 Pa. 355.

And evidence that a contractor for a sidewalk cut the roots of trees standing in a public street in front of the dwelling of an abutting owner, and that the trees were left without support, and, five or six 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

days thereafter, they blew down against the dwelling and damaged it, justifies a finding that the city had constructive notice of the dangerous condition of the trees, rendering it liable for the damages sustained. Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373.

And evidence of notice to a city that a steam engine and boiler used for hoisting purposes were in the street and apparently used in hoisting material into a building justifies a finding, in an action against the city for an injury alleged to have been caused by it, that the city had actual notice that the engine was in the street for the purpose of being operated; and such notice includes the common knowledge that such engine, in its ordinary and proper operation, would emit steam, thereby producing noise, thus operating as actual notice of the condition which caused the injury, where the noise frightened the horse of the person injured. Ham v. Lewiston, 94 Me. 265, 47 Atl. 548.

And, where a tradesman placed a showcase near the curb line of the sidewalk in front of his premises, and fastened the same to an awning post by means of a iron brace; and the same remained there without permission for several years, and a truck collided with the showcase, tearing off the brace; and the showcase was put back in position but without fastening; and the next day it blew down and injured a passer-by,—the city is liable for the injury because of having permitted the continuance of the unlawful obstruction, though it had no knowledge or notice that the brace which sustained the showcase had been broken or removed. Wells v. Brooklyn, 9 App. Div. 61, 41 N. Y. Supp. 143.

So, where a market company for many years rented to hucksters the privilege of using a sidewalk adjoining its market, and police officers had driven away hucksters who would not pay for such privilege, and the occupation of the sidewalk was unlawful, and an injury occurred to a traveler from slipping on refuse matter on the sidewalk, the municipality had notice of the unlawful occupation, and was guilty of negligence in not having suppressed the nuisance; and it is not necessary for the person injured to show that the municipality had knowledge of the particular vegetable or other matter which is alleged to have caused the accident. O'Dwyer v. Northern Market Co. 30 App. D. C. 244.

And, when an electric-light wire in a city breaks and falls, and remains in the street for three weeks, constituting a dangerous obstruction to travel, and causes an injury to a passer-by, both the electric light company and the city are presumed, from the lapse of time, to have knowledge of its condition and dangerous character; and both may be joined in an action for damages for injuries resulting from their negligent omission to cause the wire to be repaired. Kansas City v. File, 60 Kan. 157, 55 Pac. 877.

And, where a person was injured by a discharge of electricity from a loose wire which he took hold of with the intention of removing it from the highway, which wire was one used without electricity, but which touched an electric wire which had lost its insulation at the point of contact, and which had been hanging loose for three weeks in such position that the wind might bring it against the wire, and which at the time of the accident was caught on a glass insulator so as to be kept in contact with the electric wire; and the want of insulation could be seen from the street; and another accident had occurred from the same cause a few minutes earlier,—the question whether the city ought to have known of the defect is one of fact for the jury. Bourget v. Cambridge, 159 Mass. 388, 34 N. E. 455.

So, where a defect in the condition of a coal hole and cover in a sidewalk was permanent, and neglect of the occupant of the premises to fasten the cover was habitual, the fact that, half an hour before a person was injured thereby, the coal hole cover had been removed for the purpose of taking in coal by an occupant of the premises, and that the cover was replaced by the person putting in the coal, who neglected to fasten it on the inside, is not conclusive against the right of the person injured to maintain an action against the city therefor, there being nothing to show that the person putting in the coal did not leave the coalhole as securely covered as he found it. McGaffigan v. Boston, 149 Mass. 289, 21 N. E. 371.

And that the cover of a coal hole in a sidewalk was loose; and that the stone into which it was fitted was rounded underneath so that the cover would balance and tip up and turn over when stepped on; and that this was apparent from the street; and that, although the cover would be secure if fastened on the inside, it was usually left unfastened, and this condition had existed for a considerable time and was known to a police officer of the city, who had reported it at the station,—is evidence of a defect of which the city might have had notice by the exercise of proper care and diligence, even though the knowledge of the police officer was not in itself notice to the city. Ibid.

And, where a pedestrian stepped upon the lid covering a catch-basin leading to a sewer in a sidewalk and was injured, the accident being occasioned by the turning of the lid, the turning of the lid having been caused by the fact that one of two lugs which were necessary to keep it in position had been broken off, the fact that the broken surface of the iron was dry and rusted, and that it was known to the municipal authorities that lids of similar catch-basins were frequently tampered with by boys, and were liable to be broken, and that the particular basin in question was immediately adjacent to a police-patrol box at which policemen registered their rounds, is sufficient to go to a jury, in an action for the injury, upon the question of constructive or implied notice to the municipal authorities of the defect and their consequent negligence. District of Columbia v. Payne, 13 App. D. C. 500. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Notice of a cause existing outside of a street, which is likely to produce a defect in the street, however, is not notice of the defect itself; and the existence of such a cause for twenty-four hours is not equivalent to the existence of the defect for that time. Billings v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 339, 3 Am. Rep. 460.

And, if a harmless defect exists in a public sidewalk long enough to be known to the municipal authorities, which defect becomes dangerous only in combination with snow and ice, of which the authorities has no notice at all, the municipality is not liable for an injury resulting therefrom because it had notice of the pre-existing defect in the sidewalk. Free v. District of Columbia, 21 D. C. 608.

Nor does the fact that a way is so constructed that it is not likely to keep in good condition for a great length of time impose liability on the municipal corporation bound to keep it in repair, unless the danger is so imminent that it can fairly be said to show a want of reasonable care and diligence to omit guarding against it at once. Stoddard v. Winchester, 154 Mass. 149, 26 Am. St. Rep. 223, 27 N. E. 1014.

And, where the only evidence, in an action against a city for injuries caused by slipping on ice on a sidewalk, of the existence of the ice prior to the accident, is that it snowed on the third day before, rained on the second day before, and froze on the night before, together with the testimony of the person injured that there was ice there on the night before, no inference of constructive notice to the city thereof can be reasonably made, and the question should not be submitted to the jury. Davis v. Kingston, 1 Silv. Sup. Ct. 536, 5 N. Y. Supp. 506.

But where a municipal corporation has knowledge of a defect in a pavement of a street, which will be dangerous when covered with ice or snow, the occurrence of a snow-storm is notice to the city that the pavement at that point is in a dangerous condition. Corts v. District of Columbia, 7 Mackey, 277.

Nor does consent on the part of municipal authorities for a telephone company to erect its poles along some of the streets of the municipality, and knowledge of the fact that it would dig holes for that purpose, without more, affect the municipal authorities with notice that a hole which caused an injury had been dug, or left unprotected after it was made. Franklin v. House, 104 Tenn. 1, 55 S. W. 153.

And, where a hole was made in the surface of a road by the foot of a horse, and the city's surveyors of highways repaired it, and, by the action of the elements, the same hole was reopened or another hole made in the same place, if the surveyor repaired it so as to make the road safe and convenient, and the storm afterwards produced a new defect in the same place, the town would not be liable unless such new defect had existed twenty-four hours, or was known to the town. Hutchins v. Littleton, 124 Mass. 289.

And evidence that a defect in a street consisted in a softening of the earth under the influence of a heavy storm due to the digging of a trench for a water pipe about six months before the accident in question; and that the road had been used in the meantime without the earth softening or any danger or defect existing until within an hour of the accident,—does not entitle the person injured to go to the jury in an action for the injury, in the absence of any claim that the municipal corporation had notice, or might by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence have had notice, of the actual softening of the earth. Stoddard v. Winchester, supra.

Nor is a city liable for an injury resulting from an explosion caused by the ignition of gas which had accumulated and filled a manhole in one of its streets, which was constructed and owned by a heating and power company, there being no evidence that the city knew, or ought to have known, that the street was or was likely to get out of repair. Hunt v. New York, 20 Jones & S. 198.

4. General defectiveness or obstruction as affecting particular defect.

Notice of the general broken obstructed and unsafe condition of a street or sidewalk is sufficient to charge the municipality with negligence in not repairing it, although not shown to have notice or knowledge of the particular defect which caused the injury complained of. Fuller v. Jackson, 92 Mich. 197, 52 N. W. 1075; Dotton v. Albion, 50 Mich. 129, 15 N. W. 46; Aurora v. Hillman, 90 Ill. 61; Brownlee v. Alexis, 39 Ill. App. 135; Evans v. Iowa City, 125 Iowa, 202, 100 N. W. 1112; Rusher v. Aurora, 71 Mo. App. 418; Nothdurft v. Lincoln, 66 Neb. 430, 92 N. W. 628, 96 N. W. 163; Fritz v. Watertown (S. D.) 111 N. W. 630; Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 614; Barrett v. Hammond, 87 Wis. 654, 58 N. W. 1053.

And the generally bad condition of a street previous to the injury in question may be shown in an action against the municipal corporation for an injury caused by a particular defect or obstruction therein, upon the question of notice. Gude v. Mankato, 30 Minn. 256, 15 N. W. 175; Lindholm v. St. Paul, 19 Minn. 245, Gil. 204; Lyons v. Red Wing, 76 Minn. 20, 78 N. W. 868; Chicago v. Chase, 33 Ill. App. 551; Neeley v. Mapleton (Iowa) 117 N. W. 981; Smith v. Des Moines, 84 Iowa, 685; 51 N. W. 77; Hoover v. Mapleton, 110 Iowa, 571, 81 N. W. 776; Lynch v. Buffalo, 6 Misc. 583, 27 N. Y. Supp. 303; Belton v. Turner (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 831; McKnight v. Seattle, 39 Wash. 516, 81 Pac. 998; Pumorio v. Merrill, 125 Wis. 102, 103 N. W. 464; Hallum v. Omro, 122 Wis. 337, 99 N. W. 1051; Barrett v. Hammond, 87 Wis. 654, 58 N. W. 1053.

It being, by the instructions of the court, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

properly confined to that issue. Pumorio v. Merrill, supra.

And, where a person was injured because of the absence or looseness of a plank from a sidewalk, evidence that the city knew that the entire walk was in a dangerous condition sufficiently proves notice to it. Grattan v. Williamston, 116 Mich. 462, 74 N. W. 668; Riley v. Iowa Falls, 83 Iowa, 761, 50 N. W. 33; McConnell v. Osage, 80 Iowa, 293, 8 L.R.A. 778, 45 N. W. 550; Chacey v. Fargo, 5 N. D. 173, 64 N.W. 932.

And, if a sidewalk at the place where an injury occurred was old, rotten, full of holes, and out of repair, and dangerous generally, and had been so for several months prior thereto; and such condition was the cause of the injury,—it makes no difference, as to the city's liability therefor, whether the injured person stepped into an existing hole or a hole made by her at the time of the injury; or, if she did step into an existing hole, whether that particular hole had existed for a long or a short period of time. Durham v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 615, 68 Pac. 383.

And a declaration describing a sidewalk as being defective at a point opposite and a little west of certain premises gives the plaintiff a right, upon the question of notice, to show a general bad condition of the walk in front of the premises described. Rodda v. Detroit, 117 Mich. 412, 75 N. W. 939.

So, where a defect in a street complained of was a hole in the sidewalk caused by the absence of the cover of a box in the sidewalk; and there was testimony that it was always loose, and that, on the day preceding the accident, it was found off, and was put on again; and a witness had seen it off before, within a month of two,—a finding, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom, that the city had, or by the exercise of proper care might have had, reasonable notice of the defective condition, is warranted. Harrigan v. Worcester, 198 Mass. 354, 84 N. E. 467.

Likewise, if there are apparent and obvious defects in a street, so near and closely related to a condition which is apparently safe, but in fact defective, that an investigation of the former would lead to a knowledge of the latter, it may be said that the city should take notice of the latter defect. Dallas v. Moore, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 74 S. W. 95; Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36.

And evidence as to the condition of a street in the immediate vicinity but at other places than the exact point where the accident in question occurred is admissible in an action for damages for an injury caused by a defective street, as bearing upon the question of constructive notice to the city, and for the purpose of showing whether the condition in the immediate vicinity was such that the city ought to have known of the particular defect. Shearer v. Buckley, 31 Wash. 370, 72 Pac. 76; Laurie v. Ballard, 25 Wash. 127, 64 Pac. 906; Moore v. Kalamazoo, 109 Mich. 176, 66 N.

W. 1089; Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96; Barrett v. Hammond and Osborne v. Detroit, supra.

And evidence that notice was given to the corporate authorities that a walk from one named place to another, which included the particular walk on which the accident in question occurred, was in a dangerous condition, is admissible in an action for the injury to charge the city with notice of the particular defect. Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496, 65 N. W. 616.

And, where a declaration counts on a defective sidewalk in a named block, evidence may be given of the general defective condition of the sidewalk in front of that block and in the immediate vicinity of the place where the injury occurred, for the purpose of showing notice to the municipal authorities. Ibid.

So, evidence of the defective refilling of a sewer ditch from which a hole in the street resulted, and that the city had filled other holes along the ditch near the one in question, warrants an inference, in an action for an injury caused thereby, of actual notice on the part of the city of the existence of the hole in question. Dallas v. Muncton, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 112, 83 S. W. 431.

And the decayed condition of the timbers in other parts of a bridge than that which collapsed may be shown in an action against the city for the injury caused by the collapse, for the purpose of showing constructive notice of the condition of the bridge. Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 275, 71 N. W. 475.

Nor can a municipal corporation which permits its sidewalks to be rendered unsafe by a daily recurring nuisance, consisting of their being littered with vegetable refuse and peels or rinds from fruit, escape liability to a party who, while using a street without fault or neglect on his part, steps on some of the refuse, or peels, or rinds, and falls, and is injured thereby, on the claim that it does not appear that the particular refuse or peels which were the occasion of the injury were upon the sidewalk within the actual knowledge of the corporation, or had lain there for a length of time from which knowledge of their existence could be imputed to it. Archer v. Johnson City (Tenn.) 64 S. W. 474.

And, where the occupant of premises adjoining a street, on the morning of the accident in question, raised and propped up the cover of a coal hole in his sidewalk, and had done the same thing every day for some two months previous; and a pedestrian fell into the coal hole and was injured,—the city is chargeable with notice of such continuing act on the part of the abutting owner, and cannot escape responsibility for the injury on the ground that the raising of such cover by the owner caused the accident. Drake v. Kansas City, 190 Mo. 370, 109 Am. St. Rep. 759, 88 S. W. 689.

And, where an open space of about a foot in width between a brick sidewalk and a stone crossing was left for the passage of water, and this was covered with a plank, and the plank was split and loose and liable to change, and unsafe for twenty-four hours before an accident caused by it, and continued so until the time of the accident, the city is liable for the injury resulting therefrom, although the position of the plank which was the immediate cause of the accident had not continued for an hour. Winn v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 177.

So, where a stone had been in a highway for two or three weeks, and it caused an injury to a traveler, whether it was in the exact position where the person injured found it during all of the two or three weeks has no bearing upon the question of notice to the city of the obstruction. Orser v. New York, 127 App. Div. 335, 111 N. Y. Supp. 670.

And the existence for two months of a dangerous depression in a street caused by the caving in of a sewer charges the city with notice of similar defects in other parts of the sewer, which ordinary care in repairing the original break would have discovered. Dallas v. McAllister (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 173.

And, where it was the custom of the owner of a truck to leave it in the street at a particular point during the nighttime, which had existed for several months, and up to the time of an accident resulting therefrom; and this custom was known to the patrolman on the beat,—the city will be deemed to have had notice thereof, it not being a case of an isolated trespass which the officer might reasonably suppose would not be repeated, but one of a continuous invasion of the public right, habitually indulged in and known to the public officials. Farley v. New York, 152 N. Y. 222, 57 Am. St. Rep. 511, 46 N. E. 506.

So, where a person was injured by a defective frame constructed in a street for the purpose of decorating during a street fair, the city is liable for the injury though it had no notice of the particular defect of the frame which caused the injury, where it had notice that other frames, constructed for the same purpose and on the same general plan, were all defective and dangerous, and produced an unsafe condition of the sidewalk where they were used, thus charging the city with notice that the particular frame in question, constructed like the others, was dangerous. Farrell v. Dubuque, 129 Iowa, 447, 105 N. W. 696.

And, where a building was being erected on a lot abutting on a street; and a lot of large stone to be used in the building was hauled and piled in the street near the sidewalk; and a boy playing in the street ran upon the stone and received an injury; and the stone was being put in the street and taken out of the street by the contractor in proceeding with the work of construction,—the obstruction of the street was a continuous act from the time of the first lot of stone to the time of the injury, and the identity of the stone which caused the injury is of no moment, the continuity of the obstruction not being broken; and the question of notice to the city is one for a jury. Vance v. Kansas City, 123 Mo. App. 644, 100 S. W. 1101.

So, where a stake was driven into the ground to fill up a hole in a plank sidewalk, and it worked up above the level of the walk, and a pedestrian stumbled upon it and was injured, evidence that there were other stakes in the same condition at other places in the walk is admissible in an action for the injury, not to prove negligence by the city, but as tending to show that the city had notice of the condition of the walk, and that stakes so driven would work up above the level. Taylorville v. Stafford, 196 Ill. 288, 63 N. E. 624.

And evidence that boxes were on the sidewalk at various times prior to an injury received there, and the testimony of one witness that they were there all the time, warrants the inference that they had been there a sufficient length of time to charge the city with notice of their presence. Galesburg v. Higley, 61 Ill. 287.

So, evidence as to the condition of a sidewalk a week or more after an accident thereon is material, in an action for an injury resulting from the accident, as tending to prove notice to the city of the condition of the sidewalk, such evidence being merely cumulative, describing the condition of the walk at the time of the accident. Elster v. Seattle, 18 Wash. 304, 51 Pac. 394.

And testimony of a witness as to a defect in a sidewalk at the place of the injury in question and in the immediate vicinity, observed by him, a week or two after the injury, is admissible, in an action against the city therefor, to show that, if the city had inspected the walk within a reasonable time, it would have discovered its defective condition, where the evidence warranted an inference that no change had been made in the walk from the time of the injury to the time of the witness's observation. Williams v. Lansing, 152 Mich. 169, 115 N. W. 961.

And evidence, in an action against a city for an injury on a defective sidewalk, that, ten weeks after the injury happened, the boards in the sidewalk were so decayed that nails would not hold them together, and that the nails were so eaten by rust that they would not fasten the boards securely to the stringers, though of slight value, is competent as tending to support an inference that the walk was in a defective and insecure condition at the time of the injury. Richardson v. Marceline, 73 Mo. App. 360.

So, a person injured by a defective sidewalk may prove, in an action against the city for the injury, the condition of the sidewalk several months before the time of the injury, for the purpose of proving that the city had notice of its dangerous condition a sufficient length of time before the injury to have enabled it to repair the defect. Ibid.

Notice to a municipal corporation that a sidewalk is generally defective, however, is not necessarily notice of the existence of a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

particular defect which caused the injury. Shelby v. Claggett, 46 Ohio St. 549, 5 L.R.A. 606, 22 N. E. 407; Boulder v. Weger, 17 Colo. App. 69, 66 Pac. 1070; Ruggles v. Nevada, 63 Iowa, 185, 18 N. W. 866; Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 5 L.R.A. 143, 13 Am. St. Rep. 457, 42 N. W. 1011.

And a notice of a particular defect is not sufficient to prove municipal liability for an injury in a street, where it is different in kind from and in no way related to the one that produced the injury, and did not contribute thereto in any manner. Nothdurft v. Lincoln, 66 Neb. 430, 92 N. W. 628, 96 N. W. 163.

And, where a person was injured by an obstruction on a sidewalk, obstructions of the walk of a different nature at other times and in the same place, all of which were temporary, do not show notice to the city of obstructions complained of. Lewisville v. Batson, 29 Ind. App. 21, 63 N. E. 861.

In order to charge a municipal corporation as a matter of law with notice of a particular defect which caused an injury from its knowledge of the existence of the general defectiveness of the walk, the particular defect should be of the same character as the general defectiveness, or at least so related to it that the particular defect is a usual concomitant of the general one. Shelby v. Claggett, supra.

If a general defect in a street, known to the municipal corporation, was not of a character to make the street unsafe, or was of a character totally unlike that which caused the injury in question, so that the existence of one afforded no presumption of the existence of the other, notice of the general defect did not constitute notice of the particular defect, even though there was such relation between them that one would frequently be found in connection with the other. Ibid.

And there is no such close relation between the defectiveness of a wooden sidewalk which has become disbed by the settling of the middle stringers, and a loose plank in the sidewalk, which, upon being stepped upon, turned up and tripped a traveler, that from the first the other is necessarily, as matter of law, to be presumed. Ibid.

And, if a city notifies the owner of land abutting on a street of a defect in the cover of a coal hole in the sidewalk, and the owner replaces it with a new one which is defective in a different particular, and this causes an accident to a traveler on the highway, the city is not liable, unless the defect in the new cover existed for twenty-four hours before the accident, or the city had reasonable notice of the defect, although the city was notified of the defect in the old cover more than twenty-four hours before the accident. Crosby v. Boston, 118 Mass. 71.

And, where a cross walk had become seriously out of order and tottering several weeks prior to an injury thereon, and was liable to be more or less out of place and unsafe, and, because of its condition, someone removed a plank therefrom with the probable view of attracting attention to the need of repair, and a person stepped into the hole and was injured, the question, in an action against the city for the injury, is, Did the city actually or presumably obtain notice that the walk was loose and out of order, and that the occasion was being used for dangerously tampering with it, and was there reasonable time and opportunity thereafter to put it in proper condition before the accident? Dotton v. Albion, 50 Mich. 129, 15 N. W. 46.

So, where a man was injured by being struck by a bale of hay that was thrown out of the second story of a building having a platform running out from the second story over the sidewalk, the fact that the occupant of the building had theretofore thrown bundles from the platform into the street is not sufficient to give the city notice that it was likely at some time to push one off the edge of the platform, which would be carried by the wind back so as to strike a passer-by upon the sidewalk. Parmenter v. Marion, 113 Iowa, 297, 85 N. W. 90.

And, where a city, in constructing an iron bridge in a street, placed iron plates at intervals transversely across the bridge to provide for the expansion and contraction of the iron of which the bridge was constructed; and, to provide for the laying of tracks of a street railway along the bridge, the plates were cut into sections and were thus laid across the bridge; and subsequently the travel upon the bridge caused the ends or corners of some of the plates where they had been cut to turn or roll up to a height of 2 to 2½ inches; and the wheel of a traveler's carriage caught upon one of these projections and caused an injury,—the knowledge of the city of the condition and position of the sections of plates as originally laid does not constitute actual notice of the identical defect which caused the injury, but was notice only of a cause which might produce a defect. Bradbury v. Lewiston, 95 Me. 216, 49 Atl. 1041.

And, where a runway had been maintained for many years across a street by an individual for the purpose of conveying goods from railroad cars on the other side of the street to his storehouse; and an ordinary beam which constituted the principal portion of the runway was maintained at such an elevation above the roadway as not materially to interfere with the passage of vehicles, but, on the occasion of the accident in question, it had been lowered for use; and an injury resulted to a passer-by,—a refusal to charge, in an action against the city for the injury, that, if the accident happened, not from the permanent portion of the structure, but from the lowering of the beam which was in temporary use, unless the city had notice that this temporary use had been so continued at any one time as to constitute a permanent obstruction, the city is not liable, is not 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

error, where the court had instructed the jury that they were not to find a verdict for the plaintiff unless they found that the structure was a permanent and habitual obstruction of the street, interfering with its reasonable use, the proof showing that when in use as it had been for years the runway obstructed the street for hours at a time. Wynn v. Yonkers, 80 App. Div. 277, 80 N. Y. Supp. 257.

So, a person may notice obstructions in a street one or more times without being chargeable with knowledge that they are constantly maintained. Gerdes v. Christopher & S. Architectural Iron & Foundry Co. 124 Mo. 347, 25 S. W. 557, 27 S. W. 615.

And the fact that a truck had been left standing in a street for three or four nights in the week for a period of several months before an accident does not charge the city with notice, either actual or constructive, of the unsafe condition of the street caused by the presence of the truck. Farley v. New York, 9 App. Div. 536, 41 N. Y. Supp. 622, reversed in 152 N. Y. 222, 57 Am. St. Rep. 511, 46 N. E. 506.

And where a grocer made a practice of leaving his wagon, when not in use, in the street next to the curb in front of his store, with the thills tied up with a string; and, while thus standing, an iceman's wagon caught it and turned it around, and the string gave way and the thills came down upon the sidewalk and struck and injured a traveler,—evidence that the wagon was used two or three times a day; and that the thills were tied up after such use; and that it was in use on the day before the accident happened, and the thills were tied up that night; and that the accident happened early the next morning,—does not warrant an inference that the city had notice of the insecure manner in which the thills of the wagon were tied at the time of the accident in question, where there was no evidence going to show that the same fastening was used on every occasion. Cohen v. New York, 43 Hun, 346.

And, where a lot owner wanted to use dirt upon his lot, and had the dirt unloaded in the street, and employed men at once to wheel it to the lot, the only constructive notice which this act would give to the city would be that dirt was being drawn to a spot in the public street opposite the lot of the owner, and being taken away again and spread upon his lot; and the act of the lot owner, of permitting the dirt to remain in the street over night, from which an injury resulted, does not charge the city with negligence. Breil v. Buffalo, 144 N. Y. 163, 38 N. E. 977.

So, that a sidewalk was in an apparently safe condition, and that it was laid down in the ordinary way and constructed out of sound and suitable material, is admissible in evidence, in an action against the city for injuries resulting to a traveler from a hole in the sidewalk, as tending to rebut notice of defects by the city authorities. Poole v. Jackson, 93 Tenn. 62, 23 S. W. 57.

5. Other accidents.

The publicity necessarily given to prior accidents caused by a dangerous condition or obstruction of a street is competent as tending to show that it was brought to the attention of the authorities. Domer v. District of Columbia, 21 App. D. C. 284; District of Columbia v. Duryee, 29 App. D. C. 327, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 675.

And proof of other similar accidents caused by the same defect prior to the time of the injury in question is competent in an action against a city for an injury caused by a defect in a street,—at least for the purpose of proving notice to the municipality. Burrows v. Lake Crystal, 61 Minn. 357, 63 N. W. 745.

And that others had stepped into the same hole in a sidewalk or bridge is admissible in evidence in an action against the city for injuries received by stepping into such hole, as bearing upon the question of notice. Moore v. Kalamazoo, 109 Mich. 176, 68 N. W. 1089; Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169, 89 Am. Dec. 418; Goshen v. England, 119 Ind. 368, 5 L.R.A. 253, 21 N. E. 977.

And the same rule applies to evidence that other persons had fallen on a defective or obstructed cross walk about or within a short time of the fall in question. Piper v. Spokane, 22 Wash. 147, 60 Pac. 138.

And this is so though the other accidents had produced no grave injury. Cline v. Crescent City R. Co. 43 La. Ann. 327, 26 Am. St. Rep. 187, 9 So. 122.

But that other persons traveled by an obstruction on a sidewalk with safety is not competent as a defense in an action against the city, brought by a person who was injured by colliding with the obstruction, for damages for such injury. Birmingham v. Tayloe, 105 Ala. 170, 16 So. 576.

So, evidence, in an action against a city for damages resulting from the death of a person who stepped off an approach to a bridge in the night while the bridge was swinging around to enable a vessel to pass, that another person had fallen through the same bridge under similar circumstances, is admissible as tending to show that the city had notice that its agents were inattentive to their duties in respect to lighting the bridge, and had failed to provide against such neglect. Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169, 89 Am. Dec. 418.

But, where a person was injured by a wire charged with electricity hanging down from a tree in a street, evidence that, eight to ten months previous to the accident, a piece of telephone wire, at a point some distance away from the scene of the accident and at a place beyond the termination of the electric-light wires, had hung down from a pole, and several persons had been shocked thereby, is too remote to be competent, in an action against the city for the injury, for the purpose of charging the defendant with knowledge of the dangerous condition of the wires; and it cannot be admitted on the theory that the fact that persons had received shocks from the telephone wire at that point should have apprised the trustees that the telephone wire and the light wires must have been in contact at some point and therefore dangerous, so that the trustees should have inspected both lines of wires. Fox v. Manchester, 183 N. Y. 141, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 474, 75 N. E. 1116.

6. Place, circumstances, etc.

Among the circumstances which may be considered in determining what is a sufficient time for an obstruction or defect in a street to exist in order to charge the municipality with notice are population of the city and the amount of business or travel at or near the place of such obstruction. Ottawa v. Hayne, 114 Ill. App. 21, affirmed in 214 Ill. 45, 73 N. E. 385; Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96; Scoville v. Salt Lake City, 11 Utah, 60, 39 Pac. 481.

The nature and character of the defect. Scoville v. Salt Lake City, supra.

The central position and publicity of the place where it exists. Donaldson v. Boston, 16 Gray, 508.

Whether it is in a populous or sparsely settled part of the city. Scoville v. Salt Lake City, supra.

And any other circumstances which tend to show notoriety. Donaldson v. Boston, supra.

Thus, where a dangerous hole in a street had existed in much the same condition for some weeks prior to the time of an accident; and it was located but a few feet from the main traveled and planked thoroughfare of the town, and immediately at the end of a bridge way leading down from it to a street crossing this main thoroughfare,—the municipality is chargeable with constructive notice of the defect. Shearer v. Buckley, 31 Wash. 370, 72 Pac. 76.

And evidence that a walk was one of the principle thoroughfares in the city, and that a hole in it had existed there for several months, warrants the jury, in an action for an injury caused by stepping through the hole, in finding the city chargeable with notice of the defect. Hall v. Fond du Lac, 42 Wis. 274.

And, where a hole existed in a public street upon which there was a great amount of teaming, and which, aside from the gully in question, was in good condition; and the hole had been in substantially the same condition for from five to seven days previous to the accident in question; and the dimensions of the hole were claimed by some witnesses to be from 4 to 6 feet in length and from 1½ to 2 feet in depth and 30 inches in width, and by others to be 1½ feet deep and 2½ feet wide and about 3 feet long,—the court, in an action for an injury resulting from driving into the hole, is justified in submitting to the jury for their determination whether the city was chargeable with negligence in not discovering and filling the hole before the injury occurred. Fitzgerald v. Troy, 4 Silv. Sup. Ct. 62, 7 N. Y. Supp. 103.

So, where an obstruction was placed on a sidewalk in a street in a busy and frequented part of a city on Tuesday, and it remained there until Saturday, the day of the accident in question; and in the meantime no measures were taken by the authorities to have it removed,—it is a question for the jury whether the city authorities charged with the care of the public streets ought to have known of the obstruction, and to have caused its removal before the accident. Kunz v. Troy, 104 N. Y. 344, 58 Am. Rep. 508, 10 N. E. 442.

And, where an injury was caused by a rope stretched across a street and attached to stakes set in the street, the street being one of the most fashionable and crowded thoroughfares in the city, and having been so obstructed for at least two days and nights previous to the accident, the city authorities are charged with notice of the existence of the obstruction. Chicago v. Fowler, 60 Ill. 322.

And, where a person was injured by falling into an excavation dug by a contractor for the purpose of laying a water pipe; and an accident occurred in the evening between 7 and 8 o'clock; and work on the ditch commenced the day before and continued through the day of the accident; and the place was in the business district of the city and presented a condition of danger if not properly safeguarded, apparent to the most casual observer,—a sufficient time elapsed under the circumstances within which the city, in the exercise of reasonable care for the safety of the traveling public, should have discovered and remedied the conditions. Pace v. Webster City, 138 Iowa, 107, 115 N. W. 888.

So, evidence as to the relative position of a place in a street where an injury was sustained by slipping on an icy sidewalk to such a building as the city hall is admissible in an action for the injury, on the question of constructive notice to the city. Masters v. Troy, 50 Hun, 485, 3 N. Y. Supp. 450.

And, where a city suffered a market to be carried on in a street in violation of law and the rights of the public; and it occupied a part of the sidewalk; and the part of the sidewalk left for the use of pedestrians was habitually kept in so filthy and dangerous a condition as to be a constant menace to the public; and it eventually caused an accident; and the dangerous condition was constant and had continued for many months, and existed in the midst of a well-populated section of the city, where there was incessant travel to and fro,—the question of knowledge and notice of the condition on the part of the city is one of fact for the jury, in an action for the injury. O'Dwyer v. Northern Market Co. 24 App. D. C. 81.

But the act of workmen engaged in repairing a cellar, in which, in order to get material into the cellar and to afford light, they removed three planks from the sidewalk above, thus making a hole $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet in width and 7 or 8 feet long and 6 or 8 feet deep, of, contrary to their usual custom, leaving the hole unguarded for an hour and a half, in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which time a person fell into it and was injured, though it would be considered as negligence upon the part of a city if it were a populous one, does not furnish evidence sufficient to take the case of the defendant's negligence to the jury where the defendant was a town of small size where foot travel was slight. Bender v. Minden, 124 Iowa, 685, 100 N. W. 352.

And the fact that a hole in a sidewalk, made by workmen engaged in repairing a cellar, which they were accustomed to barricade, was left open and unguarded for an hour and a half in a town of 4,500 inhabitants, does not show sufficient evidence of negligence upon the part of the town to warrant submission of the question to a jury. Ibid.

And evidence that an obstruction in a street consisted of a pile of snow and ice; and that there were only four houses on the street; and that one witness saw the pile of snow and ice in the morning about twelve hours before the accident in question occurred,—is not sufficient to warrant a finding that the city had reasonable notice of the defect. Whitehead v. Lowell, 124 Mass. 281.

And the testimony of a witness in an action against a city for injuries caused by tripping over a loose stone in a street, that, during a period of two or three weeks before the accident, he had seen a loose stone of like character in the general locality, but not at the precise place where the injury occurred; that, during most of the time, the stone was near a telegraph pole, where it was not dangerous to travelers; and that on one occasion he had removed the stone from the street to the place near the pole,—is insufficient to show that the city had constructive notice of an unlawful obstruction, since the stone became an unlawful obstruction only when it was in the street. Orser v. New York, 193 N. Y. 537, 86 N. E. 523, reversing 127 App. Div. 335, 111 N. Y. Supp. 670.

So, the number of miles of street a city has is immaterial on the question of its liability for an injury resulting from a defective or obstructed street; and evidence as to the number of miles of street is inadmissible for the purpose of showing what was a reasonable time to impute notice of the defect complained of to the city, and what would be a reasonable time, under the circumstances, for the city to repair the defect after it had notice thereof. Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 419, 75 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 34.

Nor does the mere fact that a hole in a bridge on a public street, through which a person fell and was injured, had been there a month, the bridge having been closed on account of other defects, necessarily show constructive knowledge of the hole by the officers, in an action against the city for personal injuries received from falling through the hole. Austin v. Colgate (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 896.

And knowledge, by a municipality, of an obstruction in a street will not be implied where the municipality had a population of little over 400, and the street was obstructed by the act of a wrongdoer only a short time before dark, and about 9 o'clock of the same evening the injury complained of occurred, and the day was cloudy and the night was dark, and the obstruction was not of such notorious character that a person passing along the street, unless upon the walk itself, would necessarily see it. Lewisville v. Batson, 29 Ind. App. 21, 63 N. E. 861.

But evidence that a flagstone over which a person fell and was injured, which made the sidewalk unsafe, stood above the level of the surrounding ground, and evidently the earth had washed away or been worn away from the stone during a considerable period; and that two persons had fallen over the stone previously, and apparently another two years before; and that the attention of a policeman on duty in the neighborhood was called to the condition of the walk two years before,—warrants the submission to the jury, in an action for the injury, of the question whether the dangerous condition had existed long enough for the city authorities to discover it if they had exercised reasonable care in looking after the safety of the streets. Williams v. Brooklyn, 33 App. Div. 539, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1007.

So, where a person received an injury from coming into contact with an outward swinging iron gate originally constructed to swing inward, but which swung both ways by reason of a defective latch, testimony that several persons other than the person injured had been injured by it when similarly using the sidewalk during the year previous to the injury in question is sufficient to go to the jury in an action for the injury, as tending to show the dangerous character of the obstruction so caused, and to charge the city with constructive notice of it. Domer v. District of Columbia, 21 App. D. C. 284.

But in such case the jury, in connection with such testimony, should consider the peculiar character of the obstruction, and the fact that at times there would be no obstruction, so that the municipal agents might have passed and repassed without having recognized the existence of an obstruction. Ibid.

So, a resolution of a city council directing a sidewalk to be made passable at a particular place is competent evidence, in an action against the city for an injury occurring at that place, on the question whether the city had knowledge of its defective condition. Erd v. St. Paul, 22 Minn. 443.

And a preamble and resolution, passed by the common council of a city previous to the accident in question, reciting that, owing to insufficient lights and protection at the approaches of several bridges in the city, several accidents had happened, and appointing a committee to report a plan for preventing a recurrence thereof, are admissible in evidence in an action against the city for an injury resulting to a person who stepped off an approach in the night while the bridge was swinging around to enable a vessel to pass, as showing notice to the city authorities of the insufficient lights provided. Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169, 89 Am. Dec. 418.

So, ordinances of a city making it the duty of the police of the city to endeavor to remove obstructions from the sidewalks, streets, and alleys; and, in case they cannot be readily removed, and in case of defects in the sidewalks, to make report of them to the department of public works,—are admissible in evidence, in an action against the city for an injury resulting from the obstruction of a city sidewalk, as bearing upon the question of notice of the obstruction. Bibbins v. Chicago, 193 Ill. 359, 61 N. E. 1030, reversing 94 Ill. App. 319.

And an ordinance requiring owners of abutting property to repair a sidewalk, passed some months prior to the time a person was injured on such walk by stepping into a hole in it, is admissible in evidence in an action against the city for damages, as tending to show notice. Beardstown v. Clark, 204 Ill. 524, 68 N. E. 378, affirming 104 Ill. App. 568.

And an order given by a municipal corporation to a proprietor of land adjacent to a street, to repair the sidewalks thereon, is an admission of notice of the defects then known to the corporation, and of the one ordered to be repaired; but it is not as matter of law an admission of the existence of another defect different in character, or of one having no necessary connection with it, and of which the corporation had no knowledge. Shelby v. Clagett, 46 Ohio St. 549, 5 L.R.A. 606, 22 N. E. 407.

7. Removal of safeguard by unlooked-for event.

When a street being improved is made safe, so far as the public is concerned, by barriers or other proper precautions, if suddenly and without warning to or fault of the city it becomes unsafe by the removal of such barriers or other precautions by any means, the city should have notice thereof in order to be held liable for resulting injuries. Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 10 N. W. 162.

And, if an obstruction or excavation in a street was adequately protected when it was made, the city is not liable for any injuries resulting from the removal of the protection by some unauthorized person, occurring before it could, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, have discovered such displacement. Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273; Torphy v. Fall River, 188 Mass. 310, 74 N. E. 465; Doherty v. Waltham, 4 Gray, 596; Parker v. Cohoes, 10 Hun, 531.

Thus, a city is not liable to a person injured by falling into a sewer trench where it had inclosed that portion of the street in which the trench had been dug, and employed a watchman to see that the barriers were kept up, and during the temporary absence of the watchman, in the discharge of his duties elsewhere along the line of the excavation, someone, without authority, wrongfully removed the barrier at the point where the person injured entered the inclosure. O'Neil v. Bates, 20 R. I. 793, 40 Atl. 236.

And a jury, in an action against a city for an injury received from falling into an open ditch or trench in a street, cannot find the city negligent because at the time the injury occurred the laborer engaged in digging the trench had absented himself from the work for a few minutes for a necessary purpose. Jones v. Clinton, 100 Iowa, 333, 69 N. W. 418.

And, where evidence in an action against a city for injuries caused by falling into an open sewer at night tends to show upon the part of the city that the workmen left the sewer trench at 5:30 P. M. properly barricaded and lighted, and that both barricades and lights were in place next morning; while the evidence of the plaintiff, who fell into the trench at 6:15 P. M. the same day, tended to show that, when the accident occurred, no lights or barriers were there,—the jury may properly infer that the lights and barriers were removed without the knowledge of the city; and an instruction defining the liability of the city if the lights and barriers had been so removed is proper. Richmond v. Poore (Va.) 63 S. E. 1014.

So, where an excavation was made along the margin of a public sidewalk, which was protected by a railing of which a gate formed a part; and the gate was secure on the evening before the injury in question occurred; and there was no evidence tending to show that the authorities had ascertained, or by ordinary care might have ascertained, that it had become insecure at the time of the injury,—a person who leaned against it, when it gave way and precipitated him into the excavation, is not entitled to recover of the city for the injury caused. Jackson v. Boone, 93 Ga. 662, 20 S. E. 46.

And, where a person, while driving at night, ran into a pile of cinders which had been placed on one side of a street by a paving company engaged in the construction of a pavement in the yard of an abutting owner, and the cinders had been in the street four or five days, and at night a red light had been placed by the company at one end of the pile, but at the time of the accident the light was out, the city is not liable for the injury. Mills v. Philadelphia, 187 Pa. 287, 40 Atl. 821.

Nor can notice to the city of the removal of a barrier placed to guard an opening in a sidewalk be inferred where the time between the removal of the barrier and the accident was at most less than one hour and in the night. Theissen v. Belle Plaine, 81 Iowa, 118, 46 N. W. 854.

And, where a street was being improved, and barriers had been erected to prevent its use, and an accident happened in the night five hours after the erection of the barriers, and in the interval such barriers had been removed, but it does not appear by whom the removal was made, it cannot be held, as a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

matter of law, that the city had notice of the removal, so as to be liable for the injury. Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 40 Am. Rep. 759, 10 N. W. 162.

And, where an excavation was made in a street for purposes of sewer construction; and, upon leaving the work at night, barriers were erected; and a red light was put in such a position as to constitute an efficient signal of the presence of danger; and afterwards the lantern was smashed and removed; and, not more than one hundred and fifty-three minutes from its removal, a person drove into the excavation, and his horse was injured,—the city is not liable for the injury in the absence of evidence that any of the city's agents or servants had actual notice of the removal of the light. McFeeters v. New York, 102 App. Div. 32, 92 N. Y. Supp. 79.

So, where, in repairing a cellar, a hole was made in a sidewalk, and the workmen engaged upon it were accustomed to barricade the hole, the city is not negligent or chargeable with notice of their failure to erect the usual barricade, unless it should, in the exercise of ordinary care, have known of such failure. Bender v. Minden, 124 Iowa, 685, 100 N. W. 352.

Nor is a city liable for an injury caused by a traveler falling from a sidewalk into a passage in the basement of a building, which was protected by a removable iron grating covered with boards, the iron work of which was fitted to the opening in such a way that it was perfectly safe and could not accidentally or intentionally be misplaced, and could be left out of place only by gross carelessness; and which had been in that condition for forty years in one of the principal streets of the city, and was never known to be left out of place before; but on the occasion of the accident in question it had been used by a stranger, and the grating was not properly replaced. Littlefield v. Norwich, 40 Conn. 406.

And, where excavations were made in the streets of a village by a licensee of the village, and the licensee and others, having charge of the work of excavating and filling in, omitted to barricade the excavations or to place warning lights upon them, resulting in an injury to a third person, the city is not liable for the injury, unless it had actual knowledge, personal or implied, that the excavations were not sufficiently guarded at the time of the injury. Morgan v. Penn Yan, 42 App. Div. 582, 59 N. Y. Supp. 504.

So, a city permitting property owners to build sidewalks in front of their premises under an ordinance requiring that the owners shall prepare and place lights on material left in the street during the night so as to warn persons passing along the street of such obstruction is not liable for an injury resulting from a failure so to place such lights if the agents and officers of the city did not have notice of the omission of light the obstruction, and such omission did not continue for a sufficient length of time before the injury for them to have known of it in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence. Lewis v. Atlanta, 77 Ga. 756, 4 Am. St. 168.

And, where an excavation had been made in a sidewalk in front of a building in course of construction in the business part of a city, across which stringers for a new sidewalk had been laid; and the excavation had been in this condition for several weeks, guarded at one end by a small scantling loosely resting upon a box or barrel and extending from the building to the outer edge of the sidewalk; and at the time of the accident in question, and for several hours prior thereto, this barrier had been removed, leaving no protection against persons falling into the excavation,—the question whether the city had notice of the dangerous condition of the sidewalk is one of fact for the jury, in an action for a resulting injury. Sproul v. Seattle, 17 Wash. 257, 49 Pac. 489.

The rule that a city, when it has once properly guarded a dangerous defect or excavation in one of its streets, and such guards have been removed without its consent or knowledge, cannot be held liable for an injury caused thereby, unless it is shown that it had notice, either actual or constructive, of the removal of the guards, and had reasonable time thereafter in which to replace them, however, has no application where lights were depended upon as guards to excavations, and were put in place during the nighttime only; since it is a required duty, so to place them on each recurring night, and the city is as much obligated to see to it that they are put in place on each night as it was at the commencement of the work. Drake v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 81, 94 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 Pac. 231.

And, where a person was injured by driving into an open trench which was left unguarded and unlighted at night, which trench was opened, not by the city, but by a property owner for the purpose of making connections between his house and the sewer and water mains along the street; and a person, noticing that there was no light to guard the excavation, notified the general sewer inspector of the neglect a half or three quarters of an hour before the accident and it would have taken the inspector not to exceed five minutes to put up a light after such notice was given,—the question whether the city was guilty of negligence in not putting up a light or barricade is one of fact for the jury. Blakeslee v. Geneva, 61 App. Div. 42, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1122.

So, where a hole was made in a pavement of a street by the foot of a horse, and the city's surveyors of highways repaired it by putting in stones and gravel, and, by the action of the elements, the same hole was reopened, or another hole made, in the same place, which caused an injury, if the surveyor insufficiently repaired the first defect so that the road still remained out of repair, it would be a continuing defect, and the town would be liable though the action of the elements had enlarged it and increased its 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) dangerous character. Hutchins v. Littleton, 124 Mass. 289.

And, where an excavation was made in one of the most frequented and traveled streets of a city by an abutting owner, who was connecting his house with a water pipe; and it remained open for two or three days; and a traveler who was passing along the street at night and about an hour after it became dark drove into the unguarded excavation; and no lights had been placed there on that night, although the excavation had been guarded by a light on previous nights,—the question whether the city had notice of the defect, or whether the defect had existed for such a length of time that notice should be imputed to it, is one for a jury to decide, under proper instructions from the court. Holitz v. Kansas City, 68 Kan. 157, 74 Pac. 594.

8. The duty to inspect.

A city should exercise reasonable care to discover defects and obstructions in its streets and sidewalks, and the performance of this duty requires their inspection, and the existence of such a defect or obstruction for a long time warrants the conclusion of actual knowledge thereof. Deland v. Cameron, 112 Mo. App. 704, 87 S. W. 597; Joliet v. McCraney, 49 Ill. App. 381; Lewisville v. Batson, 29 Ind. App. 21, 63 N. E. 861; Lyon v. Logansport, 9 Ind. App. 21, 35 N. E. 128; Washington v. Small, 86 Ind. 462; Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96; Belken v. Iowa Falls, 122 Iowa, 430; 98 N. W. 296; Anderson v. Albion, 64 Neb. 280, 89 N. W. 794; Monroe v. Weihi, 13 Ohio C. C. 689; Koch v. Ashland, 88 Wis. 604, 60 N. W. 990.

At least where there is any visible evidence of a defect dangerous to the traveling public. Miller v. Canton, 112 Mo. App. 322, 87 S. W. 96.

If an unsafe condition has continued so long that, if the city officers had given it reasonable attention they must have discovered its condition, the city has notice of such condition. Koch v. Ashland; Joliet v. McCraney; and Lewisville v. Batson,—supra.

A city must be presumed to know every fact in respect to its sidewalks that, by the exercise of reasonable care, it could have discovered. Buckley v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. 188, 68 S. W. 1069.

And, if city authorities had no actual notice of an obstruction on a sidewalk, but their ignorance was owing to an omission of the duty of inspection, and of the degree of diligence which might reasonably be expected under all the circumstances, the opportunity of knowledge stands for the purpose of the case as actual knowledge; and the city is equally chargeable as if express notice had been actually proven. Kunz v. Troy, 104 N. Y. 344, 58 Am. Rep. 508, 10 N. E. 442; Rehberg v. New York, 91 N. Y. 137, 43 Am. Rep. 657; Cusick v. Norwich, 40 Conn. 375; Boucher v. New Haven, 40

Conn. 456; Manchester v. Hartford, 30 Conn. 118; Chicago v. Gillett, 108 Ill. App. 455.

Nor does the presumption that city officers do their duty with respect to the inspection of streets and sidewalks obtain where there is any evidence that they have neglected their duty. Miller v. Canton, supra.

And, where a diligent performance of the duty of supervision in the construction of a covering over a perilous excavation in a street would bring knowledge to the officers of the defect, and the dangerous character thereof, a want of such knowledge is negligence. Abilene v. Cowperthwait, 52 Kan. 324, 34 Pac. 795.

Failure of a municipality to inspect, or to inspect properly, a sidewalk, does not prevent the application of the rule of presumptive notice from the continued existence of a hole in it. Germaine v. Muskegon, 105 Mich. 213, 63 N. W. 78.

And, where a defect in a street which caused an injury consisted of a hole in the walk which was obvious to mere inspection, and for the discovery of which no special skill was required, negligence of the street commissioner in failing to discover it is imputable to the city; and it cannot escape liability for an injury resulting therefrom by showing that it exercised due care in the selection of the officer. Padelford v. Eagle Grove, 117 Iowa, 616, 91 N. W. 899.

Nor has the rule that, before a municipal corporation charged with the duty of maintaining a highway can be made liable for a defect or obstruction therein, it must have notice, actual or implied, of such defect or obstruction, any application where it omits to supervise the construction of a sidewalk on one of its streets by the adjoining pro-who causes an obstruction. Boucher v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 456.

And evidence that a child engaged in innocent play stumbled and fell over a gas box located in a sidewalk and received serious and permanent injury, and that another person had noticed the condition of the gas box and surrounding bricks a year before, and had seen persons stumble on it, though the defect seemed to have been a slight one and one that may not have attracted the attention of the ordinary passer-by who did not come in contact with it, is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of negligence of the city, and knowledge or notice of the defect, in the absence of evidence tending to show that there had ever been an inspection or examination of the gas boxes located in the sidewalk at that or any other point, or that any supervision had been exercised over their construction and maintenance. District of Columbia v. Boswell, 6 App. D. C. 402.

So, it is the duty of a city to use due diligence in ascertaining whether there is an appearance of a street or sidewalk passing from a safe to an unsafe condition; and the more apparent the danger, coupled with the apparent gravity of it, and the more frequented and densely populated is the place, the more likely should be the danger to meet the observation of the city's agents soon after it occurs. Smid v. New York, 17 Jones & S. 126.

And that the boards used in constructing a sidewalk were from culled lumber, and were nailed crosswise on stringers, and had become loose by reason of the nails having rusted off, and had been loose for five months; and that the city could have discovered the defective condition by inspection; and that a woman who did not know that the walk was out of repair walked upon it with her sister, carrying a babe in her arms, walking slowly and carefully and observing the sidewalk as she proceeded, and tripped on a loose board in the sidewalk by reason of her sister stepping on the other end of it, and fell and was injured,—warrant a recovery against the city for the injury. Columbia City v. Langohr, 20 Ind. App. 395, 50 N. E. 831.

And the capacity of white pine lumber for holding nails when sound, and its lasting qualities as compared with other timber, may be properly shown in an action against a city in which the defendant is claimed to have had constructive notice, by reason of the lapse of time, of the decay of a bridge built of such material. Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 275, 71 N. W. 475.

A city is not required to patrol its streets, however, to look out for probable obstructions placed in them by third persons. Lewisville v. Batson, 29 Ind. App. 21, 63 N. E. 861.

And it is not required to keep constant guard and watch over sidewalks supposed to be safe and sufficient, to see that no one breaks holes into or destroys them, or to see that such breaches do not occur from other unexpected causes. Paxton v. Frew, 52 Ill. App. 393.

The law requires only that it shall be vigilant to observe them when they become observable to an officer exercising reasonable supervision. Lehr v. Philipsburg, 156 Pa. 246, 27 Atl. 133.

Nor, in the absence of anything to indicate that an examination of a street at a particular point was necessary, is the municipal corporation called upon to make one; and it cannot be charged with implied notice of what the examination, if one had been made, would have disclosed. Miller v. North Adams, 182 Mass. 569, 66 N. E. 197.

And, where there was nothing in the surface of a highway to indicate that a culvert under it was out of repair, or that an examination was necessary, the failure of the municipal corporation in which the highway lies to make an examination during a period of twenty years, does not justify a finding that the city, by the exercise of proper care and diligence, might have had notice that the culvert was out of repair, so as to make it liable to a traveler whose horse broke through the roadway into the culvert. Ibid.

And it is not bound to examine the condition of a coal hole in a sidewalk, in the absence of actual or implied notice that it was defective; and notice of its defective condition cannot be implied if the defect could not be seen without removing the cover and making an examination; and, in the absence of notice, the city is not liable for injury received by a traveler on the sidewalk, who fell into such a hole. Duncan v. Philadelphia, 173 Pa. 550, 51 Am. St. Rep. 780, 34 Atl. 235; Cooper v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 458, 72 N. W. 1130.

A city is chargeable only with such knowledge of the method of construction of a coal-hole cover and the attachments as would be acquired by properly inspecting the same from the street. Matthews v. New York, 78 App. Div. 422, 80 N. Y. Supp. 360.

But a city is liable for an injury caused by a hole in a sidewalk, made for access into a cellar of an abutting building, where the hole in question had long existed, and was frequently opened to put things into the cellar, and often left open, and, when covered at all, with only a loose plank liable to be removed or broken; though there was no evidence that any of the aldermen of the ward in which the accident occurred had knowledge of the defective condition of the sidewalk. Smalley v. Appleton, 75 Wis. 18, 43 N. W. 826.

And active diligence upon the part of a municipal corporation is required to detect defects from natural decay in wooden structures like bridges, plank sidewalks, and the like, which will necessarily become unsafe from age; but the most that ought to be required is the use of ordinary diligence by making tests and examinations with reasonable frequency, to ascertain whether they are safe or not. Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309.

Though a defect in a sidewalk was a latent defect, the city may not sit silently by and say that it did not know of it. There should be some examination at some time, and it should be examined with reference to the whole walk; and an instruction, in an action for an injury by such a walk, that, if a person passing over it in the exercise of reasonable care and prudence would not discover the defect, the city cannot be held guilty of negligence for failing to know of it, is erroneous. Matthews v. Toledo, 21 Ohio C. C. 69.

And, where a plank sidewalk becomes old and worn, it is the duty of the city to cause it to be inspected; and such planks or boards as are found so worn or weak as to be insufficient should be taken out and replaced by planks strong enough for the ordinary purposes of a sidewalk. Paxton v. Frew, supra; Joliet v. McCraney, 49 Ill. App. 381.

And a city which, instead of removing all worn-out boards in an old sidewalk which has been in use for years, and replacing them with new, continues the walk in use, trusting that, by frequent inspection, it may discover all holes or defects before anyone is injured thereby, will be held to have notice of the condition of the walk. Paxton v. Frew, supra.

Nor is the fact that a sidewalk was in- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

spected by a village officer a few weeks before a pedestrian received an injury thereon a defense to an action for the injury; and in such case it is proper to submit to the jury the question whether the trustees used reasonable diligence in discovering whether the walk was out of repair. Stebbins v. Oneida, 1 Silv. Sup. Ct. 240, 5 N. Y. Supp. 483.

And, where there was evidence, in an action against a city for an injury caused by an opening or a displaced plank in a sidewalk, that, previous to the accident, a plank was out at times, and sometimes the walk was open, and sometimes the boards were close together, and that the planks were loose, in view of the active duty of inspection devolving upon the city's officers, there is sufficient evidence to go to the jury on the issue whether the city ought, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, to have discovered the defect prior to the accident. Krisinger v. Creston (Iowa) 119 N. W. 526.

And an instruction, in an action against a city for an injury resulting from a defective sidewalk, which takes from the jury the right to determine from all the evidence whether the city had exercised reasonable care to keep the sidewalk in question in a reasonably safe condition; and assumes that, if a street commissioner inspected it from three to ten days before the accident, and from such inspection it appeared to him to be reasonably safe, the city had discharged its duty,—is erroneous. Savanna v. Trusty, 98 Ill. App. 277.

But, where a sidewalk inspector, some ten days before an accident, went over the walk where it occurred, the accident having been caused by the tipping up of a loose plank in the walk, and tested the planks at the ends, and, finding some of them loose, nailed them down and left the walk in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, in order to charge the city with constructive notice so as to render it liable for any defect afterward developing in the walk, it must have been of such a character as naturally to arrest the attention of a passerby, and the city must have had reasonable time after such defect was noticeable to repair it. McGrail v. Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52, 53 N. W. 955.

So, a city, in an action against it for damages claimed to have been received on account of a defective sidewalk, may show that it was the duty of a designated person to look after the walk in question, as bearing upon the probability of his having made the examination testified to by him. Rogers v. Orion, 116 Mich. 324, 74 N. W. 463.

And evidence tending to show that an agent of the city visited a fire plug every day during cold weather, and that it was cold weather at the time of the accident, is sufficient to go to the jury upon the question of notice, in an action against the city for an injury resulting from a dangerous condition of the street caused by water flowing from the fire plug. Powers v. Chicago, 20 Ill. App. 178.

To relieve a municipal corporation from liability for injury caused by a defective street, inspection of the street by the municipality must be reasonably frequent. Revis v. Raleigh (N. C.) 63 S. E. 1049.

And what is a reasonably frequent examination of streets for defects by a municipal corporation depends on the conditions of each case, and is a question of fact for the jury; and it cannot be said, as matter of law, that failure of a municipal corporation to inspect a street for a week was negligence. Ibid.

But an instruction that the failure of a corporation to inspect a street for a week was negligence, though erroneous, is not prejudicial to the municipal corporation where the evidence tends to show that the defect had existed for a much longer time than one week. Ibid.

9. Time to remove.

Unless a defect or obstruction in a street, causing an injury, was produced by the city itself, or by someone in privity with it, the city is not liable for damages caused by the defect, unless it had notice thereof, express or implied, for a sufficient length of time before the happening of the accident to have enabled it, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, to abate, repair, or remove it. Walker v. Springfield, 3 Ohio. Dec. Reprint, 567; Denver v. Magivney (Colo.) 96 Pac. 1002; Anderson v. Wilmington (Del.) 70 Atl. 204; Jarrell v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 454, 56 Atl. 379; Downs v. Smyrna, 2 Penn. (Del.) 132, 45 Atl. 717; Chicago v. Langlass, 66 Ill. 361; Lewisville v. Batson, 29 Ind. App. 21, 63 N. E. 861; Edwards v. Cedar Rapids (Iowa) 116 N. W. 323; Moore v. Minneapolis, 19 Minn. 300. Gil. 258; Baustian v. Young, 152 Mo. 317, 75 Am. St. Rep. 462, 53 S. W. 921; Gerber v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. App. 191, 79 S. W. 717; Ball v. Neosho, 109 Mo. App. 683, 83 S. W. 777; Richardson v. Marceline, 73 Mo. App. 360; Hubbard v. Concord, 35 N. H. 52, 69 Am. Dec. 520; Farley v. New York, 152 N. Y. 222, 57 Am. St. Rep. 511, 46 N. E. 506; Ferguson v. Waverly, 128 App. Div. 697, 112 N. Y. Supp. 891; Halum v. Omro, 122 Wis. 337, 99 N. W. 1051; Legault v. La Cote St. Paul, Rap. Jud. Quebec 12 C. S. 479.

Or if, for any reason, it ought not to be immediately removed, to establish barriers, or signals, for the protection of travelers. Walker v. Springfield, supra; McCarroll v. Kansas City, 64 Mo. App. 283.

And failure to put a street or sidewalk in proper condition within a reasonable time after notice of a defect or obstruction therein is essential to the liability of the municipal corporation for personal injuries caused by such defect or obstruction, whether the notice thereof is actual or constructive. Burleson v. Reading, 110 Mich. 512, 68 N. W. 294; Lynchburg v. Wallace, 95 Va. 640, 29 S. E. 675; Ferguson v. Waverly, supra.

Merely notice to a city of the existence of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a hole in a sidewalk would not be sufficient to render it liable for an injury caused thereby; its negligence would depend on its failure to exercise reasonable diligence in repairing the defect after knowledge of its existence. Denver v. Hyatt, 28 Colo. 129, 63 Pac. 403.

And where the question of negligence in not removing an obstruction unlawfully placed in a street by third persons depends upon implied notice, what is a reasonable time from which notice is to be inferred must be determined by all the circumstances, giving weight to the consideration that municipal authorities, with their multiplied duties, cannot be expected to act with the promptness and celerity of individuals in conducting their private affairs. Kunz v. Troy, 104 N. Y. 344, 58 Am. Rep. 508, 10 N. E. 442.

And the celerity with which a city might be required to repair a defect in a sidewalk in order to relieve itself from liability for injuries therefrom might be qualified by various circumstances, such as the length of time the defect had existed, its cause, the location of the street, the amount and volume of travel over it, etc. Denver v. Moewes, 15 Colo. App. 28, 60 Pac. 986.

